Bombay High Court

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 1
VAIDYA AND MRIDUL, JJ.

The Maharashtra State Road Transport Corporation, Appellant v. Raoji Hari Lad, Respondent.

First Appeals Nos. 381 of 1967 and 617 of 1969, D/- 23-4-1976*.

(A) Limitation Act (1963), Section 3 — Exemption from limitation — Court has no inherent power to grant exemption except on grounds specified in Sections 4 to 24. AIR 1947 All 256 Dissented from.

Thus where the suit for arrears of pay was filed on basis of decree of the first appellate court and the plaintiff was seeking exemption from limitation on ground of pendency of second appeal preferred by the defendant, but there was no stay of operation of the decree of the first appellate court, the plaintiff was not entitled to exemption on ground of general principle of suspension of limitation or right of action. (Paras 12, 13)

No Court is entitled to invoke any principle for holding a claim as not barred by Law of Limitation if such a principle is not to be found expressly or by necessary implication in the provisions of the Limitation Act. No separate or independent principle can be invoked to add to or supplement, much less abrogate or nullify the provisions of the Limitation Act which is conclusive in what it provides and what it forbids. AIR 1935 PC 85 and AIR 1971 SC 2313, Relied on; AIR 1947 All 256, Dissented from. (Para 8)

(B) Payment of Wages Act (1936), S. 22 — Bar of suits — Suit for recovery of arrears of pay, provident fund, gratuity, bonus, etc.

C. J. Sawant, for Appellant in F. A. No. 381 of 1967 and for Respondent in F. A. No. 617 of 1969; N. G. Gandhi with N. D. Hombalkar, for Appellant in F. A. No. 617 of 1969 and for Respondent in F. A. No. 381 of 1967.

MRIDUL, J.— These two companion appeals arise out of the judgment and decree dated 30th November 1966, rendered in Special Civil Suit No. 48 of 1964, filed in the Court of the Civil Judge, Sr. Dn., at Nasik. By the said judgment and decree, the claim of the plaintiff was partially allowed against the defendant.

2. The plaintiff was an employee of the Maharashtra State Road Transport Corporation, (hereinafter referred to as "the said corporation"), and was working as a cashier-cum-reservation clerk. The date of birth of the plaintiff being 24th October 1905, under the rules of the corporation, the plaintiff was liable to retire on 24th October 1963. The plaintiff, however, was dismissed by the Corporation on 15th July 1953. Aggrieved by the dismissal, the plaintiff filed a Regular Civil Suit No. 257 of 1957 on 14th March 1957, inter alia claiming a declaration that the order of dismissal was wrong and for consequential reliefs. The said suit was dismissed by the learned trial Judge on 26th August 1959. In appeal preferred therefrom, the appellate Court by its judgment and decree dated 12th December 1961, decreed the plaintiff's suit. It gave a declaration in favour of the plaintiff that he continued to be in service till the date of the filing of the said suit i. e. till 14th March 1957. The appellate Court also granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff for arrears of salary and certain other incidental charges and costs of the suit. The matter did not rest there. The unsuccessful Corporation sought to have the appellate decree reviewed in appeal by this Court by preferring a Second Appeal being Appeal No. 440 of 1962. This Court, however, by its judgment and decree dated 9th January 1964, dismissed the said Second Appeal, subject to a variation in the decree of the appellate Court as to the amount of arrears of pay. The said variation, however, is not material for the purposes of the present appeal.

3. The plaintiff filed the present suit being Special Suit No. 48 of 1964, inter alia for recovering a sum of Rs. 24,324-02 ps., being the amount payable to him as arrears of pay, provident fund, gratuity, bonus and other benefits as an employee of the Corporation. In the alternative, the plaintiff prayed for accounts in respect of the said claims. Several issues were raised before the learned Judge. Having regard to the limited controversy that is raised before us, it is unnecessary to notice all the issues or the findings relating thereto. Suffice it to observe, that the learned Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 5,963-13 ps. being the emoluments for the period of 3 years prior to the date of the suit. The learned Judge did not grant to the plaintiff arrears prior to the three years from the date of the suit. Aggrieved by the said judgment and decree, the Corporation filed the abovementioned First Appeal No. 381 of 1967. The plaintiff also preferred an appeal being the abovementioned First Appeal No. 617 of 1969, challenging the refusal of the learned Judge to grant him his claim over and above the one which was decreed in his favour.

4. Shri C. J. Sawant, the learned counsel for the Corporation, assails the decree on the ground that the suit was barred under the provisions of the Payment of Wages Act and the Rules framed thereunder. This challenge is based upon fact that the plaintiff had preferred an application under the said Act and the said application was pending in the Court of the Joint Civil Judge, Sr. Dn., Nasik. The learned Judge has in paragraph 24 of his judgment dealt with the said contention exhaustively. After noticing the relevant provisions of law, the learned Judge answered the issues against the Corporation. We have carefully analysed the discussion of the learned Judge and we do not find any infirmity in the reasoning of the learned Judge. We are also of the opinion that having regard to the provisions of the Payment of Wages Act and the facts and circumstances of the instant case, it must be held that the present suit was not barred by any of the provisions of the Payment of Wages Act or the Rules framed thereunder or under the provisions of the Minimum Wages Act or the rules framed thereunder. No other point having been urged by the learned counsel for the Corporation we take the view that the appeal preferred by the Corporation is liable to be dismissed.

5. Shri N. G. Gandhi, the learned counsel for the plaintiff, in support of the claims of the plaintiff for a period prior to three years from the date of the suit, fairly concedes that the plaintiff's case for exemption from the rigours of law of limitation is not based either on Section 13 or 15 of the Limitation Act. However, the learned counsel urges that the plaintiff, in the facts and circumstances of the case is entitled to "general principles of suspension of limitation or right of action." The learned counsel emphasises that in view of the second appeal preferred by the Corporation, the plaintiff should not be denied his claims if he awaited the decision of this Court in the said second appeal. He asserts that the period which was taken for the disposal of the said Second appeal must be excluded from consideration and arrears of salary should be decreed upon the said footing. It is the submission of the learned counsel that in cases where a party is prevented by reason of certain valid circumstances from taking any action and enforcement of his right, the Courts relax the rigour of the bar of limitation on the principle of suspension of limitation or right of action.

6. Reliance is placed upon a Division Bench judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Murlidhar v. Ram Saran Das reported in AIR 1947 All 256. In that case after holding that the plaintiff therein was not entitled to the benefit of Section 15 of the Limitation Act, 1908, the Division Bench of the said High Court nevertheless took a view beneficial to the plaintiff therein on the basis of general principles of suspension of limitation or right of action in cases where a party is prevented under certain circumstances from taking action in enforcement of his rights. The learned counsel fairly concedes that there is cleavage of judicial opinion in regard to the said question. He is fair enough to draw attention to a judgment of the same High Court where a contra view was taken. The learned counsel also draws attention to the fact that the said judgment of the Allahabad High Court has been noticed by the Supreme Court in Bachan Singh v. Dhian Dass reported in AIR 1974 SC 708. After noticing the said decision of the Allahabad High Court, the Supreme Court, however, left the said question open.

7. We are unable to accept the submission of the learned counsel for the plaintiff that it is open to a Court of law to obviate the bar of limitation upon a general principle of suspension of limitation or right of action.

8. The Limitation Act is founded on public policy. The Limitation Act of 1963 is not only a codifying Act but also an amending Act. The provisions of the Limitation Act are a Code complete in themselves. Section 3 of the Limitation Act enjoins a Court to dismiss every suit, appeal or application which is not within the prescribed period. Gateways from the peremptory provisions of Section 3 are provided by Sections 4 to 24. It follows from the provisions of the Limitation Act and the principles enshrined therein that no Court is entitled to invoke any principle for holding a claim as not barred by Law of Limitation if such a principle is not to be found expressly or by necessary implication in the provisions of the Limitation Act. No separate or independent principle can be invoked to add to or supplement, much less abrogate or nullify the provisions of the Limitation Act. In our opinion, the Limitation Act is conclusive in what it provides and what it forbids. The Act does not confer any inherent powers in a Court to relieve a litigant from its rigour except in cases covered by Sections 4 to 24 thereof.

9. We are fortified in our view by the observations of the Privy Council in Maqbul Ahmad v. Onkar Pratap Narain Singh reported in AIR 1935 PC 85. It was a case where the provisions of Section 14 of the Limitation Act 1908 were invoked. The invocation proved futile. The argument then was that there was a discretion in the Court to relieve litigants in cases of the hardship, from the operation of the Limitation Act. In repelling the said argument it was observed by the Privy Council at page 88 as follows:—

“In their Lordships’ opinion it is impossible to hold that in a matter which is governed by Act, an Act which in some limited respects gives the Court a statutory discretion, there can be implied in the Court, outside the limits of the Act, a general discretion to dispense with its provisions. It is to be noted that this view is supported by the fact that Section 3 of the Act is peremptory and that the duty of the Court is to notice the Act and give effect to it, even though it is not referred to in the pleadings.”

10. In a similar vein is the observation made by the Supreme Court in India

Electric Works Ltd. v. James Mantosh reported in AIR 1971 SC 2313. The Supreme Court at page 2317 observed:

“x x x all questions of limitation must be decided by the provisions of the Act and the Courts cannot travel beyond them”.

11. It is not disputed before us that the article which is applicable to the plaintiff's claim in suit is Article 7 of the Limitation Act, 1963. The said Article corresponds to Articles 7 and 102 of the Act of 1908. A claim for recovery of salary under Art. 102 came up for consideration before the Supreme Court in Sakal Deep Sahai Srivastava v. Union of India reported in AIR 1974 SC 338. In that case the question that was posed before the Court was whether Article 102 or 120 of the Limitation Act, 1908 applied to a claim for arrears of salary. The Supreme Court referred its earlier decision in Madhav Laxman Vaikunthe v. State of Mysore, reported in AIR 1962 SC 8, and held that Article 102 of the Limitation Act applied to such a case.

12. Under Article 7, the period prescribed is 3 years. Consequently, the plaintiff was entitled to the arrears of salary for 3 years only from the date of the suit. The plaintiff seeks exemption on the ground of pendency of the said second appeal in this Court between 12th December 1961 and 9th January 1964. It is true that the plaintiff cannot be denied his salary for the earlier period if the pendency of the said Second Appeal in this Court can be a relevant consideration. Since there was no stay of the operation of the decree of the First Appellate Court passed in his favour there is no reason why he could not file the instant suit immediately thereafter. At the highest it might have been more prudent on his part not to have enforced his claims based on the said decree when it was under appeal in this Court, but it cannot furnish a ground for exemption from the lethal limitational bar.

13. It is difficult for us to follow the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Murlidhar's case (AIR 1947 All 256) (supra) having regard to the provisions of the Limitation Act and the scheme thereof as also dicta of the Privy Council in Maqbul Ahmad's case (AIR 1935 PC 85) (supra) and of the Supreme Court in India Electric Works Ltd.'s case (AIR 1971 SC 2313) (supra). We respectfully dissent from the view taken by the Allahabad High Court. We have no hesitation in rejecting the contention that the plaintiff is entitled to relaxation of the rule of limitation by reason of any hardship or special cir-circumstances of the case. In our opinion, there can be no obviolation of the bar of limitation on the ground of general suspension of limitation or right of action.

14. In the result, both the First Appeals are dismissed. The Judgment and decree of the trial Court are confirmed. There will be no order as to costs in both the appeals.

15. As the plaintiff is unsuccessful on a technical plea of limitation, we think, that the proper order to be made is that the court fees payable on the appeal should be borne by the Corporation. Accordingly, the court-fees payable on appeal should be recovered from the Corporation, and a certificate should be issued to the Collector accordingly.

Appeals dismissed.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 4

DESHMUKH AND DIGHE, JJ.

Mrs. Jamna Mahadeo Patil and another, Petitioners v. Devarat Mehta and others, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1952 of 1975, D/- 16-10-1975.*

(A) High Court Rules and Orders — Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules (1960), Chapters XVII, XXVIII — Petition challenging breach of statutory conditions of detention — Petition would lie under Chapter XXVIII as Criminal Application and not under Chapter XVII as Special Civil Application. (Constitution of India, Article 226).

Where detention itself is challenged on the ground that it is unlawful, here is a challenge to the deprivation of liberty in its entirety. When a person is detained and is required to be detained under the statutory provisions in a certain manner, not to detain him as such or to put conditions not validly enacted but to interfere with the statutory conditions under which he must be detained also amounts in principle and in law to an interference with his personal liberty. It may be that this interference is of a partial character, when the action touches only a part of the liberty, in the sense, the manner of detention. It cannot be said that unless detention itself is challenged or the legality of the conditions of detention are challenged, there is no challenge to any part of the personal liberty at all. If the action of the State Government is in clear breach of the provisions of the Maintenance of Internal Security (Maharashtra Conditions of Detention) Order, and that alone is challenged to the extent of the conditions under which the detenu should have been restrained, there is undoubtedly a challenge to a part of the deprivation of personal liberty of the detenu. When there is such partial interference with the personal liberty of a person, a writ of habeas corpus seems to be available. (Para 8)

In view of this, a petition challenging breach of statutory conditions of detention is properly an application for habeas corpus or application of that nature and would be within the ambit of Chapter XXVIII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960, as Criminal Application and not under Chapter XVII as Special Civil Application. 1923 AC 603 and AIR 1966 SC 424, Relied on.

Porus Mehta with Sethna and K. D. Shah, for Petitioners; H. G. Advani with V. P. Tipnis, Asst. Govt. Pleader, for Opponents.

DESHMUKH, J.:— This is a petition where the petitioner has been detained under the Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971, subject to the conditions of the Maintenance of Internal Security (Maharashtra Conditions of Detention) Order, 1971. These Rules were amended later by the addition of Rule 38, which vests in the State Government power to withdraw any concessions or facilities laid down by the order. Some of the facilities like supplementing diet with the help of food from outside have been withdrawn by the State Government in view of certain orders passed under the added Rule 38. Most of the petitioners filed applications where detention order itself is not being challenged nor the validity or legality of the conditions incorporated in the said order of 1971 are concerned. The only complaint that is being made is that the conditions of detention, which were available under the said Order of 1971 are also not permitted to be availed of by the petitioner, and as such he merely wants a writ of mandamus to be issued directing the State Government or the Authorities detaining the petitioner to follow the provisions of the

*(To set aside order of Dist. Magistrate, Kolaba, D/- 26-7-1975).

Maintenance of Internal Security (Maharashtra Conditions of Detention) Order, 1971 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Order of 1971').

2. Several such applications, including the present petition, have been presented in this Court as Special Civil Applications. A question arose whether these petitions should be filed under Chapter XXVIII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960, before a Division Bench doing criminal business on the Appellate Side or they should be Special Civil Applications under Article 226 before a Division Bench doing constitutional work. Since such a question arose, the learned Chief Justice by his order dated 4th October, 1975, as amended later, referred this matter to the present Bench for hearing the advocates concerned on this subject and give a decision whether such applications should be directed to be registered as Criminal Applications under Chapter XXVIII or Special Civil Applications under Chapter XVII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960.

3. There was an earlier reference when Special Civil Applications Nos. 2212 and 2213 of 1975 were referred for the specific decision as to whether applications challenging the detention and in the nature of habeas corpus would lie under Chapter XXVIII or under Chapter XVII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960. The question raised was that after the repeal of Section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the provisions of Chapter XXVIII have become ineffective and do not apply to writ petitions challenging the detention and claiming a writ of habeas corpus. That reference was decided on 1st and 2nd October, 1975, and on the construction of the Rules it has been held that all such applications, where the subject-matter is the writ of habeas corpus, would appropriately lie under Chapter XXVIII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960.

4. Before we consider the classification of such petitions let us analyse the prayers that are made and find out the real nature of the petition. What is being stated before us is that the detenu is not challenging the order of detention at all. He is also not challenging the validity and legality of the order of 1971 dealing with the conditions of detention. The detenu is willing to stay behind the bars but under the condition of the Order of 1971 and in conformity thereof. Since he is not being so detained but some of the rights available to him under that Order are also being deprived, he is merely requiring the Court's assistance for a writ or order in the nature of mandamus requiring the statutory authorities connected with the detention of the petitioner to observe the law and the rules that are laid down in that Order of 1971. So viewed, there is nothing in the contents of the petition nor the prayer of relief which smacks of any claim or relief of the nature of habeas corpus. That being the real nature of the petition, the proper classification would be a Special Civil Application under Chapter XVII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960.

5. For the purpose of making such an argument it is stated that the earlier order passed by this Court in Special Civil Applications Nos. 2212 and 2213 of 1975 may be accepted as basis for classifying the applications. If the present petitions could also be described as applications for habeas corpus or applications falling in that category of matters, a direction may be given to treat them as criminal applications falling under Chapter XXVIII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules. However, that order has analysed the provisions of Rule 622 of the Original Side Rules, Chapters XVII, XXVI and XXVIII of the Appellate Side Rules, and has concluded that for all applications under Article 226 for issue of writ of habeas corpus the Court made available is the Division Bench taking criminal business on the Appellate Side as per Rule 1 of Chapter XXVIII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960. Barring this kind of application under Article 226, all other applications falling under Article 226 of the Constitution are held to lie properly under Chapter XVII. Accepting that classification it is stated that an application of the present type would on that classification itself fall under Chapter XVII.

6. There is an obvious fallacy in the argument that is addressed to us. If there is a rule like Rule 38 in the Order of 1971, the State Government is purporting to act under that rule and deprived the detenus of certain conditions comprising the Order of 1971. It was brought to our notice that a rule in similar terms contained in the conditions of detention order under COFEPOSA have been struck down by the judgment of this Court in Ramesh Ram Lal Narang v. C. T. A. Pillai, (1975) 77 Bom LR 506. However, this does not mean that Rule 38 of the Order of 1971 automatically gets struck or becomes ineffective unless there is a judicial pronouncement. We were further told that the detenus are not yet informed by the Government as to how they are deprived of the facilities which were earlier available under the conditions incorporated in the Order of 1971. They are merely told that they will get orders in due course. Whether the deprivation is after passing an order under Rule 38 or without acting under that rule is not known to the litigants. So far as they are concerned and on the basis of the information supplied by the Government or, in fact, not supplied by the Government, they treat the deprivation of certain conditions as a stark illegal act and, therefore, want a writ of mandamus to be issued by this Court.

7. What really is the nature of the petition even on the basis of all that is stated before us? There may be an order under Rule 38 which is responsible for depriving the facilities earlier available. In that case the Government is seeking to act under Rule 38. If there is no such order either individually against each detenu or collectively against a class, the action is clearly contrary to the provisions of the Order of 1971. Whatever the real manner in which interference with the conditions of detention is being brought about, the fact remains that there is a complaint against the legality thereof and, therefore, some relief is asked for from this Court.

8. It is here that the real nature of the writ of habeas corpus and the manner in which this important writ can be utilised by the citizen, falls for consideration. Historically speaking this is being considered in England as one of the most important writs and practically the main writ in the field for obtaining a swift and imperative remedy in all cases of illegal restraint or confinement. These observations are made by Lord Birkenhead in Secretary of State for Home Affairs v. O'Brien, 1923 AC 603. Mr. Seervai in his learned treatise Constitutional Law of India, 1967 Edition has traced the history of the writ jurisdiction in England and particularly relating to the habeas corpus writ in Section 1 of Chapter XVI. After quoting an extract from the judgment of Lord Birkenhead, the learned author observed that the brief historical account of the writ of habeas corpus shows that the writ is available in all cases of wrongful deprivation of personal liberty and is available against the Crown, its ministers and its servants. In our view, where detention itself is challenged on the ground that it is unlawful, here is a challenge to the deprivation of liberty in its entirety. When a person is detained and is required to be detained under the statutory provisions in a certain manner, not to detain him as such but to interfere with the statutory conditions under which he must be detained also amounts in principle and in law to an interference with his personal liberty. It may be that this interference is of a partial character, when the action touches only a part of the liberty, in the sense, the manner of detention. This approach is historically well founded and it is not possible to accept the argument that unless detention itself is challenged or the legality of the conditions of detention are challenged, there is no challenge to any part of the personal liberty at all. If the action of the State Government is in clear breach of the provisions of the Order of 1971, and that alone is challenged to the extent of the conditions under which the detenu should have been restrained, there is undoubtedly a challenge to a part of the deprivation of personal liberty of the detenu. When there is such partial interference with the personal liberty of a person, a writ of habeas corpus seems to be available. That inference can be drawn from the observations in the Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edition, Volume II, in paragraph 41 on page 24. The learned author observed that the writ is applicable as a remedy in all cases of wrongful deprivation of personal liberty. If the detention itself is not challenged, but the manner of detention is challenged, it amounts to throwing the challenge to a partial deprivation of personal liberty and in essence the remedy is nothing but a writ of habeas corpus. It appears that general observations are made by the Supreme Court in relation to the conditions of detention, when the detenu is not being permitted to transfer his manuscript to his wife for its ultimate publication. It was admittedly a book on scientific subject and the question was whether the detenu could be prevented from publishing such a book simply because he was under detention. The Supreme Court observed in State of Maharashtra v. Prabhakar Pandurang Sanzgiri, 68 Bom LR 481 at page 483 = (AIR 1966 SC 424 at pages 426, 427) that if the appropriate authority seeks to impose on a detenu a restriction not so prescribed, the said authority will be interfering with the personal liberty of the detenu in derogation of the law whereunder he is detained. If that happens, the High Court, in terms of Article 226 of the Constitution, can issue an appropriate writ or direction to the authority concerned to act in accordance with law. No direct judgment has been cited before us, but observations of this type, which are made from time to time by the Supreme Court, have been relied on to point out that the deprivation of personal liberty can arise in several ways. Not to detain a detenu in terms of the conditions validly enacted or to put restrictions or conditions not validly enacted, to disregard the conditions which are valid and to act in derogation thereof would be very much a shade of the deprivation of the liberty. There is, therefore, no doubt that as and when the question of personal liberty arises and the allegation is that the detention is unlawful, in any of the ways including the partial challenge to conditions only, as we have discussed above, the petition seems to be either a petition for claiming habeas corpus or a petition of that nature falling under Article 226 of the Constitution.

9. If this is the real nature of the petition that is before us, could it be said that such a petition would not fall under the provisions of Chapter XXVIII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960, as interpreted by this Court in Special Civil Applications Nos. 2212 and 2213 of 1975. For applications of habeas corpus or applications in the nature of habeas corpus under Article 226, the only provisions made by the Bombay High Court are those contained in Chapter XXVIII. If those rules apply, the applications for seeking any relief of the nature contemplated by that Chapter in relation to Article 226 of the Constitution must always be marked as Criminal Applications falling under that Chapter. This is purely a procedural provision and this Court has pointed out in the earlier judgment that the real nature of the dispute with reference to the right of appeal can always be raised and point out to the Court when the question of leave arises.

10. One of the arguments that was addressed to us was what the petitioner is seeking is a writ of mandamus to the authorities to observe law. That may be the form in which the prayer has been drafted. However, if the State Government seeks to detain the detenu under some orders by which the facilities earlier given are not made available, the new pattern of detention represents the conditions of detention. Unless this action is struck down, a further direction to detain the detenu in a certain manner or under certain rules may not be possible. In spite of the manner of drafting, we are satisfied that the present petition as also similar other several petitions of that type are properly applications for habeas corpus or applications of that nature and properly lie within the ambit of Chapter XXVIII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules. This being our view, we direct that the present application as also all similar applications should be registered as Criminal Applications under Chapter XXVIII of the Bombay High Court Appellate Side Rules, 1960, and they should be processed and dealt with accordingly.

11. Any interim relief granted in this and similar other Applications marked as Special Civil Applications to continue as an interim relief under their new designations as Criminal Applications.

Order accordingly.

M. R. Kotwal and S. R. Chitnis, for Petitioner; S. S. Pandit for V. P. Tipnis, for Opponent.

ORDER:— This is a tenant's Special Civil Application under Article 227 of the Constitution directed against the judgment and the decree passed by the Joint Judge, Thana, on January 18, 1972, under Section 13 (1) (a) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, read with Section 108 (o) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

2. The learned Civil Judge, Senior Division, Thana, held in the suit for eviction, filed by the landlord in his judgment and decree, dated March 31, 1970, that the tenant had removed an old beam ridden with termite and refixed a new one; and this would not be an act contrary to the provisions of Clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act; and, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

3. The learned Joint Judge reversed that decision holding:—

"The act of the defendant in removing the old beam from its place was nothing but destructive or permanently injurious to the suit premises, irrespective of the fact whether actual damage was caused to the building or not. There is also some evidence of damage caused to the plaintiff's house. I, therefore, feel that the defendant's act of removing the old beam from its place was contrary to the provisions of Section 108 (o) of the Transfer of Property Act and defendant was liable to be evicted from the suit premises on that ground."

The learned Joint Judge misconceived the law under Section 13 (1) (a) of the Bombay Rent Act and Section 108 (o) of the Transfer of Property Act. The said provisions are as under:—

"S. 13 (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, a landlord shall be entitled to recover possession of any premises if the Court is satisfied—

(a) that the tenant has committed any act contrary to the provisions of clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882;

x x x x x x

S. 108. In the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, the lessor and the lessee of immovable property, as against one another, respectively, possess the rights and are subject to the liabilities mentioned in the rules next following, or such of them as are applicable to the property leased:—

* * *

(o) The lessee may use the property and its products (if any) as a person of ordinary prudence would use them if they were his own; but he must not use, or permit another to use, the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased, or fell or sell timber, pull down or damage buildings belonging to the lessor, or work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted, or commit any other act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto."

It is clear that Clause (o) of Section 108 requires the tenant to use the property as a person of ordinary prudence would use and not to use it for a purpose other than that for which it was leased. It is only when the Court is satisfied that the tenant has committed any act contrary to the provisions of Section 108 (o), that the Court has jurisdiction to pass a decree for possession in favour of the landlord under Section 13 (1) (a).

4. I do not think that if a termite affected beam is replaced with a new one and is removed, it can be said to be an act of imprudence on the part of the tenant. By no stretch of words, can it be said that removing such a old and hazardous beam and putting a new beam is an act contrary to provisions of Cl. (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

5. Further it is well settled that a test that has to be applied for deciding whether there is a contravention of provisions of Section 108 (o) is what was the tenant doing? See an unreported decision in Civil Revn. Appln. No. 431 of 1958, decided by Chagla C. J., on 16-7-1958 (Bom).

6. In Special Civil Appln. No. 431 of 1966 decided on 23-8-1968 (Bom) V. S. Desai, J, discussed the effect of Section 13 (1) (a) of the Bombay Rent Act read with Section 108 (o) of the Transfer of Property Act as under:—

"Section 13 (1) (a) provides that if the tenant has committed any act contrary to the provisions of Clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer Property Act, 1882, the landlord would be entitled to a decree in eviction. Clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, so far as is material for our purpose, prohibits the tenant to use or permit another to use the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased. In order that the tenant should be guilty under this clause, it must be shown that the property was let for a specific purpose and that the tenant had used it nor for that purpose but for some other purpose. Now, the view taken by the lower Appellate Court was that the premises in the present case were let for the purpose of storage of goods and that by storing a motor-car the tenant had used it for a different purpose. It is difficult to accept this view of the lower appellate Court. The change of purpose, which is contemplated under the provisions of clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, is a purpose other than the one for which the premises let were intended to be used and contemplates the user of a different kind from the one which was intended at the time of letting.....

The change of purpose contemplated by clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act is change from user of one kind to another involving waste, alterations, destruction or damage of the property etc. or amounting to an act of nuisance. A change of user, which does not involve any such element, will not amount to a breach of Section 108 (o) of the Transfer of Property Act. Under Section 6 of the Rent Act the broad classes of purposes or the users of the premises to which the rented premises may be put are specified as for residence, education, business, trade or storage. The actionable ground contemplated by Section 13 (1) (a) by its reference to clause (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act is a change of purpose or user from one kind of user to another from amongst the several users as are specified in Section 6 of the Rent Act, except in cases where by a specific restrictive covenant in the lease the user is still further restricted."

With respect, what V. S. Desai J. has observed with regard to change of user would also apply under Section 108 (o) to the change of a termite ridden old beam to a new beam by the tenant, which instead of causing any damage to the tenement is bound to benefit. A breach of act which cannot be said to be contrary to Section 108 (o), unless it is an act of an imprudent person, or an act which is destructive or permanently injurious thereto. I do not think that if a termite ridden old beam is removed and a new beam is put, it can be said to be act of an imprudent person or an act destructive or permanently injurious to the premises.

7. In this connection, it is useful to refer to the decision of the Privy Council in UPO Naing v. Burmal Oil Co. Ltd., 56 Ind App 140 = (AIR 1929 PC 108). In that case the owner of oil sites and grantee from Government of the right to win oil therefrom leased sites and the right to win oil for twenty-five years to the respondents, who agreed to pay royalties on oil won by them. In sinking wells, which did not produce oil in commercial quantities, the respondents found natural gas. They tapped the gas by pipes, and for six years used it for their own purpose.

8. The Privy Council held that the appellant owner of the oil sites was not entitled to compensation for the gas, so taken, since that right was not included in the right to royalties upon the oil won; and the lease, on its true construction, was merely a lease for the purpose of winning oil, and the appellant having no property in the gas the respondents were entitled to reduce into possession and use it provided they did so without injury to the leased property; and that was consistent with the Transfer of Property Act, Section 108 (o).

9. The first Lord Hailsham L. Chancellor observed at page 145:—

"A further argument was based upon the provisions of Section 108 (o), of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which provides that the lessee of property must not use the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased. In their Lordships' judgment it is not necessary exhaustively to discuss the limits of that provision, but there seems to be nothing inconsistent with its terms in the use of the gas which is necessarily set free by reason of the sinking of the oil well for the respondents' own purposes without doing any damage or any injury to the property leased."

The damage or injury to the property leased is, therefore, essential before the landlord can rely on the act as one in contravention of Section 108 (o) of the Transfer of Property Act within the meaning of Section 13 (1) (a) of the Bombay Rent Act.

10. Similar view appears to have been taken by a single Judge of the Gujarat High Court in Mahmad Umar v. Manilal, (1968) 9 Guj LR 104, where it was laid down that having regard to the provisions of Section 108 (o) of the Transfer of Property Act, a change of user in the absence of a contract to the contrary, would not result in giving a cause of action for evicting the tenant unless it is further proved that it is either destructive or permanently injurious to the property or its produce in the eye of law.

11. In the result, it must be held that the learned Joint Judge acted without jurisdiction in passing the decree for eviction on the erroneous basis that he had a power to do so under Section 13 (1) (a) of the Bombay Rent Act. The petition is allowed. The judgment and the decree passed by the learned Joint Judge, Thana, on January 18, 1972, are set aside and the judgment and the decree passed by the learned Civil Judge, Senior Division, Thana, on March 31, 1970, as dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs is restored. The respondent-landlord shall pay the costs of the petitioner in this Court and in the lower appellate Court, also.

Petition allowed.

VAIDYA AND MRIDUL, JJ.

The Union of India and another, Appellants v. M/s. D. P. Wadia and Sons, Respondents.

First Appeals Nos. 369 and 370 of 1975, D/- 15-4-1976.*

(A) Arbitration Act (1940), Section 2 (a) — Arbitration clause — Construction.

The words of arbitration clause which takes within its sweep any claim, right or matter in any way arising out of or relating to the contract have been held by the Courts to take in all claims which arise out of or pertain to the contract. The Courts have interpreted these words to include claims based on a quantum meruit, frustration of contracts as also non-payment under a promissory note given collaterally in respect of an agreement containing the arbitration clause.

(Para 12)

(E) Arbitration Act (1940), Sections 13, 29 — Nature of powers of arbitrator — Whether arbitrator can award interest.

An arbitrator is a domestic forum. It is a forum, other than a Court of law constituted by the parties, or by provisions of law for determination of disputes and differences, after hearing both the sides, in a judicial manner. The arbitrator has to conform broadly to judicial trappings. An arbitrator is bound by the legal principles and has to adhere to the provisions of law applicable to the adjudication of matters before him. Having regard to the functions and position of the arbitrator, it is implicit that an arbitrator must have the powers of the judicial nature so as to facilitate determination of disputes and differences between the parties relating to an award which when made a rule of the court acquires legal sanctity, and becomes final binding and conclusive. The courts read into the scope of the power of an arbitrator, the powers which are accorded to the civil courts.

(Para 14)

A dispute as to payment of interest is a dispute which is capable of reference to arbitration under the provisions of the Arbitration Act. Such a dispute, if referred to the arbitrator, brings it within his competence to make an award in respect of payment of interest by one party to the other. The perimeters governing the exercise of his jurisdiction, however, will be the same as obtain to a court of law, in the matter of awarding interest.

(Para 21)

The arbitrator has competence to award interest provided the claim for such interest is based either on the agreement between the parties or substantive provision of law applicable thereto or upon an equitable principle impinging thereon. This is upon the principle that it is an implied incident of a reference that an arbitrator can give such relief with regard to interest as a Court could give if it decided the dispute. In all cases, it would be a question of fact as to whether a particular award for interest made by the arbitrator, is justified under the provisions of law, invoked by the parties and the material on record before the arbitrator. Case law discussed.

V. H. Gumaste, Govt. Pleader, for Appellants in both the Appeals; R. M. Purandare, for Respondents in both the Appeals.

MRIDUL, J.:— These two appeals, preferred by the Union of India, Original Defendants, are directed against the Judgments and Orders dated 31st December, 1974, passed by the Civil Judge, Sr. Dn., Nasik, in Special Civil Suit Nos. 222 and 223 of 1974. By the said judgments and orders the learned trial Judge was pleased to repel the challenges made by the original Defendants as to the invalidity of the awards of the arbitrator B. S. Sekhon, in respect of the disputes and differences between the Union of India and the Respondents, viz., M/s. D. P. Wadia and Sons, being the Plaintiffs in the said suits.

2. As a common question of law arises in both the appeals, they are heard together and disposed of by this common judgment.

3. The facts in Special Civil Suit No. 222 of 1974, may be summarised as follows:— The Plaintiffs M/s. D. P. Wadia and Sons (hereinafter referred to as "the Contractors"), entered into a contract with the Union of India for the construction of certain buildings or quarters for the Government of India Printing Press at Nasik Road in or about 1956. The said construction was completed but in regard to the claims of the contractors against the Union of India and the counter claims of the Union of India, disputes and differences arose by and between the parties. It appears that in the correspondence antecedent to making of the reference, the Contractors claimed from the Union of India amounts which were payable to them under the said works contract together with interest thereon. The Union of India also in their turn counter-claimed certain amounts from the Contractors together with interest thereon. Having regard to the provisions of Cl. 25 of the said works contract, which was the arbitration clause therein, the parties referred their disputes and differences to the said arbitrator. In fact, the said arbitrator was appointed by the Chief Engineer (SWZ), C. P. W. D., Bombay, by his letter dated 6th September, 1972, as arbitrator to decide and make award regarding disputes between the parties, "which disputes fall within the purview of Clause 25 of the agreement".

4. The pleadings were filed on behalf of the Contractors and the Union of India before the learned arbitrator in the said reference. It is not disputed by the parties that in the said pleadings the question as to the payment of interest was raised by the parties. Upon the basis of the pleadings filed before the arbitrator issues in regard to the payment of interest by the Contractors to the Union of India and vice versa were raised. After hearing the parties, the arbitrator made and published his award on 17th October, 1973. The intimation relating thereto was given to the Contractors and the Union of India.

5. The award as filed in the Court, was challenged by the Union of India by an application dated 31st December, 1973. One of the contentions related to the direction in the award for payment of interest. It was contended that the awarding of interest to the Contractors was illegal as, "the said issue was never referred to the arbitrator". The learned trial Judge raised 4 issues. They related to the plea of limitation, in respect of the application dated 31st December, 1973, by which the award was sought to be challenged; as to whether the award was not legal and disclosed error apparent on the face of the award; as to whether the award was liable to be set aside or remitted and lastly, as to whether the direction as to interest was legal. The learned trial Judge made findings in favour of the Contractors, dismissed the application challenging the award and confirmed the award.

6. The facts in the Special Suit No. 223 of 1974, are similar. In fact, they appear to be identical save and except with regard to the quantum of claims involved. Identical issues were raised by the learned trial Judge in the said suit. The facts of the said suit, therefore, need not be reproduced here.

7. In both the suits, the challenge to the direction for payment of interest was two-fold. The contention of the Union of India was that the issue of interest was not referred to the arbitrator by the parties. It was further contended that in any event, the award of interest was ex facie contrary to law and therefore, constituted an error apparent on the face of the award. The learned trial Judge found on facts that the contention that the issue as to interest was not referred to the arbitrator was not tenable. The learned trial Judge observed, "the award that has been produced in this Court and the finding of the arbitrator show that both the parties claimed interest on their respective claims and the arbitrator was requested to decide the point of interest and the issue was specifically framed regarding the claim of interest by the respective parties". In regard to the question of error apparent on the face of the award, the learned trial Judge noticed several judgments cited at the Bar before him and came to the conclusion that, "I do not find that the arbitrator committed any error which is apparent on the face of the award passed by him when he granted the interest pendente lite to the Plaintiff". In these circumstances, the learned trial Judge repelled the challenge to the award based on the ground of interest and as noticed above, the awards in both the suits were confirmed and were made rules of the Court.

8. Shri Gumaste, the learned counsel, for the Union of India, assails the judgments and orders of the learned trial Judge on the following two grounds: (1) that the direction as to the payment of interest made in the said awards was beyond the ambit of the arbitrator's authority. In other words, the claim relating to interest fell outside the scope of the reference; (2) the direction as to payment of interest was ex facie illegal and disclosed error of law apparent on the face of the award. The learned trial Judge held that the claim as to interest was a question of law, and such a question of law was not referred to the arbitrator and that being so, the mistake of the arbitrator in awarding interest was not binding on the Union of India and could be assailed before the Court.

9. The question whether the disputes and differences relating to the claim of interest by the Contractor or by the Union of India were referred to the arbitrator encompasses a very narrow factual controversy. The controversy will have to be resolved with reference to Cl. 25, which is the arbitration clause in the contract and the facts antecedent to and surrounding the reference and the proceedings before arbitrator.

10. Material portion of Clause 25 reads as follows:—

"Except where otherwise provided in the contract all questions and disputes relating to the meaning of the specifications, designs, drawings, and instructions hereinbefore mentioned and as to the quality of workmanship, or materials used in the work, or as to any other question, claim, right, matter or materials used on the work, or as to any other question, claim, right, matter or thing whatsoever, in any way arising out of or relating to the contract, designs, drawings, specifications, estimates, instructions orders or these conditions or "otherwise concerning the works, or the execution or failure to execute the same, whether arising during the progress of the work, or after the completion or abandonment thereof shall be referred to the sole arbitration of the Chief/Additional Chief Engineer, Central Public Works Department, and if the Additional Chief Engineer is unable or unwilling to act, to the sole arbitration of some other person appointed by the Additional Chief Engineer willing to act as such arbitrator."

11. It is not disputed before us that prior to the reference the parties had formulated their claims in the correspondence exchanged by and between them. In the said correspondence the claim for interest was made both by the Union of India and the Contractors. The reference has not been produced before us, nor was the reference produced before the learned trial Judge. It is also not disputed before us that the claims made before the learned arbitrator by the parties included claims for interest made by the Contractors in respect of the amounts which according to the Contractors were payable to them, for execution of the works or amounts payable under the said works contract. The Union of India also claimed interest in respect of its claim which was based on the alleged breaches committed by the Contractors. It is also not disputed that before the arbitrator the issues as to interest were framed and the parties invited the arbitrator to decide the said issues.

12. The arbitration clause abstracted above, is very widely worded. The clause in regard to the subject-matter of the claim within its ambit, is in the widest possible terms. It takes within its sweep any claim, right or matter in any way arising out of or relating to the contract. The words of such wide imports have been held by the Courts to take in all claims which arise out of or pertain to the contract. The Courts have interpreted these words to include claims based on a quantum meruit, frustration of contracts as also non-payment under a promissory note given collaterally in respect of an agreement containing the arbitration clause (see illustration given by Russel on Arbitration, 18th Edn. page 70).

13. In our opinion, having regard to the sweep of the arbitration clause it must be held that the claim of payment of interest respecting the amounts payable under the works contract was a claim or a question or a matter which arose out of the said works-contract or related to the said works-contract. Not only that, the parties themselves by making a claim for interest prior to the reference proceeded upon the footing that such a claim was claim which arose out of or related to the works-contract. The disputes and differences relating to interest were thus enumerated and set out in the correspondence and were referred amongst other disputes and differences, to the arbitration of the said arbitrator. The reference was made by a letter dated 5th September, 1972, written by the Chief Engineer (SWZ), C. P. W. D., Bombay. The said letter was not produced before us nor was it produced before the learned trial Judge. However, a copy of the award was produced before the learned trial Judge. We have gone through the said award and we find a reference to the said letter in the said award itself. The award recites that by the said letter the arbitrator was required "to decide and make award regarding the disputes between the above-named parties which disputes fall within the purview of Clause 25 of the agreement, referred to above". In other words, all disputes or claims which fall within the wide sweep of Clause 25, were referred to the arbitration. This circumstance clearly indicates that the claim as to interest was one of the claims and was in point of fact referred to the arbitration. We have no hesitation therefore, in rejecting the contention of the learned counsel for the Union of India that the dispute as to interest was not referred to the arbitrator.

14. This takes us to the second contention canvassed on behalf of the Union of India. The said contention will have to be decided upon the basis of the legal frame-work which governs the duties and the powers of the arbitrator as also the principles which he has to adopt in the matter of proceedings before him. An arbitrator, undoubtedly, is a domestic forum. It is a forum, other than a Court of Law constituted by the parties, or by the provisions of law for determination of disputes and differences, after hearing both the sides, in a judicial manner. The arbitrator has to conform broadly to judicial trappings. It has been held by the several judgments of the Courts that an arbitrator is bound by the legal principles and has to adhere to the provisions of law applicable to the adjudication of matters before him. Having regard to the functions and position of the arbitrator, it is implicit that an arbitrator must have the powers of the judicial nature so as to facilitate determination of disputes and differences between the parties relating to an award which when made a rule of the court, acquires legal sanctity, and becomes final, binding and conclusive. In Crighton v. Law Car and General Insurance Corporation Ltd., reported in (1910) 2 KB 738, Scrutton, J., at page 745, attributed to the arbitrator "inherent powers as a judicial officer". It has been held by the several judgments, both in England and India that an arbitrator has powers analogous to the powers conferred upon the Civil Court in regard to the proceedings before or for arbitration of disputes referred to him. These judgments relate to power and authority of the arbitrator to grant adjournments, permit amendments of the pleadings, compel evidence and production of documents and several other matters which are normal features of a civil litigation before a court of law. This principle is statutorily recognised by the Arbitration Act 1940. Section 13 of the Arbitration Act enumerates powers of arbitrators subject to a contrary intention expressed in the agreement. First Schedule of the said Act sets out the implied conditions of the arbitration agreement. The recent judicial trends also show that the courts read into the scope of the power of an arbitrator, the powers which are accorded to the Civil Courts. A graphic illustration of the rule is found in the dicta of Kantawala, J. (as the learned Chief Justice then was) in Erach F. D. Mehta v. Minoo F. D. Mehta, decided on 28th August/1st September, 1969, (unreported). In that case a question arose as to whether an arbitrator is authorised to grant specific performance of a contract. It was argued on behalf of the counsel that power of the specific performance by the provisions of Specific Relief Act, 1963, was conferred upon a Court and therefore, such a power must be said to be negated in cases of arbitration. In dealing with the said contention, the learned Judge upon an infra-analysis of law came to the conclusion that, "it is, therefore, not possible to take the view that a relief by way of specific performance cannot be granted by an arbitrator". This was the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge after a comprehensive review of the case law bearing on the subject. The dicta of the learned Judge in Erach F. D. Mehta's case was approved by a Division Bench of this Court in the Fertilizer Corporation of India v. Chemical Construction Corporation, reported in (1973) 75 Bom LR 335. The Fertilizer Corporation case (supra) was a case where the contention was that an arbitrator was not entitled to grant a declaratory relief or an injunctive relief. At page 350, the Division Bench dealt with the said contention by making the following observations:

"The next contention of Mr. Bhabha was that by prayers (a) and (b) the plaintiffs are seeking a declaratory relief and injunction; that such relief can only be granted by the Court having regard to the provisions of the Specific Relief Act and they cannot be granted by the arbitrators — The question whether an arbitrator acting within the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1940 can grant relief by way of specific performance was considered by me sitting as a single Judge in Erach F. D. Mehta v. Minoo F. D. Mehta. Mr. Bhabha appeared for one of the parties in that matter and advanced the same arguments which are advanced by him before us. In short the view taken in that decision is that all matters of a civil nature, which can form the subject-matter of a suit within the meaning of Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure can be referred to arbitration; that the arbitrator will have jurisdiction even to grant a relief which can normally be granted by the Court under the Specific Relief Act. As pointed out in Halsbury's Laws of England, third Ed. Vol. 2, page 6:

"The dispute or difference which the parties to an arbitration agreement agree to refer must be of a justiciable issue triable civilly. A fair test of this is whether the difference can be compromised lawfully by way of accord and satisfaction."

Applying this test there can be no doubt that a dispute relating to a declaratory relief and injunction can be compromised lawfully by way of accord and satisfaction. A reference was made in my decision to the observation of Tucker, L. J., in Chandris v. Isbrandtsen — Moller Co., Inc., (1951-1 KB 240). It is there stated (page 262):

"..... To that there are, of course, certain well-known exceptions, such as the right to grant an injunction, which stand on a different footing; one of the reasons why an arbitrator cannot give an injunction is, of course, that he has no power to enforce it; but such an objection does not apply to the award of interest."

So far as the award granting an injunction is concerned, in this country there is no difficulty in enforcing it because no award simpliciter is enforceable unless a decree in terms of the award has been passed under the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1940. Once a decree in terms of the award has been passed, the award granting injunction is merged in the decree and the decree granting injunction can always be enforced. In fact in Lakshmi Narain v. Raghbir Singh, (AIR 1956 Punj 249, Harnam Singh, J., rejected the contention that suits in which granting of relief is entirely within the discretion of the Court cannot be referred to arbitration. The learned Judge there even went to the extent of saying that a suit for mandatory injunction can be referred to arbitration. There is nothing in the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1940, which goes to suggest that a relief which may be granted by the Court under the Specific Relief Act cannot be granted by the arbitrator if the parties decide to have the dispute relating to such relief referred to arbitration. In our opinion, if a proper case is made out it will be permissible to an arbitrator acting within the provisions of paragraph 12.2 of the agreement to grant the relief in terms of prayers (a) and/or (b) or such part thereof as may be admissible."

15. The Fertilizer Corporation's case (1973-75 Bom LR 335) (supra) in our opinion, is an authority for the proposition, that it is an implied incident of all arbitrations that all disputes of civil nature can be referred to the arbitration and that in deciding the said disputes the arbitrator shall have all powers which Normally the Court has in matters of such determination. In other words, the arbitrator can grant such reliefs as are normally granted by the Courts of law in that behalf.

16. Application of this principle to the question of competence of the arbitrator to award interest does not present any conceptual or other difficulty. The statement of law relating to this branch has been very accurately stated by Russell on Arbitration 18th Edn. at page 292, in the following words:—

"An arbitrator may award interest, by virtue of his implied authority to follow the ordinary rules of law".

17. It may also be noticed that this statement of law is inter alia based upon the ratio of the decision in Chandris v. Isbrandtsen Moller Co., Inc., reported in (1951) 1 KB 240, and that the ratio of the decision in Chandris' case was approved by Kantawala, J., in Erach F. D. Mehta's case. This approval also received imprimatur of the Division Bench in the Fertilizer Corporation's case (supra).

18. Halsbury expounds the law to the same effect. The statement given by Halsbury, 4th Edn. Vol. 2, in paragraph 580, is in the following words:—

"Interest. — An arbitrator or umpire has power to award interest on the amount of any debt or damages for the whole or any part of the period between the date when the cause of action arose and the date of the award."

19. In Seksaria Industries (Pvt.) Ltd. v. Tolaram Jalan, (unreported, Award No. 5 of 1959, S. M. Shah, J., decided on 25th March, 1960), the learned single Judge of this Court repelled the challenge to the validity of the award on the ground that the direction as to the payment of interest by the award disclosed an error apparent on the face of the award. The learned Judge discussed several judgments including the judgments of the Calcutta High Court in Bhowanidas Ramgovind v. Harsukhdas Balkishendas, reported in 27 Cal WN 933 = (AIR 1924 Cal 524) and of English Court in Re Badger, (1819) 2 B & A 691, and observed (at page 104) as follows:—

"In my opinion, it is not necessary to provide for the power to award interest in the reference itself. It is entirely a matter of discretion with the arbitrator whether to award any interest on the amount awarded by him. In this case, the arbitrator thought it proper to award interest at the rate of 4% per annum on the amount found due by him as payable by the petitioners to the respondent, and in my opinion, he was perfectly entitled to do so in law. He cannot, therefore, be said to be guilty of misconduct on the ground alleged by Mr. Parpia".

20. A view similar to the one taken by Shah, J., in Seksaria Industries (Pvt.) Ltd., (Award No. 5 of 1959, D/-25-3-1960 (Bom)) (supra), was taken by another single Judge of this Court (unreported decision of S. K. Desai, J., dated 27th June, 1974, in O. D. C. J. Award No. 113 of 1973). This was a case relating to disputes between a contractor and the Union of India. The works contract appears to be in pari materia with the works contract in the present appeal. Incidentally the arbitrator whose award was sought to be assailed is the same arbitrator whose award is impeached before us. In regard to the direction for payment of interest made in the award the learned single Judge repelled the said contention on the view that the arbitrator had jurisdiction to award interest pendente lite. The learned Judge observed (at page 15) that:

"On a consideration of the several authorities cited at the bar I am of opinion that the learned arbitrator had jurisdiction in this case to award interest pendente lite and that there is no error of law apparent on the face of the award as alleged."

21. In our opinion, the position in law appears to be clear. A dispute as to payment of interest is a dispute which is capable of reference to arbitration under the provisions of the Arbitration Act. Such a dispute, if referred to the arbitrator, brings it within his competence to make an award in respect of payment of interest by one party to the other. The perimeters governing the exercise of his jurisdiction, however, will be the same as obtain to a court of law, in the matter of awarding interest. The Supreme Court authentically laid down the law relating to the awarding of interest in Mahabir Prasad Rungta v. Durga Datta, reported in AIR 1961 SC 990. It was laid down by the Supreme Court at page 993, that:—

"interest for a period prior to the commencement of suit is claimable either under an agreement, or usage of trade or under a statutory provision or under the Interest Act, for a sum certain where notice is given. Interest is also awarded in some cases by Courts of equity."

22. The Supreme Court further observed at the same page that:—

"As regards interest pendente lite until the date of realisation, such interest was within the discretion of the Court."

23. Upon the authority of the Supreme Court it can be therefore observed that pendente lite interest can be granted by a Court in cases where there is an agreement between the parties or there exists a usage of trade or a statutory provision providing for the grant of interest. Such interest also can be granted upon equitable grounds. There are several statutes which make provisions for the payment of interest, such as, Sale of Goods Act, Negotiable Instruments Act and the Interest Act. The question as to whether a person is entitled to the direction for interest would depend on the facts of each case or the provisions of law or of equity or of the contract in question upon which such a claim of interest is founded.

24. The learned counsel for the Union of India draws our attention to the judgment of the Supreme Court in Thawardas Phurmal v. Union of India, reported in AIR 1955 SC 468. According to him the said decision is an authority for the proposition that the arbitrator has no jurisdiction to award any interest. The learned counsel further submits that the same is the view taken by the Supreme Court in Union of India v. A. L. Rallia Ram, reported in AIR 1963 SC 1685.

25. Thawardas's case (AIR 1955 SC 468) is a case where the disputes and differences between a contractor and the Union of India were referred to arbitration. The claim before the arbitrator related to the payment of compensation for breaches allegedly committed by the Union of India. In the award made by the arbitrator certain amounts were awarded to the contractor as and by way of damages. The arbitrator also granted interest in respect of the amounts which were found to be payable to the contractor under the works-contract in question. In regard to the claim for damages, upon the contention of the Union of India, that the contractor was bound to mitigate damages under the provisions of Section 73 of the Contract Act, the Supreme Court dealt with the same and noticed the fact that not all legal errors can vitiate the award but such legal errors which are apparent on the face of the award alone can be said to vitiate the award. In regard to the interest, the Supreme Court made an assumption that the arbitrator was a Court within the meaning of the Arbitration Act, which the Supreme Court characterised as "a fact that by no means appears to be the case and observed at page 478 as follows:—

"The following among other conditions must be fulfilled before interest can be awarded under the Act.

(1) there must be a debt or a sum certain;

(2) it must be payable at a certain time or otherwise;

(3) these debts or sums must be payable by virtue of some written contract at a certain time;

(4) there must have been a demand in writing stating that interest will be demanded from the date of the demand. Not one of these elements is present, so the arbitrator erred in law in thinking that he had the power to allow interest simply because he thought the demand was reasonable."

26. It may, therefore, be observed that the Supreme Court upheld the challenge to the award of the interest upon the factual foundation that none of the elements or ingredients expounded by the Supreme Court, was available in the case before the Court. In our opinion, it is clear from the judgment of the Supreme Court that the Supreme Court did not lay down any proposition to the effect that in no circumstances can interest be awarded by an arbitrator. Moreover, as will be observed later, the ratio of the decision of the Supreme Court in Thawardas's case (AIR 1955 SC 568) was subsequently explained by the Supreme Court itself and which explanation militates against the reading of the judgment of the Supreme Court in Thawardas's case as laying down any rigorous rule of law denying competence to the arbitrator to award interest.

27. In Rallia Ram's case (AIR 1963 SC 1685) the facts were different from those which are before us in the present appeal. In Rallia Ram's case interest was awarded against the Union of India by the arbitrator by giving reasoning in that behalf. The reason for awarding the interest was mentioned in the award in paragraph (ix) thereof. The Supreme Court reproduced the said reasoning in paragraph 20 of the judgment at page 1694. In paragraph 23 at page 1695, the Supreme Court dealt with the said reason for awarding the interest and observed as follows:—

"The umpire has awarded interest to the respondent on the footing that for the purpose of carrying out his contract with the Government of India, the respondent was required to make arrangements by borrowing monies from his bankers and he had to pay interest in that behalf, and when the contract was abandoned after it was partially performed, the Government of India became liable to make good the loss of interest which the respondent suffered. We know of no principle on which the Government of India could be rendered liable for payment of interest in the circumstances relied upon."

28. We are unable to appreciate as to how the decision in Rallia Ram's case (AIR 1963 SC 1685) helps the learned counsel for the Union of India.

29. In our opinion, the dicta of the Supreme Court in Firm Madanlal Roshanlal Mahajan v. Hukumchand Mills Ltd., Indore, reported in AIR 1967 SC 1030 and in Union of India v. Bungo Steel Furniture Private Ltd., reported in the same volume at page 1032, are more apposite. In Firm Madanlal Roshanlal's case a reference arose out of a suit. In the said reference the arbitrator was invited to make an award in regard to interest. The arbitrator having awarded the interest, the award was challenged on the ground of want of authority in the arbitrator to award interest pendente lite. In support of the objection, reliance was placed on the decision of the Supreme Court in Thawardas' case (AIR 1955 SC 468) (supra). The said contention was repelled by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court observed at page 1032 as follows:—

"It will be noticed that the judgment of this Court in Thawardas' case, 1955-2 SCR 48 = (AIR 1955 SC 468), is silent on the question whether the arbitrator can award interest during the pendency of arbitration proceedings if the claim regarding interest is referred to arbitration. In the present case, all the disputes in the suit were referred to the arbitrator for his decision. One of the disputes in the suit was whether the respondent was entitled to pendente lite interest. The arbitrator could decide the dispute and he could award pendente lite interest just as a Court could do so under Section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Though in terms, Section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to arbitrations, it was an implied term of the reference in the suit that the arbitrator would decide the dispute according to law and would give such relief with regard to pendente lite interest as the Court could give if it decided the dispute. This power of the arbitrator was not fettered either by the arbitration agreement or by the Arbitration Act, 1940."

30. It is true that Firm Madanlal Roshanlal's case (AIR 1967 SC 1030) was a case of reference out of a suit but the same principles were applied by the Supreme Court in the Bungo Steel Furniture case (AIR 1967 SC 1032) (supra). That was a case of a reference under Chapter II of the Arbitration Act. The award in that reference provided a direction for payment of interest. The provision in regard to the direction relating to interest was challenged, before the Calcutta High Court. The said challenge was repelled by Mallick, J. and a decree was granted on the basis of the award. Before the Supreme Court a similar contention was raised and was sought to be buttressed upon the basis of the decision in Thawardas's case (AIR 1955 SC 468) (supra). The Supreme Court expressed the view that the Thawardas's case did not deal with the question. The Supreme Court then observed at page 1032 as follows:—

"In our opinion, the arbitrator had jurisdiction, in the present case, to grant interest on the amount of the award from the date of the award till the date of the decree granted by Mallick, J. The reason is that it is an implied term of the reference that the arbitrator will decide the dispute according to existing law and give such relief with regard to interest as a Court could give if it decided the dispute. Though, in terms Section 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not apply to arbitration proceedings, the principle of that section will be applied by the arbitrator for awarding interest in cases where a Court of law in a suit having jurisdiction of the subject-matter covered by Section 34 could grant a decree for interest."

31. The learned counsel calls attention to another judgment of the Supreme Court in the State of Madhya Pradesh v. M/s. Saith and Skelton (P) Ltd., reported in (1972) 1 SCC 702 = (AIR 1972 SC 1507). We are unable to appreciate as to how the said decision helps the Union of India. It is observed by the Supreme Court in that case at p. 712 (of SCC) = (at p. 1514 of AIR) that:

"If the contention of Mr. Shroff that under no circumstances an arbitrator can award interest prior to the date of the Award, or prior to the date of reference, is accepted, then the position will be very anomalous."

32. The Supreme Court further observes on the same page that:

"Therefore, the question ultimately will be whether the dispute referred to the arbitrator included the claim for interest from any particular period or whether the party is entitled by contract or usage or by a provision of law for interest from a particular date."

33. The Supreme Court rejected the challenge to the award of interest by the arbitrator. This authority, in our opinion, supports the view that the arbitrator has competence to award interest provided the claim for such interest is based either on the agreement between the parties or substantive provision of law applicable thereto or upon an equitable principle impinging thereon.

34. We are, therefore, of the view that it is within the competence of an arbitrator to award interest. This is upon the principle that it is an implied incident of a reference that an arbitrator can give such relief with regard to interest as a Court could give if it decided the dispute. In all cases, it would be a question of fact as to whether a particular award for interest made by the arbitrator, is justified under the provisions of law, invoked by the parties and the material on record before the arbitrator.

35. In the present case, there is nothing on the record to substantiate the claim made on behalf of the Union of India that the dispute as to the interest was not referred to the arbitrator. On the contrary, there is an intrinsic evidence to support the case that such a dispute was in fact the subject-matter of the arbitration before the arbitrator. In the award itself it has been recorded that the issues were framed in the course of the proceedings before the arbitrator. The award sets out the issues which were raised by and between the parties. One of the issues mentioned in the award (being issue No. 7) relates to the payment of interest at 9 per cent. per annum, raised on behalf of the Contractors. Similarly, additional issue No. 3 relates to the claim of the Union of India for interest. We are, therefore, satisfied that the dispute as to the claim for interest was referred to the arbitrator. The award is not a speaking award. It gives no reason for awarding interest. There is nothing on the record to show as to how and upon what basis the award as to the payment of interest could be assailed by the Union of India. The Union of India did not produce any document while the proceedings were going on before the learned trial Judge so as to enable him to make a finding that the direction as to the payment of interest is erroneous much-less that the same amounted to an error apparent on the face of the record.

36. Even assuming that the grievance of the Union of India is justified, yet in our opinion, it is not entitled to raise any dispute upon the simple ground that the Courts do not permit parties to approbate and reprobate. It is admitted before us and is otherwise amply supported by the evidence on record that the Union of India claimed interest and invited the arbitrator to decide the aforesaid claim. In the circumstances, we are of the opinion, that it is not open to the Union of India to raise any contention relating to the award of interest.

37. In the circumstances, both the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

38. The orders of the learned trial Judge in both the suits are confirmed.

39. We have been informed at the Bar that the Union of India deposited amounts which were payable under the awards by way of interest in the Court. The amounts so deposited in the Court have been invested in fixed Deposits with the State Bank of India at its branch at Nasik. We are further informed that these amounts are to mature some-time in the year 1977. The Respondents are however, willing that these amounts may be recalled and paid to them. The Respondents are willing to forgo interest by reason of earlier recall of these amounts. We, therefore, order that the Respondents be at liberty to withdraw the amounts on their risk as to the loss of interest.

40. The Court shall accordingly take appropriate steps to have the amounts recalled from the Bank with liberty to the Respondents to receive the same.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 19CHANDURKAR AND LENTIN, JJ.

Manik Mallappa Karale, Petitioner v. Kisan Nagurao Patil and others, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 289 of 1975, D/- 17-3-1976.*

(A) Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act (1961), Section 27 — Election petition — Election of member of Panchayat Samiti challenged on allegation of disqualification incurred before date of nomination — Petition could not be entertained.

It is clear from Section 58 that the jurisdiction of the Court trying an election petition is regulated by Section 27 (2) and (5) not only when the election of the councillor of the Zilla Parishad is challenged but also when the election of member of the Panchayat Samiti is challenged. Section 27 (5) gives the grounds on which an election of an elected candidate can be set aside. It is difficult to take the view that when an enquiry is made on an election petition, the scope and the nature of the enquiry permissible to the Court relates to matters other than those provided in Section 27 (5). Moreover, none of the provisions of Section 27 (2) or (5) indicate that the question of initial disqualification of a candidate could be put in issue while challenging his election. There does not, therefore, appear to be any power in the Court to go into the question as to whether the elected candidate was disqualified, at the time when his nomination paper was accepted. (Paras 4, 7)

Since the abovementioned view is based on substantive provisions in Section 27 (5), the absence of a provision in the Maharashtra Panchayat Samitis Conduct of Election Rules analogous to the provisions in Rule 20 (8) of the rules relating to the election of councillors of the Zilla Parishad, would not make any difference. 1965 Mah LJ (Note) No. 56, Rel. on.

*(To set aside order passed by Extra Asstt. Judge, Sholapur, in Civil Misc. Application No. 150 of 1972, D/- 10-12-1974.)

JT/JT/D68/76/MBR/RSK

CHANDURKAR, J.:— The petitioner in this petition had filed an election petition under Section 27 of the Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961 (hereinafter referred to as the "Zilla Parishads Act") challenging the election to the Panchayat Samiti of North Sholapur from three wards, namely, Mardi-Wadala, Kasbe Sholapur-Bale and Degaon Kumthe from which each of the respondents Nos. 1 to 3 respectively were candidates. The petitioner himself is a voter only from Degaon village and it is not now disputed before us that he would be entitled, if at all, to challenge the election only so far as respondent No. 3 is concerned. In other words, it is conceded that the challenge to the election of respondents Nos. 1 and 2 was not maintainable at the instance of the present petitioner.

2. The petitioner's case against respondent No. 3 appeared to be that he was in arrears of the amount of hire in respect of engine of the North Sholapur Panchayat Samiti taken by him on hire from the said Panchayat Samiti and he had so remained in arrears for more than six months despite the service of a demand notice on him. The election petition came to be tried by the Extra Assistant Judge, Sholapur, who had framed several issues for determination on merits but did not think it necessary to give a finding on all the issues. Since the election of respondent No. 3 was challenged on the ground that he was initially disqualified to be elected, the learned Judge first took up for consideration the contention of the elected candidates that the petition challenging the election of the candidate was not maintainable under Section 27 of the Zilla Parishads Act. The learned Judge relied upon the decision of this Court in Gopikisan Agarwal v. District Judge, Bhandara, 1966 Mah LJ 321 and came to the conclusion that an election petition on the basis of an allegation of a disqualification incurred before the date of the nomination could not be entertained. He, however, seems to have taken the view that the proper remedy of the petitioner was to approach the Commissioner under Section 40 of the Zilla Parishads Act. Since the election petition filed by the petitioner came to be rejected, this petition has been filed by him challenging the decision of the learned Assistant Judge.

3. It was contended on behalf of the petitioner by Mr. Kankaria that the learned Judge was in error in applying the decision in Gopikisan Agarwal's case, because according to the learned Counsel, the election challenged in the instant proceedings was not an election as councillor of the Zilla Parishad, but the election was in respect of the Panchayat Samiti and the relevant rules regulating the scrutiny of the nomination papers did not contain a clause that the decision of the scrutinising authority would be final and conclusive and not open to challenge in an election petition.

4. Now, so far as the elections and election disputes with regard to the election of members of a Panchayat Samiti are concerned, the relevant provision is to be found in Section 58 which reads as follows:—

"(1) The provisions of Section 16 relating to the disqualifications of Councillors shall apply in relation to the disqualifications of the members of a Panchayat Samiti with the modification that in clause (d) of sub-section (1) of Section 16, for the figures '39' the figures '61' shall be substituted.

(2) The provisions of Sections 19 to 25 (both inclusive) and 27, 28, 28-A, to 28-D (both inclusive), 29 to 33 (both inclusive), 33-A and 34 to 37 (both inclusive) relating to elections and election disputes and any rules made thereunder shall apply mutatis mutandis in relation to election of members under clause (f) of sub-section (1) of Section 57."

Thus even where the election of a member of a Panchayat Samiti is to be challenged, the relevant provision which must be looked into is Section 27 of the Zilla Parishads Act. Under Section 27 (2) it is provided that after the election petition is filed before the District Judge, an enquiry shall thereupon be held by a Judge, not below the rank of an Assistant Judge, appointed by the State Government either especially for the case, or for such cases generally, and such Judge may, after such enquiry as he deems necessary, pass an order confirming or amending the declared result of the election or the order of the officer empowered by the Collector in that behalf under Section 26, or setting the election aside. The Judge trying the election petition is empowered to exercise any of the powers of the Civil Court and his decision has been made conclusive. Sub-section (5) of Section 27 is as follows:—

"(a) If on holding such enquiry, the Judge finds that a candidate has, for the purpose of election, committed a corrupt practice within the meaning of sub-section (6), he shall declare the candidate disqualified for the purpose of that election and of such fresh election as may be held under sub-section (2) and shall set aside the election of such candidate if he has been elected.

(b) If in any case to which clause (a) does not apply, the validity of an election is in dispute between two or more candidates, the Judge, after a scrutiny and computation of the votes recorded in favour of each candidate, is of opinion that in fact any candidate in whose favour the declaration is sought has received the highest number of the valid votes, the Judge shall after declaring the election of the returned candidate to be void declare the candidate in whose favour the declaration is sought, to have been duly elected;

Provided that, for the purpose of such computation no vote shall be reckoned as valid if the Judge finds that any corrupt practice was committed by any person, known or unknown, in giving or obtaining it;

Provided further that, after such computation if an equality of votes is found to exist between any candidates and the addition of one vote will entitle any candidate to be declared elected, one additional vote shall be added to the total number of valid votes found to have been received in favour of such candidate selected by lot drawn in the presence of the Judge in such manner as he may determine."

Under sub-section (6) the corrupt practices have been set out as those specified in Section 123 of the Representation of the People Act subject to certain modifications which are not material for the purposes of the present petition. In view of Section 58 of the Zilla Parishads Act it is clear that the jurisdiction of the Court trying the election petition challenging the election of a member of a Panchayat Samiti is also regulated by sub-sections (2) and (5) in Section 27 of the Zilla Parishads Act. Under clause (a) of sub-section (5) it is made obligatory on the Judge to declare a candidate disqualified for the purpose of an election or of such fresh election as may be held as contemplated by sub-section (2) if the Judge finds that a candidate has for the purpose of election committed a corrupt practice within the meaning of sub-section (6). However, in a case where corrupt practice is not proved against a can-candidate who has been elected, the question of setting aside his election on that ground under clause (a) of sub-section (5) does not arise. Another power which is given to the Court which tries the election petition is in a case which is not covered by sub-section (5) (a) and that is to be found in clause (b) of sub-section (5) under which the Court is empowered to scrutinise and compute the votes recorded in favour of each candidate and then if it is of opinion that in fact a candidate in whose favour a declaration is sought has received the highest number of valid votes, the Court has to declare the election of the returned candidate to be void and declare the candidate in whose favour the declaration is sought to have been duly elected. In other words, sub-section (5) gives the grounds on which an election of an elected candidate can be set aside. It is difficult to take the view that when an enquiry is made on an election petition, the scope and the nature of the enquiry permissible to the Court relates to matters other than those provided in sub-section (5). There does not, therefore, appear to be any power in the Court to go into the question as to whether the elected candidate was disqualified at the time when his nomination paper was accepted. In other words, the validity of the order of acceptance of a nomination paper is not open to challenge in an election petition filed under Section 27 of the Zilla Parishads Act.

5. Now, it is no doubt true that in the rules relating to the election of councillors of the Zilla Parishad, under sub-rule (8) of Rule 20 it is provided that the decision of a District Judge on appeal under that rule and subject only to such decision, the decision of the Returning Officer accepting or rejecting the nomination paper of a candidate shall be final and conclusive and shall not be called in question in any Court or before a Judge referred to in sub-section (2) of Section 27. No such provision is to be found in the rules styled as Maharashtra Panchayat Samitis (Registration of Voters and Conduct of Election) Rules, 1962.

6. Under Rule 19 (6) of the rules relating to conduct of election to the Panchayat Samitis it is only provided that the Returning Officer shall endorse on each nomination paper his decision accepting or rejecting the same and if the nomination paper is rejected, he has to record in writing a brief statement of his reasons for such rejection. Thereafter under sub-rule (7) it is provided that the Returning Officer shall prepare a list of candidates whose nominations have been accepted and he has to affix the list on his notice board recording the date on which and the time at which the list was so affixed. Rule 20 deals with withdrawal of candidature and R. 21 deals with preparation of list of contesting candidates. Under R. 22 provision is made of publication of list of contesting candidates. Rules 23 to 27 deal with appointment of election agent, polling agent and counting agent and provision is made in Chap. VI and thereafter in the matter of actual election. There is thus no rule-making final the decision of the Returning Officer regarding the acceptance of the nomination paper. The absence of a provision in the Maharashtra Panchayat Samitis Conduct of Election Rules analogous to the provision in sub-rule (8), however, in our opinion, would not make any difference since we are basing our decision on the substantive provisions in Section 27 (5) of the Zilla Parishads Act. We are supported in the view which we have taken by a Division Bench decision of this Court in Brijlal Sao v. D. J., Bhandara, reported in 1965 Mah LJ Note No. 56. There also the election of an elected candidate to the Panchayat Samiti was declared void on an election petition under Section 27 of the Zilla Parishads Act on the ground that he was disqualified under Section 16 (1) and that order was challenged by a writ petition. The Division Bench took the view that the challenge to the election of a candidate on the ground of his disqualification under Section 16 is not open in an election petition under Section 27.

7. Mr. Kankaria emphasised the words "validity of any election" in the opening part of Section 27 of the Zilla Parishads Act and the argument made was that when the legislature used the words "any election", it must be taken to mean that an election could be challenged on any ground whatsoever including disqualification incurred even before the nomination paper was filed. It is difficult for us to accept this contention. It is difficult to appreciate how these words could indicate, even remotely, the scope of the challenge which could be made in an election petition or how those words could give any indication with regard to the powers of the Court entertaining an election petition. All that Section 27 does is to give a right to file an election petition when validity of any election of a councillor is brought in question either by a candidate or by any person qualified to vote at the election the validity of which is put in issue. The jurisdiction which the Court trying the election petition could exercise would have to depend on the statutory provisions made in sub-section (2) and sub-section (5) and, as we have already pointed out, none of these provisions indicate that the question of initial disqualification of a candidate could be put in issue while challenging his election. In our view, there is no substance in this petition. The petition must fail and is dismissed. Rule discharged with costs.

Petition dismissed.

DESHPANDE AND MRIDUL, JJ.

Ebrahim Yusuf Lambe, Petitioner v. Abdul Razak Abdul Rahiman Mulla and another, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 2110 of 1974, D/- 27-2-1976.

(A) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (1948), Ss. 74 (1)(a), 70 (b), and 4 — Order determining claim of contractual tenancy — Order is appealable under Section 74 (1) (a). AIR 1973 Bom 203 and Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1908 of 1970, D/- 3-4-1972 (Bom), Overruled.

Section 4 in the context of Section 74 (1) (a) is wide enough to cover every order in regard to claim to tenancy passed under Section 70 (b) of the Act and the order of the Awal Karkun determining the claim of the applicant based on contract is appealable to the Collector under Section 74 (1) (a) of the Act. Every order under Section 4 is made appealable under clause (a) in Section 74 (1). Section 4 indicates who can claim to be a deemed tenant of the land. It is an error to assume that section contains mere definition. It confers right on every one to claim deemed tenancy if he satisfies the requirement of Section 4. But the wide wording of this section does not admit of excluding other kinds of tenants e. g. contractual tenant, protected tenant or permanent tenant from its purview. AIR 1973 Bom 203 Overruled. (Para 9)

The right of appeal is entirely a creature of the statute. There can be no assumption of such right by reference to Section 247 of the Land Revenue Code. Section 74 (2) makes Chapter XIII of the Land Revenue Code applicable to appeals under "this Act". The words "To the appeals to the Collector under this Act" signify that provision for the appeal has to be traced in the Tenancy Act itself and provisions of Chapter XIII are to be applicable not for tracing the right of appeal but for some procedural purpose. Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1908 of 1970, D/- 3-4-1972 (Bom), Overruled. (Para 5)

V. M. Limaye, for Petitioner; D. M. Farulekar, for Opponents.

DESHPANDE, J.:— The Petitioner applied to the Tahsildar for a declaration of his being the tenant of certain land. The application was made under Section 70 (b) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). Tenancy is claimed on the basis of contract with opponents' father and rent also is claimed to have been paid to him during his lifetime and thereafter to the opponents. Opponents denied all this. On evidence, the Aval Karkun accepted his claim. In an appeal by the opponents, the petitioner raised a preliminary point that Section 74 (1) did not provide for any appeal against such declaration under Section 70 (b) of the Act. The Collector overruled this, saying that the Petitioner is found to be a deemed tenant under Section 4 of the Act and hence appeal under Section 74 (1) (a) was competent. The Revenue Tribunal declined to interfere in revision.

2. In the case of Shantabai v. Pandurang, reported in 75 Bom LR 79 = (AIR 1973 Bom 203), Malvankar, J., held that no appeal against the order of Tahsildar passed under Section 70 (b) would lie unless it is in regard to the claim of deemed tenancy.

3. Mr. Limaye, the learned Advocate appearing for the Petitioner, relied on this case and contends that the petitioner having claimed contractual tenancy and succeeded therein, appeal to the Collector was not competent. But in Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1908 of 1970, decided on 3-4-1972 (Bom), Vaidya, J., on the other hand held that every order under Section 70 (b), is appealable to the immediate Superior Revenue Officer, under Section 247 of the Land Revenue Code which according to him is made applicable to tenancy appeals by virtue of Section 74 (2) of the Act. Mr. Parulekar, learned Advocate for Respondents relied on this. He also contended that a claim of even being a contractual tenant cannot be excluded from Section 4 of the Act, order under which is made expressly appealable under Section 74 (1) (a) of the Act, even though Section 4 deals with "who can claim to be a deemed tenant".

4. Sawant, J., referred the case to the Division Bench in view of this conflict of opinion proceeding presumably but rightly on the basis that petitioner claimed contractual tenancy, and impugned declaration is based thereon.

5. It is now well settled that right of appeal is entirely a creature of the Statute. Assumption of such right by reference to Section 247 of the Land Revenue Code appears to us to be open to doubt. Section 74 (1) enumerates the various sections, orders passed under which, are made expressly appealable. Section 74 (2) makes Chapter XIII of the Land Revenue Code applicable to appeals under "this Act". The words "to the appeals to the Collector under this Act" signify that provision for the appeal has to be traced in the Tenancy Act itself and provisions of Chapter XIII are to be applicable not for tracing the right of appeal but for some procedural purpose. The words obviously seem to have reference to the appeals indicated in Section 74 (1) of the Act which are all contemplated to be to the Collector.

6. Secondly such application of the Code is subject to "save as otherwise provided" in this Act. An appeal under Section 247 of the Code against orders under other enactments also is made subject to any contrary provision. Section 74 (1) itself is such a contrary provision. By specifying appealable orders, Section 74 (1) impliedly prohibits other orders being appealable. Thirdly Deputy Collector would be the immediate superior Revenue Officer to the Tahsildar and appeal against the order of the latter would lie to the former under Section 247 of the Code. But Section 74 (2) refers to the "appeal to the Collector", which again is indication of contrary intention. That, Collector's such powers are exercisable by Deputy Collector is wholly irrelevant for this construction. With respect, it is difficult to draw an inference of the right of appeal by reference to Section 247 of the Land Revenue Code.

7. The fact however, remains that Section 74 (1) (a) makes only order under Section 4 appealable and not the order under Section 70 (b). Curiously enough both the Sections 4 and 70 (b) do not contemplate any application or passing of any order as such. Section 70 enumerates duties and functions of the Tahsildar for the purposes of the Tenancy Act, clause (b) therein indicating deciding claims to tenancy as one of his such duties and functions. Section 2 (18) defines the word "tenant" so as to include (1) contractual (2) deemed (3) permanent and (4) protected tenant. Curiously enough again clause (b) in Section 70 does not specifically refer to the duties with regard to the claim to deemed tenancy, covered by Section 4 of the Act. These peculiar features create doubts whether Section 4 and Section 70 (b) contemplate creation of rights and of any applications or any orders at all, for enforcement thereof, and if so, any negative declaration against the rights claimed is conceivable thereunder or not. In Mela Kabhai v. Motibhai Kahandas Patel, reported in 60 Bom LR 1071, a Division Bench of this Court exhaustively considered these points and held that: application for declarations of tenancy rights conceived under definition of Section 2 (18) of the Act were maintainable under Section 70 (b) of the Act to the Tahsildar and duties and functions of the Tahsildar thereunder included, even power to make negative declarations and declarations as to the deemed tenancy rights claimable under Section 4 of the Act though not specifically included under Section 70 (b) of the Act. This Court noted the defects in the phraseology of the concerned provisions but gathered the Legislative intent by reading other provisions of the Act.

8. The discussion in the above case is illustrative of how the provisions of the Act are not that explicit and how it would not be safe to rule out the right of appeal in the instant case merely because order under Section 70 (b) is not made specifically appealable under Section 74 (1) of the Act. It is pertinent to note that under Section 74 (1) (v) orders under Section 85-A are made appealable. Tahsildar is required to decide under that section all questions referred to him by the Civil Court, for want of jurisdiction and because the same are triable exclusively by him under the provisions of the Tenancy Act. Such orders include orders on claims to tenancy of every kind defined under Section 2 (18) including contractual tenancies. His such order, as discussed earlier, is expressly made appealable under Section 74 (1) (v) of the Act. It is difficult to conceive of any good reason why Legislature could have thought of excluding identical orders passed by reference to Section 70 (b), from the purview of Section 74 (1), when the same are expressly brought under it when passed by the Tahsildar on reference under Section 85-A.

9. All this lends considerable support to the contention of Mr. Parulekar. Clause (a) in Section 74 (1) calls for broader construction. Every order under Section 4 is made appealable under this clause. Section 4 indicates, who can claim to be a deemed tenant of the land. It is an error to assume that section contains mere definition. It confers right on every one to claim deemed tenancy if he satisfies the requirement of Section 4. But the wide wording of this section does not admit of excluding other kinds of tenants from its purview. Thus contractual tenant, protected tenant or permanent tenant also cultivates land personally, and also lawfully which belongs to others, and does not happen to be a person covered by clauses (a) to (c). The fact that, section contemplates to cover also persons who cannot lay claim to the said three kinds of tenancies, is not enough to exclude them from the purview of this section for the limited purpose of ascertaining its true content in the context of the scheme of Section 74 (1) (a) of the Act. The Legislature presumably did not think it necessary to provide for appeals specifically against order under Section 70 (b) separately for this reason, and advisedly remained content by providing appeal against order under Section 4 only. We are thus of the opinion that Section 4 in the context of Section 74 (1) (a) is wide enough to cover every order in regard to claim to tenancy passed under Section 70 (b) of the Act and the order under consideration of the Awal Karkun, was appealable to the Collector under Section 74 (1) (a) of the Act.

10. With respect, the view enumerated in Shantabai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Pandurang Ramchandra Mandlik, reported in 75 Bom LR 79 = (AIR 1973 Bom 203), is not acceptable to us for the above reasons. We do not think that any rights can be deemed to have been created by mere definition.

11. Rule is accordingly discharged.

12. No order as to costs.
Order accordingly.

(NAGPUR BENCH)

DHARMADHIKARI AND DIGHE JJ.

Ratanlal Sitaram and another, Petitioners
v. Rukhmabai and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1171 of 1971,
D/- 21-4-1976.

(A) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidharbha Region) Act (99 of 1958) Section 38 (2) and (3) — Words 'ancestors' and 'or otherwise' used in Section 38 (3) (d) — Interpretation of — Rules of ejusdem generis — Applicability — Provisions of Section 38 (3) held applicable to the application under Section 36 read with Section 38 (2) filed by successor-in-title of a widow by virtue of a right conferred upon him by Section 38 (2). 1970 Mah LJ 185 Overruled — (Interpretation of Statutes).

It is well settled rule of construction that the provisions of a statute should be so read as to harmonise with one another and the provisions of one section cannot be used to defeat those of another unless it is impossible to effect reconciliation between them. AIR 1967 SC 1211 Rel. on. (Para 10)

Section 38, as a whole deals with termination of tenancy by landlord for cultivating land personally. Sub-section (2) of Section 38 is part and parcel of the scheme. The Court has to gather the intention of the Legislature from the enactment as a whole. All the sub-sections should be read together as a whole each clause throwing light on the other. No precedence could be given to one sub-section or sub-clause over another. Sub-section (2) of Section 38 cannot be read by itself, in isolation, and will have to be read with other sub-sections of Section 38. All the parts of the section will have to be read together and be given their full and normal effect and as far as possible harmony will have to be aimed at. So read, it is clear that Sub-s. (2) provides only an extended period for filing of an application. During the lifetime of a widow she could have terminated the tenancy of the tenant at any time, if she required the land for personal cultivation. This right was obviously subject to the conditions laid down by Sub-section (3) of Section 38. The period for filing of an application in case of a successor-in-title is further extended by Sub-sec. (2). It was not the intention of the Legislature to confer on the successor-in-title of a widow's interest in the property a right to claim land for personal cultivation without any restriction. More so when the widow's right in this behalf was itself subject to these conditions. The successor-in-title can exercise the right under Sub-section (2) if person under disability, including the widow, had not already exercised such right by giving notice and filing an application under Section 38 (1). The right is conferred by Sub-section (1) and by Sub-section (2) the Legislature had only provided further period for exercising such a right in the case of successor-in-title. In substance, therefore, the application is filed under Section 38 (1) though within extended period. Therefore an application filed by the successor-in-title of a widow by virtue of a right conferred upon him by Section 38 (2) is also subject to the restrictions and conditions laid down by sub-section (3). (Para 10)

Therefore, for terminating a tenancy of a tenant for bona fide personal cultivation, it is necessary that the landlord should satisfy all the conditions referred to in Section 38 (3). One of the conditions laid down by Sub-section (d) of S. 38 (3) is that the land leased must stand in the Record of rights or in public record or a similar Revenue records on the 1st day of August 1957 and thereafter during the period between the said date and the date of the commencement of the Act in the name of the landlord himself or any of his ancestors or if the landlord is a member of the joint family, in the name of the member of such family but not of any other predecessor-in-title from whom title is derived whether by assignment or Court sale or otherwise. This condition was laid down by the Legislature so as to check unscrupulous termination of tenancies of the tenants by manipulations. Every form of transfer, voluntary or involuntary inter vivos or testamentary was covered by the words 'or otherwise' referred to in Sub-section (d) of Section 38 (3). The Legislature when it used the words "or otherwise" apparently intended to cover other cases which may not come within the meaning of the preceding words. By using the general words "or otherwise" the Legislature intended to cover all possible cases of assignments which are not transfers inter vivos or by act of parties. Therefore the Legislature used these words "or otherwise" in all inclusive sense to bar all avenues of escape. The ejusdem generis doctrine cannot be applied in construing them. The words "or otherwise" are not words of limitation, but are words of extension so as to cover all possible ways in which title in the land might vest in the person concerned.

(Para 14)

If the general words "or otherwise" used in Section 38 (3) are given their natural meaning, it will obviously include derivation of title by virtue of a will, and therefore, the persons claiming title to the land in dispute by virtue of the will executed by a widow will be covered by bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) and therefore, are not entitled to claim resumption of the land if they fail (as in the instant case) to satisfy the condition laid down by Section 38 (3) (d). Case Law discussed.

(Para 15)

Further, the word 'ancestors' used in Section 38 (3) (d) will have to be interpreted liberally and not in restricted sense in which it is used in Hindu Law. It cannot be forgotten that the Tenancy Act applies to all the citizens of the Vidarbha region irrespective of their religion. A narrow or a restricted meaning cannot be given to the word 'ancestors'. Therefore it will cover the cases of the landholders who derived the title to the property by succession or inheritance. 1970 Mah LJ 185, Overruled.

(Para 18)

Therefore, taking into consideration the object of the section and the scheme of the Act, a person of any sex who goes before either on the paternal or maternal side could be looked upon as ancestor of the person inheriting the former's property, if in the normal and natural course of inheritance he is entitled to inherit the property as an heir.

(Para 18)

The field in dispute originally belonged to one G. Before her death she executed a will and gave a limited estate in respect of the field to P the widow of her son. The will further provided that on the death of P the field will become an absolute property of the petitioners in this case. The name of G was however not recorded in the Record of Rights for the relevant years though the name of P was recorded. It appeared from the record that one S, the predecessor-in-title of the respondents-tenants, took the field on lease from P. After her death the petitioners filed an application under Section 36 read with Sec. 38 claiming restoration of possession of the field on the ground that they required it for their bona fide personal cultivation. According to the petitioners, by virtue of the will executed by G they became the owners of the property. However, it was clear from the material placed on record that in the normal and material course of inheritance, the petitioners could not have inherited the suit property as their mother K was alive when the proceedings were instituted by them.

Held that petitioners were not entitled to restoration of possession as they did not satisfy the conditions referred to in Section 38 (3) (d). Till K was alive, by no stretch of imagination the petitioners could have derived title to the suit property by inheritance, because K being a preferential heir would have inherited the property in her own right. Therefore, it could not be said that P and G were ancestors of the petitioners.

The petitioners' case was wholly covered by the bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) as they had derived title to the suit field from their predecessor-in-title otherwise than by inheritance. The source of their title was a will, which was wholly covered by the words "or otherwise" as used in the bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d). Even otherwise they derived the title to the suit field by virtue of a will executed by G and the land was not recorded in Record of rights for the relevant period in the name of G. It was an admitted position that it stood recorded in the name of P alone. (Para 21)

(B) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), Sec. 111 — Revision — Concurrent findings of fact based on material partly irrelevant and partly on conjectures and surmises — Authorities below also misunderstood real point for determination — Tribunal can interfere. V. R. Manohar, G. S. Kakde, A. B. Oke and A. K. Trivedi, for Petitioners; M/s. V. D. and A. M. Deshmukh, for Respondents.

DHARMADHIKARI J.:— The dispute involved in this writ petition relates to field survey number 5, admeasuring 36 acres 19 gunthas of Mouza Marathwadki, taluq Kelapur district Yeotmal. The field originally belonged to one Giglabai wife of Laduram Agarwal, who died on 3-2-1951. Before her death, she executed a will dated 5th August 1948 and gave a limited estate in respect of the field to Smt. Parwatibai wife of her son Bajranglal, who died sometime in 1918 or 1919. In the will it was further stated that on the death of Parwatibai the field will become an absolute property of the petitioners before this Court. It appears from the record that one Sambha, the predecessor-in-title of the respondents-tenants, took the aforesaid field on lease from Parwatibai in the agricultural year 1952-53. After her death, according to the petitioners, by virtue of the will executed by Giglabai, the petitioners became the owners of the field property. According to the petitioners, as they required the suit field for their bona fide cultivation, after serving a notice under Section 38 (2) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, referred to hereinafter as the Vidarbha Tenancy Act, terminating the tenancy of original tenant Sambha, they filed an application under Section 36 read with Section 38 of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act claiming restoration of possession on the ground that they required it for their bona fide personal cultivation.

2. Sambha, the tenant, opposed the application and contended that Parwatibai was not a limited owner as after the commencement of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 she became an absolute owner of the property. He denied the service of the notice and further contended that the field was not required by the petitioners for their bona fide personal cultivation.

3. It appears from the record that both the parties adduced evidence before the Tenancy Naib Tahsildar and the Tenancy Naib Tahsildar after appreciating the evidence on record found that the two cloth shops which were being run by the father of the petitioners were petty cloth shops. He further found that they were neither the members of joint family, nor the said shops were ancestral properties of the petitioners, and therefore, merely because they are working in the said shop, it could not be said that they have any pecuniary interest therein. The Tenancy Naib Tahsildar further found that the income from the disputed field was the principal source of income of the petitioners and they required the suit field for bona fide personal cultivation.

4. Against this order of the Tenancy Naib Tahsildar dated 13th December 1967, tenant Sambha filed an appeal which was heard and decided by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Kelapur. By his order dated 6th July 1968, the learned Sub-Divisional Officer found that the petitioners did not own any ancestral property nor they are the owners of the both shops which are in the name of their father.

According to the learned Sub-Divisional Officer, the Tenancy Naib Tahsildar was wrong in calculating the income of the petitioners on the very vague presumption based on imagination. He further found that it is no way proved as to what exact amount of income the petitioners are getting from the house in Rajputana and at Yeotmal and shops at Pandharkawda. Therefore he recorded a finding that in these circumstances it is not possible to calculate the exact income of the petitioners since they do not own anything in their name. According to the learned Sub-Divisional Officer, the petitioners were just helping their father in his business and, therefore, half of the land, which they are entitled to resume, is the principal source of their income. He, therefore, found that the petitioners have satisfied the conditions specified in clauses (c) and (d) of sub-section (3) and clauses (b), (c) and (d) of Sub-section (4) of Section 38 of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act.

5. Being aggrieved by this appellate order, Sambha the original tenant, filed a revision application before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. It seems from the record that during the course of proceedings before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Sambha, the original tenant, died, and therefore, his legal representatives were brought on records at the revisional stage. The learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal came to conclusion that the findings of fact recorded by both the authorities below were based on no evidence. He further found that the findings of fact recorded were based on conjectures, surmises and inferences not supported by any material on record. Therefore, on the basis of fresh appreciation of evidence on record, the learned Member came to the conclusion that the petitioners did not want the field bona fide for their personal cultivation and they have also failed to satisfy the condition laid down under Section 38 (3) (c) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act, being aggrieved by this order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, the petitioners have filed the present writ petition.

6. Initially this writ petition came up for hearing before the Single Judge of this Court, viz. Masodkar J. As the learned Single Judge found that the petition involves substantial questions of law regarding interpretation of the provisions of Vidarbha Tenancy Act, particularly Section 38 (3) (d) thereof, the learned Judge, therefore, directed that this petition should be placed for hearing before the Division Bench.

7. It appears from the records that permission to amend the return was granted to the respondents-tenants and by an amendment application para 10-A was added to the return. A contention was raised in this paragraph on behalf of the respondents-tenants that the field originally belonged to one Giglai, who, under the will dated 5-8-1948, gave the field to her daughter-in-law Parvatibai. Therefore, the field was never in the family of the petitioners, nor it was recorded in the name of the petitioners or any of their ancestors as required by Section 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act and hence the petition was liable to be dismissed on that ground alone. It is an admitted position that for the relevant period the land stood recorded in Record of rights in the name of Parvatibai alone.

8. Shri Manohar, the learned counsel for the petitioners, contended before us that the right which the landlord are seeking to enforce in the present proceedings is conferred upon them by Section 38 (2) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act. Therefore, the provisions of Section 38 (3), including the provisions of Section 38 (3) (c) or (d), have no application to the present proceedings. In substance, therefore, it is the contention of Shri Manohar that the reference is not at all called for as the provisions of Section 38 (3) are not at all applicable to the proceedings instituted by the successors-in-title of a widow under sub-section (2) of Section 38 of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act. It is not possible for us to accept this contention.

9. Chapter III of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act deals with the termination of tenancies by landlords and special rights of tenants. Then Section 38 provides for termination of tenancy by landlord on the ground of personal cultivation. Sub-section (1) of Section 38 then lays down that notwithstanding anything contained in Section 9 or 19 but subject to the provisions of sub-sections (2) to (5), a landlord may after giving to the tenant a notice in writing at any time on or before 15th day of February 1961 and making an application for possession under Section 36, within the prescribed period terminate the tenancy of the land held by the tenant, if he bona fide requires the land to cultivate it personally. Then comes sub-section (2) of Section 38 which deals with the special categories of a landlord, namely, (a) a minor, (b) a widow and (c) or a person subject to any physical or mental disability. Sub-section (2) of Section 38 then lays down that if a person belonging to the specific categories had not given a notice and made an application as required by sub-section (1), such a notice could be given and such an application may be made in case of a widow by a successor-in-title within one year from the date on which the widow's interest in the land ceases to exist. Therefore, it is quite clear that the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 38 are subject to the provisions of sub-section (1) of Section 38.

10. It is well settled rule of construction that the provisions of a statute should be so read as to harmonise with one another and the provisions of one section cannot be used to defeat those of another unless it is impossible to effect reconciliation between them. The principles stated in Crawford's Statutory Construction at page 260 is as follows:

"Hence, the Court should, when it seeks the legislative intent, construe all of the constituent parts of the Statute together, and seek to ascertain the legislative intention from the whole Act, considering every provision thereof in the light of the general purpose and object of the Act itself, and endeavouring to make every part effective, harmonious, and sensible. This means, of course, that the Court should attempt to avoid absurd consequences in any part of the statute and refuse to regard any word, phrase, clause or sentence superfluous, unless such a result is clearly unavoidable." (See Sanjeevayya v. Election Tribunal, Andhra Pradesh (AIR 1967 SC 1211).

In the present case we are concerned with the construction of sub-sections of Section 38 itself. Section 38, as a whole deals with termination of tenancy by landlord for cultivating land personally. Sub-section (2) of Section 38 is part and parcel of the scheme. Therefore, all the sub-sections of Section 38 will have to be read together and harmoniously. The Court has to gather the intention of the Legislature from the enactment as a whole. All the sub-sections should be read together as a whole, each clause throwing light on the other. No precedence could be given to one sub-section or sub-clause over another. All these sub-sections should be read as part of integral whole. So construed, it is clear that they are interdependent. Sub-section (2) of Section 38 cannot be read by itself, in isolation, and will have to be read with other sub-sections of S. 38. All the parts of the section will have to be read together and be given their full and normal effect and as far as possible harmony will have to be aimed at. This provision will have to be so construed so as to further the object and purpose of the enactment uniformly. The restrictions contemplated should apply to each set of circumstances without resulting in any inequities. In our opinion, this is the only permissible interpretation. This interpretation is in conformity with the intention and purpose of the Statute. So read, it is clear that sub-section (2) of Section 38 provides only an extended period for filing of an application. Under sub-section (1) an application could be filed by the persons not belonging to the specified categories referred to in sub-section (2) within the period prescribed by sub-section (1) of Section 38 itself. In cases of specified categories referred to in sub-section (2) such an application could be filed within one year from the date on which the minor attains majority, or a person ceases to be subject to such physical or mental disability, or in case of a widow by the successor-in-title within one year from the date on which the widow's interest in the land ceases to exist. Therefore, on proper construction of this sub-clause and taking into consideration the object of the Legislation in Nagarbai Shankar Rao Kokate v. Gahinath (1964 Mah LJ Note No. 57) this Court found that a widow can file an application even beyond the date prescribed under sub-s. (1) during her lifetime because the tenant's right to purchase land does not come into existence and the tenant continues to be a tenant notwithstanding the other provisions of the Act. On the true construction this Court further found that there can be no possible point in limiting the right of the widow or a minor or a person under disability to acquire possession for personal cultivation only within that date. Cases may arise where a widow or a minor or a person under disability may not require the land for the purpose of cultivating personally during that period because of the then existing circumstances. These circumstances and conditions may change from time to time and it would be highly impossible to imagine that the Legislature could have intended to continue them as landlords and still to prevent them from taking possession for their own cultivation in spite of imminent necessity for their maintenance. It is obvious from this decision of this Court that during the lifetime of a widow she could have terminated the tenancy of the tenant at any time, if she required the land for personal cultivation. This right was obviously subject to the conditions laid down by sub-section (3) of Section 38 of the Act. The period for filing of an application in case of a successor-in-title is further extended by sub-section (2) of Section 38. It was not the intention of the Legislature to confer on the successor-in-title of a widow's interest in the property a right to claim land for personal cultivation without any restriction. More so when the widow's right in this behalf was itself subject to these conditions. To accept such an interpretation would run counter to the scheme of the whole legislation. The successor-in-title can exercise the right under sub-section (2) if person under disability, including the widow, had not already ex-exercised such right by giving notice and filing an application under Section 38 (1) of the Act. The right is conferred by sub-section (1) of Section 38, and by sub-section (2) the Legislature has only provided further period for exercising such a right in the case of successor-in-title. In substance, therefore, the application is filed under Section 38 (1) of the Act though within extended period. It must, therefore be held that an application filed by the successor-in-title of a widow by virtue of a right conferred upon him by Section 38 (2) is also subject to the restrictions and conditions laid down by sub-section (3) of Sec. 38 of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act. Therefore, it is not possible for us to accept this contention of Shri Manohar.

11. It was then contended by Shri Manohar that the petitioners landlords have satisfied the condition incorporated in Sec. 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act, because Gignabai and Parvatibai were their ancestors and the land leased stands in the records of rights in the name of Parvatibai. He further contended that the bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) will not apply to a case where the title is derived by the landlord by a will, it not being an assignment of Court sale, as contemplated by Section 38 (3) (d) of the Act. According to Shri Manohar, the words or otherwise "referred to in Section 38 (3) (d) should be read as eiusdem generis and so read they will take the colour from the words used earlier, namely, "assignment" or "Court sale, which are transfers inter vivos". Therefore, the will not being a transfer or assignment by act of parties is not covered by the bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act. Shri Manohar further contended that in this view of the matter, the earlier decision of this Court in Waman Ganesh Joshi v. Ganu Guna Khapre, ((1959) 61 Bom LR 1267) will apply to the present case. In support of his contention that the words "or otherwise" should be construed as eiusdem generis Shri Manohar has relied upon the decisions of the Supreme Court in George Da Costa v. Controller of Estate Duty Mysore (AIR 1967 SC 849) and Collector of Estate Duty v. M/s. R. Kanakasabai (AIR 1973 SC 1214) and a decision in Eton Rural District Council v. River Thames Conservators (1950 (1) All ER 996). He has also relied upon para 191 of Statutory Construction Interpretation of Laws, by Crawford at page 326, and pages 110 to 115 of Legislation and Interpretation by Swarup. It is not possible for us to accept this contention.

12. It is quite clear from the bare reading of the two Supreme Court decisions, namely, George Da Costa v. Controller of Estate Duty, Mysore (AIR 1967 SC 849) and Collector of Estate Duty v. M/s. R. Kanakasabai (AIR 1973 SC 1214) (cit supra) that in those cases the Supreme Court was concerned with the Taxing Statutes which call for a strict interpretation in favour of the subject who was being taxed. Therefore, these decisions are of little assistance while construing the present Legislation which is a piece of beneficial Legislation. This Act provides for additional rights and protection to the tenants. This is manifestly a step in the process of agrarian reforms launched with the object of improving the economic condition of peasants. Moreover in a case where Courts are dealing with a beneficial legislation intended for the protection of tenants if there is any doubt about the meaning of provision, it should be resolved in favour of the tenant. (See Jivabhai v. Chhagan (AIR 1961 SC 1491)).

13. The Supreme Court had an occasion to deal with the question as to when the rule of eiusdem generis should be applied in Smt. Lila Vati Bai v. State of Bombay (AIR 1957 SC 521). In that case also the Supreme Court was concerned with the interpretation of words "or otherwise" as used in Section 6, Explanation (a), of Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948, amended by Bombay Act No. 2 of 1950. In this context, the Supreme Court observed as under:

"The rule of eiusdem generis is intended to be applied where general words have been used following particular and specific words of the same nature on the established rule of construction that the Legislature presumed to use the general words in a restricted sense; that is to say, as belonging to the same genus as the particular and specific words. Such a restricted meaning has to be given to words of general import only where the context of the whole scheme of legislation requires it. But where the context and the object and mischief of the enactment do not require such restricted meaning to be attached to words of general import, it becomes the duty of the Courts to give those words their plain and ordinary meaning. In our opinion, in the context of the object and the mischief of the enactment there is no room for the application of the rule of eiusdem generis."

Earlier in Para 11 of the said decision on the construction of the section under consideration, the Supreme Court observed as under:

"The Legislature has been cautious and thorough-going enough to bar all avenues of escape by using the words "or otherwise". Those words are not words of limitation but of extension so as to cover all possible ways in which a vacancy may occur. Generally speaking, a tenant's occupation of his premises ceases when his tenancy is terminated by acts of parties or by operation of law or by eviction by the landlord or by assignment or transfer of the tenant's interest. But the Legislature, when it used the words "or otherwise", apparently intended to cover other cases which may not come within the meaning of the preceding clauses, for example, a case where the tenants occupation has ceased as a result of trespass by a third party. The Legislature, in our opinion intended to cover all possible cases of vacancy occurring due to any reasons whatsoever. Hence, far from using those words ejusdem generis with the preceding clauses of the explanation, the Legislature used those words in an all inclusive sense."

This Court had also an occasion to construe the word "otherwise" as used in Section 31 of the Bombay Prevention of Fragmentation and Consolidation of Holdings Act, 1947. After making a reference to the decision of the Supreme Court in Smt. Lilavati Bai v. State of Bombay (AIR 1957 SC 521) (cit supra) this Court in Vinayakrao v. State (AIR 1976 Bom 10) held that the interpretation of the word "otherwise" as put up by the Supreme Court was amply applicable to the provisions of Section 31 of the said Act also.

14. In our opinion the interpretation of the word "otherwise" as put up by the Supreme Court in Smt. Lilavati Bai v. State of Bombay (AIR 1957 SC 521) will aptly apply to Section 38 (3) (d) of the Act. From the bare reading of Section 38 (3) (d) it is quite clear that the Legislature has used the words "or otherwise" in an all inclusive sense to bar all avenues of escape. The bracketed portion in Section 38 (3) (d) was inserted by Act No. 4 of 1960. The Objects and Reasons for this amendment are as under:

"In the course of the implementation of the principal Act, certain difficulties had arisen which could not be overcome without amending certain sections. Also as a result of certain judgments of the High Court, it had been found necessary to amend certain provisions either for making the intention of the Legislature quite clear in respect of those provisions or to remove lacunae which had still remained in that Act. This Act was designed to achieve this object."

Section 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act, as amended, now reads as under:

"38 (3) The right of a landlord to terminate a tenancy under sub-section (1) shall be subject to the following conditions, namely:—

- (a)

(d) The land leased stands in the record-of-rights or in any public record or similar revenue record on the 1st day of August 1957 and thereafter during the period between the said date and the date of the commencement of this Act in the name of the landlord himself or any of his ancestors, (but not of any other predecessor-in-title from whom title is derived, whether by assignment or Court sale or otherwise) or if the landlord is a member of a joint family, in the name of a member of such family."

This Court had an occasion to consider the true import of Section 33-B of the Bombay Tenancy Act which is similar to Section 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act. While construing this provision, in the light of the legislative history of the expression used in the bracket, the Division Bench of this Court in Shaila v. S. B. Mali (Special Civil Appns. Nos. 1330/1333 of 1965 decided on 23-1-1968 reported in (1968) 16 Tenancy Law Rep 83), observed as under:

"The interpretation placed by the Revenue Tribunal on the terms of clause (c) of sub-section (5) of Section 33-B is not correct. It appears to us that the words "any person" which occur in the expression "but not of any person from whom title is derived by assignment or Court sale or otherwise" were not intended to include the ancestors of the certificated landlord. In our view, the words "any person" in that expression mean any other person, that is, any persons other than the ancestors of the landlord. This would mean that a certificated landlord fulfils the conditions laid down in the said clause if he derives title to the land from any of his ancestors irrespective of whether the title was derived by inheritance, survivorship, partition, gift, testamentary disposition or any other form of assignment, but that he does not fulfil the requirements of the said clause if he derives title from any person other than one of his ancestors, irrespective of whether the title was derived by assignments, or by Court sale or in any other manner. In the present case, the petitioners derived title to the leased lands by an assignment from their father whose name had been entered in the Record of Rights as the occupier of the lands on 1st January 1958 and they had, therefore fulfilled the requirements of that sub-clause.

There are several reasons why we prefer the interpretation mentioned above. In the first place no meaning can be attached to the words "or otherwise" in the expression "but not of any person from whom title is derived by assignment or Court sale or otherwise," if the person referred to in that expression includes an ancestor of the certificated landlord. This is because every form of transfer, voluntary or involuntary inter vivos or testamentary, is covered by that expression. Even a certificated landlord who derives title by inheritance from his father derives it otherwise than by assignment or Court-sale and if the words "any person" were to include ancestors, such a certificated landlord would fail to satisfy the requirement of clause (c) of Sub-section (5) and be debarred from terminating the tenancy of his tenant. This shows that the words "any person" in that expression do not include ancestors of a certificated landlord.

Secondly, the legislative history of the above expression ("but not of any person from whom title is derived by assignment or court sale or otherwise") corroborates the interpretation which we are inclined to place on the terms used in clause (c) of sub-section (5) of Section 33-B. Sections 33-A to 33-C were added to the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act by an amendment brought about by Maharashtra Act IX of 1961. By the same Act clause (d) of Section 31-A was also amended. Section 31-A deals with the conditions which regulate the right of an ordinary landlord to terminate the tenancy of his tenant, and clause (d) of that section, prior to the said amendment, laid down that the right of a landlord to terminate a tenancy for cultivating the land personally shall be subject to the following conditions:

"The land leased stands in the record of rights or in any public record or similar revenue record on the 1st day of January, 1952 and thereafter during the period between the said date and the appointed day in the name of the landlord himself, or of any of his ancestors, or if the landlord is a member of a joint family, in the name of a member of such family."

By the said amendment the words "but not of any person from whom title is derived by assignment by Court sale or otherwise" were added after the words "any of his ancestors" occurring in clause (d) of S. 31-A. Clause (c) of sub-section (5) of Section 33-B introduced by the amending Act was thus in identical terms with clause (d) of Section 31-A as amended by the same Act. Now, it seems clear that the purpose why the legislature amended clause (d) of Section 31-A by adding the above expression was that the legislature intended to nullify the effect of the decision of a Division Bench in Waman Ganesh v. Ganu Guna (1959) 61 Bom LR 1267, which was decided on 7th April 1959. In that case a person had purchased a land in Court auction in 1955 and had thereafter applied for possession of the land from the tenant under Section 31 on the ground that he required it for personal cultivation. The question before the Court was whether the person who had applied for possession of the land had fulfilled the requirement of clause (d) of Section 31-A as it then stood. The Court held that the term "landlord" occurring in Section 31-A (d) included any person from whom or through whom a landlord derived his right as such landlord, and that a purchaser at the Court auction must be held to have fulfilled the requirement of clause (d) of Section 31-A if the name of his predecessor-in-title stood in the record of rights as an occupant on 1st January 1952. By adding the words "but not of any person from whom title is derived by assignment by Court sale or otherwise" the legislature intended, to make it clear that the landlord who derives title from a stranger (i. e. from any person other than ancestors) by any mode such as an assignment, Court sale or otherwise, does not fulfil the requirement of the clause. The above expression was not added by the Legislature to curtail the rights of landlord who derived title from their ancestors by some form of assignment such as a gift deed or a will.

It appears from the judgment of the Revenue Tribunal that in its opinion, a landlord fulfils the requirement of Section 33-B (5) (c) only if he has acquired the leased land by inheritance from an ancestor or as a member of a joint family. Such an interpretation would lead to inequitable results and does not accord with legislative intention. A person, for instance, who has acquired lands from his independent earnings may leave them by a will to his sons. There is no reason why the sons in such a case should be subject to greater disabilities vis-a-vis their tenants than other landlords who have derived title by inheritance or as members of a joint family.

An interpretation similar to the one which we are inclined to adopt was placed on the terms of clause (c) of sub-section (5) of Section 33-B by Mr. Justice Chandrachud, sitting single, in Special C. A. No. 902 of 1954; decided on 9-4-1965 (Bom). In that case a woman who was the landlady of a certain land had gifted the land in three equal parts to her three daughters, who after obtaining certificates under Section 88-C, had applied for possession of their respective portions of the land under Section 33-B. The learned Judge held that the daughters had fulfilled the requirement of Section 33-B (5) (c), although they derived titled by a gift. We are, with respect, in agreement with that view. See (1966) 14 Tenancy Law Rep 2."

From the bare reading of the aforesaid decision, it is quite clear that according to the Division Bench by using the words "or otherwise" every form of transfer, voluntary or involuntary inter vivos or testamentary was covered by that expression. The right conferred upon the landlord to terminate tenancy of a tenant for personal cultivation is not an absolute right, but it is fettered by the conditions incorporated in sub-sections of sub-section (3) of Section 38 of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act. For terminating a tenancy of a tenant for bona fide personal cultivation, it is necessary that the landlord should satisfy all the conditions referred to in Section 38 (3). One of the conditions laid down by sub-section (d) of Section 38 (3) is that the land leased must stand in the Record of rights or in public record or a similar Revenue records on the 1st day of August 1957 and thereafter during the period between the said date and the date of the commencement of the Act in the name of the landlord himself or any of his ancestors or if the landlord is a member of the joint family, in the name of the member of such family but not of any other predecessor-in-title from whom title is derived whether by assignment or Court sale or otherwise. It is quite clear from the bare reading of this provision that this condition was laid down by the Legislature so as to check unscrupulous termination of tenancies of the tenants by manipulations. To check all sorts of manipulations an all pervading phraseology is used in the bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) of the Act. Therefore, in our opinion, if the ejusdem generis doctrine is applied to the present provision, it will not only imply departure from the natural meaning of the words, but will give them a meaning which may or may not have been intended by the Legislature. If the intention of the Legislature would have been to include in the words "or otherwise" the same kind of assignment, which is contemplated by earlier words, then there was no necessity of using the general words "or otherwise", because the earlier specific words used, namely 'whether by assignment or Court sale' were wide enough to include all kinds of assignments. An interpretation of the general words "or otherwise" limiting their import or scope to the matters and things of the same kind as covered by previous words would make the general words (or otherwise) following the preceding specific words redundant. Therefore, in our opinion, the proper construction to be applied to the words "or otherwise" is to construe these general words in such a way as to carry out the object sought to be achieved by the Legislature. The Legislature when it used the words "or otherwise" apparently intended to cover other cases which may not come within the meaning of the preceding words. By using the general words "or otherwise" the Legislature intended to cover all possible cases of assignments which are not transfers inter vivos or by act of parties. Therefore the Legislature used these words "or otherwise" in all inclusive sense to bar all avenues of escape. Therefore, in our opinion, the words "or otherwise" used in Section 38 (3) (d) are not words of limitation, but are words of extension so as to cover all possible ways in which title in the land might vest in the person concerned. As already observed, similar view seems to have been taken by the Division Bench of this Court in Shaila v. S. B. Mali (cit. supra). Therefore, it is not possible for us to accept this contention of Shri Manohar.

15. If the general words "or otherwise" used in Sec. 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act are given their natural meaning, it will obviously include derivation of title by virtue of a will, and therefore, obviously as the petitioners before us are claiming title to the land in dispute by virtue of the will executed by Giglabai, they will be covered by bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) of the Act, and therefore, are not entitled to claim resumption of the land as they have failed to satisfy the condition laid down by Section 38 (3) (d) of the Act.

16. However, it is contended by Shri Manohar that the bracketed portion will not apply to a case where the title is derived by the present landlords from their ancestor. According to him, Parvatibai and Giglabai being the petitioners' ancestors, even if it is assumed that they have derived a title by virtue of a will executed by Giglabai, the said assignment is not covered by the bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d). In support of this contention Shri Manohar has relied upon the observations of this Court in Shaila's case ((1968) 16 Tenancy Law Rep 83).

17. It is no doubt true that in view of the decision of the Division Bench in Shaila's case, (1968) 16 Tenancy Law Rep 83 referred to hereinbefore, it is quite clear that the expression used in bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) was not added by the Legislature to curtail the right of a landlord who derived title from his ancestors by some form of assignment such as a gift-deed or a will. However, in reply to this contention of Shri Manohar, Shri Deshmukh, the learned counsel appearing for the respondents-tenants has strongly relied upon the decision of this Court in Vithal v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Nagpur (1970 Mah LJ 185). According to Shri Deshmukh, the word "ancestor" has been used in Section 38 (3) (d) as connoting a progenitor and one indirect lineal line of ascent. As neither Parvatibai nor Giglabei could be said to be progenitor in the direct lineal line of ascent of the present petitioners they cannot be termed as ancestors of the petitioners. However according to Shri Manohar the said decision requires reconsideration.

18. It is no doubt true that such a view has been taken by the Single Judge of this Court in Vithal v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal 1970 Mah LJ 185 (cit supra). However, it appears that in the earlier Division Bench decisions of this Court in Shaila v. S. B. Mali (1968) 16 Tenancy Law Rep 83 (cit supra) and Waman v. Ganu (1959) 61 Bom LR 1267 and a decision of single Judge in Nima v. Putalabai (1964) 12 Tenancy Law Rep 2 were not brought to the notice of the learned Judge. The Legislature thought it expedient to amend the provisions of Sec. 28 (3) (d) by inserting the bracketed portion in view of the earlier decision of this Court in Waman v. Ganu ((1959) 61 Bom LR 1267). In that case this Court had an occasion to consider the true import of Sec. 31-A (d) of the Bombay Tenancy Act, as unamended while construing the said provisions, the Division Bench of this Court in Waman v. Ganu (cit. supra) observed as under:

"The cases of an heir and of a member in a joint family are now expressly provided for by the introduction of the words 'of any of his ancestors, or if the landlord is a member of a joint family, in the name of a member of such family' in clause (d) of Sec. 31-A of the Act"

Besides, we do not see why any distinction in principle should be made between the case of an heir and that of a transferee. In one case the property of the original landlord is taken by succession and in the other, by transfer."

From the bare reading of those observations it is quite clear that the words "any of his ancestors" in Section 31-A (d) of the Bombay Tenancy Act, which are analogous to the words used in Section 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act, were construed by the Division Bench as referring to cases of Landholders who derived their title to the land by succession as an heir. From the bare reading of Section 38 (3) (d) it is quite clear that before a landlord could resume a land under Section 38, he must establish that the land leased stands in the Record of Rights or in public record or similar Revenue records on the 1st day of August 1957 and thereafter during the period between the said date and the date of the commencement of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act, (1) in the name of a landlord himself, (2) in the name of any of his ancestors, but not of any other predecessor-in-title from whom title is derived whether by assignment or Court sale or otherwise and (3) if the landlord is a member of a joint family, in the name of a member of such family. Therefore, it is obvious that the word "ancestors" has been used by the Legislature to cover the cases of the landholders who derived title to the property by succession or inheritance. In our view, the word "ancestors" will have to be interpreted liberally and not in the restricted sense in which it is used in Hindu Law. It cannot be forgotten that the Tenancy Act applies to all the citizens of the Vidarbha region irrespective of their religion. It applies to Hindus, Muslims, Christians, Parsis and the persons belonging to other communities, who are residing within the Vidarbha region. Therefore, a narrow or a restricted meaning could not be given to the word "ancestors" as has been given in Vithal v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal (1970 Mah LJ 185) (cit. supra). In the cases of natural and normal inheritance there is no scope for manipulation. Therefore, taking into consideration the object of the section and the scheme of the Act, in our opinion, a person of any sex who goes before either on the paternal or maternal side could be looked upon as an ancestor of the person inheriting the former's property, if in the normal and natural course of inheritance he is entitled to inherit the property as an heir. Normally, phrase 'heir' cannot be limited to issue only. It must include all persons who are entitled to the property of another under the Law of inheritance. However, in the present case it is not necessary to probe in this question any further because it is quite clear from the material placed on record that in the normal and natural course of inheritance, the petitioners could not have inherited the suit property, as their mother Kanibai was alive when the proceedings were instituted by them. We are informed by the counsel for petitioners that Kanibai died in the year 1972. Therefore, till Kanibai was alive, by no stretch of imagination the petitioners could have derived title to the suit property by inheritance, because Kanibai being a preferential heir would have inherited the property in her own right. Therefore, in our opinion, there is no substance in the contention raised by Shri Manohar that Parvatibai and Giglabei were ancestors of the petitioners.

19. However, it was contended by Shri Manohar that the word "ancestors" should be construed with reference to the personal law of the person concerned and, therefore, under old Hindu Text, the petitioners being Sapindas of Parvatibai and Giglabei, it can be said that Parvatibai and Gignabai were their ancestors. In support of this proposition he has relied upon the Commentary on Hindu Law by Shrinivasan. However, it is not possible for us to accept this contention also.

20. Looking to the nature of the Statute which is secular and applicable to persons belonging to all religions, in our opinion, no reliance could be placed on the original Texts of the Hindu Law in this behalf. Apart from this, the theory of Sapindas, as found in the old Texts, applies to spiritual matters and matters relating to the marriages etc. It has no application to any secular matters or matters relating to the property. So far as the matters relating to the property are concerned, they are now specifically covered by the Hindu Succession Act. In this view of the matter, in our opinion, there is no substance in this contention also.

21. Therefore, taking a cumulative view of the whole matter, it is quite clear that the petitioners have not satisfied the condition laid down in Section 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act. The land in dispute did not stand in the Record of Rights for the relevant period either in the name of the petitioners or in the name of any of their ancestors. It is further clear that the petitioners were not members of the joint family of either Gignabai or Parvatibai, and, therefore, that part of the section will not apply to their case. Therefore, the petitioners' case is wholly covered by the bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act as they have derived title to the suit field from their predecessor-in-title otherwise than by inheritance. The source of their title is a will, which is wholly covered by the words "or otherwise" as used in the bracketed portion of Section 38 (3) (d) of the Act. Even otherwise they derived the title to the suit field by virtue of a will executed by Gignabai and the land was not recorded in Record of Rights for the relevant period in the name of Gignabai. It is an admitted position that it stood recorded in the name of Parvatibai alone. In this view of the matter, as the petitioners have not satisfied the condition referred to in Section 38 (3) (d) of the Act, their application was liable to be dismissed.

22. In the view we have taken, therefore, it is not necessary to consider the rival contentions raised before us so far as the merits of the matter are concerned.

23. Even on merits, in our opinion, the authorities below, namely, the Tenancy Naib Tahsildar and the Sub-Divisional Officer, have not properly approached the case. From the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer it is quite clear that he found that the Tenancy

Naib Tahsildar was wrong in calculating the income of the landholders on the basis of very vague presumption. From the record it appears that the petitioners are working in the cloth shop with their father and the father owns two shops. No material has been placed before the authorities concerned to indicate as to what is the income of the shop and how it is shown in the account books which are maintained for the purposes of Income-tax. It is pertinent to note that the petitioners are married and have children. They are actually working in the cloth shops. In the application filed by the landholders no averments were made to indicate as to what was their income from other sources and as to why they require the land in question for their bona fide personal cultivation. The landholders were not agriculturists when they filed the present application. The material in this behalf is introduced for the first time during the course of evidence. The petitioners failed to disclose the true and correct position of the cloth shop in which they were working. They have also not disclosed the income from other sources i. e. house property. In these circumstances, in our opinion, it can safely be said that the findings of fact recorded by both the authorities below were to some extent based on conjectures and surmises not supported by the material on record. The burden to prove various conditions was obviously upon the landholders. It is no doubt true that while exercising its jurisdiction under Section 111 of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act it is not open to the Revenue Tribunal to set aside the concurrent finding of fact recorded by the authorities below, but it is further clear from the material placed on record that even while deciding the question as to whether the income by cultivation of the land, of which the petitioners were entitled to take possession, was the principal source of income or not, the authorities below have misunderstood the real point for determination. The appellate Court has found that the petitioners could use water for improvement in the field from Saikheda Project, and therefore, might get more income. To say the least, the finding in this behalf is to some extent speculative. The lower Courts whose decisions on a question of fact are final have arrived at a decision on material point by considering material which is partly irrelevant to the enquiry and have based their decisions partly on conjectures and surmises. Therefore, so far as the merits of the matter are concerned, in the interest of justice, we were inclined to remit back the whole case over again to the stage of Tenancy Naib Tahsildar for giving reasonable opportunity to both the parties to adduce evidence in support of their respective cases. But as we have found that the petitioners have not satisfied the conditions incorporated in Section 38 (3) (d) of the Vidarbha Tenancy Act itself, such a remand is not now necessary.

24. In the result, therefore, the petition fails and is dismissed. However, in the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

Radhakishin N. Advani, Appellant v. Mrs. Sheila Gobind Mirchandani and another, Respondents.

A. F. O. No. 48 of 1975, D/- 16-1-1976.*

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 9-A — Application for interim relief — Objection to jurisdiction of Court taken — Duty of Court.

Where an application for an interim injunction is made and an objection to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit is taken by any party the Court must decide the question of jurisdiction as a preliminary issue at the hearing of the application. The Court can grant an ad interim injunction but it must decide the application as expeditiously as possible and cannot adjourn the hearing of the application till the hearing of the suit.

(Paras 4, 5, 10, 14)

P. L. Nain with G. V. Bansi, for Appellant; Keshavdas Dalpatrai, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal from an order of a Judge of the City Civil Court, Bombay, (Judge Guttal) whereby on a Notice of Motion taken out by the plaintiff he granted an interim injunction in terms of prayer (c) of the Notice of Motion and adjourned the hearing of the Notice of Motion itself till the hearing of the suit.

2. It requires to be stated at once that the 1st defendant in reply to the application for interim relief took up the plea that the City Civil Court, Bombay, had no jurisdiction to entertain and try this suit and/or grant any interim relief inter alia on the ground that the value of the subject-matter of the suit, viz., a flat in Brothers Co-operative Housing Society

*(Against order of Guttal Judge, City Civil Court, Bombay, D/- 22-10-1974.)

Ltd., Mahim, being Rs. 35,000/-, exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. Secondly it was contended that the City Civil Court would have no jurisdiction because the plaintiff was claiming under a will left by one Jethmal Mulchand Malkani (who died on the 24th of October, 1972) unless a probate of the will was obtained from the High Court.

3. It would appear that the learned Judge did not appreciate the scope and ambit of Section 9-A of the Civil Procedure Code, which was introduced in 1970. Now, Section 9-A reads as follows:—

"9-A. (1) If, at the hearing of any application for granting or setting aside an order granting any interim relief, whether by way of injunction, appointment of a receiver or otherwise, made in any suit, an objection to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain such suit is taken by any of the parties to the suit, the Court shall proceed to determine at the hearing of such application the issue as to the jurisdiction as a preliminary issue before granting or setting aside the order granting the interim relief. Any such application shall be heard and disposed of by the Court as expeditiously as possible and shall not in any case be adjourned to the hearing of the suit.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), at the hearing of any such application, the Court may grant such interim relief as it may consider necessary, pending determination by it of the preliminary issue as to the jurisdiction."

4. A plain reading of the section discloses that whenever an objection to the jurisdiction of the Court is taken to entertain a suit in which an application for granting or setting aside an order granting an interim relief is made, then it becomes a duty of the Court to proceed to determine, at the hearing of such application, the issue as to jurisdiction as a preliminary issue before granting or setting aside the order granting interim relief.

5. In other words, the Court is enjoined to first determine the question of jurisdiction as a preliminary issue not at the hearing of the suit but at the hearing of the application for interim relief. Then there is a further provision that any such application, that is to say, the application for granting or setting aside an order granting any interim relief shall be heard and disposed of by the Court as expeditiously as possible, and what is perhaps more important it "shall not in any case be adjourned to the hearing of the suit."

6. It is the grievance of Mr. Nain, the learned Advocate for the 1st defendant, that the learned trial Judge has done precisely the reverse.

7. Now, the order which the learned trial Judge passed reads as follows:—

"On the plaintiff's Notice of Motion No. 2135 dated 7-5-1974 there shall be an interim injunction in terms of prayer (c). Hearing of the Notice of Motion is adjourned till the hearing of the suit."

8. It is Mr. Nain's contention that the learned trial Judge has first of all failed to expeditiously determine the question of jurisdiction and that secondly contrary to the mandate of Section 9-A of the Civil Procedure Code he has adjourned the application for interim relief, in the form of the Notice of Motion, to the hearing of the suit.

9. I am afraid, Mr. Nain, is right and that is precisely how the learned Judge has fallen in error.

10. It requires to be stated that there is no prohibition even when the question of the jurisdiction of the Court is involved for the Court to grant an ad interim relief. The emphasis is on the ad interim nature of the relief, precisely because an ad interim order cannot be converted into an interim order without hearing the application itself in the form of the Notice of Motion. The learned Judge has not heard the Notice of Motion as such, because he adjourned it to the hearing of the suit.

11. Mr. Keshavdas Dalpatrai, the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-respondent, contended that the word "ad" may have been inadvertently left out so that what the learned Judge was in fact doing was to grant an ad interim injunction and then hear the Notice of Motion at the time of the hearing of the suit where the preliminary issue as to the jurisdiction would be considered. It is good of Mr. Keshavdas Dalpatrai to argue in this manner, but I am afraid that does not seem to be the case. Even assuming that what the learned Judge intended to grant was an ad interim injunction and not an interim injunction, the fact that he had adjourned the hearing of the Notice of Motion to the hearing of the suit speaks for itself.

12. Section 9-A of the Civil Procedure Code, as I find it, is in the clearest possible terms and, in my opinion, it would be the duty of the Court in such matters to forthwith hear the application for granting or setting aside an order granting an interim relief and determine the question of jurisdiction of the Court wherever it is taken. It is only after the question of jurisdiction has been put away that further proceedings may go on.

13. It is substantially clear that the purpose and intent of this legislation (which is expressed fortunately in the clearest of terms) is that if a suit is capable of being disposed of on the question of jurisdiction it should be so disposed of forthwith before any further proceedings are taken or the suit is allowed to be in some docket for years to come and becomes part of the arrears about which we hear so much.

14. In the result, the appeal is allowed, and the order of the learned trial Judge is modified so that there will now be an ad interim injunction in terms of prayer (c) of the Notice of Motion pending the hearing and final disposal of the Notice of Motion.

15. On Mr. Nain's request it is clarified that the words "dealing with" used in the ad interim order will not include carrying on necessary repairs in the flat or doing anything for the preservation of the property.

16. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Order accordingly.

K. J. Abhyankar, for Applicant; M. A. Rane, for Opponents.

ORDER:— This revision is against the order of the learned District Judge, Ratnagiri, dated 3rd April, 1976, dismissing Miscellaneous Appeal No. 10 of 1975. That appeal was from the order of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Khed, in Miscellaneous Application No. 4 of 1974. That application was filed by the defendant, against whom an ex parte decree has been passed on 29th June, 1974, for restoration of the suit for hearing on merits.

2. The suit was originally filed in the Court of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Chiplun. Thereafter by an order of the District Court it was transferred to the Court of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Khed. One Mr. Chitley, Advocate, had put in the Vakalatnama for the petitioner before me in the Court at Chiplun. The Court at Khed gave a notice of hearing to the said Advocate. On the day namely on 28th June 1974 both the Advocate and the petitioner remained absent. Evidence on behalf of the plaintiff was taken on affidavit. An affidavit of the Mukhtyar was filed. Issues were framed as the written-statement had already been filed and the suit was decided ex parte. On 3rd August 1974 the petitioner claims that he went to Khed to enquire about the further progress of the case and on coming to know what had transpired about the suit he made an application on the same day for setting aside the said ex parte decree.

3. Evidence was taken by the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Khed, who held that he was not satisfied with the explanation given by the petitioner as to his inability to attend the Court on the relevant date. Being aggrieved by the said decision the petitioner preferred an appeal which was dismissed by the learned District Judge.

4. The learned District Judge refers to Order 3, Rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code and observes that the authority of the Advocate concerned would not come to an end merely by reason of the transfer of the suit from Chiplun to Khed. I am a little doubtful about the correctness of the legal position. All Vakalatnamas and appearances are filed for a particular Court. It is for a suit or the proceedings in that Court that the Advocate is authorised to and obliges himself to appear. Neither the client nor the advocate can be bound by that authority given with reference to a particular Court if the proceedings are transferred to a different Court. Here it is important that I am not talking about the place of the Court. For example, it would be correct to say that the authority would continue if the work of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Chiplun, was to be attended to at Khed by the Civil Judge concerned there, because in that case the Civil Judge at Khed would have a dual capacity acting as Civil Judge both at Chiplun and Khed. But if the matter was to be transferred from one Court to a totally distinct Court, it appears to me that the application under authority in the Court by an Advocate would come to an end. However, it appears to me unnecessary to go deeper into the matter since on the facts before me, both the Courts below have taken an extremely harsh view against the petitioner. The finding of the Court is not that the petitioner was aware of the date and had deliberately chosen to remain absent. The finding only is that the petitioner was only aware of the transfer and thereafter did not take any steps to acquaint himself with the progress of the suit or appoint an Advocate to represent him at Khed. Merely on this footing I do not think that the ex parte decree ought to be sustained. Assuming that there is some negligence on the part of the Advocate or the party, such negligence would not disentitle him for an opportunity to defend the suit on merits provided an order can be made against him compensating the other side for the costs thrown away. It is true that the powers of this Court to interfere in revision with such orders are limited; but such powers have to be called into play when such orders are passed which shock the conscience of the Court. It appears to me that such ex parte decrees and orders dismissing the suit for default are being increasingly sought to be sustained merely on the ground that if the suit is restored, then the matter shown as disposed of and no longer lying in the Court will be restored on the file of the Court and perhaps included in the arrears of the Court. It is also important to note that by taking extensive evidence for such application more time is spent which could have been utilised to dispose of the suit itself.

5. In the result, the rule is made absolute, but the restoration will be on the following terms:—

"The petitioner will pay to the respondent the costs of the Miscellaneous Application, of the Misc. Appeal and of this revision petition as well as the costs thrown away on 29th June, 1974, quantified in the aggregate at Rs. 350/-, before the date of effective hearing of the suit. Such payment of costs will be condition-precendent to the petitioner being allowed to further appear in the suit." The petitioner through his Advocate also undertakes that he will file the Vakalatnama of some Advocate in the Khed Court on or before 15th November, 1976. I further direct the Khed Court to dispose of the suit as expeditiously as possible and in any case on or before 15th January, 1977. Records and proceedings and the writ be sent down forthwith.

Rule made absolute.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 9, Explanation — 'Right to property' — Right to distribute offerings made to Dargah is 'right to property'.

cannot be narrowly construed to mean only 'right of ownership of property'. Where the plaintiffs, trustees of the Dargah, filed a suit for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from removing the offerings made to the Dargah and the defendants contended that they were entitled to the share in the offerings and the trustees had no right to the offerings qua trustees, held the suit was maintainable. The trustees were responsible for the proper management of the Trust. In the course of the management, they were in duty bound to distribute properly the offerings made to the Dargah in accordance with the ancient custom and usage of the Dargah. They could not allow the defendants to raise disputes among themselves or quarrel among themselves and mar the sanctity of the offerings made to the Dargah by the devotees. (Paras 15, 16, 17, 18)

S. C. Pratap, for Appellants; K. J. Abhyankar, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— The respondents are the Trustees of the famous Dargah of Hajarat Peer Shamma Meer Saheb at Miraj. The Dargah is registered as a Public Trust under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950.

2. On November 30, 1964, the respondents filed a suit in the Court of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Miraj, against the appellants to get a permanent injunction restraining the appellants from touching or removing the Maitana and Amish, i.e., articles and cash amounts of Navas offered by the devotees of the Dargah at the time of Moharrum and Urus festivals, and further restraining them from interfering with the plaintiffs' right of distributing the said Maitana and Amish and cash amount. They also sued to obtain accounts from the defendants about the Maitana and Amish removed by the defendants during the Moharrum and Urus of 1963 and during the Moharrum of 1964; and for the recovery of the amount that would be found due from the defendants at the foot of the accounts and costs.

3. According to the plaintiffs, Moharrum and Urus festivals are celebrated in the Dargah every year. Devotees offer cash amounts and other articles of Navas called maitana and Amish to the Kabrasthan (Tomb) in the Dargah at the time of Moharrum and Urus. The plaintiffs keep a box for that Maitana and Amish and cash amounts. The three families of Mutavallis, Sharik Maslats and Mushrifs of Miraj had shares in that Maitana, Amish and cash amounts. The Mutavallis had 1 1/2 share, Sharik Maslats had one share and Mushrifs had one share in the said Maitana, Amish and cash amounts. The plaintiffs were distributing the same among the members of the three families of Mutavallis, Sharik Maslats and Mushrifs in proportion of their respective shares according to the usage from ancient times.

4. However, the defendants, who belong to the said three families, removed the Maitana and Amish etc., received at the time of Moharrum and Urus of 1963 and at the time of Moharrum of 1964 illegally and unauthorisedly and were threatening to do the same even in the year 1964 by unauthorisedly taking away the box and other articles. Hence the plaintiffs filed the suit claiming the aforesaid reliefs.

5. The suit was resisted by the defendants. They denied the allegations made by the plaintiffs and contended that the plaintiffs alone were not the Trustees of the Dargah and the plaintiffs had no right to keep the box for collecting the cash amount and other articles of Navas offered at the Dargah. According to the defendants, the box was kept there by the three families of Mushrifs, Sharik Maslats and Mutavallis for collecting the Maitana, Amish, cash and other articles offered by the devotees at the time of Moharrum and Urus. The defendants' families distribute them according to their respective shares and the custom and usage of the Dargah.

6. They denied the right of the plaintiffs to distribute the same among the families. They contended that all the amounts and articles received at the time of Moharrum and Urus were given to the Mulla of the Dargah for safe custody after making a list of the same. They further contended that sugar and coconuts offered to the Dargah were kept on the Gala above the door in front of the Dargah and the same were distributed according to the shares of the families. They also contended that the cash amounts were distributed by themselves once a year after Moharrum and Urus.

7. They described the following method of customary distribution, viz., — Rupees 12 were given to Mulla before distribution; rupee one was reserved for Ramzan Id; Rs. 3.50 were given to Fakirs; Rs. 25/- were paid by way of Khidamati charges and after deducting the amount of Rs. 41.50 the balance was distributed among the three families. They admitted that Mutavallis have got 1 1/2 share; Sharik Maslats have got one share and Mushrifs have got one share.

8. They denied that they had removed the boxes containing cash amounts and articles of Navas at the time of Moharrum and Urus of 1963 or at the time of Moharrum of 1964 unauthorisedly. They also denied that they were threatening to remove the box at the time of Urus of 1964. They contended that the cause of action for the suit was a false one; and the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim accounts of amounts and articles in the boxes during the Urus and Moharrum of 1963 and Moharrum of 1964. They submitted that the plaintiffs' suit was liable to be dismissed with costs.

9. The learned Civil Judge framed as many as eight issues as per Exhibit 26. The defendants led oral and documentary evidence consisting of two decisions of the Charity Commissioner regarding the Dargah, viz., Exhibit 82, under which the Assistant Charity Commissioner had ordered that the Dargah and its endowment property be registered as a religious Public Trust; and Exhibit 83, ordering certain properties to be registered as properties of the Public Trust. The plaintiffs also produced registers and other documents from the record of the suit Dargah at Exhibits 62, 63 and 66 to 76.

10. The learned Civil Judge very carefully considered the oral and documentary evidence and particularly the previous litigations relating to the Dargah and the previous records of the Dargah and came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had a right of distributing Maitana, Amish, cash amounts and other articles offered to the Dargah at the time of Moharrum and Urus festivals; and the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to an injunction. He, however, dismissed the suit for accounts as the plaintiffs had no share in the said offerings.

11. Accordingly, the learned Civil Judge passed a decree on December 10, 1966, in the following terms:—

"(1) It is hereby declared that plaintiffs, as Trustees of the Hajarat Peer Shamma Meerasaheb Darga of Miraj have got a right to distribute the Maitana, Amish, cash amounts and other articles of Navas received from the devotees in that Darga at the time of Moharrum and Urus festivals every year amongst the members of the three Mujavar families of Mutavallies, Sharik Maslats and Mushrifis according to their 1 1/2, 1 and 1 share respectively.

(2) Defendants are hereby permanently restrained by a perpetual injunction, from touching or removing the Maitana, the Amish, the cash amounts and other articles of Navas offered by the devotees to the Peer's Tomb (Kabarasthan) in the Hajarat Peer Shamma Meer-saheb Darga of Miraj at the time of Moharram and Urus festivals every year and from interfering with the right of plaintiffs, as trustees of that Darga, of distributing the said Maitana, Amish cash amounts and other property amongst the three families of Mutavallis, Sharik Maslats and Mushrifis according to their respective shares, either by themselves or through their agents, servants and such other persons.

(3) Plaintiffs' suit so far as it relates to the claim for accounts and for possession of Maitana, Amish, cash amounts and other articles of Navas received in the Darga at the time of Moharrum and Urus of 1963 and Moharrum of 1964 at the foot of those accounts, stands dismissed.

(4) Parties to bear their own costs as incurred.

(5) Decree to be drawn up in terms of this order."

12. The said judgment and decree passed by the learned Civil Judge were challenged by the defendants in Civil Appeal No. 47 of 1967. The learned Assistant Judge, who heard the said appeal, dismissed it with costs on August 22, 1968, having regard to the registered agreement executed in favour of the Secretary of State for India in Council on January 7, 1916, referred to in the orders of the Assistant Charity Commissioner at Exhibits 82 and 83, overruling the contentions raised by the defendants. The concurrent judgments and the decrees are challenged in the above Second Appeal by the defendants.

13. Mr. Pratap, the learned Counsel appearing for the defendants-appellants, submitted that having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs themselves have no share in the suit offerings before the Dargah and also having regard to the fact that it was undisputed that the defendants' families were entitled to their respective shares in the offerings according to the custom and usage of the Dargah, the suit was liable to be dismissed on the ground that it was not a suit of a civil nature.

14. He relied upon the decision of this Court in Ramchandra Keshav Gore v. Gavalakha Gangadhar Swami, (1973) 75 Bom LR 668, and the provisions of Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He also contended that the questions as to how the offerings were to be distributed and who actually had to distribute them, were matters of indoor management of the three families who were entitled to their respective shares in the offerings and hence the Civil Court could not interfere in such matter of indoor managements of the three families. In support of his arguments he relied on a judgment of this Court in Janardhan C. Upadhye v. Rajni Patel, (1974) 76 Bom LR 654.

15. There is no merit in these arguments as the present suit is clearly covered by the Explanation to Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which runs as follows:—

"A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies."

The right to distribute the offerings is, undoubtedly, a right to property, though the Trustees may not have any personal interest in the offerings.

16. Mr. Pratap's argument that because the defendants alone were interested in the distribution of the offerings, the plaintiffs could not claim any right as Trustees, cannot be accepted because the Trustees are responsible for the proper management of the Public Trust. In the course of the management, they are in duty bound to distribute the offerings made to the Dargah of Hajarat Peer Shamma Meer Saheb in accordance with the ancient custom and usage of the Dargah.

17. They cannot allow the defendants to raise disputes among themselves or quarrel among themselves and mar the sanctity of the offerings made to the Dargah by the devotees. The cases cited by Mr. Pratap cannot, therefore, be of any assistance to him in the present case. It must be held that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit for injunction filed by the Trustees in the facts and circumstances of the present case.

18. Secondly, it was argued by Mr. Pratap that in any event, the Trustees had no right to the offerings qua Trustees as it was admitted that the offerings were to be distributed, as stated above, among the three families of the defendants. The words "right to property" in the Explanation to Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be narrowly construed to be meaning as only "the right of ownership of the property". In the case of the offerings, the proper distribution thereof among the three families is a duty of the Trustees who are entrusted with the management of the Dargah. The right to distribute it must necessarily vest in the Trustees. It is the duty of the Trustees, as already stated above, to see that the offerings are properly distributed in accordance with the custom. The right so to distribute or deal with offerings is also a right to property within the meaning of the Explanation to Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

19. Thirdly, it was submitted by Mr. Pratap that in any event as since 1950 the defendants were distributing the offerings by themselves, the plaintiffs' suit instituted in 1964 was barred by time. The two Courts below have very carefully appreciated the oral and documentary evidence; and have held that the contention raised by the defendants is false; and the record clearly shows that the distribution of the offerings was made by the Trustees before 1963.

20. The learned Civil Judge has very carefully summarised the position in paragraph 10 of his judgment as follows:—

"A series of documents produced at Exhibit 76 by the Plaintiffs go to show that there were constant disputes amongst the members of the three Mujavar families regarding distribution of the Amish property and that the Police and the Government of the Ex-Miraj State and the Collector of Satara had to intervene from time to time to see that the distribution of the Amish was made properly and without breach of peace. The register of the Darga produced at Ex. 62 shows that on 22nd October, 1936, distribution of Amish was made. The words "Watun Dile" in Marathi therein show that the Panchas of the Darga had made distribution of that property. The register at Exh. 63 shows that similar distribution was made by the panchas of the Darga on 28th May, 1950, in the presence of the Mamlatdar of Miraj. The file of the Darga for the years 1900 and 1901 produced at Exh. 66 shows that in December 1900, distribution of Amish was similarly made and that on 30th January, 1901 some amount was paid to Fakirs in the presence of the Karbhari of Ex-Miraj State. The file of the Darga produced at Exh. 67 shows that in October 1906, distribution of Amish was made under the supervision of the Panchas of the Darga. The receipt book of the Darga for the years 1922 and 1923 produced at Exh. 68 shows that the panchas of the Darga had made the distribution of Amish during the year 1922-23. The receipt book of the Darga for the year 1927 produced at Exh. 69 shows that the panchas of the Darga had distributed the Amish for the year 1927 amongst the members of the three families on 13th February, 1927. The proceeding book of the suit Durga for the year 1940-41 produced at Exh. 70, shows that on 10th September, 1940, the Durga Panchas had distributed the Amish received during the year 1940-41. The proceeding book of the suit Darga for the year 1941-42 produced by plaintiffs at Exh. 71 shows that the Darga Panchas had made the distribution of Amish received during the year 1941-42 on 28th August, 1941. The proceeding book of the suit Darga for the year 1945-46 produced at Exh. 72 shows that the Amish received during the year 1945-46 was distributed by the Panchas of the Darga. The proceeding book of the suit Darga for the year 1947-48 produced at Exh. 73 shows that the Darga Panchas had distributed the Amish for the year 1947-48. The proceeding Book of the Darga for the year 1950-51 produced at Exh. 74 shows that the Darga Panchas had distributed the Amish for the year 1950-51 on 11th July, 1951, in the presence of the Mamlatdar of Miraj. The outward register of the Darga for the year 1950-51 produced at Exh. 75 shows at its pages Nos. 6 and 7 that the distribution of Amish for the year 1950-51 was made in the presence of Mamlatdar of Miraj and that the Mamlatdar was informed on 9th July, 1951, that no receipts regarding that distribution were obtained as the Amish was distributed in the presence of the Mamlatdar of Miraj. All these documents prima facie go to show that distribution of Amish is made by the Panchas or Trustees of the suit Darga every year. Thus Plaintiffs have proved their right and longstanding Vahiwat of distributing the Amish."

21. The said findings are fully supported by the evidence on the record and are impeccable. I find no error in the judgments of the two Courts below. The judgments and decrees passed by the two Courts below are, therefore, confirmed and the Second Appeal is dismissed. Having regard to the fact that the Trustees also belong to the families of the defendants and in the hope that the offerings made to a saint like Hajarat Peer Shamma Meer Saheb will not be squandered by the parties in litigation like the present appeal, the parties are directed to bear their own respective costs of this Second Appeal.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 42

MRIDUL, J.

Pramod M. Jhaveri and another, Debtors v. Sukhdeo Ramratan and another, Creditors.

Insolvency Petn. No. 11 of 1974, D/-5-7-1976.

(A) Maharashtra Debt Relief Act (1976), Secs. 2, 4, 7 (1), 11, 12 — Applicability of Act to insolvency proceedings — Claim by debtor that he is entitled to benefits or protection of the Act — Jurisdiction of insolvency Court whether barred.

An insolvency proceeding or the claims arising in insolvency proceedings are not outside the radiational periphery of the provisions of the Act. The expression 'civil court' in clause (b) of Section 4 must be held to take in the insolvency court deriving its powers and authorities from the Letters Patent of High Court and the provisions of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The word 'proceeding' in the clause has a wide spectrum of variable shades of meanings. The expression must, of necessity, take its colour from intendments of the Act or the remedies provided thereby or the mischief sought to be remedied by it. The Act is conceived as a social welfare legislation to provide relief from indebtedness. Insolvency being one of the modes in which the indebtedness of a debtor can be enforced through the instrumentality of an insolvency court, any legislative provision for relief therefrom must be held to 'include a relief from the claims in insolvency proceedings in respect of indebtedness of a person covered by the Act. Clause (c) in using the expression "suits and proceedings" keeps company with clause (b). It also has to be read

Noscitur a Sociis. Therefore, clause (c) also must be held to apply to insolvency proceedings based on a debt covered by the Act. (Paras 26, 27, 28)

It cannot be said that all the claims of a debtor arising under the Act are the matters which have to be 'settled, decided or dealt with by the authorised officer'. It is only the claims which relate to release and delivery of possession of security fall within the scope of authorised officer's authority. (Para 34)

It is true the opening words of sub-section (1) of Section 7 mention the provisions of Section 4 as a whole and do not refer to any specific clause thereof. But reading Section 7 as a whole, the reference to Section 4 in opening part of sub-section (1) of Section 7 must be said to be a reference only to clause (e) of the said Section 4. The governing concept in sub-section (1) of Section 7 is, implementation of the provisions of Section 4. The implementation is the implementation in regard to return of the pledged or the mortgaged properties belonging to the debtor and which implementation has to be done through the instrumentalities of the authorities mentioned in Section 6. It cannot be said that when the courts give effect to the consequences enumerated in clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 4, the courts can be said to be the instrumentalities charged with the task of implementing the provisions of the said Section 4. The courts do not implement the provisions of law. The courts merely enforce the rights and liabilities recognised by law. Any other construction of the said provisions will be at variance with the basic tenets of Indian Constitutional polity and will expose the said provisions to the vice of unconstitutionality. Such an interpretation has to be eschewed. Hence in taking cognizance of the provisions of Section 4, courts cannot be said to be implementing the said provisions.

An authorised officer is entitled to settle, decide or deal with, questions which can be raised by a creditor in his application under Section 7, that is to say, claims arising in connection with release and delivery of possession of 'property pledged or mortgaged by' a debtor. That being so, civil courts have jurisdiction to adjudicate upon and adjudge all claims, questions and disputes other than those which are raised by the creditor in his application under Section 7. The applications contemplated by Section 7 do not take within their sweep claims, questions and disputes pertaining to clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 4 in so far as the said disputes relate to unsecured debts or merely to debt aspect of secured debts as contradistinguished from security aspect thereof. The mischief of Sections 11 and 12 do not extend to the cases of unsecured debts or debt-aspects of secured debts, which matters being within the purview of clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) thereof, have to be dealt by the civil courts concerned. ORDER:— In this creditors' petition for an order of adjudication, an interesting but neat question of law arises for determination. The question is whether the Insolvency Court has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon claims based on the provisions of the Maharashtra Debt Relief Act, 1976 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"), or whether such claims must be determined by the authorised officer constituted thereunder. In a large number of cases, whether they are petitions for orders of adjudication or notice of motion for setting aside insolvency notices, this threshold question arises. It was therefore, considered necessary that in the above-mentioned petition, this question be tried as a preliminary question. Having regard to the pendency of the various other matters, in which this question arises, counsel for the parties thereto, were permitted to address the Court on this question. Consequently, besides the learned counsel for the petitioning creditors and the debtors herein, counsel appearing in the other matters also addressed the Court. On behalf of the creditors, principal submissions were made by Shri Makhija, the learned counsel for the petitioning-creditors herein. He was supported by Shri Thakkar, Shri Chande and other counsel appearing on behalf of the various creditors in the other proceedings. On behalf of the debtors, main arguments were advanced by Shri S. V. Shah. He was supported by Shri C. K. Shah, Shri Vyas, Shri Hinduja and Shri Jaysinghani. Shri D. R. Zaiwala appeared amicus curiae. The arguments advanced at the bar have been grouped together and have been, for the sake of convenience, compendiously referred to as arguments of counsel for the debtors or those for the creditors.

2. The above-mentioned insolvency petition was filed on 18th January, 1974, by Messrs. Punjalal H. Shah, in respect of a debt of Rs. 1,447.31 p. being the balance on a decree on admission, obtained by the said petitioning-creditors in a Suit filed in the Court of the Small Causes, Bombay. The said petitioning-creditors were substituted from time to time. Ultimately, the present petitioning-creditors Sukhdeo Ramratan and another, came on the scene in respect of their claim of Rs. 5,226.17 ps., payable under an ex parte decree passed in their favour by the Bombay City Civil Court in Suit No. 1637 of 1972.

3. The petition is founded on the facts that an insolvency notice dated 16th October, 1973, was served on the debtors on 18th October, 1973, but the debtors did not adopt any proceedings to have the said insolvency notice set aside. Nor did the debtors comply with the said insolvency notice with the result that the act of insolvency was complete on 23rd November, 1973.

4. On behalf of the debtors an affidavit-in-reply was filed on 4th March, 1975. In the said affidavit-in-reply the main defences raised by the debtors were, that the firm M/s. Cosmic Corporation, of which they were the partners and in respect of the debts of which firm the said insolvency proceedings were adopted, was closed in November 1971. According to the debtors, the said firm was dissolved and did not exist since then. The debtors also mentioned about the proceedings adopted by them for extension of time to comply with the insolvency notice in question. On 22nd August, 1975, the Governor of Maharashtra promulgated the Maharashtra Debt Relief Ordinance, 1975, being Ordinance No. VII of 1975. Having regard to the provisions of the said Ordinance, the debtors filed a further affidavit affirmed on 8th October, 1975, inter alia, claiming protection under the provisions of the said Ordinance. In the said affidavit, the debtors claimed that this Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings. The said Ordinance was replaced by the Maharashtra Debt Relief Act, 1976, which was brought in force on 3rd January, 1976. Consequent thereupon the debtors further filed an affidavit affirmed on 11th March, 1976, inter alia claiming protection under the Act and benefits conferred upon the workers and other debtors as provided thereunder.

5. The defences of the debtors, as disclosed by the three affidavits referred to above, relate to: (a) the defences based upon the provisions of the Act, (b) the defences arising out of the plea that the said firm of M/s. Cosmic Corporation was closed in 1971, and did not exist thereafter and (c) the plea that the debtors had made an application for extension of time for compliance with the insolvency notices upon which the petition is founded. The only defence that needs to be dealt with here is the defence relating to the provisions of the Act.

6. The facts relied upon, in support of the claims of the debtors based on the provisions of the Act, are to the effect that the first debtor viz., Pramod M. Jhaveri is a broker and does not earn more than Rs. 400/- per month. The assets disclosed by the 1st debtor, by his affidavit affirmed on 27th March 1975, indicate that he has no immoveable properties worth any name. The 2nd judgment-debtor viz., Smt. Jyotsna Pramod Jhaveri, claims that she does not do any business and is merely a house-wife. She admits being a partner in the said firm M/s. Cosmic Corporation. She claims that she does not own any immovable properties. From the affidavit of assets and liabilities dated 27th March, 1975, however, it may be observed that tenancy rights in respect of a residential 'single' room at Bhartiya Bhavan (formerly servants quarter) at Marine Drive, is shown as part of the assets of the debtors. The said affidavit further shows that the tenancy rights in respect of the said premises stand in the name of the brother of the 2nd debtor. Some arguments were advanced in respect of this aspect of the matter but as it will be seen presently, it would be apposite, for determination of preliminary questions to assume without deciding that the debtors are workers within the meaning of the said Act and are covered by the provisions of the said Act.

7. Normally, a court decides the question of jurisdiction upon the basis of the averments made by the person who invokes its jurisdiction, whether he be a plaintiff or a petitioner. This however, does not mean that it is wholly impermissible for a court to refer to a written statement or a reply in order to determine whether it has jurisdiction to deal with claims or questions raised before it. In my opinion, there may be situations where it may be necessary or desirable for a Court to look into the defences in order to determine its jurisdiction. Such, for example, would be the case where a defence is based on a mandate of law which clearly bars the jurisdiction of the Court in respect of the subject matter of adjudication before it. Under the American legal system, it is one of the demurrable situations. Under the American systems, a plea of demurrer is said to be 'an answer in law' (see New Jersey v. New York, (1831-34) 8 L. Ed. 414 at p. 415). In English law the pleas on demurrer in the High Court are regulated by the provisions of Rules of the Supreme Court. Even earlier thereto, legal pleas were allowed to be raised on demurrer. In fact, the concept of demurrer connoted as follows:—

"Demurrer is when any action is brought and the defendant pleadeth a plea to which plaintiffe answereth that he will not answer for that it is not sufficient plea in law, and the defendant saith to the contrary that it is a sufficient plea and thereupon both parties doe submit the cause to the judgement of the court — then it is called a demurrer, for that they goe not forward in pleading, but abide upon the judgement of that point and is said, in the Latine used in the record, Moratur in lege"

Even under the modern English practice in certain situations certain points are permitted to be raised on pleadings for decisions as preliminary issues. In Everett v. Ribbands, (1952) 2 QB 198, Romer, L. J., said at page 206:—

"Where there is a point of law if decided in one way, is going to be a decisive of litigation, advantage ought to be taken of the facilities afforded by the Rules of Court to have disposed of at the close of the pleadings or very shortly afterwards". (emphasis supplied).

8. Provisions of Order 14 also warrant pleas of legal character being dealt with as preliminary issues. I am persuaded to decide these pleas, more particularly because of an emphatic argument made on behalf of the debtors. It is urged that having regard to the injunction of Section 4 of the Act, this court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Emphasising the word "entertain", say, the counsel for debtors that the moment a defence is raised that the debtor is entitled to the protection of the provisions of the Act, even a question whether such a defence is bona fide or not will have to be determined by the forum constituted under the Act, viz., the authorised officer. It is not necessary for me to determine this subtle question of legal semantics. But such a contention is sufficiently compelling to call for determination of preliminary questions. I, therefore, proceed on the assumption that it is permissible for this Court to look into the nature of the defences raised. I also proceed on the assumption, without deciding, that the debtors are workers or debtors within the meaning of the said Act. These assumptions have been made to deal with the demurrable pleas raised by the debtors. This course is largely dictated by the consideration that in some of matters which are before me to-day, it is indisputable that the debtors therein are workers or debtors factually covered and protected by the provisions of the Act.

9. The Maharashtra Debt Relief Ordinance 1975, was promulgated on 22nd August, 1975. It was conceived as a welfare measure seeking "to provide for relief from indebtedness to certain farmers, rural artisans, rural labourers and workers". The appointed day designated by the said Ordinance was the day on which it came into force viz., 22nd August, 1975. Section 2 (e) of the said Ordinance defined "debt", Section 2 (f) defined "debtor"; Section 2 (o) defined "worker". Section 3 enumerated the consequences flowing from the commencement of the said Ordinance. It provided non obstante clause for discharge of every debt outstanding on the appointed day. It also enumerated further consequences viz., non-recoverability of such debt; non-entertainment of suits and proceedings relating thereto and abatement thereof. The section also provided for release and return of the property pledged or mortgaged by the debtor covered by the said Ordinance. It contemplated the instrumentality of the police authorities or other authorities, to assist the debtor in the matter of securing delivery of the possession of the pledged or mortgaged property.

10. Section 2 (2) of the said Ordinance is very material for the purpose of the present controversy. The said section reads as follows:—

"If a question arises whether a person is a marginal or small farmer, or a rural labourer, or rural artisan, or a worker, the question shall be referred to an officer not below the rank of a Tahsildar duly appointed by the State Government in that behalf, and the decision of such officer on the question shall be final and conclusive and shall not be called in any civil court;

Provided that no such question shall be decided unless an opportunity has been given to such person to be heard."

11. The Act which replaced the Ordinance, by Section 3 thereof, revives all debts covered by the said Ordinance. It further provides that "the provisions of the said Ordinance as amended by this Act as herein provided shall operate in relation to all such revived debts, as if those provisions were always amended and in operation on the appointed day." The Act comprises of six Chapters and 23 sections. The Act makes several departures from the provisions of the Ordinance.

12. Section 2 (e) of the Act defines debt. It provides;

" "Debt" means any liability, in cash or kind, outstanding on the appointed day, being a liability arising out of a loan (with interest if the loan is taken by a worker and with or without interest, in any other case), whether secured or unsecured, due from a debtor whether payable under a decree or order of any court or otherwise."

13. The expression, "arising out of a loan" being the qualifying expression for the liability is an innovation not to be found in the corresponding provision of the Ordinance. Section 2 (f) which defines "debtor" also makes a departure and alters the parameter. It provides for a total annual income of a worker as not exceeding Rs. 6,000/-, if living in an urban area and not exceeding Rs. 4,800/-, if living elsewhere. The corresponding provisions in the Ordinance provided for the limit of Rs. 2,400/- per annum. Section 2 (o) of the Act defining "worker", retains the formulae thereof to be found in the Ordinance, save and except that the said Section 2 (o) deletes qualifications as to income mentioned in the corresponding provisions of the said Ordinance.

14. The Act omits Section 2 (2) of the Ordinance which provided for reference to the officer contemplated thereunder and thereby contemplated exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil court in respect thereof. The Act however, makes provisions in Sections 11 and 12 thereof in respect of the bar of jurisdiction of the civil court or in respect of references to be made in regard to the issues which are required to be settled or decided or dealt with by the authorised officer constituted under the Act. Departing from the wide phraseology of Section 2 (2) of the Ordinance viz., "whether a person is a marginal or a small farmer or a rural labourer, or rural artisan, or a worker, the question shall be referred to an officer", Section 11 (1) of the Act merely provides: "no civil court shall have jurisdiction to settle, decide or deal with any question which is by or under this chapter required to be settled, decided or dealt with by the Authorised Officer". Sub-section (2) of Section 11, further provides that "no order of the State Government or of any officer or authority made under this Chapter shall be questioned in any court". The said Chapter is Chapter III which provides for "Liquidation of certain debts". Section 12 provides for reference. It ordains in sub-section (1) thereof, "if a suit instituted in any Civil Court, involves any issues which are required to be settled, decided, or dealt with, by the Authorised Officer under this Act, the civil court shall stay the suit and refer such issues to the Authorised Officer for determination". Sub-section (2) of Section 12 provides for the procedure on reference.

15. Section 7 of the Act provides for procedure where a creditor disputes a debtor's claim. It contemplates adjudication of such questions and disputes by the Authorised Officer, Section 7 (1) provides that in case a creditor raises "a question that the person who claims to be his debtor is not a marginal farmer, a rural artisan, a rural labourer or, as the case may be, a worker, or disputes the eligibility of the debtor for relief under this Act on any other ground including the valuation of the immoveable property, if any, of a worker, then the creditor "shall make an application in writing" to the Authorised Officer. Sub-sec. (2) provides for such an application, and inter alia requires such an application be made within 7 days from the happening of two alternative contingencies mentioned therein. Sub-sec. (3) of S. 7 provides that application of the creditor shall not be entertained by the authorised officer unless the creditor deposits the pledged property or documents relating to pledge or both or the value of such property if the property is not available. Sub-secs. (4), (5), (6) and (7) of Section 7 prescribe procedure and confer powers on the Authorised Officer. Sub-sec. (8) of Section 7 inter alia provides that the decision of the authorised officer shall be final and conclusive and shall not be called in question in any civil court.

16. The learned counsel for the debtors submit that upon a true construction of the provisions of Sections 4, 7, 11 and 12, the claim of the debtors for protection under the provisions of the Act is beyond the pale of the jurisdiction of this Court. The learned counsel submits that a question or claim which relates to the status of the debtor as a worker or the qualification of the debt in question for immunity under the Act, is a question or a claim which by the express provision of the Act or by necessary implications flowing therefrom, has to be determined by the Authorised Officer. According to the learned counsel, provisions of Section 4, more particularly (b) and (c) thereof read with Sections 11 and 12 remove determination of all claims and questions arising under the Act from the province of the Civil Courts and transport them to the Authorised Officer for his exclusive adjudication.

17. Against the arguments of the learned counsel for the debtors, the contention raised on behalf of the creditors is that the Act does not apply to insolvency proceedings because insolvency proceedings are not intended to enforce a debt. It is submitted that Insolvency Court has exclusive jurisdiction to try all claims arising in an insolvency proceeding. Say the learned counsel that under the Act there is no express bar to this Court entertaining disputes as to whether a debtor is a worker within the meaning of the said Act or as to whether the debt on which the insolvency proceedings are founded qualifies for the benefits of the Act. The learned counsel submit that there is no exclusion of the jurisdiction of this Court even by the necessary implication, regard being had to the relevant provisions of the Act or the scheme unfolded thereby.

18. The conflict between the two view points canvassed before me, will have to be resolved with reference to the provisions of the Act, as also the relevant provisions of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (hereinafter referred to as the "Insolvency Act"). It will have to be determined as to whether (i) the provisions of the Act or immunities conferred thereby or the embargoes postulated thereunder cover the insolvency proceedings and if so, (ii) which is the forum for adjudging questions or the claims pertaining thereto.

19. The jurisdiction of this Court to administer insolvency law is rooted in its charter. Clause 18 of the Letters Patent confers upon it powers and authorities, "with respect to original and appellate jurisdiction and otherwise as are constituted by the laws relating to insolvent debtors in India". Sections 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the Insolvency Act provide for constitution and the powers of the insolvency Courts. Section 7 is a very material section. It inter alia confers upon the insolvency Court "full power to decide all questions of priorities and all other questions whatsoever, whether of law or fact which may arise in any case of insolvency coming within the cognizance of the Court or which the Court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such cases."

20. The genesis, nature and content of the insolvency proceedings have been succinctly expounded in Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn. Vol. 2 at page 250, paragraph 463. The learned Author writes:

"Bankruptcy is a proceeding by which the State takes possession of the property of a debtor by an officer appointed for the purpose, and such property is realised and, subject to certain priorities, distributed rateably amongst the persons to whom the debtor owes money or has incurred pecuniary liabilities."

21. Undoubtedly, as also enunciated by Henley in Bankrupt Law (3rd Edn. page 1), one of the chief aims of the law of Bankruptcy is, "the distribution of the effects of the debtor in the most expeditious, the most equal and the most economical mode". These objects of the law of Insolvency have been given statutory effect and are sought to be subserved, by the provisions of the Insolvency Act; more particularly by Section 17, Sections 33 to 37 and Sections 46 to 76 thereof. The provisions of the Insolvency Act and the Letters Patent of this Court leave no manner of doubt that the proceedings under the provisions of the Insolvency Act before this Court are the proceedings of civil nature and pertain to the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of this Court. This aspect of the matter is concluded by the judgment of the Privy Council in In the matter of Candass Narrondas; Navivahas v. C. A. Turner, Official Assignee, reported in (1889) ILR 13 Bom 520 (PC).

22. An insolvency petition filed by the creditor for an order of adjudication under Section 13 (2) of the Insolvency Act, requires proof of (a) the debt of the petitioning creditor and (b) and the act of insolvency. It is settled law that the debt must exist before the act of insolvency is committed by the debtor. A catena of cases both in England and India have established the legal principles that such a debt must exist at the time of the presentation of the petition; and that it must continue to exist at the hearing thereof as also at the time of making of the order of adjudication (see M/s. Bhimji Nanji and Co., (1969) 71 Bom LR 638; also Ex Parte Hammond, (1873) LR 16 Eq. 614; Re Stables (1894) 1 Mans. 68; Re A Debtor v. Scott, (1954) 3 All ER 74; Ahmed Mahmomed v. Praphulla Nath Tagore, ILR (1938) 1 Cal 13 = (AIR 1939 Cal 35)).

23. In the light of the foregoing discussion as to the nature of the insolvency proceedings and the requirements of a creditor's petition to sustain an order of adjudication, it may now be seen as to whether these proceedings or the claims arising therein come within the provisions of the Act. Section 2 (e) of the Act defines debt. It takes in 'a liability arising out of a loan'. The said definition embraces all loans whether they are secured or unsecured or whether they were payable under a decree or an order of any court or otherwise. Thus, a debt on which a creditor's petition is founded will fall within the concept of liability contemplated by Section 2. (e) of the Act, provided however, such a liability arises out of a transaction of loan. Consequently, all petitions or acts of insolvency referable to liabilities arising out of loan transactions come within the purview of the definition of debt in Section 2 (e) of the Act, provided debt relates to a person who is covered by the 2 (o) of the said Act. In other words, a combined provisions of Sections 2 (f) and person who earns his livelihood through any profession, calling or trade including a Badli worker, will be entitled to the benefits of the Act provided his total income 'from all sources did not exceed, if living in an urban area six thousand rupees during the year immediately before 1st August, 1975, and if living elsewhere, four thousand and eight hundred rupees during that year'.

24. Section 4 is the key section of the Act. It ordains that every debt of a worker whose immoveable property if any, does not exceed Rs. 20,000/- in market value and every debt of any other debtor outstanding on the appointed day, shall be deemed to be wholly discharged. Section 4 is a non obstante provision. It also provides for a legal fiction. A non obstante clause and a legal fiction created by a law, must be given full effect. Consequently, it must be held that the debt including the debt which is foundation of an insolvency proceeding, if it answers the description thereof under the provisions of the Act must be held to be wholly discharged. The expression "wholly discharged" must mean discharged for all intents and purposes including for the purposes of furnishing a cause of action for an insolvency proceeding or an order therein.

25. Provisions of clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Section 4 also reinforce the aforesaid position. The said clause (a) is in three parts. It interdicts (i) recovery of the debt from a debtor; (ii) recovery of debt from or against any moveable or immovable property belonging to a debtor and (iii) proceeding against such properties by way of attachment or sale in any manner in execution of a decree or order relating to such debt. The second interdict aforesaid viz., against the recovery of a debt by realisation, from and out of moveable or immovable properties would cover insolvency proceedings. By its very definition and content an insolvency proceeding is an equitable mode of enforcement of debt and liabilities or recovery of such debts or discharge of liabilities by realisation of the assets of the insolvent and by distribution thereof amongst the body of creditor.

26. The expression "civil court" mentioned in clause (b) of Section 4 must be held to take in the insolvency court deriving its powers and authorities from the Letters Patent of this Court and the provisions of the Insolvency Act. The expression "proceeding" contained in the said clause has a wide denotation. The word proceeding is a web of several conceptual strands. It is a word of multiple import. It has a wide spectrum of variable shades of meanings. It is capable of a narrow as also a wide connotation. The interpretation of such an expression, therefore, largely depends upon the nature of the statute in question, the collocation of words in which it is found and the objectives the Act is designated to subserve. The expression must, of necessity, take its colour from intendments of the Act or the remedies provided thereby or the mischief sought to be remedied by it. The Act is conceived as a social welfare legislation to provide relief from indebtedness. Insolvency being one of the modes in which the indebtedness of a debtor can be enforced through the instrumentality of an insolvency court, any legislative provision for relief therefrom must be held to include a relief from the claims in insolvency proceedings in respect of indebtedness of a person covered by the Act. The plain intendment of the Act is to remedy the mischief arising out of loan transactions. This cannot be fully eradicated if the coverage of the Act is denied to a vital and a sensitive area where debtors are subjected to the extraordinary remedies of the 'Civil death' or compulsory vesting of their properties in an officer of the State entrusted with the obligation of distributing the realisations thereof amongst his creditors.

27. Moreover, the expression "proceeding" immediately follows the word "suit". It must take its colour from the said expression. Even otherwise the word "proceeding" includes "a prescribed course of action for enforcing a legal right", (see 'Words and Phrases' at p. 83 C. F. Prem's Judicial Dictionary, (1964) Vol. III at page 1310). An insolvency proceeding is for the enforcement of a right of a creditor. It partakes all the trappings of a judicial procedure which characterises the trial of suits or civil actions. I am therefore of opinion that the provisions of clause (b) of Section 4 also apply to the insolvency proceedings. Clause (c) in using the expression "suits and proceedings" keeps company with clause (b). It also has to be read Noscitur a Sociis. Therefore, clause (c) also must be held to apply to insolvency proceedings based on a debt covered by the Act.

28. The conspectus of Section 2 (e), (f) and (o) and Section 4 as also the principles enshrined therein, when seen in the setting of the intendments, scheme and the purposes of the Act must lead to an inference that a debt payable by a worker whose income during the period of one year immediately before the 1st August, 1975, did not exceed Rs. 6,000/- if he lived in an urban area as defined by the said Act or did not exceed Rs. 4,800/- if he lived elsewhere, must come within the reach of the said Act. This debt includes all liabilities of such a debtor arising out of a transaction of a loan. The impact of S. 4 on such a debt is its total annihilation. The categorical imperative of Section 4 is that all debts falling within the coverage of the Act and of a person answering the description contained therein if outstanding on the appointed day, that is to say, 22nd August, 1975, must be treated as wholly discharged. In so far as the existence of a debt is sine qua non for an insolvency proceeding more particularly a creditor's petition based on non-compliance with the insolvency notice or in so far as such a debt sustains an insolvency notice or an act of insolvency arising from non-compliance thereof, it must be held that all debts which come within the mischief of the provisions of Section 4 would become non est and would be incapable of sustaining any such proceedings in insolvency, as are of necessity, referable to such debts. I therefore reject the contention of the learned counsel for the creditors that an insolvency proceedings or the claims arising in insolvency proceedings are outside the radiational periphery of the provisions of the Act. I hold that the Act is applicable to insolvency proceedings also.

29. The application of the provisions of the Act to the insolvency proceedings based on a creditor's claim to a debt immunised by the Act having been held, the only question which remains to be considered is whether a claim by a debtor that he is a worker or a debtor within the meaning of the Act or that he is otherwise entitled to benefits or the protection of the Act can be decided by the Insolvency Court. As is stated above, an Insolvency court, in any case, this Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction is a civil court. It is a court of record constituted by its Letters Patent. It therefore, is a superior court. The canon of construction applicable to the cases where questions arise as to the exclusion of the superior courts is that such an exclusion is not to be inferred unless and until there are express words in the statute or that such an exclusion can be inferred by necessary implication. In Board of Governors of the London Hospital v. Jacobs, reported in (1956) 2 All ER 603, a question arose as to whether a certificate issued under the provisions of Housing Repairs and Rents Act, 1954, was binding on the court and excluded the jurisdiction of the court to review it. It was argued on behalf of the landlords that issuance of the certificate from the local authority and a declaration made under the said Act which satisfied the provisions thereof, were binding and 'the powers of the court were wholly ousted in regard to any challenge by the tenant to a declaration of fulfilment by the landlord'. In repelling the said contention Lord Evershed, M. R., observed at page 607 of the report as follows:

"the point submitted on behalf of the landlords seems to me of so far-reaching a character that I find it unnecessary to express at any length the grounds for the view that I take, grounds which rest on principles of very longstanding namely, that very clear words will be required to oust altogether the jurisdiction of the Queen's courts in matters of private rights."

30. The principle of longstanding referred to by the learned Judge above, is a principle which was articulated emphatically as far back as 1842, by Tindal, C. J., in Albon v. Pyke, reported in (1842) 4 M. & C. 421. At page 424, the learned Chief Justice expounded that:

"The general rule undoubtedly is that the jurisdiction of superior Courts is not taken away except by express words or necessary implication."

31. In India the statutory recognition of the principle is to be found in Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The said section provides that the civil courts have jurisdiction to try all the suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is expressly or impliedly barred. The section makes no distinction between a superior or an inferior court. It puts all civil courts at par. In Dhulabhai v. State of Madhya Pradesh, reported in AIR 1969 SC 78, the Supreme Court was called upon to consider the question of exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil courts. At page 81, the Supreme Court enunciated the principle in the following words:—

"At the very start we may observe that the jurisdiction of the civil courts is all embracing except to the extent it is excluded by an express provision of law or by clear intendment arising from such law. This is the purport of Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. How Section 9 operates is perhaps best illustrated by referring to the categories of cases, mentioned by Willes, J., in Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co. v. Hawkesford, (1859) 6 CB (NS) 336. They are:

"one is where there was a liability existing at common law, and that liability is affirmed by a statute which gives a special and peculiar form of remedy different from the remedy which existed at common law; there, unless the statute contains words which expressly or by necessary implication exclude the common law remedy the party suing has his election to pursue either that or the statutory remedy. The second class of case is, where the statute gives the right to sue merely, but provides no particular form of remedy there, the party can only proceed by action at common law. But there is a third class, viz., where a liability not existing at common law is created by a statute which at the same time gives a special and particular remedy for enforcing it. The remedy provided by the statute must be followed and it is not competent to the party to pursue the course applicable to cases of the second class".

32. In my opinion, the principle of construction which upon the dicta of Willes, J., is applicable to 'right to sue' cases mentioned above, also applies to 'right to defences or immunities' cases because right to defences or immunities is a jural correlative of right to sue'. Thus in cases where statutory defences or immunities are given but no particular form of remedy for adjudication of such defences or enforcement of such immunities are given parties claiming immunities have to proceed by an action at the common law. In other words, such defences and immunities or corresponding obligations arising therefrom have to be agitated before a Court of competent jurisdiction in an action filed in that behalf.

33. As observed above, the Ordinance by Section 2 (2) thereof expressly excluded the jurisdiction of the courts by providing in terms, "if a question arises whether a person is a marginal or small farmer, or a rural labourer, or rural artisan, or a woker, the question shall be referred to an officer not below the rank of a Tahsildar duly appointed by the State Government in that behalf, and the decision of such officer on the question shall be final and conclusive and shall not be called in question in any civil court". This was the legislative barricade raised by the said section against the courts deciding a question as to the status of a debtor as a worker or as a person belonging to the other categories benefitted by the said Act. This provision is however, been omitted in the Act. In my opinion, the omission by the legislature is intentional and deliberate. This is further buttressed by the fact that in Sections 11 and 12, phraseology used by the Legislature is different. It is an established law that a change of language in an amending or repealing Act postulates a change of law. (See S. V. Natesa Mudliar v. Sri Dhanpal Bus Service Pvt. Ltd., AIR 1964 Mad 136 (FB) at page 142).

34. The contention raised on behalf of the debtors that all the claims of a debtor arising under the Act are the matters which have to be 'settled, decided or dealt with by the authorised officer' is not wholly correct. It is only partially true. In other words only claims which relate to release and delivery of possession of security fall within the scope of authorised officer's authority. In this connection it would be necessary to turn to the provisions of Sections 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Act.

35. Section 4 can be divided in three parts. The first part comprises of the opening clause. The second part comprises of clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) thereof. The third part comprises of clause (e). The first part of Section 4 deals with the debts. It provides for discharge of all debt whether secured or unsecured. Consequences of such discharge debts as debts simpliciter are dealt with in second part viz., clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d), whereas third part deals with the properties pledged or mortgaged by the debtor their release and return to the debtors.

36. Clause (e) of Section 4 provides that such properties as are pledged and mortgaged by a debtor must be returned to the debtor forthwith on the debtor making an application in writing in that behalf. It enjoins upon the creditor to pass a receipt to the debtor of having received an application. In cases, where the creditor refuses to pass a receipt the debtor is given liberty to have his application endorsed to the said effect by an officer referred to in Section 6 of the Act. Under Section 6, in the event of the creditor failing to return the property pledged or mortgaged by a debtor, the Police Commissioner or the District Magistrate or the other authorities mentioned therein are obligated to take or caused to be taken such steps or use or caused to be used such force as might be reasonably necessary for securing delivery of possession of the properties pledged or mortgaged by the debtor.

37. Counsel for the debtors emphasises the opening words in sub-sec. (1) of Section 7. The opening words are to the effect that "if, in the course of implementing the provisions of Section 4" a dispute arises as to the eligibility of the debtor for relief under the Act, "on any other ground including the valuation of the immoveable property if any" then the creditor has to make an application in writing to the authorised officer. It is true that the opening words of sub-sec. (1) of S. 7 mention the provisions of Section 4 as a whole and do not refer to any specific clause thereof. But in my opinion reading Section 7 as a whole, the reference to Section 4 in opening part of sub-sec. (1) of Section 7 must be said to be a reference only to clause (e) of the said Section 4. The governing concept in sub-section (1) of Section 7 is, implementation of the provisions of Section 4. The implementation to which the said sub-section (1) refers is the implementation in regard to return of the pledged or the mortgaged properties belonging to the debtor and which implementation has to be done through the instrumentalities of the authorities mentioned in Section 6. It cannot be said that when the courts give effect to the consequences enumerated in clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 4, the courts can be said to be the instrumentalities charged with the task of implementing the provisions of the said Section 4. The courts do not implement the provisions of law. The courts merely enforce the rights and liabilities recognised by law. Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edn. Vol. 2, paragraph 502 at page 255 suggests the principle succinctly:

"A judicial process is concerned with the ascertainment, declaration and enforcement of rights and liabilities as they exist, in accordance with some recognised system of law."

38. The aforesaid exposition of law by Halsbury is based on the dicta of the Australian High Court (Issacs and Rich, JJ.) in Waterside Workers Federation v. J. W. Alexander Ltd. (1918) 25 CLR 434 at 463. The said dicta received imprimatur of the Privy Council in Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Australia v. Raginam and the Boilermakers' Society of Australia reported in (1957) 2 All ER 45. In Raginam's case (supra) the Privy Council was concerned with the doctrine of separation of powers enshrined in the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia in the context of the competence of Federal Parliament. In our country also, the same jurisprudential approach is postulated by the Constitution. It is therefore, said that legislation can remove the basis of a decision rendered by a competent court but it cannot set at naught Judicial orders directly (see Ahmedabad Corporation v. New Shrook Weaving & Spinning Co., AIR 1970 SC 1292). Thus all that clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 4 do is to provide legal basis for court's decision. In other words, when the courts take cognizance of the injunctions contained in the provisions of clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of S. 4, the courts merely enforce the rights which accrue to the debtors therein or recognise immunities granted to the debtors concerned, or effectuate legal disabilities of the creditors in that behalf. The courts merely work out rights, liabilities and obligations created by the said provisions. Any other construction of the said provisions will be at variance with the basic tenets of Indian Constitutional polity and will expose the said provisions to the vice of unconstitutionality. Such an interpretation has to be eschewed. I take the view that in taking cognizance of the provisions of Section 4, Courts cannot be said to be implementing the said provisions.

39. There is a further reason to hold that the provisions of sub-section (1) of Section 7 refer to contingencies arising under clause (e) of Section 4. Sub-section (1) of Section 4 provides for an application to an authorised officer by a creditor. Thus "an application" in sub-sec. (1) becomes "the application" in sub-sec. (2) of Section 7. Sub-section (2) provides that such an application should state the "facts of the case in brief and the point raised for the decision of the authorised officer". More importantly, it also provides that such an application should be made "within 7 days from the date of receipt of the application by the creditor, under clause (2) of Section 4 or from the date of the endorsement made on the application under the clause. This period of 7 days mentioned in sub-section (2) shows that the application by the creditor can have no reference to the situations contemplated by clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 4. It cannot be said that sub-section (2) of Section 7 provides for two different situations: its earlier part viz., statement of facts of point to be raised "deals with all applications whether relating to clauses (a) to (d) clause (e) of Section 4, and the latter part deals only with particular situations mentioned in clause (e) of Section 4. This will be a wrong reading of sub-section (2) of Section 7. Sub-section (2) has to be read as a whole. It cannot be contemplated that the said sub-section in its two parts deals with two different situations differently. This would make the provisions of the said sub-section (2) ambiguous.

40. Sub-section (3) of Section 7 also underpins the fact that sub-section (1) of Section 7 merely deals with situations covered by clause (e) of Section 4. Sub-section (3) categorically provides that "no application under this section shall be entertained by the authorised officer unless the creditor either deposits the pledged property or any document evidencing such pledge or both or the value of such property if the property for any reason is not available with the creditor" (emphasis supplied). It would be absurd to suggest that application relating to clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 4 would be subject to the conditions precedent of deposit of pledged property or documents of pledge, particularly when in cases covered by the said clauses the debts may be wholly unsecured and there may not be any pledged property involved in connection therewith. Sub-sec. (3) therefore, upon its plain and unambiguous language must of necessity be held to refer only to all cases arising under clause (e) of Section 4. Thus, when sub-section (3) of Section 7 refers to an application under this Section it must be deemed as referring to all applications under Section 7 and all these applications must of necessity be the applications referable to clause (e) of Section 4 of the Act. Any other interpretation would render the expressions "no application under this section" occurring in sub-sec. (3) of Section 7 and the expression "shall be made within 7 days from the date of the receipt of the application by the creditor under clause (e) of Section 4 or from the date of the endorsement made on the application under that clause" occurring in sub-section (2) of Section 7 otiose or redundant or meaningless in so far as such an interpretation brings within the ambit of Section 7 (1) applications referable to clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 4. I am therefore of opinion, that applications contemplated by sub-section (1) of Section 7 deal with the situations covered by clause (e) of Section 4.

41. By an express intendment of sub-section (6), the jurisdiction of the authorised officer is confined to such questions as are raised by the creditor in his application. The said sub-section enumerates powers of the authorised officer. The ambit of the powers mentioned therein, however, is governed by the perimeter of the disputes "raised by the creditor in his application".

42. From the above analysis of Sec. 7 the view that emerges is that the only cases where a creditor refused to release the pledged or mortgaged property to the debtor and disputes the claim of the debtor in that behalf that the creditor has to make an application to the authorised officer. Such an application has to be made within 7 days from the receipt of the application by the creditor under clause (e) of Section 4 or from the date of the endorsement mentioned therein. As a condition precedent for entertainment of such an application the creditor has to deposit the pledged or mortgaged property or documents of the pledge or mortgage or both or the value of such property if the property is not available with the creditor. In such an application the creditor is entitled, as contemplated by sub-section (1) of Section 7, to dispute that the person concerned is not a worker or can dispute the eligibility of the debtor for relief under the Act on any other grounds including the value of immovable property if any. These are the only questions which a creditor can raise. The jurisdiction of the authorised officer is to determine all questions in relation to or connected with the questions or disputes which can be raised by the creditors in their applications. Having regard to the words of limitations found in sub-s. (6) of Sec. 7 viz., "all questions in relation to or connected with, the questions or disputes raised by the creditor in his application", it must be held that the authorised officer has no jurisdiction to decide questions or disputes which are not capable of being raised by the creditor in his application to the authorised officer. The authorised officer is not required by the Act to go into questions or claims pertaining to debts simpliciter.

43. Reliance was placed on behalf of the debtors on a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Appeal No. 144 of 1975, from Insolvency Petition No. 10 of 1975 (unreported: Kantawala, C. J. and Naik, J. dated 8th October, 1975) (Bom). The said judgment was followed by Madan, J., in Insolvency Petition Nos. 115, 126 and 225 of 1975 (Bom) (unreported: dated 8th October, 1975). The ratio of the said decision, however, is not helpful inasmuch as the said decision rested on the mandate of Section 2 (2) of the Ordinance. The said provision has been omitted in the Act. The scheme of the Act is also different from that of the Ordinance. As already seen above the Act makes departures from the provisions of the Ordinance in regard to several material aspects.

44. In my opinion, an authorised officer is entitled to settle, decide or deal with, questions which can be raised by a creditor in his application under Section 7, that is to say, claims arising in connection with release and delivery of possession of 'property pledged or mortgaged by' a debtor. That being so, civil courts have jurisdiction to adjudicate upon and adjudge all claims, questions and disputes other than those which are raised by the creditor in his application under Section 7. As held above, the applications contemplated by Section 7 of the Act do not take within their sweep claims, questions and disputes pertaining to clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 4 in so far as the said disputes relate to unsecured debts or merely to debt aspect of secured debts as contradistinguished from security aspect thereof. In my opinion, the mischief of Sections 11, and 12 does not extend to the cases of unsecured debts or debt-aspects of secured debts, which matters being within the purview of clauses (a) (b), (c) and (d) thereof, have to be dealt by the civil courts concerned.

45. In the result, I hold that this court has jurisdiction in cases of unsecured debts or mere debt-aspects of secured debts to decide as to whether the debtor concerned is a worker or is a debtor within the meaning of the Act or is otherwise entitled to the benefit or the protection of the provisions of the Act. Accordingly, the preliminary objections raised on behalf of the debtors as to the jurisdiction of this Court are rejected.

46. The petition shall proceed for determination of the other issues arising therein.

Order accordingly.

VAIDYA AND MRIDUL, JJ.

M/s. Marine and General Insurance Co. Ltd. and others, Appellants v. Balkrishna Ramchandra Nayan, Respondent.

F. A. F. O. D. No. 449 of 1975, D/- 23-3-1976.*

(A) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Sections 95, 96, 97, 101, 102, 109, 110, 110-F — Liability in respect of death or injury caused by or arising out of the "use" of the vehicle in a public place — Basis of such liability arises from statutory provisions of the Act — Principles of law of torts are relevant in quantification of damages. AIR 1971 Madh Pra 5 (FB) and 1974 Acc CJ 182 (Mad) and AIR 1962 Punj 540, Dissented from.

Per Vaidya, J.:—

The moment a motor vehicle is used and injury is caused, a liability to pay compensation arises; and the Tribunal can adjudicate upon that liability and determine 'just' compensation. This can be on the general basis of ubi jus ibi remedium. (Para 50)

Public good requires that everyone injured, viz., by the use of a motor vehicle, must immediately get compensation for the injury. Every person has a right to safety and security of his person irrespective of fault or negligence or carelessness or efficient functioning of the motor vehicle. Every person has a right to claim compensation as that is the only way of remedying the injury caused to him in a modern urbanized, industrialised and automobile ridden life.

(Para 51)

In the absence of any words used by the legislature to underpin the liability as a liability with respect to negligence or any other specific tort or tort generally that liability must be held to be in respect of injuries done or caused as a result of the "use" of motor vehicle unless there is some reason recognised by law for exempting the user from that liability.

(Para 56)

Whether we apply the law of torts or not, the liability to pay 'just' compensation arises when the injuries are caused by the use of the motor vehicle. The Tribunal has power to determine what is 'just' compensation irrespective of whether the defendant was at fault or was negligent or careless or not. When a person is injured by use of a vehicle, that itself is an infringement of a right. That person must, therefore, have a remedy of recovering compensation from the person whose vehicle has caused injury. That is the scheme of the provisions contained in Sections 110 to 110-F of the Motor Vehicles Act. Principles of law of negligence are relevant for determining the quantum of damages and the person liable to pay it like any other principle to be followed in the administration of justice.

(Para 58)

Merely because the word 'liability' is used in Sec. 95 it cannot be said that the Tribunal's jurisdiction under Section 110F is limited to considering and applying the law of torts in a claim for compensation.

(Para 61)

Per Mridul, J.:—

Upon a true construction of the provisions of Chapter VIII the fact of an injury resulting from an accident involving the use of a car on public road is the basis of the liability. The tribunal has to award a 'just compensation' that is the compensation which appears to it 'just' in the facts and circumstances of the case. The cause of action is breach of statutory obligations imposed by the Act and the damage that has been caused to the injured. 'The quantification of damages' is not an essential part of the cause of action. The principles of law of Torts or the principles enshrined in the provisions of Fatal Accidents Act, as indeed all other relevant legal principles impinging on the facts of a given case, will enter the judicial mind in the matter of determination of the extent of compensation in cases arising out of accidents. This is a conclusion that follows from the interpretation of the provisions of the Act seen in its historical and humanistic perspective.

(Para 114)

The Act is not merely a consolidated Act, it also amends the law relating to motor vehicles. The Act makes detail provisions enumerating duties of a driver of a motor vehicle in Chapter VI. It makes elaborate provisions for an insurance coverage in Sections 94, 95. It makes departure in several respects from the law of Torts and other laws in Ss. 97, 99, 101, 102. It provides in Section 110-B for a cheap and expeditious remedy by tribunals constituted to hear motor accident claims. It must be held to be the policy of the Act that tribunals must award 'just compensation' for death or bodily injury or damages to property. This salutary jurisdiction and the content of its glorious power cannot be denuded by inhibiting factors obtaining in other fields of substantive law. There is no warrant for undermining the said provisions or policies enshrined therein.

(Paras 74, 113)

The incorporation of law of torts detracts from the plain and unambiguous language of Section 110-B or whittles down the sweep of Tribunal's power thereunder. It renders the expression "compensation which appears to it to be just", otiose. There is no reason why the Legislature could not have used the expression such compensation 'as is payable in law' if law of Torts or other substantive provisions were intended to apply to cases of compensation under the Act., AIR 1971 SC 1624 and AIR 1973 Mad 83, Relied on; AIR 1976 SC 237, Distinguished; AIR 1962 Punj 540 and AIR 1971 Madh Pra 5 (FB) and 1974 Acc CJ 182 (Mad), Dissented from.

(Para 95)

(B) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Section 110-B — Negligence — Lorry crossing the road dividers, going on wrong side and virtually mounting on car coming from opposite direction — Held principle of res ipsa loquitur was rightly applied by the Tribunal.

(Para 30)

(C) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Sec. 110-B — 'Compensation which appears to it to be just' — 'Just' compensation in the context of a professional man — How to be determined.

A professional man cannot be given a compensation at the rate of 'unearned' income, such as, interest on fixed Deposits in banks. His loss must be determined having regard to his skill, ability, popularity and harm caused to his efficient functioning. In cases before the Tribunal under Section 110-B, the Tribunal is required by law to determine an amount of compensation which appears to be "just". The word "just" in the case of a professional man cannot mean just interest on Fixed Deposit which may be alright for a temple or a dargah or even a public and charitable institution or an old infirm or invalid man or woman incapable of functioning in life and earning by working with brain or hand.

V. H. Gumaste, for Appellants; R. D. Hattangadi with N. D. Hombalkar, for Respondent.

VAIDYA, J.:— The above First Appeal is filed by the Insurer M/s. Marine and General Insurance Co., Ltd., Appellant No. 1, the insured owner of the motor lorry, bearing No. MRT 8615 Minu D. Mehta.— Partner, Cawasji Behramji and Co., Appellant No. 2 and the said partnership firm, Appellant No. 3, under Section 110-D of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, against the award passed against them in the sum of Rs. 1,43,400/- on an application for compensation made to the Tribunal by Respondent Dr. Balkrishna Ramchandra Nayan.

2. By the award a sum of Rupees 500/- was also awarded to Smt. Malati M. Deshmukh, nurse and a further sum of Rs. 1,000/- was awarded as costs to Dr. Nayan. It is not in dispute that the appeal filed by the Insurance Co. against the award passed in favour of Smt. Malati M. Deshmukh for Rs. 500/- and costs at Rs. 100/- has been dismissed summarily on August 14, 1975.

3. The award in favour of Dr. Nayan is challenged on two grounds by the appellants; Firstly, on the ground that the negligence on the part of the driver of the lorry was not established in the case by Dr. Nayan; and secondly on the ground that the quantum of damages was wrongly calculated as Rs. 1,400/- for nursing expenses, Rs. 300/- for medicines and other expenses, Rs. 73,779/-, as the loss sustained for 4 years since the year of the accident and Rs. 63,000/- as 50% of Rs. 1,26,000/-, which would be the expected loss, which the claimant had to suffer for the remainder of his life, calculated at 7 years.

4. It was further contended on behalf of the Insurance Co., — appellant No. 1 — that in any event having regard to the provisions of Section 95 (2) (a), the liability of the insurance company under the policy cannot exceed the limit of Rs. 20,000/-.

5. The relevant facts may be briefly stated as under: Dr. Nayan was driving motor car MRC 4450 (Fiat Car) from Worli towards Haji Ali by the correct side of the road. Smt. Malati Deshmukh, a nurse, was sitting by his side. At about 1.00 P.M., on April 14, 1969, as the vehicle was thus proceeding, the motor lorry, belonging to the Appellants Nos. 2 and 3, came from the opposite direction, in an uncontrollable speed, crossed over the central road dividers, went to the wrong side of the road and dashed against the car driven by the Respondent, at a place situated on Dr. Annie Beasant Road, Opposite Lotus Cinema.

6. As a result of this accident, the Respondent Dr. Nayan and nurse Malati Deshmukh both sustained injuries. They were removed to the Park Nursing Home, Bombay.

7. Dr. Nayan submitted that the driver of the said vehicle was rash and/or negligent while driving the same, inasmuch as:—

(i) the lorry came on the wrong side of the road crossing the road dividers,

(ii) the driver drove the said vehicle at a high, excessive and improper speed,

(iii) the driver drove the said vehicle without any control over the same,

(iv) the driver drove the said vehicle without keeping proper lookout.

(v) the driver failed and neglected to apply the brakes and/or failed to apply the brakes effectively and/or in sufficient time so as to prevent the accident,

(vi) the driver failed and neglected to manoeuvre the vehicle so as to avoid the accident,

(vii) the driver was having the last opportunity to avoid the accident, which he has not availed of.

8. Dr. Nayan further submitted in his application in the prescribed form under Section 110-A of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, that he was undergoing great and unbearable pain and suffering in consequence of the injuries sustained by him since the date of the accident. He was unable to perform the natural and routine functions of life independently since the date of the accident. His expectation of life was shortened. His earning capacity is likely to be substantially and adversely affected.

9. He is a surgeon having a nursing home and consulting rooms. Since the date of the accident he is not able to attend to the nursing home and consulting rooms. He has, therefore, lost income from his profession. He has to pay for the establishment charges of the nursing home. He has engaged the services of one Dr. (Miss) Vatsala S. Kalewar to look after the patients in the nursing home. He, therefore, claimed compensation of Rs. 3,00,000/- or such other sum as the Tribunal may deem fit and proper as and by way of general and special damages with interest thereon from the date of the application till payment.

10. The claim of Dr. Nayan was resisted by filing a written statement on behalf of Appellants Nos. 2 and 3. They contended that they had taken all precautions to keep the truck in road-worthy condition; but at the material time the "axle brake ring" of the motor lorry came out and hence the driver lost control of the lorry. According to the said appellants such defect in the car could develop in a running vehicle all of a sudden and the driver would, as a result, lose control on the steering wheel. They also contended that the lorry was going at a moderate speed prior to the accident. They denied that the accident occurred on account of rash and negligent driving on the part of the driver of the motor lorry.

11. They also denied that the expectation of life was shortened or the injury caused any loss in the income of Dr. Nayan and submitted that the application was false and frivolous and untenable in law and should be dismissed with costs.

12. In view of these contentions, no other contentions were raised on behalf of the Insurance Co.-Appellant No. 1, and the Tribunal framed four issues; and took evidence on those issues, of Dr. Nayan, Smt. Malati Deshmukh, Smt. Nalima Nagesh Arekar, who attended to Dr. Nayan, Dr. Arvind Vinayak Bavadekar, who attended to Dr. Nayan and who also proved the medical certificate of Dr. K. V. Chaubal, M. S. (Bom.) F. R. C. S. (Eng.) M. Ch. Orth. (L'pool), who were all examined on behalf of the claimant.

13. The report of Dr. K. V. Chaubal, was put in by consent of the parties. It reads as follows:—

"Dr. Balkrishna Ramchandra Nayan gave history of an accident in April 1969. He was treated by Dr. A. V. Bavadekar. His present complaints are as follows:—

1. Pain at the right wrist.

2. Pain, restriction of movements and locking of the right elbow joint.

3. Weak grip on the right side.

4. Inability to do operative work.

Examination of the cervical spine revealed terminal restriction of movements. His right shoulder has restriction of external and internal rotation. Other movements of the right shoulder are normal.

The right elbow is swollen. There is thickening of the synovial membrane which is easily felt. There is tenderness over the olecranon process and the head of the radius. The range of movements is between 60 degrees and 130 degrees. There is crepitus felt with all the movements. Pronation and supination are only restricted in the last few degrees. The right wrist has a full range of movements. There is minimum tenderness over the styloid process of the ulna. The grip of the right hand is weaker than the left. There is no sensory loss in the right arm or the right hand.

X-rays of the right elbow show good healing of the fractures and changes of osteoarthritis. The head of the radius is broad and thickened. There are no significant changes in the right shoulder and wrist joints.

The restriction of range of movements at the elbow is a direct result of the injuries sustained. This would be a permanent disability to the patient. I would assess this disability at thirty per cent.

The disability is not in any way due to improper treatment. In fact I would say this is an excellent surgical result.

It is unlikely that there would be any further deterioration in the joint function nor would there be any further improvement.

This restriction of movement of the elbow would no doubt affect Dr. Nayan's operative work. I feel, he would be able to perform routine operations not lasting over an hour or so. However, prolonged operations and those demanding finer skill would be difficult to perform. I am sure he would not be required to give up totally his operative work."

14. As against this evidence, the appellants examined the motor vehicle Inspector Chavan; Appellant No. 2 Minu Mehta; one K. S. Riani, the driver of the offending lorry on the date of the incident; Dinkar Shankar Jawkar, who was sitting at the relevant time in the lorry and who was an officer of the New Customs House; one Gangadharam Bhotia, partner of Veena Automobiles Service Station; and one Jimmy Dara Engineer, Surveyor, inspecting motor vehicles.

15. The learned Member of the Motor Accidents Claims Tribunal for Greater Bombay, very carefully and exhaustively considered the evidence led by the parties in the light of the various contentions raised before him. He came to the conclusion that the plea of mechanical breakdown put forward by Appellant No. 2 was false because the evidence led by the Appellants was not sufficient to show that there was any mechanical breakdown, firstly because, although in the written statement it was contended that "axle brake ring" came out, as already stated, the same was a cock and bull story, inasmuch as, the witness on behalf of the Appellants, Jimmy Engineer, had never heard of a part like "Axle brake ring."

16. A theory was put forward at the hearing that "drag link end", also known as "tie rod" had come out. The words "axle brake ring" appears to have figured in the written statement because of an entry in the police diary, which appears to have been made on the basis of a statement given by the driver. Even Appellant No. 2 Minu Mehta had to admit that he did not know any part of the lorry known as "axle brake ring". The Tribunal was, therefore, constrained to remark that it was really painful that a businessman like Minu Mehta who is a partner of Cawasji Behramji and Company had fallen to such an extent and given false evidence on oath.

17. The learned Member further disbelieved the theory of the coming out of the "drag link end", as the expert examined by the Appellants, viz., Engineer, who had inspected the lorry on April 22, 1969, at Veena Automobiles Service Station, stated in his cross-examination:

"..... I found that tie rod broken. According to me, 'tie rod' and 'drag link' end' would mean same. The drag link or the tie rod are first attached with a nut. And these parts are made of steel alloy. So that normally they should not break. There is also a quarter pin which acts as a lock. I do not remember having inspected the quarter pin or not. I do not remember if nut was there. If there is anything wrong with the drag link end the driver would be able to feel the difference and could stop the vehicle by the side of the road immediately."

18. To the Court's question he further stated:

"A small hair like crack may develop and result in the snapping of the tie rod or drag link in resulting the loss of control for which there is no prior signal to the driver. It will depend on the momentum of the vehicle, the load it carries and the weight of the vehicle and for the driver it would take four to five feet to bring the vehicle to a dead stop. It will cover 5 ft. or so after the driver puts his leg on the brakes, and it depends on the presence of the mind of the driver and it is for the driver to take split second decision."

It is thus clear that even the plea about the breaking of the "tie rod" was not proved satisfactorily by the Appellants.

19. The learned Member of the Tribunal, therefore, came to the conclusion, after careful consideration of the evidence of the driver, the Customs Officer and other evidence in the case, that there was no mechanical defect at all with the lorry; and the defect was in driving dangerously and negligently. He also held that the principle of res ipsa loquitur applied to the facts of the case because the lorry hit Dr. Nayan's car going on the right side; and this itself shows that the driver was negligent and rash, concluding his discussion as follows, in paragraph 36 of his judgment;

"Lastly assuming for the sake of arguments that there was breakdown and Drag Link End came out or whatever part Opposite Party feels came out and there was mechanical breakdown although evidence is entirely contrary to such assumption but taking it for the sake of arguments only then also the Customs Officer does not know driving nor he found that any part of the vehicle had come out and it was the driver who felt that 'Buffing' and wobbling started from Haji Ali and yet he covered more than 2 1/2 furlongs when according to their surveyor vehicle could have been and should have been stopped within 4 to 5 ft. This itself proves negligence."

20. In view of this conclusion, the learned Member proceeded to consider the evidence regarding nursing expenses given by Dr. Bavdekar, Miss Meena and Miss Arekar and concluded that the nursing expenses came to Rs. 1,400/- and medical expenses came to Rs. 300/-. This item of Rs. 1,700/- is not challenged before us.

21. The learned Member further took into consideration the income-tax returns submitted by Dr. Nayan from April 1, 1965 to March 31, 1969, from year to year; and came to the conclusion that prior to the accident the annual average income was Rs. 20,400/- and on that basis awarded damages for four years from the date of the accident. The learned Member worked it at Rs. 81,760/-. Since the accident, the total income for 3 years was Rs. 11,511/- and there was further loss of Rs. 3,530/- in the year of the accident. He thus deducted Rs. 11,511/- Rs. 3,530/- Rs. 7,981/- from Rs. 81,760/- and arrived at the figure of the loss of income sustained during four years at Rs. 73,779/-.

22. It may at once be stated here that the figures in the returns of income-tax were not challenged before us and could not be challenged by Mr. Gumaste, the learned Counsel appearing for the appellants. All that he could urge was that the average should not have been taken as Rs. 20,440/- but as Rs. 18,000/- which was stated to be the average by Dr. Nayan in his evidence. What was contended was that the learned Member was wrong in calculating the average at Rs. 20,440/-, inasmuch as, it was admitted that something could be earned by Dr. Nayan even after the accident; and, in calculating the average loss at Rs. 73,779/- for four years the member was wrong.

23. Having regard to the fact that Dr. Nayan appears to have been a busy surgeon with a maternity home and consulting rooms it cannot be said particularly, when he could not stand operation for more than an hour, as reported by Dr. Chaubal that the basis of the actual calculations was unreasonable or bad. We do not find any error in the learned Member calculating the loss on the basis of the average of the income-tax returns for 4 years prior to the accident and deducting therefrom the average income for 4 years subsequent to the accident.

24. The learned Member further added to this a sum of Rs. 63,000/-, being 50% of Rs. 1,26,000/-, expected loss for 7 years and the remainder of the life of Dr. Nayan who was, when the award was given, 63. The learned Member has correctly said that as lump sum amount was to be given to Dr. Nayan, the loss of 7 years must be reduced to 50%. As this is also calculated on the basis of the average loss calculated on the formula adopted by the learned Member, stated above, we find no error in principle therein.

25. All that Gumaste could submit in respect of this calculation was, firstly that even a very efficient surgeon cannot be expected to continue to be efficient after 63 for 7 years and secondly it was wrong on the part of the learned Member to award Rs. 63,000/- in addition to the other sum making a total of Rs. 1,38,479/- which at the current Bank interest rate would work out to nearly Rs. 18,000/- average loss per year as calculated by the learned Member.

26. The argument is no doubt arithmetically attractive but life is not all arithmetic. The learned Member who had the advantage of seeing the doctor, had come to the conclusion that he was fit enough to live for another 7 years to function like a professional man as a Doctor. There is no reason why this estimate should be considered to be wrong or against commonsense or common experience.

27. Although everyone, having regard to the medical facilities available to-day, wish to live longer than even 70, as the law has cast upon the Tribunal and the Courts the duty to determine compensation on the basis of estimate of life, which both wisdom and experience often show to be incorrect or futile in such matters, the Tribunal tried its best and fixed it at 7 years. We cannot capriciously or arbitrarily interfere with the estimate made by the Tribunal.

28. A professional man cannot be given a compensation at the rate of 'un-earned' income, such as, interest on fixed deposits in banks. His loss must be determined having regard to his skill, ability, popularity and harm caused to his efficient functioning. In cases before the Tribunal under Section 110-B, the Tribunal is required by law to determine an amount of compensation which appears to be "just". The word "just" in the case of a professional man cannot mean just interest on Fixed Deposit which may be alright for a temple or a dargah or even a public and charitable institution or an old infirm or invalid man or woman incapable of functioning in life and earning by working with brain or hand.

29. The Tribunal, in our opinion, has made the best efforts and tried to determine compensation in as "just" a manner as is possible in all the facts and circumstances of the case. We are, therefore, of the view that the Tribunal was quite right in awarding the quantum of compensation of Rs. 1,700/- for nursing and medical expenses plus Rs. 73,779/- for the loss sustained for 4 years plus Rs. 63,000/-, expected loss of 7 years income, making a total of Rs. 1,38,479/-.

30. Turning now to the first ground urged in support of the appeal that the plea of negligence set up by Dr. Nayan was not proved by him and that the accident was caused by mechanical defect of the lorry, on the facts, we find ourselves in complete agreement with the learned Tribunal as it was for the lorry driver and owner to establish in this case how the lorry crossed the road dividers, went on the wrong side and virtually mounted on the fiat car coming from the opposite direction. The principle, res ipsa loquitur, was rightly applied by the learned Tribunal. The evidence clearly shows that the plea of the appellants Nos. 2 and 3 in the written statement was reckless, if not a false one; and the Tribunal rightly disbelieved the plea and held that it was the driver who was negligent. We fully concur in the reasons and the findings of the learned Member of the Tribunal.

31. It would not have been necessary for us to say anything more but for the fact that it was represented to us by Counsel on respective side that the users of motor cars and lorries and the claimants of compensation before the Motor Vehicles Tribunal ought to know what they should plead and establish before they are entitled to avoid payment of compensation under the provisions of Section 110-B of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, which runs as follows:—

"110-B. On receipt of an application for compensation made under Section 110-A, the Claims Tribunal shall, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, hold an inquiry into the claim and may make an award determining the amount of compensation which appears to it to be just and specifying the person or persons to whom compensation shall be paid; and in making the award the Claims Tribunal shall specify the amount which shall be paid by the insurer or owner or driver of the vehicle involved in the accident or by all or any of them, as the case may be."

32. As the point is very important and was argued at length by Counsel, each of us has begun to feel that public interest requires that some sort of certainty in law should develop in this recently much used branch of law in the interest of safety and security of citizens in modern urban industrial society where lorries, buses and cars are killing more persons than, perhaps, all the wars that were fought by man-kind at various stages in the world's history and also in the interest of justice which must mean guidelines to the Public Sector Insurance Companies and other Insurance Companies. This problem has already attracted the attention of industrial organisations and democratic countries following common law. Each of us, therefore, feel like expressing our views on the basis of the law for compensation and insurance and the right to compensation under Section 110-B of the Motor Vehicles Act.

33. A sound advice has already been delivered by Mr. Justice V. R. Krishna Iyer, as he then was, in Kerala High Court, in his judgment, in Kesavan Nair v. State Insurance Officer, 1971 Acc CJ 219 at p. 221, para. 4:—

"It is not altogether irrelevant to observe that motor vehicle accidents in the State are increasing at an alarming rate but there is hardly any serious check by the concerned authorities to ensure careful driving. The innocent victim is faced with legal difficulties, in recovering damages. On account of the legal position laid down in Mangilal v. Parasram, (AIR 1971 Madh Pra 5) (FB) the insurer is liable to pay only if the insured is liable to pay. It often times happen that a prosecution precedes a civil case and since the prosecution is in the control and direction of the police if it ends in an acquittal on account of the indifference in the conduct of the prosecution the insured pleads non-liability and the insurer also sometimes escapes. Out of sense of humanity and having due regard to the handicap of the innocent victim in establishing the negligence of the operator of the vehicle a blanket liability must be cast on the insurer, instead of its being restricted to cases where the vehicle operator has been shown to be negligent. This is more a matter for the legislature and not for the court. But this is a lacuna in the law which I think it would be just to rectify." (Underlining supplied). In that case compensation was claimed in respect of a tragic bus accident in the High Ranges of Kerala which resulted in the loss of 7 lives and injuries to many others.

34. The lower Courts had come to the conclusion that the driver was negligent; and the negligence was the cause of death of Kuruvilla Joseph and Joseph Varkey in respect of which the lower Court had granted a compensation of Rs. 2,700/- and Rs. 2,000/- respectively, directing the said insurance department to pay Rs. 2,000/- to each life lost. While confirming the decrees of the lower Courts Mr. Justice Krishna Iyer made the above observations and suggestions, which, unfortunately, do not, appear to have attracted the attention of the law makers till to-day.

35. In New India Assurance Co. Ltd. v. Sumitra Devi, 1971 Acc CJ 58, the Patna High Court, considered the provisions of Section 110-A of the Motor Vehicles Act which provides for the application for compensation and Section 95 of the Act. The claimant in that case was a young girl aged about 6 years. While she was coming from her school in the evening on March 12 1963, she was knocked down by a motor truck in front of the State Bank in the town of Ramgarh. As a result of the grievous injuries she had suffered on her right leg, it had to be amputated from near her thigh above the knee region.

36. The owner of the truck did not contest the claim. The Insurance Co. had resisted on various grounds. The Tribunal held that the claimant was involved in the accident, on the day, place, time and by the truck, as alleged by her and hence the claimant was permanently deformed and therefore, she was entitled to receive a compensation of Rs. 20,000/-. The Division Bench of the Patna High Court confirmed this finding.

37. The Patna High Court overruling, inter alia, the contention that the claimant had failed to prove negligence, observed as follows:—

"Section 95 of the Act provides requirements of insurance policy and the limitation of liability of an insurer. The insurance policy is on the record and has been marked exhibit A. We have not been shown either from Section 95 of the Act or any other provisions, or from the insurance policy (Exhibit A) whether the contention now raised has any justification. The liability is absolute but is only limited to the extent provided by the insurance policy in a particular case."

38. Distinguishing the facts before them from the facts in Seethamma v. Benedict D'Sa, 1966 Acc CJ 178 = (AIR 1967 Mys 11), the Division Bench of the Patna High Court, laid down:

"..... In the instant case, as I have stated, no case of negligence was made out in the application nor was any evidence adduced on behalf of the claimant, though the father claimant Mulchand Agarwala (A. W. 2) was asked in cross-examination about negligence and he said that 'the accident must have taken place because of the negligence and rashness of the driver. This is my impression'. It is thus clear that there is no evidence of negligence in the case nor was the claim founded on the basis of the negligence of the driver who drove the vehicle in question. As such, the point decided in the Mysore case is of no assistance to the appellant in the present case."

39. In other words, although the Division Bench of the Patna High Court has not stated so, they confirmed the decision of the Tribunal awarding compensation to the girl merely on the ground that the girl was involved in the accident and suffered damages. Mr. Hattangadi, the learned Counsel appearing for the responent Dr. Nayan therefore, relying on the Kerala High Court decision, Patna High Court decision and the wording of Section 95 and Section 110-B and also the form prescribed under Section 110-A under the Bombay Motor Vehicle Rules, viz., Form Comp. A, submitted that none of these sections or the form requires negligence or any other fault on the part of the driver of the offending lorry to be pleaded. He submitted that the Tribunal has jurisdiction to determine the compensation "which appears to it to be just" under Section 110-B.

40. Under Section 110-A an application for compensation arising out of an accident of the nature specified in subsection (1) of Section 110 may be made by the persons mentioned therein. Section 110 refers to the Claims Tribunal to be constituted by the State Government for the purpose of adjudicating upon claims for compensation in respect of accidents involving the death of, or bodily injury to, persons arising out of the use of motor vehicles, or damages to any property of a third party so arising, or both, etc. etc.

41. Mr. Hattangadi submitted that whatever may be the position before the Civil Court, so far as the Motor Vehicles Tribunal was concerned, the Act is self-contained and exhaustive relating to injuries to persons and property, arising out of the use of the motor vehicle. He submitted that it was, therefore, wrong to assume that the claims must be claims on the basis of negligence or culpable negligence or that it should be based on the principle of tort as defined by the common law of England and applied by Indian Courts.

42. To repel this argument Mr. Gumaste relied on several decisions: Shri Ram Pratap v. General Manager, Punjab Roadways, Ambala, AIR 1962 Punj 540; State of Punjab v. V. K. Kalia, 1968 Acc CJ 401 = (AIR 1969 Punj 172); Amarjit Kaur v. Vanguard Insurance Co. Ltd., 1969 Acc CJ 286 (Delhi); State of Punjab v. Phool Kumari, AIR 1963 Punj 125; Sabita Pati v. Rameshwar Singh, 1973 Acc CJ 319 (Orissa); Motor Owner's Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Smt. Sharda Thacker, 1974 Acc CJ 239 (Orissa) and Mangilal v. Parasram, AIR 1971 Madh. Pra 5 (FB). He also relied on New India Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Shanti Misra, AIR 1976 SC 237, Calcutta State Transport Corporation v. Kamal Prakash De, AIR 1976 Cal 2, Rehana Rahimbhai Kasambhai v. Transport Manager, Ahmedabad Municipal Transport Service, AIR 1976 Guj 37 and Mrs. Rita Aurora v. Saligram, AIR 1976 Him Pra 24.

43. It is unnecessary to discuss these cases in detail. In none of these cases, the question as to whether the law of torts requires any fault to be the basis of liability or the question as to whether it was necessary to read the law of torts as supplementing Section 110-B was really agitated. Negligence was pleaded and denied in these cases and the question was whether negligence was established in accordance with the law of torts as applied by the Indian Courts.

44. The Division Bench of the Orissa High Court in Oriental Fire and General Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Kamal Kanini Das, 1972 Acc CJ 92 = (AIR 1973 Orissa 33), appears to have considered the point, with respect, in a somewhat indirect way and has observed in paragraph 8:

"..... The objective factors which would constitute the basis of compensation appearing as just have not been indicated in the section. The expression 'which appears to it to be just' however vests a wide discretion in the Tribunal in the matter of determination of compensation. Despite the wide amplitude of such power, the determination cannot be arbitrary and must be based on certain data establishing reasonable nexus between the loss incurred and the compensation to be awarded."

45. Similarly, in M. A. Rahim v. Sayari Bai, 1972 Acc CJ 470 = (AIR 1973 Mad 83) a somewhat detailed discussion is to be found at the end of which the Division Bench of the Madras High Court observed in paragraph 6 as follows:—

"We are therefore of the view that there is no warrant for literally importing the provisions of the Fatal Accidents Act into Section 110-B of the Motor Vehicles Act so as to read both the provisions as part and parcel of the provision. By this we should not be understood as saying that the Tribunal can adopt any method which is arbitrary or capricious or in disregard of well-established principles. The decisions rendered under the general law of torts and under the Fatal Accidents Act will undoubtedly be relevant and constitute broad guidelines, but they would not be binding upon the Tribunal in the sense that the method of approach should be the same and identical as in the cases arising under the Fatal Accidents Act."

It is not necessary to discuss all these cases because, in my view, in none of those cases was the question agitated as to what exactly was meant by tort in the context of automobile accidents and injuries resulting therefrom, for which more often than not human minds, hands or legs are not always accountable, in the later half of the twentieth century. The question has engaged the minds of jurists all over the common law world.

46. The evolution of this law is discussed lucidly by Prof. Edward Veitch and David Miers in their article, "Assault on the Law of Tort" in 1975 Modern Law Review pp. 139 to 152. They have concluded at page 146:—

"The brief re'sumé above of the men and their theories reveals that there is no single coherent set of ideas either about the existing law of tort or about the statutory schemes to replace it. The resulting problem is obvious: if there is no complete understanding of what exactly the law of tort is all about and equally no real insight as to what the schemes ought to be achieving then any change may well be constructed on somewhat insecure foundations. Immediately it must be admitted that the existing administrative and welfare systems have multiple aims and these vary with the nature and origin of the injury to the particular individual. To aid confusion the systems tend to overlap on occasions. If we take social security first: the various arrangements set up by legislation can be said to attempt to give an adequate standard of living to those who have contracted diseases, lost their employment, fallen on hard times and who have grown old. But in addition the state financed benefits beyond the provision of money or services to secure an adequate standard of living since lump sums are payable for permanent disability and so approach the tort purpose of compensation."

47. Legislative attempt to give compensation irrespective of fault when the injuries are caused or death is caused by automobile accident is discussed in a very exhaustive manner in an article titled as "Accident Compensation in New Zealand; A Comprehensive Insurance System" in 1974 Modern Law Review from p. 361 to p. 376. Under that Act discretion is given to the Commission which was set up for determining compensation arising out of the automobile accident irrespective of fault as a basis of report made by Royal Commission whose chairman was Mr. Justice Woodhouse. This Act provides that no claim, either at common law or under a statute, may be brought for damages arising out of personal injury or death suffered by accident in New Zealand and the Accident Compensation Commission is entrusted with the power to determine the compensation after hearing the insurance company stated to be appellant as provided under the Act.

48. This is referred to only to indicate how the very valuable suggestion of Mr. Justice Krishna Iyer for enacting a proper law in this connection required to be followed by the law makers of the country, rather than compel the litigants to find out the interpretation of law by different Courts and possibly after unnecessary, lengthy and costly litigation by different claimants by what is alarmingly tending to be an "Alice through Wonderland" process of litigation.

49. In the meanwhile, I would like to interpret the sections of the Motor Vehicles Act, viz., Sections 110 to 110-F as creating a special machinery for adjudicating upon the claims for compensation for injuries to persons and property sustained as a result of the "use" of the motor vehicle. Section 110 uses the words "arising out of the use of motor vehicles" not out of improper, negligent or faulty use of motor vehicles. It is, therefore, not necessary for the Court to interpret the word "use" as necessarily implying improper use or negligent use or faulty use.

50. The moment a motor vehicle is used and injury is caused, a liability to pay compensation arises; and the Tribunal can adjudicate upon that liability and determine 'just' compensation. This can be on the general basis of ubi jus ibi remedium in respect of which, we find the following comment in Broom's Legal Maxims, 10th Edition, page 119:—

"The principle adopted by Courts of law accordingly is, that the novelty of the particular complaint alleged in an action on the case is no objection, provided that an injury cognisable by law be shown to have been inflicted on the plaintiff; in which case, although there be no precedent, the common law will judge according to the law of nature and the public good."

51. In my opinion, public good requires that everyone injured, viz., by the use of a motor vehicle, must immediately get compensation for the injury. Every person has a right to safety and security of his person irrespective of fault or negligence or carelessness or efficient functioning of the motor vehicle. Every person has a right to claim compensation as that is the only way of remedying the injury caused to him in a modern urbanized, industrialised and automobile ridden life.

52. It is useful to recall in this connection the following observations of Holt, C. J. in Ashby v. White Et. Alios, (1703) 92 ER 126 (Lord Raymond 2) at page 136:

"If the plaintiff has a right, he must of necessity have a means to vindicate and maintain it, and a remedy if he is injured in the exercise or enjoyment of it; and indeed it is a vain thing to imagine a right without a remedy; for want of right and want of remedy are reciprocal."

53. Moreover a look at the latest standard books on the law of Torts also reveals that when and even if importing the notion of torts in determining the just compensation it is not necessary for the Tribunal to award damages only if the plaintiff proves negligence or any other tort recognised by well known books as species of tort.

54. In "Salmond on Law of Torts", 16th Edition, at page 16, there is a discussion as to whether Salmond's theory that just as the criminal law consists of a body of rules establishing specific offences, so, the law of torts consists of a body of rules establishing specific injuries, has been discussed as follows:—

"But it is very doubtful whether Salmond's theory is true now, or ever has been true. There is not a single case in the reports in which an action has been refused on the sole ground that it was new. It has been clearly established ever since the memorable judgment of Sir John Holt C. J. in Ashby v. White that mere novelty is no bar to an action. 'I wish never to hear this objection again,' said Sir Charles Pratt, C. J., sixty years later, 'This action is for a tort: torts are infinitely various, not limited or confined, for there is nothing in nature but may be an instrument of mischief.'"

Continuing the discussion, Professor Hauston, Regius Professor of Law at Oxford University, has commented:—

"Winfield said that he preferred the theory that 'all injuries done to another person are torts, unless there is some justification recognised by Law'. But this thesis did not find general acceptance and he later modified his opinion to the extent of admitting that 'from a narrow practical point of view' Salmond's view 'suffices', though he still thought that 'from a broader outlook' his own theory was valid. To some extent the critics seem to have misunderstood Salmond. He never committed himself to the proposition certainly untenable now, and probably always so, that the law of torts is a closed and inexpensible system. 'To say that the law can be collected into pigeon holes does not mean that those pigeon holes may not be capacious, nor does it mean that they are incapable of being added to' Salmond merely contended that these changes were not exclusively referable to any single principle. In this he was probably right. The factors relevant to a decision to impose, or not to impose, liability are many and varied."

55. In "Winfield and Jolwicz on Tort", 9th Edition, in Chapter I, dealing with the Meaning of Law of Tort and the Foundation of Tortious liability, the discussion is as follows:—

"..... Salmond had asked, 'Does the law of torts consist of a fundamental general principle that it is wrongful to cause harm to other persons in the absence of some specific justification or excuse, or does it consist of a number of specific rules prohibiting certain kinds of harmful activity, and leaving all the residue outside the sphere of legal responsibility?' and had chosen the second alternative. Winfield preferred the other view, but latterly he modified it as follows: From a narrow practical point of view, the second theory will suffice, but from a broader outlook, the first is valid. If we concentrate attention on the law of tort at the moment (which is what most practitioners do), entirely excluding the development of the law, past and future, then it corresponds to the second theory. If we take the wider view that the law of tort has grown for centuries and is still growing, then the first theory seems to be at the back of it. It is the difference between treating a tree as inanimate for the practical purposes of the moment (e.g., for the purpose of avoiding collision with it, it is as lifeless as a block of marble) and realising that it is animate because we know that it has grown and is still growing. The caution and slowness which usually mark the creation of new rules by the judges tend to mask the fact that they have been created; for they have often come into existence only by a series of analogical extensions spread over a long period' of time, to vary the metaphor, the process has resembled the sluggish movement of the glacier rather than the catastrophic charge of the avalanche. But when once a new tort has come into being, it might fairly seem to have done so, if the whole history of its development is taken into account, in virtue of the principle that unjustifiable harm is tortious.

Where the courts hold that the harm is justifiable, there is, of course, no tort. And they may hold that it is justifiable for any one or more of several reasons. The plaintiff may be asking them to do what they think Parliament is more fitted to do; or he may be alleging a particular tort, without giving proof of some essential requisite of it; or he may be taking an exaggerated view of what is necessary to his own comfort or prosperity; or he may be demanding the creation of a remedy which would throw out of gear other parts of the law. But subject to these restrictions and looking at the law of torts in the whole of its development, Winfield is still inclined to the first theory.

"Evidence", in the sense of judicial dicta, can be found to support either view, but, so far as is known neither forms the ratio decidendi of a single case. Furthermore, since the supporters of the second view do not deny that the law of tort is capable of development, or even that new heads of liability can come into existence, and since the supporters of the first view admit that no action will lie if the conduct which caused the harm was justifiable, the difference between them is perhaps less than is sometimes supposed.

Summing up his investigations into the controversy, Professor Glanville Williams says this:— "The first school has shown that the rules of liability are very wide. The second school has shown that some rules of absence of liability are also very wide. Neither school has shown that there is any general rule, whether of liability or of non-liability, to cover novel cases that have not yet received the attention of the Courts. In a case of first impression that is, a case that falls under no established rule or that falls equally under two conflicting rules — there is no ultimate principle directing the court to find for one party or the other. Why should we not settle the argument by saying simply that there are some general rules creating liability and some equally general rules exempting from liability. Between the two is a stretch of disputed territory with the courts as an unbiased boundary commission. If, in an unprovided case, the decision passes for the plaintiff, it will be not because of a general theory of liability but because the court feels that there is a case in which existing principles of liability may properly be extended."

56. The time has now come when instead of involving the insurance company, which now, so far as this country is concerned, is in the public sector, and the citizens injured in automobile accidents, in costly and lengthy litigation, what is needed is a sure position in law. There is generally prolonged litigation in such cases. In the absence of any words used by the legislature to underpin the liability as a liability with respect to negligence or any other specific tort or tort generally that liability must be held to be in respect of injuries done or caused as a result of the "use" of motor vehicle unless there is some reason recognised by law for exempting the user from that liability.

57. It is true that there are cross-currents of thoughts in the matter. Even in England judges have taken different views with regard to the necessity for proof of fault in actions for personal injuries caused by accidents. Salmond's Law of Torts has summed up this discussion with the following words:—

"It is reasonable to conclude that there is still room for the law of torts. Basic cover against disasters may be provided by national insurance, but there is a popular feeling that those who have intentionally or carelessly caused harm to others should pay for the damage which they have caused. Tort law is concerned not only with cash, but also with appeasement, justice and fairness. Experience with industrial accidents shows that social welfare and common law damages may well co-exist. Perhaps torts should not be abolished, but amended and supplemented; it can deal better than insurance with property damage and mental suffering, and can also provide for the restoration of earnings above the minimal level. For statutory benefits have the disadvantage that they are not in any way related to the loss suffered, as common law compensation is, however, inadequately. There is room for much more inquiry as to the relationship between the law of torts and the welfare state. The whole problem of alternative remedies needs to be re-examined."

58. In the light of this fundamental and basic nature of the law of torts,

I am of the view that whether we apply the law of torts or not, the liability to pay 'just' compensation arises when the injuries are caused by the use of the motor vehicle. The Tribunal has power to determine what is 'just' compensation irrespective of whether the defendant was at fault or was negligent or careless or not. When a person is injured by use of a vehicle, that itself is an infringement of a right. That person must, therefore, have a remedy of recovering compensation from the person whose vehicle has caused injury. That, according to me, is the scheme of the provisions contained in Sections 110 to 110-F of the Motor Vehicles Act. Principles of law of negligence were relevant for determining the quantum of damages and the person liable to pay it like any other principle to be followed in the administration of justice.

59. It was contended by Mr. Gumaste that these were only procedural sections as held by the Supreme Court recently in New India Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Shanti Misra, AIR 1976 SC 237 and in some other decisions of other High Courts; but, with respect, that case was concerned with and arose out of the facts of those cases where the point as to whether the law was substantive or procedural arose in the context of the plea of bar of limitation.

60. Except when such distinction is relevant, in interpreting the law, one should not approach the law as if the law was intended to be labelled or christened as procedural or substantive law. It is clear from Section 110-B that the law requires the Tribunal to decide not only what is "just" compensation but also to whom it should be paid and by whom it should be paid. Some of those sections will have to be interpreted as substantive law if at all it is necessary to interpret them to be so. In my view, it is unnecessary to go into semantics of the words "substantive and procedural law" in the present case. It is enough to say that Dr. Nayan was inflicted injuries by use of the motor lorry belonging to the Appellants Nos. 2 and 3 and they are, therefore, liable to pay compensation to Dr. Nayan as awarded by the Tribunal.

61. Mr. Gumaste contended that, having regard to Section 95, which lays down the requirements of policies and limits of liability in respect of policy of insurance against third party risks, the words used are "any liability which may be incurred"; and, therefore, it must be a liability under the general law of torts or under the Civil Law. But it is not necessary or proper to read that section in such a way because liability could be any liability. It may be civil or it may be criminal. It may be contractual or based on tort or a statute. Merely because the word "liability" is used in that section, it cannot be said that the Tribunal's jurisdiction under Section 110-F is limited to considering and applying the law of torts in a claim for compensation.

62. Mr. Gumaste also referred to the word "liability", used in Section 96 and contended that word "liability" would also mean liability which will be recognised by a Civil Court. It may be so. But that section again does not limit the power of the Tribunal under Section 110-B which has to determine while making the award, as stated above, not only what is "just" compensation but also specify the amount which shall be paid by the insurer or owner or driver of the vehicle involved in the accident or by all or any of them, as the case may be. Section 96 in my opinion, applies only to the judgment obtained in a Civil Court which has no jurisdiction where the Claims Tribunal is constituted in view of the provisions of Section 110-F.

63. In any view of the matter, therefore, whether negligence is taken into consideration or not, the award passed by the Tribunal in the present case is just and legal. There is nothing therein which requires interference at our hands. Mr. Gumaste submitted that under Section 95 (2) the policy of the insurance in the present case limits the liability of the insurance company to Rs. 20,000/- as that was the limit prescribed under sub-section (2), as it was in force at the time of the accident; and, therefore, insurance company-appellant, should be held liable only to the extent of Rs. 20,000/-.

64. As can be seen from the record and particularly the roznama, no point appears to have been raised on behalf of the insurance Co. to limit the liability under the policy to Rs. 20,000/-, by Mr. J. M. Patel, who filed the written statement on behalf of the opposite parties. The policy is not before us. Not only that but when Mr. Gumaste, who filed the appeal on behalf of all the opposite parties, the appellants, raised this point, Mr. Patel, who was present in the Court, interrupted and said that it was the practice or convention of the insurance companies not to raise such a point before the Tribunal if the insurance company represented the assured as in the present case. Mr. Patel, therefore, contended that the insurance company should not be allowed to raise this point for the first time before us on behalf of Appellants Nos. 2 and 3.

65. But he had not filed any vakalatnama on behalf of Appellants Nos. 2 and 3 before us. He had filed his vakalatnama before the Tribunal. In the absence any vakalatnama filed by Mr. Patel on behalf of Appellants Nos. 2 and 3, it is not open to us to take into consideration his submissions on their behalf. On behalf of Dr. Nayan, the claimant, Mr. Hattangadi submits that the insurance company should not be allowed to raise the point of limiting the liability of Rs. 20,000/- for the first time in this Court as they have not raised a contention in the written statement filed before the Tribunal that the policy did not cover the entire liability which the assured may incur under the award.

66. There is considerable force in the argument of Mr. Hattangadi. But having regard to the fact that Mr. Patel represented the assured as well as the insurance company in the lower Court, it may be that as the contention of liability available to the insurance company under Section 95 (2) was not raised before the Tribunal, in fairness, an opportunity should be given to the insurance company to raise such a point if it is open to it at law to do so subject to the payment of costs and also subject to depositing the amount which according to them is payable under the award, viz., Rs. 20,000/-, with interest from the date of the application as awarded by the Tribunal.

67. If and when the certificate of execution is to be issued by the Tribunal under Section 110-E of the Motor Vehicles Act the question may be raised by the Insurance Company. At present we are not bound to interfere with the award of the Tribunal. There was no material or argument before the Tribunal about it. There was nothing before the Tribunal to show that the insurance company's liability was limited to Rs. 20,000/-.

68. In the result, I would confirm the award and dismiss the appeal subject to the modification that it is open to the insurance company Appellant No. 1, to deposit Rs. 20,000/- with interest from the date of the application to the date of the deposit as per the award passed by the Tribunal and contend that the award is binding under Section 95 (2) of the Motor Vehicles Act but only to the extent of Rs. 20,000/- or the sum which may be mentioned in the insurance policy.

69. If and when the insurance company deposits the amount as directed above and applies for determination of this question, the Tribunal may proceed to determine that question after hearing all the parties concerned and then issue the certificate for recovery of the balance of the awarded money under Section 110-E of the Motor Vehicles Act from the Insurance Co. So far as others are concerned, the Tribunal is at liberty to issue certificate of execution forthwith. As an extraordinary indulgence is given to the insurance Company on a plea which it has raised for the first time before us, the insurance company Appellant No. 1, should pay the costs of all parties to this case so far incurred and to be hereinafter incurred.

MRIDUL, J.:— 70. I respectfully agree with the findings and the conclusions of my learned brother. The question as to whether gist of cause of action, in a claim arising out of a motor accident is negligence, is of great importance. This question also arises in appeal No. 81 of 1975, which has been heard with this appeal. In view thereof as also because of a slightly different process of reasoning adopted by me, I think it necessary to deal with this important question relating to interpretation of the provisions of Section 110-B and cogent sections of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, (hereinafter referred to as "the Act").

71. Shri Gumaste, the learned counsel for the 1st appellants — (Insurance Company) — (hereinafter referred to as 'the insurer'), submits that in all cases of compensation arising out of accidents contemplated by Chapter VIII of the said Act, the basis of liability is negligence as known to the law of Torts. His submission is that provisions of Chapter VIII, particularly those relating to the constitution of Motor Accidents Claim Tribunal, are procedural sections. The said provisions do not provide for the basis of liability or the principles governing the exercise of power vested in the Tribunal for awarding compensation. In order to ascertain the liability the Tribunal, of necessity, must look to what are called the substantive provisions of Law of Torts and the Fatal Accidents Act. It is a submission of the learned counsel that there is nothing in the provisions of Chapter VIII which touches the basic question of liability arising out of accidents and that the provisions of the said Chapter have not changed the law which existed prior to the bringing into force of the relevant provisions. The learned counsel asserts that the provisions of the Act cannot be held to override the law of Tort or of Fatal Accidents Act and the liability for compensation must be determined with reference to the said substantive provisions alone.

72. Shri Hattangadi, the learned counsel for the Respondent (hereinafter referred to as 'the injured') submits that upon a true construction of provisions of Chapter VIII and more particularly, Section 110-B, negligence is not the basis of the liability. The cause of action in cases of injury in accidents is the loss and damage sustained by reason of death or bodily injury caused by or arising out of the use of a vehicle in a public place.

73. In order to resolve these controversies it will be necessary to see the language in which the relevant provisions are couched as also the scheme, intendments and the purpose thereof. It will have to be seen whether the relevant provisions of the Act provide for a basis of liability in connection with accidents wherein motor vehicles are involved or that said provisions merely lay down the mode and the forum through which the rights and liabilities which are claimed to arise only under the substantive provisions of law as aforesaid, are enforced or adjudicated.

74. The Act is an Act "to consolidate and amend the law relating to Motor Vehicles". As a Consolidation Act, it therefore, merely reduces into a systematic form the whole of the law that existed prior to its enactment. A Consolidation Act by itself cannot be said to intend a change in the pre-existing law but the Act is not merely a Consolidated Act. It is also an Act which seeks to amend the law relating to motor vehicles. The controversies in this appeal therefore will have to be determined by interpreting the relevant provisions of the Act read within the setting of the Scheme, intendments and purposes thereof.

75. Chapter VI of the said Act deals with 'Control of traffic'. It makes elaborate provisions for regulating use of a motor vehicle in public places. Section 71 provides for limits of speed. Section 72 deals with limits of weight and limitation on use. Section 74 empowers State Government to prohibit or restrict driving of motor vehicles 'in the interest of public safety or convenience or because of the nature of road or any bridge'. Section 75 provides for placing or erection of traffic signs. Section 76 authorises State Government or other authority designated by the State Government in that behalf, to determine 'places at which motor vehicles may stand' or places at which public vehicles may stop. Section 77 provides for designation of certain roads as main roads for the purposes of regulations contained in the tenth Schedule. The said Tenth Schedule enumerates driving regulations to be observed by a driver of a motor vehicle. Section 78 casts obligations for safe driving of the motor vehicles. It provides that a driver of motor vehicles 'shall drive the vehicle in conformity with traffic signs and regulations set forth in Tenth Schedule. Section 79 provides for signals and signalling devices and for the directions that a driver of a motor vehicle is obliged to follow. Section 81 casts an obligation upon the person in-charge of a motor vehicle to ensure that the vehicle is not left in a dangerous position so as to cause 'danger, obstruction or undue inconvenience to the other users of the road'. The other sections need not be noticed. Mention however, may be made of Section 91 which empowers the State Government to make rules. Clause (i) thereof authorises the State Government to make rules providing for "generally, the prevention of danger, injury or annoyance to the public or any person or of danger or injury to property or of obstruction to traffic". The provisions of Chapter VI leave no shadow of doubt that the said provisions impose liabilities and obligations on drivers of motor vehicle and that the provisions enacted therein are conceived with a view to protecting the persons who might be using a public road from "danger, injury or annoyance to their persons or properties". Even in England before statutory provisions were made, there existed what was called a High Way Code. The English judgments show that a failure on the part of any person to observe any provisions of the High Way Code, gave rise to actionable wrongs or to civil liabilities. In civil proceedings such failures were permitted to be relied upon as "tending to establish or negative any liability which may be in question" (Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn. Vol. 28, page 66). This non-observance was treated as a specie of negligence in relation to High ways. Stronger becomes the case when the statutory provisions are made and they set forth obligations upon the driver of a motor vehicle so as to prevent mischief "of danger or injury or annoyance to the public or persons or of danger or injury to property" of others. Breaches of these statutory obligations, ex hypothesi must predicate liabilities enforceable at law. Chapter VIII relates to insurance of Motor Vehicles against third party risks. It comprises of Section 93 to Section 111-A. Some of the salient provisions thereof may however, be noticed.

76. Section 94 (1) ordains that no person shall use (except as a passenger) or cause or allow any other person to use a motor vehicle in a public place, unless there is in force in relation to the use of the vehicle by that person or that other person as the case may be a policy of insurance complying with the requirements of Chapter VIII. Section 94 (1) is modelled on Section 35 (1) of English Roads Traffic Act, 1930. There is considerable judicial opinion to show that Section 35 (1) of the English Roads Traffic Act, 1930, provides for a statutory duty enforceable at law.

77. In Monk v. Warbey (1935-1 KB 75), one Monk was injured in a car accident. The car belonged to one Warbey. Warbey's friend one Knowles had borrowed the car from Warbey and had asked one May to drive it for him. May and Knowles were not covered by 3rd party liability insurance. Warbey's policy also did not cover the use of a car by Knowles and May. Monk sued Warbey basing his claim against Warbey upon the alleged breach by Warbey of his statutory duty under Section 35 (1) in having caused or permitted his motor car to be used in breach of the sub-section. Charles, J., upheld the claim on the grounds that Section 35 imposed a duty and that injury to any person on road in breach of the said section could be relied upon as a cause of action. In appeal Judgment of Charles, J., was affirmed. The Court of Appeal held that the owner can be sued for breach of statutory duty and the injured need not first sue to uninsured person who caused the accident. (1935) 1 KB 75. The dicta in Monk's case was followed by Goddard, J., in Richards v. Port of Manchester Ins. Co., reported in (1934) 50 Ll LR 88. Shaweross on Motor Insurance, 2nd Edn. writes at page 164 as follows:—

"It was held in Monk v. Warbey and in several later cases, that a breach of this statutory duty is a wrongful act giving rise to claim for damages by a third party who is injured through the use of a motor vehicle in breach of the duty."

78. By the same token therefore, the provision of Section 94 (1) of the Act must be held to cast a statutory obligation, the breach whereof is enforceable by an appropriate action in an appropriate forum constituted in that behalf.

79. Section 95 (1) lays down 'requirements of policies and limits of liabilities'. Clause (b) of sub-section (1) requires that a policy of insurance must "ensure the person or classes of persons specified in the policy to the extent specified in sub-section (2) — (i) against any liability which may be incurred by him in respect of the death of or bodily injury to any person or damage to any property of a third party caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle in a public place; and (ii) against the death of or bodily injury to any passenger of a public service vehicle caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle in a public place. The provisions of Section 95 (1), more particularly, clauses (b) (i) and (ii) thereof delineate the extent of the liability which is considered minimum that should be ensured to a third party involved in an accident caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle in a public place. The key-concept in the provisions of sub-sec. 95 (1) (b) is a liability in respect of death or an injury "caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle in a public place". That the said concept is a cardinal one, is the inference that must be drawn because in the first place it is the common streak which runs through both the sub-clauses (i) and (ii) of clause (b) of Section 95 (1) and sub-clause (i) has to be read as 'Noscitur a sociis'. These two sub-clauses of Section 95 (1) must get their colour from each other. These sub-clauses are part of the same scheme relating to minimum insurable risk that must be covered and cannot therefore be interpreted differently. Secondly, the word, "arising out of or caused by" are the words of widest amplitude specifying the critical event. They clearly indicate that the liability must be such as pertains to death or bodily injury or damage to the property caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle in a public place. In other words, a causative factor postulated by the aforesaid provision, is the use of a vehicle in a public place. This is so because in the focus of the provisions of the Act, particularly Chapter VI and Chapter VIII is the use of a motor vehicle and its proper regulation in order to ensure safety to the people and their property.

80. There is yet reason to hold that the emphasis in Section 95 (1) (b) is on the liability pertaining to an accident resulting in death or bodily injury or damage to the property of the third party by reason of the use of the vehicle in a public place. Section 95 (1) is a provision relating to insurance. The law of insurance contemplates coverage of perils or events resulting in injuries. These perils and events are insurable factors. In the language of insurance, these perils or insurable events or factors are called "risks". Halsbury (Laws of England, 3rd Edn., Vol. 22, page 229) classifies these perils, events or factors in the following words:

"There are three broad topics to be considered in relation to what in commercial parlance is called the risk, namely (1) the risk in the sense of the contractual definition of the peril insured against; (2) the risk in the sense of the subject-matter insured against the stipulated peril; (3) the risk in the sense of the circumstances in which the stipulated peril has to affect the assured, either in relation to a defined subject-matter or in relation to his incurring a particular liability or loss".

81. Under Section 95 (1) insurable contingency which is the minimum that has got to be provided for in accordance with the provisions both of clauses (i) and (ii) is "the death or bodily injury, caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle in a public place". Clause (i) further adds damage to the properties also. The subject-matter of the insurance is the motor vehicle; circumstances covered are the use of motor vehicle in a public place and the peril insured is the loss arising out of death or bodily injury. These are the factors or events in respect whereof there has got to be a policy of insurance if the provisions of Section 95 (1) (b) are to be complied with.

82. The learned counsel for the insurer, however, submits that the liability as contemplated by Section 95 (1) (b) (i) is a liability which 'may be incurred by' the insured. He emphasises the expression "incurred by him" and submits that the Court should hold that this incurring of a liability has to be determined not with reference to the provisions of the Act but with reference to the rules of Law of Tort or other substantive laws. The contention is untenable. The expression liability "which may be incurred by him" is used to identify the liability, not to qualify or restrict the liability. It merely answers 'Whose liability and not, what liability'. The perimeters of liability in clauses (i) and (ii) must be held to be the same because in both the events the liability of the owner or the driver exists and is made compulsorily insurable. The only difference is that clause (i) deals with vehicles other than 'public service vehicles' where passengers are gratuitous invitees as contradistinguished from passengers in public service vehicles who are carried for 'hire and reward'. The latter cases require specific reference to exclude defences of 'volenti non fit injuria' or persons not entitled to compensation as being contractees to the contract of conveyance. It is inconceivable that the legislature would intend absolute liability only in cases covered by clause (ii) and not in cases covered by clause (i).

83. It may also be stated that the liability of the insurer is for indemnification of the insured. This liability is co-extensive with the liability of the insured. Consequently insurable events must be same for both and their respective liabilities must be conterminous. Inferentially therefore the delineations of liability for minimum insurable cover must also denote the contours of liability of the insured. If that is so, the minimum contemplated by the said provision also indicates the basis of insured's liability.

84. Sections 97, 99, 101 and 102 show that the Act makes a departure from Law of Torts. The principles enshrined in the said provisions are different from those relating to the law governing the joint tort-feasors. The liability arising out of a joint tort carries with it certain well defined legal consequences. The liability of joint tort-feasor abates with that of the other joint-tort-feasor. The joint-tort-feasors can make a settlement between themselves to limit their inter se liability, that is to say, contribution to be made by each in regard to the joint torts. The discharge of one of joint tort-feasors operates as the discharge of the liability of the other tort-feasors. None of these features obtain in cases covered by the said sections. Section 97 passes on the right of the insured in the event of his insolvency or if it is a corporation, its winding up, to the third parties. Section 99 prohibits any settlement between an in-suror and the insured unless the third party is a party to such a settlement. Section 101 in terms provides that insolvency of the insured will not affect the claim of the third party once a certificate of insurance is issued. Section 102 is more tale-telling. Contrary to the well-settled principles of tort to the effect that the tort does not survive the demise of the tort-feasor, Section 102 provides that death of a person in whose favour a certificate of insurance is issued if it occurs after the happening of an event which has given rise to a claim under the provisions of said Chapter VII "shall not be a bar to the survival of any cause of action arising out of the said event against his estate or against the insurer". These departures from the principles of Law of Tort, clear on the plain and unambiguous language of these sections, establish that the Legislature intended to lay down a different law in the matters governed by the provisions of the Act.

85. Argument of the counsel for the insurer that an insurance is merely an indemnification to the insured breaks down when it is seen that departure has also been made from the principle that the liability of the insurer should be co-extensive with that of the insured. It is a normal rule of law that in cases of principal-debtors and sureties, their liabilities are co-extensive. The surety is entitled to defend a claim intra alia upon the grounds available to the principal debtors but that is not so under the provisions of the said Chapter VIII. Section 96 (2) gives a very limited right of defence to the insurer. The provisions of Section 96 (1) contemplate hearing on the merits only between the third party claimant and the insured. The injunction of sub-section (1) of Section 96 is that the insurer is liable to the extent of the sum assured on a judgment in respect of the liability covered by the policy under clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 95 upon the judgment being obtained against the insured. This is different from a situation where a claim against a principal debtor and a surety is made under the general law. In my opinion, the provisions referred to above, clearly establish the legislative intent to make departures not only from the law of torts, but also the Law of Contract in so far as the insurer and the insured in the matter of claims for compensation arising under the said Chapter are concerned.

86. The provisions of the Act are different from those of Fatal Accidents Act which in term provide for 'actionable wrongs' and for compensation arising therefrom. Section 1-A of the Fatal Accidents Act provides for compensation to the family of a person for loss occasioned to it by death 'caused by wrongful act, neglect or default'. The preamble also indicates the same things. The Legislature having not used the same language in the Act clearly shows that the scheme thereof is different from that of Fatal Accidents Act.

87. Before I go to the most material section viz., 110-E, it is necessary to notice expressions used in Sections 109, 110, 110-A and 110-AA. In these sections legislature has used the expressions "claim compensation in respect of an accident arising out of the use of a motor vehicle" (Section 109); "claims for compensation in respect of accidents involving the death of, or bodily injury to persons arising out of the use of motor vehicles". Sub-section (1) of Section 110: "for compensation arising out of an accident of the nature as specified in sub-section (1) of Section 110", and "a claim for compensation under this Act" (Sec. 110-AA). These expressions clearly demonstrate that the compensation that is payable is a compensation which arises out of an accident and which is payable under the provisions of the Act. There are no words of limitation. There is nothing in the provisions of the Act or Scheme thereof which can justify the importation of limiting factors to restrict plain meaning and amplitude of these expressions. In my opinion, reading down of all these sections will be an unjustified departure from canon of literal construction. There are no compelling reasons to induce me to do so. In my view, a mere surmise or conjecture that the law of Torts is all comprehensive and must therefore govern all cases of compensation, is no ground to strain the language of these provisions or read implied limitations in them. Moreover, such restrictions or limitation besides being repugnant to the natural meanings of the said expressions, also defeat the salutary purpose of Chapter VIII which is to benefit third parties and indemnify them against loss and injury arising out of Motor accidents.

88. Section 110-B has a marginal note which summarises 'the effect of the section.' The marginal note reads "award of the claims Tribunal." Thus the section deals with the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to make award granting compensation. Undoubtedly, this section creates a forum and therefore to the said extent it is a procedural provision. But it is well-settled proposition of Law that a procedural section may contain in itself substantive provisions. Legal semantics apart, there is no dichotomy between a substantive provision and a procedural provision. The intent of the law has to be gathered from the language of the law, the scheme of the law and the purpose of the law. The crucial words in Sec. 110-B are "the Claims Tribunal may make an award determining the amount of compensation which appears to it to be just and specifying the person or persons to whom compensation shall be paid". This section in other words authorises the tribunal to award such compensation 'as appears to it to be just'. There are no words of limitation in this section whittling down the scope of the authority of the tribunal to award such compensation as appears to it to be just. In M/s. Shikhu-pura Transport Co. Ltd. v. Northern India Transporters Insurance Co. Ltd., reported in AIR 1971 SC 1624, the Supreme Court considered the ambit of power conferred by this section. The Supreme Court observed in paragraph 6, page 1626 as under:—

"Under Section 110-B of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, the tribunal is required to fix such compensation which appears to it to be just. The power given to the tribunal in the matter of fixing compensation under that provision is wide."

89. Implicit in the observations of the Supreme Court is the assumption that the width of the power under Section 110-B is not subject to any implied limitations. This would be so because all judicial powers carry with them an implication of a corresponding right in the persons entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of such an authority. Juristically speaking power is correlative of a corresponding right in the aggrieved person. Thus the tribunal being empowered to award such compensation 'as it may deem fit', connotes a corresponding right, as a jural correlative, in the person injured to have, other things being a satisfied, such compensation awarded to him. This compensation has to be such as appears just to the tribunal in the circumstances of the case. I am unable to read any limitations either of express or implied character, into the sweep of the power which is conferred upon the tribunal by the plain and unambiguous language of Section 110-B.

90. The provisions of Chapter VIII noticed above interlace and intertwine. They produce a matrix which is clear. The scheme is that certain perils or risks have got to be compulsorily provided for by an insurance cover. These perils are those which arise out of the use of motor vehicles on a public road and which result in the injury of the description specified by the said provisions. This minimum compulsory insurable coverage is buttressed by the legal sanction under Section 95 (1) of the Act, which prohibits persons from using a motor vehicle without an insurance policy which provides for a minimum injury coverage contemplated by Section 95 (1) (b). The minimum insurance coverage carries with it an explicit obligation in the person involved to pay compensation, otherwise the whole meaning or the purpose or the intentment of minimum insurable coverage will be rendered nugatory. There is, thus, in my opinion, no warrant either in the language of the law or purpose of the law to whittle down the scope of the liability contemplated by the provisions of Chapter VIII of the said Act.

91. Several authorities were cited by Counsel for the insurer in support of his submissions. The learned counsel for the injured also called attention to several authorities which held to the contrary. The authorities cited at the Bar are the authorities for the propositions, whether the provisions of the Act are procedural in character or are substantive in character, and whether the provisions of the Act, particularly Chapter VIII thereof, are a Code contained in themselves. The said judgments reveal a cleavage of judicial opinion. The view taken by the High Courts of Punjab, Orissa and Madhya Pradesh is that the provisions relating to the constitution and the powers of tribunal contained in Chapter VIII are procedural in character and are not a complete Code in themselves. In the view of the said High Courts, the basis of liability under Section 110-B is to be found in the substantive provisions of Law of Torts or the Fatal Accidents Act. The two Division Benches of the Madras High Court in Mohammed Habibullah v. K. Seethammal, reported in 1966 Acc CJ 349 = (AIR 1967 Mad 123) and in Perumal v. G. Ellusamy Reddiar, reported in 1974 Acc CJ 182 (Mad), have also taken a similar view. As against it, the view of the Delhi High Court is that the said provisions are a self-contained Code. This view of the Delhi High Court is shared by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in M. A. Rahim v. Sayari Bai, reported in 1972 Acc CJ 470 = (AIR 1973 Mad 83).

92. It is unnecessary to refer to all the authorities or analyse observations made therein. It would however, be sufficient to consider a few which are comprehensive and are representative of the trends referred to above. In Ram Pertap v. General Manager, Punjab Roadways, Ambala, reported in AIR 1962 Punj 540, the single Judge of the Punjab High Court took the view that in a claim arising out of a motor accident before the Claims Tribunal, the tribunal has to determine the question of liability with reference to the Law of Torts. The learned Judge observed at page 542 as under:—

"It is true that Section 110-B of the Motor Vehicles Act does not in terms lay down that it is only when negligence on the part of the driver of the vehicle concerned is established that compensation can be awarded, but then it should be borne in mind that this bunch of Sections (110 to 110-F) merely deal with the subject of the substitution of Accidents Claims Tribunal in place of Civil Courts for the purpose of adjudicating on claims for compensation in respect of accidents involving the death or bodily injury to persons arising out of the use of motor vehicles. They do not deal with the question as to who is to be held liable and in what circumstances, if any injury results from an accident. In order, therefore, to discover the criterion or test for fixing liability, we have, in the absence of any statutory provisions fixing liability irrespective of negligence, to turn to the law of Torts according to which indisputably negligence in causing the accident in question is generally speaking essential to hold the negligent person liable."

93. It is not very clear from the judgment as to whether the Court in that case was called upon to decide the connotation of the expression "may make an award determining the amount which appears to it to be just" or whether attention was drawn to the scheme of the Act as unfolded by the relevant provisions of Chapter VIII or of the provisions of Chap. VI. There is no discussion as to the intendments or purpose of the Act or the pattern disclosed by the said provisions. The judgment proceeds on the assumption made that the fasciculus of the Sections 110 to 110-F merely deal with 'subject of substitution' of one forum for the other.

94. In Mangilal v. Parasram, reported in AIR 1971 Madh Pra 5, the Full Bench of the Madhya Pradesh noticed the aforesaid Judgment of the Punjab High Court and other Judgments in which it was followed. The Madhya Pradesh High Court took the view similar to the view taken by the Punjab High Court. The Full Bench of the Madhya Pradesh High Court did examine the provisions of Chapter VIII. It opined that Sections 94 to 96 provide for compulsory insurance of motor vehicles and lay down the liability of the insurer to pay the claimant directly. It also observed that Sections 110 to 110-F lay down the procedure for enforcement of substantive rights of the claimants as enlarged and circumscribed by Section 96. Notwithstanding the fact that the Full Bench noticed the "substantive rights" and 'enlargements', it took the view that the liability had yet to be governed by the principles of negligence of the owner and the driver. This view was taken upon the footing that the said provisions are mere indemnity provisions. The Full Bench then proceeded to observe at page 9 as follows:—

"However, the ingredients of the liability of the insurer are nowhere provided in this special statute. Necessarily, therefore, the aspect of the matter will be governed by the general substantive law, which remains untouched by this special law. We have already shown that it is on the contract of indemnity that the insurer is liable to pay compensation only if the insured is liable to pay damages to the claimant. If the insured is not liable, then the insurer is also not liable. In other words, the liability of the insurer depends upon the liability of the insured. Now, the liability direct or vicarious of the owner of a motor vehicle involved in an accident resulting in injury to, or death of, a third party, to pay damages arises from the law of torts. Under that law, negligence of the owner or driver is the sine qua non for such liability."

95. I respectfully dissent from the view taken by the Full Bench of the Madhya Pradesh High Court. As already seen above, the Scheme of Chapter VIII militates against the incorporation of Law of Torts as inhibiting factors or sole principles governing exclusively the question of compensation payable under the provisions of the Act. Such an interpretation detracts from the plain and unambiguous language of Section 110-B or whittles down the sweep of Tribunal's power thereunder. It renders the expression "compensation which appears to it to be just", otiose. There is no reason why the Legislature could not have used the expression "such compensation as is payable in law" if Law of Torts or other substantive provisions were intended to apply to cases of compensation under the Act. Furthermore, as will be seen later negligence as the sole basis of liability is a principle which of late has not found favour with several courts in England. In my respectful opinion the observations of the Chief Justice in the order of reference to the Full Bench, are more apposite and accord appropriately with the scheme of the Act as also the legal trends in vogue in the realm of torts.

96. In Perumal v. G. Ellusamy Reddiar, reported in 1974 Acc CJ 182, a Division Bench of the Madras High Court also took the view that the provisions of Sections 110 to 110-F, were procedural, and that the substantive provisions of law relating to determination of liability are to be found under the law of torts or the Fatal Accidents Act. The Division Bench dealt with the controversy as to whether the said provisions are complete Code. It referred to the judgment of the Supreme Court in M/s. Sheikhpura Transport Co. Ltd., (AIR 1971 SC 1624) (supra) where the said question was kept open. The said Division Bench held that the said provisions were procedural in character and were not a Code complete in themselves. According to it, the said provisions did not create any new rights. The Division Bench observed in para. 37 at pages 197 and 198 as follows.—

"One of the contentions raised on behalf of the appellants is that as Section 110-B of the Act speaks of the Tribunal making "an award determining the amount of compensation which appears to it to be just", the powers of the Tribunal are independent of the provisions of the Fatal Accidents Act (as well as that under the Legal Representatives' Suits Act) and that therefore the provisions of the Act must be construed as substantive provision and not merely procedural in character. This contention is fallacious. It is true that the Tribunal has to determine "the amount of compensation which appears to it to be just". But the question is, compensation for what. If it is a claim by an injured person, he can certainly claim compensation for the pain, suffering, etc., loss of earning, other pecuniary loss arising out of the injury and shortening of expectation of life, if any, provided the injury or injuries had been caused by a tortious act by the owner of the vehicle, by himself or vicariously. So, even though the Claims Tribunal is given power to determine the amount of compensation which appears to be just, it has necessarily to look to the law of torts in determining such 'just compensation'. Similarly, in case of death due to injuries just compensation awardable by the tribunal should naturally be only towards loss of benefit, if any, and loss of estate, if any provided again that the death was caused by a tortious act. Therefore, by the mere use of the words "compensation which appears to it to be just" in Section 110-B, the relevant provisions of the Act (Sections 110 to 110-F of the Act) cannot be said to create new rights or liabilities. It can never be contended that these provisions in the Act are in any way meant to alter or amend the pre-existing law relating to substantive rights and liabilities of the parties."

97. Dealing with an earlier Division Bench Judgment of the same High Court viz., M. A. Rahim, (AIR 1973 Mad 83) (Supra), the said Bench merely observed that "the learned Judges who decided M. A. Rahim v. Sayari Bai would not have made the observations if the decision of the earlier Bench in Mohammed Habibullah v. Seethammal, reported in 1966 Acc CJ 349 = (AIR 1967 Mad 123) was brought to their notice". There is no other discussion which goes to throw light on the scheme of the law as discussed above or the purposes and intendments which are disclosed in the relevant provisions of the Act.

98. With great respect I am unable to appreciate riders engrafted in para. 37 of the said judgment referred to above. In my opinion, it does not follow from the expression 'amount of compensation which appears to be just' that such compensation can be given only if "injury or injuries are caused by a tortious act of the owner of the vehicle". This amounts to reading something into Section 110-B, which is not there. It is an unjustified constraint on the width of the power envisaged by the said expression. What is a just compensation depends on the facts of a given case as appreciated by the tribunal. This appears to have been appreciated when it is observed "just compensation awardable by the Tribunal should normally be towards loss of benefit, if any and loss of estate if any". There is, however, no reasoning given as to why this loss has to be compensated subject to the proviso, "provided again that the death was caused by tortious act."

99. In my respectful opinion, the view taken by the Division Bench of the Madras High Court in M. A. Rahim v. Sayari Bai, (AIR 1973 Mad 83) (Supra) appears to lay down the law correctly on the subject. At page 477 the Division Bench considered Section 110-B and more particularly the expression 'the compensation which appears to it to be just'. Giving effect to said expression, the Division Bench in Rahim's case ruled that:

"It is enough to hold that the word 'just' in Section 110-B of the Motor Vehicles Act has been used in a very wide and comprehensive sense."

100. With respect, these observations are fortified by the dicta of the Supreme Court in Sheikhupura Transport Co. Ltd., (AIR 1971 SC 1624) (Supra) wherein the Supreme Court characterised jurisdiction under Section 110-B to be wide. That being the position, it is difficult to understand as to how the stubborn text of Section 110 can be bent to accord with an a priori, but fragile concept that all legal injuries can be compensated only upon the ground of negligence and not on the footing of absolute statutory liability or of being an insurable event covered by a policy of insurance in that behalf.

101. Counsel for the insurer calls attention to a judgment of the Supreme Court in New India Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Smt. Shanti Misra, reported in AIR 1976 SC 237, as an authority for the proposition that Section 110-B is merely a procedural section. Says the counsel that no substantive provisions can be read therein and that being so, the provisions of law of Torts or of the Fatal Accidents Act must be held to be applicable to cases arising under Chapter VIII of the Act. I am afraid, this is a mis-reading of the judgment of the Supreme Court.

102. In Shanti Mishra's case (AIR 1976 SC 237) (supra) an accident took place on 11th September, 1966. On the date of the accident no Claims Tribunal was constituted under Section 110 of the Act. The Claims Tribunal was constituted by a notification published in the gazette dated 18th March, 1967. The injured filed an application under Section 110-A on 8th July, 1967. The owner and the insurer objected to the jurisdiction of the tribunal to entertain the application. The objection having been overruled by the tribunal, the owner and the insurer filed a writ petition challenging the jurisdiction of the tribunal. The view taken by the High Court was that the tribunal had the jurisdiction to entertain the application. In the appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court the question which arose was as to whether the provisions of Sections 110-A and 110-F were retroactive in operation. No question as to the interpretation of Section 110-B arose before the Court. Dealing with the Section 110-A and Section 110-F the Supreme Court took the view that the said sections merely provided for a change of law of forum. It was in this context that the Supreme Court interpreted the said Sections 110-A and 110-F and held them to be procedural. The observations of the Supreme Court at page 240 para. 6 are as follows:—

"In our opinion in view of the clear and unambiguous language of Sections 110-A and 110-F it is not reasonable and proper to allow the law of change of forum give way to the bar of limitation provided in sub-section (3) of Section 110-A. It must be vice versa. The change of the procedural law of forum must be given effect to. The underlying principle of the change of law brought about by the amendment in the year 1956 was to enable the claimants to have a cheap remedy of approaching the Claims Tribunal on payment of a nominal Court-fee whereas a large amount of ad valorem court-fee was required to be paid in Civil Court. It is legitimate to think that the legislature did not think it necessary to affect the pending suits but wanted the cheap remedy to be available as soon as the tribunal was constituted by the State Government in all cases irrespective of the date of the accident, provided the remedy of going to the Court was not barred on the date of the constitution of the tribunal. Then how is the difficulty of limitation in such cases to be solved is the question."

103. With great respect, that is the exposition of law by Supreme Court relating only to Sections 110-A and 110-F of the Act. These observations are no authority for the propositions canvassed on behalf of the insurer. On the contrary, the dicta of the Supreme Court supports the converse. Respectfully paraphrasing it, it can be that in view of clear and unambiguous language of Section 110-B it must be said that the tribunal is empowered to award such compensation as it deems just. The language being clear and unambiguous, as the Supreme Court itself lays down, effect must be given thereto. The provisions of Section 110-B provide not merely for a cheap and expeditious remedy but also an effective remedy untrammelled by considerations of law of Tort or other laws.

104. In my opinion, the infirmity of the argument of the counsel for the insurer lies in his ignoring vital and effective distinction between the two concepts of law of compensation or law of liability, viz., the basis of liability and the extent of liability. However, the learned counsel cannot be blamed. McGregor on Damages, 13th Edn, page 51 summarises accurately the whole position in the following words:

"In considering the general problem of the limits of compensatory damages there arises first a difficulty which is never very far away in problem of damages but which is at this point at its most acute. This is the difficulty of distinguishing the question of the existence of a liability to pay damages from the question of the extent of a liability to pay damages. Strictly the first does not concern damages at all, but in dealing with the second it is very difficult to disentangle the two questions. This is the case far more in tort than in contract, and par excellence in the tort of negligence".

"The difficulties are increased by the fact that there is an overlapping of concepts, and the same problem may sometimes be dealt with as a question of existence of liability and sometimes as one of extent".

105. Even so these two concepts have to be treated separately because both in point of fact and as a matter of law they are separate and must always be kept separate.

106. In so far as the liability in regard to the claims arising from the accidents caused by the use of a motor vehicle is concerned, it arises, in my opinion, from the statutory provisions of the Act. This view, based upon a true construction of the relevant provisions of the Act, is also supported by the recent judicial trends in the field of law of Torts in England.

107. The English Law of Torts is not a codified law. It is what may be called a judicial law making. History of English Law of Torts shows the dynamic understanding of the Judges and their inclination to create new forms or categories to meet new situations. The controversy between Salmond on one hand and Winfield on the other, is academic.

Whether one or the other is correct is an issue that need not be gone into. Suffice it to notice that according to Dr. Street (On Torts, 5th Edn. at page 3):

"It is the function and purpose of the law of torts that are of greater import, and these are matters which can be explained in comparatively simple terms. The law of torts is concerned with those situations where the conduct of one party causes or threatens harm to the interests of other parties. It is accordingly the aim of the law of torts to adjust, once it is decided that some adjustment is to be made, those losses which must inevitably result from the ever-increasing activities of those who live in a common society. This adjustment is made by providing compensation for the harm suffered by those whose interests have been invaded owing to the conduct of others."

108. Thus the fundamental objective is to provide compensation for the harm suffered by those whose interests have been prejudiced and breached. This objective is in a large measure fulfilled by the laws of Scotland. In Scots Law this branch of law is known as reparation. It looks at the matter from the point of view of the victim. When the measure of damages is considered, the amount awarded is normally based solely on the extent of plaintiffs loss and the degree of defendants' fault is not taken into account (see Peter Stein and John Shand: Legal Values in Western Society; page 126). In England also the principles of volenti and of contributory negligence have been very much diluted as can be seen from 'rescue cases' (see Windfield and Jolowics on Tort: 9th Edn., pages 635-637).

109. An articulate exposition of these approaches is found in the dicta of Lord Denning M. R., in Dutton v. Bognor Regis United Building Co. Ltd., reported in (1972) 1 All ER page 462. It was a case of negligence. But it was novel in the sense that for the first time a claim was sought to be made against a district council or its surveyor for approval of plans of a building, which collapsed and resulted in an injury to the claimant. At page 475 observed Lord Denning, M. R.:

"This case is entirely novel. Never before has a claim been made against a council or its surveyor for negligence in passing a house. The case itself can be brought within the words of Lord Atkin in Donoghue v. Stevenson, (1932 AC 562); but it is a question whether we should apply them here. In Home Office v. Dorset Yatch Co., Ltd., (1970-2 All ER 294) Lord Reid said that the words of Lord Atkin expressed a principle which ought to apply in general unless there is some justification or valid explanation for its exclusion. So did Lord Pearson. But Lord Diplock spoke differently. He said that it was a guide but not a principle of universal application. It seems to me that it is a question of some policy which we, as Judges, have to decide. The time has come when in cases of new import, we should decide them according to the reason of the thing." (underlining mine).

110. It was this 'reason of the thing' which was held by Lord Denning M. R., to be the basis of the liability. This is very clear from the following observations found at page 475:

"In short, we look at the relationship of the parties; and then say as a matter of policy, on whom the loss should fall. What are the considerations of policy here? I will take them in order. First Mrs. Dutton has suffered a grievous loss. The house fell down without any fault of hers. She is in no position herself to bear the loss. Who ought in justice to bear it? I should think those who were responsible. Who are they? In the first place the builder was responsible. It was he who had laid the foundations so badly that the house fell down. In the second place, the Council's inspector was responsible. It was his job to examine the foundations to see if they would take the load of the house. He failed to do it properly. In the third place, the council should answer for his failure. They were entrusted by Parliament with the task of seeing that houses were properly built. They received public funds for the purpose. The very object was to protect purchasers and occupiers of houses. Yet, they failed to protect them. Their shoulders are broad enough to bear the loss."

111. Another decision of Lord Denning, M. R., is more apposite to the facts of the present case. (Nettleship v. Weston, reported in (1971) 3 All ER 581). This was a case which related to an accident where a learner driver and a passenger who was teaching driving were involved. At page 586, Lord Denning, M. R. observed that:

"The high standard thus imposed by the Judges is, I believe, largely the result of the policy of the Road Traffic Acts. Parliament requires every driver to be insured against third-party risks. The reason is so that a person injured by a motor car should not be left to bear the loss on his own, but should be compensated out of the insurance fund. The fund is better able to bear it than he can. But the injured person is only able to recover if the driver is liable in law. So the Judges see to it that he is liable, unless he can prove care and skill of a high standard. See the Merchant Prince. (1892) P 179) and Handerson v. Henry E. Jenkins and Sons Ltd., (1969-3 All ER 756). Thus we are in this branch of the law moving away from the concept, 'No liability without fault'. We are beginning to apply the test; On whom should the risk fall? Morally the learner driver is not at fault; but legally she is liable to be because she is insured and the risk should fall on her". (Emphasis by me).

112. Thus upon the authority of an eminent English Judge it is seen that Courts give effect not only to policy of law but also create new forms of law to meet justice in a given situation. In the Nettleship's case (1971-3 All ER 581) Lord Denning rested his judgment not merely on the policy of the Road Traffic Act but also on the principle that 'the Lady being insured and the insurance having covered the said risk,' the liability ought to be determined upon the said footing. Thus the policy of law and the fact of the insurance converged to provide the legal basis for compensation in respect of the accident arising out of the use of the motor vehicle on a public road.

113. In my opinion, if that is the position of the English law, where the principles of Torts of negligence are admittedly applicable, stronger becomes the case where detailed provisions are made by an Act of a competent Legislature. The Act makes detail provisions enumerating duties of a driver of a motor vehicle. It makes elaborate provisions for an insurance coverage. It makes departure in several respects from the law of Torts and other laws. It provides for a cheap and expeditious remedy by tribunals constituted to hear motor accident claims. It must be held to be the policy of the Act that tribunals must award 'just compensation' for death or bodily injury or damages to property. This salutary jurisdiction and the content of its glorious power cannot be denuded by inhibiting factors obtaining in other fields of substantive law. There is [no warrant for undermining the said provisions or policies enshrined therein.

114. In these circumstances I concur in the view taken by my learned brother that upon a true construction of the provisions of Chapter VIII the fact of an injury resulting from an accident involving the use of a car on a public road is the basis of the liability. It determines the liability. In connection with the said liability, the tribunal has to award a 'just compensation' that is the compensation which appears to it 'just' in the facts and circumstances of the case. In such a case the cause of action is breach of statutory obligations imposed by the Act and the damage that has been caused to the injured. 'The quantification of damages' as observed by Lord Greer 'is not an essential part of the cause of action': Monk v. Warby, (1935) 1 KB 75 at p. 83 (supra). This however, would not mean that the principles of law of Torts or the principles enshrined in the provisions of Fatal Accidents Act, are wholly irrelevant. These principles as indeed all other relevant legal principles impinging on the facts of a given case, will enter the judicial mind in the matter of determination of the extent of compensation in cases arising out of accidents. In other words, they along with other relevant principles would be factors which will have to be borne in mind by the tribunal while deciding the extent of liability in cases of accidents involving bodily injury, death or damages to property. This is a conclusion that follows from the interpretation of the provisions of the Act seen in its historical and humanistic perspective. P. C.

115. In view of our above judgment, we pass the following orders.

(1) First Appeal No. 449 of 1975 is dismissed with costs.

(2) The award passed by the Tribunal is confirmed but the appellant-insurance Company is given liberty to apply on depositing Rs. 20,000/- with interest as ordered in the award from the date of the application to the date of the deposit, for not issuing a certificate, against the insurance Company under Section 110-E for the balance of the amount awarded on the ground that the liability of the insurance Company is limited to Rs. 20,000/- under Section 95 (2) or the amount for which the Insurance Company has issued the policy, whichever is higher.

(3) The tribunal to decide the question of the liability of the insurance company on its application for the said purpose under Section 110-E after giving an opportunity to all the parties.

(4) The Insurance Company to pay the costs of all the parties hitherto incurred and hereafter to be incurred.

(5) Dr. Balkrishna Nayan or his Advocate is at liberty to withdraw Rupees 20,000/- with interest if any when deposited by the Insurance Company as stated above.

(6) What is stated above shall not in any manner prejudice the right of Dr. Balkrishna Nayan to recover the balance of the award amount from the other party or from the Insurance Company subject to what is stated above.

Ordered accordingly.

L. Mohta, for Petitioner; M. A. Garud, Asstt. Govt. Pleader (for Nos. 1 to 3) and B. N. Mohta (for No. 4), for Respondents.

ORDER:— The Petitioner's husband died in the month of June 1975. He had no issue. The agricultural property which the petitioner's husband had was his self-acquired property. The total holding was about 81 acres 3 gunthas. During the lifetime of late Govind Juvekar, the husband of the petitioner, he executed a registered will on 25-4-1973. By the said will the deceased bequeathed 35 acres of land to his nephew Prabhakar Narayan Juvekar, respondent No. 4 to this petition. After the death of deceased Govind Juvekar in June, 1975, the said nephew became owner of the said property and is also in possession thereof. Thus it is the case of the petitioner that even before the commencement date i.e., 2-10-1975, of the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Lowering of Ceiling on Holdings) and (Amendment) Act, 1972, referred to hereinafter as the Amending Act, 35 acres of Land was in possession of his nephew, namely, Prabhakar Narayan Juvekar. In spite of this, the said land was counted in the holding of the petitioner by the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal as well as the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal.

2. It appears that Prabhakar Narayan Juvekar had filed his independent return under Section 12 of the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961, referred to hereinafter as the Ceiling Act. He included this land in his holding. The said proceedings were ultimately dropped, because it was found that he was not holding land in excess of the ceiling area. So far as the case of the petitioner is concerned, such a plea in specific terms was raised before the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal. However, the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal came to the conclusion that the will was executed by the deceased after 26-9-1970 and, therefore, the same is invalid in the eyes of law in view of Section 10 of the Ceiling Act. Ultimately, therefore, the said land was counted in the holding of the petitioner and the land measuring 23 acres 13 gunthas was declared as surplus out of her total holding.

3. Being aggrieved by this order, the petitioner filed an appeal before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. The learned Member of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal agreed with this finding recorded by the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal. In this view of the matter, the appeal filed by the petitioner was dismissed. It is these orders which are challenged before me.

4. Shri L. Mohta, the learned counsel for the petitioner, contended before me that the will executed by deceased Govind Juvekar on 25-4-1973 is not a 'transfer' within the meaning of the said term as defined in Explanation to Section 8 of the Act. According to Shri Mohta, the same meaning will have to be given to the said term even in Section 10 of the Ceiling Act. If this is so, it being not a transfer effected after 26-9-1970 and prior to the commencement date, it was not obviously covered by Section 10 (1) of the Ceiling Act. He, therefore, further contended that this land could not have been included in the holding of the petitioner, more so when late Govind Juvekar died on 20th June, 1975, even before the commencement date of the Amending Act.

5. On the other hand, it is contended by Shri Garud, the learned Assistant Government pleader, that the words used in Explanation to Section 8, namely, 'any other disposition' will obviously cover even the testamentary dispositions. According to him, all types of dispositions are included in the definition as given in this Explanation to Section 8 of the Ceiling Act. Therefore, the disposition of the property by virtue of a will is also covered by the said definition. In this view of the matter, the authorities below were right in ignoring the said transfer, it being hit by Section 10 (1) and thereby including the said 35 acres of land in the holding of the petitioner. He further contended that there is no material on record to record a finding that after the death of deceased Govind on 30th June, 1975, respondent No. 4 Prabhakar Juvekar was put in possession of the said land and it is he who was holding the said land on the commencement date.

6. In the present case I am concerned with a will which was executed and became operative by virtue of the death of testator prior to the commencement date itself, namely 2-10-1975. The cases where a person comes into possession of land under a will, that is, by testamentary disposition, are covered by the provisions of Section 10 (2) of the Ceiling Act. However, in this case I am not concerned with such a controversy, because petitioner Vimalabai has not acquired this land by virtue of a will. The will is executed in favour of Prabhakar and it is he who is claiming the said land and in fact has shown it in his holding. The case of the petitioner is that the said land cannot be included in her holding, because she was not holding the same on the commencement date.

7. For properly appreciating the controversy raised before me, it will be necessary to make a reference to the relevant provisions of the Ceiling Act. Section 3 of the Ceiling Act deals with prohibition on holding land in excess of the ceiling area. Then Section 4 of the Ceiling Act deals with the land held by a family unit. Section 5 lays down the ceiling area and then comes Section 8 which lays down restrictions on transfers. Section 3 as a whole reads as under:

"8. Where a person, or as the case may be, a family unit holds land in excess of the ceiling area on or after the commencement date, such person, or as the case may be, any member of the family unit shall not, on and after that date, transfer any land, until the land in excess of the ceiling area is determined under this Act.

Explanation — In this section 'transfer' means transfer, whether by way of sale, gift, mortgage with possession, exchange, lease, assignment of land for maintenance, surrender of a tenancy or resumption of land by a landlord or any other disposition, whether by act of parties made inter vivos or by decree or order of a court, tribunal or authority (except where such decree or order is passed in a proceeding which is instituted in such court, tribunal or before such authority before 26th day of September, 1970), but does not include transfer by way of sale or otherwise of land for the recovery of land revenue or for sums recoverable as arrears of land revenue, or acquisition of land revenue, or acquisition of land for a public purpose under any law for the time being in force."

Then comes Section 9 of the Act which deals with the restriction on acquisition of land in excess of ceiling area. Section 9 lays down that no person or a member of a family unit shall at any time, on or after the commencement date, acquire by transfer any land if he or as the case may be the family unit already holds land in excess of the ceiling area or land which together with any other land already held by such person, or as the case may be, the family unit, will exceed in the total the ceiling area. By an Explanation to this section it is clarified that in this section also the word "transfer" has the same meaning as in Section 8. Then comes Section 10 which deals with the consequences of certain transfers and acquisitions of land. Section 10 of the Ceiling Act reads as under:—

"10 (1) If—

(a) any person or a member of a family unit, after the 26th day of September 1970, but before the commencement date, transfers any land in anticipation of or in order to avoid or defeat the object of the Amending Act, 1972, or

(b) any land is transferred in contravention of Section 8, then in calculating the ceiling area which that person, or as the case may be, the family unit, is entitled to hold, the land so transferred shall be taken into consideration, and the land exceeding the ceiling area so calculated shall be deemed to be in excess of the ceiling area for that holding, notwithstanding that the land remaining with him or with the family unit may not in fact be in excess of the ceiling area.

If by reason of such transfer, the holding a person, or as the case may be, of the family unit is less than the area so calculated to be in excess of the ceiling area, then all the land of the person, or as the case may be, the family unit shall be deemed to be surplus land; and out of the land so transferred and in possession of the transferee unless such land is liable to forfeiture under the provisions of sub-section (3), land to the extent of such deficiency shall, subject to rules made in that behalf, also be deemed to be surplus land, notwithstanding that the holding of the transferee may not in fact be in excess of the ceiling area.

Explanation — For the purposes of clause (a) 'transfer' has the same meaning as in Section 8. All transfers made after the 26th day of September, 1970, but before the commencement date, shall be deemed (unless the contrary is proved) to have been made in anticipation of or in order to avoid or defeat the object of the Amending Act, 1972.

Explanation — For the purposes of this sub-section, a transfer shall not be regarded as made on or before 26th September, 1970, if the document evidencing the transfer is not registered on or before that date or where it is registered after that date, it is not presented for registration on or before the said date.

(2) If any land is possessed on or after the commencement date by a person, or as the case may be, a family unit in excess of the ceiling area, or if as a result of acquisition (by testamentary disposition, or devolution on death, or by operation of law) of any land on or after that date, the total area of land held by any person, or as the case may be, a family unit, exceeds the ceiling area, the land so in excess shall be surplus land.

(3) Where land is acquired in wilful contravention of Section 9, then as a penalty therefor, the right, title and interest of the person, or as the case may be, the family unit or any member thereof in the land so acquired or obtained shall subject to the provisions of Chapter IV, be forfeited, and shall vest without any further assurance in the State Government.

Provided that, where such land is burdened with an encumbrance, the Collector may, after holding such inquiry as he thinks fit and after hearing the holder and the person in whose favour the encumbrance is made by him, direct that the right, title and interest of the holder in some other land of the holder equal in extent to the land acquired in wilful contravention of Section 9, shall be forfeited to Government."

From the bare reading of this section, it is also clear that for the purposes of clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 10 of the Ceiling Act, the word 'transfer' has the same meaning as in Section 8. Then the section also raises a statutory fiction as well as a statutory presumption, relating to transfers effected between 26-9-1970 and the commencement date. Therefore, from the bare reading of these various provisions of the Ceiling Act it is quite obvious that the ceiling area of a person or a family unit is to be fixed with reference to the commencement date, i.e., 2-10-1975. The prohibition or restriction imposed by Section 8 or Section 9 of the Ceiling Act becomes operative from the commencement date, namely 2-10-1975. Even a sale or a transfer by a member of a family unit is intended to be brought within the mischief of Section 10 of Ceiling Act, though for a limited purpose. In the present case, the will was executed by the husband of the petitioner on 25-4-1973 in favour of Prabhakar and he became the holder of 35 acres of land with effect from 30th June, 1975 itself when the husband of the petitioner died. Therefore, the only question which requires consideration in this petition is to find out as to whether the definition of the word 'transfer' as given in Explanation to Section 8 of the Ceiling Act will include in its import testamentary dispositions like a will.

8. While defining the term 'Transfer' in the Explanation to Section 8 of the Ceiling Act, all types of transfers are sought to be included in the definition. The words used, namely, 'any other disposition' will obviously mean all types of dispositions of land and cannot be read as ejusdem generis. I had an occasion to deal with this aspect of the matter in Gulabrao v. State of Maharashtra, (Special Civil Application No. 3525 of 1976 decided on 30th September, 1976/1st October 1976*). But it does not appear to be the intention of the legislature that it wanted to include in this definition even the involuntary or testamentary dispositions of property which are not made by act of parties inter vivos. It is no doubt true that while defining the word 'transfer' the legislature has in its import included sale, gift, mortgage with possession, exchange, lease, assignment of land for maintenance, surrender of a tenancy or resumption of land by a landlord or any other disposition, whether by act of parties made inter vivos or by decree or order of a court, tribunal or authority though the transfers otherwise for recovery of land revenue etc., have been excluded from the said import. Therefore, if this definition of word "transfer" as given in the Explanation to Section 8 is read as a whole and in its context it is quite obvious that only those assignment or dispositions of property which are the result of act of parties and are made inter vivos or the decree or order of the Court alone are covered by definition.

9. We also get an internal evidence in this behalf from other provisions of the Ceiling Act itself. By Section 9 of the Ceiling Act a restriction is imposed on the acquisition of land in excess of the ceiling area. In Section 9 also the legislature has used the words "acquire by transfer." By Explanation to this section the word "transfer" is given same meaning as is given to the said word in section 8 of the Ceiling Act. If any person or a member of a family unit acquires land by transfer on or after the commencement date, and if the said person or family unit is already holding land in excess of the ceiling area, or by this acquisition will hold land in excess thereof then the consequences as laid down by sub-section (3) of Section 10 must follow by necessary implication. In sub-section (2) of Section 10 the Legislature has only used the word "acquisition" and then in the bracket the position is clarified by using the words testamentary disposition or devolution on death, or by operation of law. In this sub-section the word "transfer" is not used by the legislature. This clearly indicates that though a person can acquire land by testamentary disposition or devolution on death, or by operation of law, it cannot be termed to be an acquisition by transfer as contemplated by Section 9 or Explanation to Section 8 of the Ceiling Act. This position is further clarified by the legislature in Section 18 of the Ceiling Act. Section 18 of the Ceiling Act reads as under:

"18. On the day fixed for hearing under Sec. 14, or on any other day or days to which the inquiry is adjourned, the Collector shall, after hearing the holder and other persons interested and who are present and any evidence adduced consider the following matters, that is to say.

(a) What is the total area of land which is held by the holder on the 26th day of September 1970;

(b) Whether any land transferred between the period from the 26th day of September 1970 and commencement date, or any land partitioned after the 26th day of September, 1970, should be considered or ignored in calculating the ceiling area as provided by sub-section (1) of Section 10 or Section 11;

(bb) whether the holder has any share in the land held by a family or held or operated by any co-operative society or held jointly with others or held as a partner in a firm; and the extent of such share;

(c) what is the total area of land held by the holder on the commencement date;

(d) whether any transfer or partition of land is made by the holder in contravention of Section 8 or 11 and if so, whether the land so transferred or partitioned should be considered or ignored in calculating the ceiling area under the provisions of sub-section (1) of Section 10 or Section 11?

(e) whether any land has been acquired or possessed on or after the commencement date by transfer or by partition?

(f) whether any land has been acquired on or after the commencement date by testamentary disposition, devolution on death or by operation of law?

(g) what is the total area of land held at the time of the enquiry, and what is the area of land which the holder is entitled to hold?

(h) whether any land is held by the holder as tenant, and if so, whether his landlord has a subsisting right of resumption of the land for personal cultivation under the relevant tenancy law applicable thereto?

(i) whether any land held by the holder is to be forfeited to Government under sub-section (3) of Section 10, or of Section 13, or should be deemed to be surplus land under any of the provisions of this Act?

(j) whether the proposed retention of land by the holder is in conformity with the provision of Section 16?

(k) which particular land out of the total land by the holder should be delimited as surplus land?

(l) any other matter which in the opinion of the Collector, is necessary to be considered for the purpose of calculating the ceiling area, and delimiting any surplus land."

Clause (e) of Section 18 enjoins a duty upon the collector to verify as to whether any land has been acquired by the person or family unit as the case may be, on or after the commencement date by transfer or by partition. Then by clause (f) the Collector is further enjoined to find out as to whether any land has been acquired on or after the commencement date by testamentary disposition, devolution on death or by operation of law. In clause (f) the word "transfer" is not used. Therefore, this acquisition of property by virtue of the testamentary disposition, or devolution on death or operation of law is not equated by the legislature with the acquisition of property by transfer. This clearly indicates the legislative intention.

10. Normally the testamentary disposition is not included in the word "transfer" as used in Section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act. Section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act deals with the transfers of properties which are by act of parties made inter vivos. If Sec. 9 of the ceiling Act is read in this context it appears that if the meaning as attributed by Shri Garud is given to the word "transfer" as defined in Explanation to Section 8, it will obviously result in hardship and inconvenience not intended by the legislature. If by testamentary disposition a person acquires a land and to such acquisition Section 9 was to apply, then the result will be that under subsec. (3) of Section 19 of the Act the said land can be forfeited of course subject to the provisions of Chapter IV, and consequently shall vest without any further assurance in State Government and that too for no fault of the person who gets this land under a will. The will or testamentary disposition being not a transfer of disposition of the property by act of parties made inter vivos, a person will be penalised for the act of somebody else to which he was never a party. In my opinion, this was never the intention of the legislature. If this was the intention of the legislature, the legislature would not have used a different phraseology in Sec. 10 (2) and (3) of the Ceiling Act or Section 18 (e) and (f) of the said Act. As already observed, the phraseology used in these sections is indicative of the legislative intention.

11. As to what is the nature of the disposal of immovable property by a will is by now well settled. In this context a reference could be usefully made to the Full Bench decision of Jammu and Kashmir High Court in Lala Devi Dass v. Pannalal, (AIR 1959 J. & K. 62). After making a detailed reference to a Full Bench decision of Madras High Court in Jamindar of Bhadrachalam v. Venkatadri Appa Rao, (AIR 1922 Mad 457) and to a decision of Oudh High Court in Surendra Vikram Singh v. Munia Kunwar, (AIR 1944 Oudh 65), the Full Bench of the Jammu and Kashmir High Court ultimately observed as under:

"Disposal of immovable property by will would not amount to a transfer inasmuch as the property does not pass on to the donee at the time the will is executed. It is merely an intention expressed by the testator with respect to his property that after his death it should devolve on the donee. In my opinion, therefore, there is no specific provision in law prohibiting the disposal of immovable property other than the land as defined in the Land Alienation Act, by will in favour of a non-State subject and such a will cannot be held to be invalid."

In this context reference could usefully be made to the following observations of the Supreme Court in Mohd. Ismail v. Sabir Ali, (AIR 1962 SC 1722):

"Incidentally we may add that use of the words 'inter vivos' in the definition of the word 'transfer' merely emphasises that the transfer must be effective during the lifetime of the transferor as contrasted with a transfer by will which takes effect on the death of transferor." In my opinion, these observations will apply to the present definition also.

12. This Court had also an occasion to consider this aspect of the matter in the context of the provisions of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, in Daulat Awachit v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, (1965 Mah LJ (Note) No. 6). While construing the word 'transfer' used in Section 38 (7) of the said Act, the Division Bench of this Court held that the word 'transfer' as occurring in Section 38 (7) does not include acquisition of interest under a testamentary disposition like a will. In my opinion, as already observed, the transfers which are by act of parties made inter vivos or as a result of a decree or an order of a Court, Tribunal or authority etc., alone are covered by the said term as defined in Explanation to Section 8 of the Ceiling Act. It will not include the testamentary disposition of the property not made inter vivos.

13. In the present case the will was executed on 25-4-1973 and deceased Govind died on 30th June, 1975, even before the commencement date. The certified copies of the crop-statements were produced before me by the learned counsel for the respondent No. 4 relating to the land in question from which it appears that the respondent No. 4 entered into possession of the land immediately after the death of late Govind and was holding the same on the commencement date. In the return filed on behalf of the respondent No. 4 he had further stated that besides the aforesaid agricultural property some house property was also given to him and he came in possession of the said property and become owner thereof in his own right. He has also clarified the position that he was the head of his family. He filed a return under Section 12 of the Ceiling Act and had shown the said land in his holding as it was held by him on commencement date, but as the total members in his family unit were more than 5, in the said proceedings it was decided that he was not a surplus holder and, therefore, ultimately the proceedings were dropped. Thus in fact this land was shown in the holding of the respondent No. 4 and was counted in his holding in the proceedings instituted under the Ceiling Act qua his family unit.

14. In this view of the matter, in my opinion, the authorities below committed an error in coming to the conclusion that in spite of the fact that the lands were in possession of the respondent No. 4 by virtue of a will executed by deceased Govind on 25-4-1973 even before the commencement date, the same could be counted in the holding of petitioner Vimalabai, who inherited the other property of Govind under the Hindu Succession Act. On the commencement date an area of 35 acres was obviously in lawful and actual possession of the respondent No. 4 as an owner thereof and, therefore, it could not have been counted in the holding of the petitioner.

15. It is not disputed before me that if this area of 35 acres of land is excluded from the holding of the petitioner, then she was obviously not the surplus holder.

16. In this view of the matter, the Special Civil Application is allowed. The rule is made absolute and the orders passed by the authorities below are quashed and set aside. However, in the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Application allowed.

*(To quash order of Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Nagpur, in ceiling Appeal No. ALC-A-1140 of 1976.)

LT/AU/E805/76/SSB/WNG

ORDER:— The only point that arises for determination in this petition is regarding the number of members in the family falling under the definition of 'family unit' as given under Section 4 (1) of the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961 as amended, (hereinafter called the New Act). The petitioner was taken as holding in all the lands measuring 84 acres and 23 gunthas. Pot Kharab of 4 acres was allowed so that the land for the purposes of determining the ceiling area was taken as 80 acres 23 gunthas. On the basis of 6 members in the family he was allowed to retain 60 acres so that 15 acres 23 gunthas was declared as surplus.

2. The decision of the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal was maintained by the Revenue Tribunal, but on a slightly different reasoning as will be evident later on. In challenging the decision of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, the petitioner had taken two points, one about the members in the family unit and other about the pot kharab. It was contended that pot kharab was 18.97 acres. However, at the time of hearing the point regarding the pot kharab was not pressed.

3. As regards the members in the family unit, the petitioner has two wives, two minor daughters, one minor son on the date the return was filed and one more minor son was born to his wife on 2-2-1976. According to the petitioner, therefore, the family unit consisted of 7 persons inclusive of the child in the womb so that there were four minors, two spouses and the petitioner himself. The Surplus Land Determination Tribunal proceeded on the basis of the unit consisting of 6 persons disallowing the submission of the petitioner that the child born on 2-2-1976 ought to be counted as a member of the family unit. In deciding the appeal the contention of the petitioner that the child in the womb should be looked upon as a member of the family unit was accepted but the Tribunal has taken the unit as consisting of 6 members only because in the estimation of the Tribunal the two wives are to be counted as one member for the purposes of family unit. It appears that in appeal a specific objection was not raised on behalf of the State contending that the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal erred in counting the two wives but since the Tribunal has given the decision, that point also will have to be looked into.

4. Although in the judgment of the learned Tribunal dated 10th of June, 1976, the child born on 2-2-1976 has been looked upon as a member of the family unit in accepting the same a useful reference could be made to the decision in Raghunath v. State of Maharashtra, (1975 Mah LJ 603) where a child born in a joint family subsequent to the appointed day, namely, 26-1-1962 and therefore, the child who was in the womb on the appointed day was considered as a member of the joint family. The principle of this ruling applies to the amended Act also. That is because under the unamended Act the return was to be filed under Section 12 of the unamended act where the relevant period was 4th August, 1959, and the appointed day as per the definition in the definition in cl. 2 (4) was 26th of January, 1962. Under the New Act the return is to be filed under the amended Section 12 and the relevant period is 26th day of September 1970 and the commencement date, namely 2-10-1975 as per the definition contained in Section 2, clause (6A). The finding given by the Revenue Tribunal for counting the son born on 2-2-1976 as a member of the family unit is, therefore, unassailable.

5. So far as the question regarding the two wives being counted as one, discussion could usefully be prefaced by the citation of the two clauses in Section 4 (1) which runs as follows:

"(4) (1)"

Explanation: A "family unit" means,—
(a) a person and his spouse (or more than one spouse) and their minor sons and minor unmarried daughter if any; or

(b) where any spouse is dead, the surviving spouse or spouses, and the minor sons and minor unmarried daughters; or

Clause (c) may not be looked into. The learned Honorary Assistant Government Pleader Mr. Deshpande maintained that the Tribunal was right in looking upon the two wives as one because in the contemplation of the Act a person and his one spouse only are to be looked as members of the family unit. He invites my attention to the bracket covering the words "or more than one spouse". According to him, therefore, a spouse or more than one spouse are as if equated so that between themselves they can be looked upon as one member only. He contends that if the spouses who are more than one were to be counted as individual members, the object could very well have been achieved without the bracket. I am not inclined to accept this construction. In the first place, if more than one spouses were not to be counted as separate individual members, the effect could have been achieved without mentioning the words which occur in the bracket. Secondly, if we try to construe clause (a) without the bracket, there is a possibility of the clause, as it would then stand, including a minor son of a spouse brought to the family but born from some other husband having been looked upon as member of the family, and that too by reason of the express mentioning of it. In order to do away with such a possibility and in order to indicate that the minor son should be their son that is born of the person and his spouse the bracket may well have been introduced.

6. Thirdly it can also be seen that under clause (b) of Section 4 (1) the surviving spouse or spouses and the minor sons and minor unmarried daughters are looked upon as members of the family. If the contention of Mr. Deshpande is correct we should have expected a similar bracket in clause (b) for covering the words "or spouses". Since such a bracket is absent it seems more than one living spouses could be separately looked upon as members of the family unit under Section 4 (1) (b) of the Act.

7. This conclusion can be supported on another reasoning also. Under clause (1) of Section 4 land held by each member of the family unit has to be clubbed together in counting the holding of the family unit. Now if there are two spouses each owning land separately, nay in fact being the separate property of each such spouse, it cannot be suggested that since the spouses are one member, property of this or that spouse, or of both in certain proportion can alone be clubbed. The property of both would have to be reckoned for calculation thus illustrating that they are to be regarded as separate individual members.

8. In this context perhaps it would be useful to observe that the situation where more than one spouse are living would not be one of frequent occurrence among Hindus who are presumed to be majority of land holders in Maharashtra by reason of the Bombay Prevention of Hindu Bigamous Marriages Act (Act No. 25 of 1946) and the subsequent Act of 1955 (Act No. 25 of 1955). A Hindu would not be having 2 spouses by marriage after 1946. The application of the clause relating to two spouses could therefore only be to those individual spouses who had married before 1946 and who could, therefore, be in a pretty advanced age. It does not appear that the Legislature could have intended to exclude such of those spouses who may now be living. The same would be the result among the landholders who by reason of their personal law are subjected to monogamy.

9. In the circumstances, I feel all living spouses are to be looked upon as individual members and the benefit of Section 6 of the Ceiling Act if any will have to be given to the family unit if thereby the number of members in the family exceeds five. In view of it the construction put by the Revenue Tribunal cannot at all be accepted. The petitioner must get the benefit of calculations on the basis of the 7 members in the family unit so that his surplus to be surrendered would be much less than what is at present estimated. If this is so, he will have to give a fresh choice for surrendering the requisite land. Hence I pass the following orders.

10. The rule is made absolute. The order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal on 10-6-1976 is quashed. The matter is remanded back to the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal for making calculations on the basis of 7 members of the family unit of the petitioner and for declaring the surplus on that basis. In the circumstances of the case, no order as to costs.

Case remanded.

Special Civil Appln. No. 3280 of 1976, D/- 26-8-1976.*

(A) Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act (5 of 1962), Section 68-A — Election of Chairman — Dispute as to validity — Collector can raise such a dispute suo motu.

It is obvious from the bare reading of Section 68-A of the Act that in the event of a dispute as to the validity of the election of a Chairman or Deputy Chairman of Panchayat Samiti, not only any member of the Panchayat Samiti, but even the Collector or any officer authorised by him in this behalf can refer the said dispute within 30 days from the date of election to the Commissioner for decision. Therefore, in terms, this section confers a power upon the Collector to refer a dispute in this behalf to the Commissioner. (Para 4)

(B) Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act (5 of 1962), Ss. 75 (2), 67 and 112 — Casual vacancies in the offices of the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of Panchayat Samiti — Meeting called for electing Chairman — Provisions of Section 67 (and not of Section 75 (1)) apply — Meeting called by Block Development Officer under the direction of Chief Executive Officer of Zilla Parishad — Election whether valid.

It is clear from the various provisions of the Act that to the meeting convened for the purpose of electing a Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, it is the provisions of Section 67 which shall apply and not the provisions of the Section 75 (1) of the Act. (Para 5)

As per provisions of Section 67 it is the Collector or the Officer authorised by him, who alone can convene the meeting. Where the meeting was not convened by the Collector or the Officer authorised by him, but it was convened by the Block Development Officer, who had acted under the direction of the Chief Ex. Officer of the Zilla Parishad who is not a Collector of the district, obviously the meeting was not called by the person authorised to call the meeting, namely, the Collector or the Officer authorised by him. The meeting called is illegal ab initio and the election held at such a meeting is also illegal. (Paras 6, 13, 14)

The meeting contemplated by Section 67 of the Act is special in nature.

(Para 12)

When the statute itself indicates the authority which must call such a statutory meeting, then that authority alone is competent to convene the meeting. If the meeting is not convened by the competent authority then it is not merely a defect or irregularity in calling the meeting but is an illegality which goes to the root of the matter. It involves a question of authority, power and jurisdiction. If the person calling the meeting has no jurisdiction to call it, then the meeting called by him is illegal ab initio. Such an illegality is not covered by Section 112 of the Act, Case law discussed,

B. R. Mandlekar, for Petitioner; V. P. Salve, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for Respondents 1 to 3; M. N. Ingle, for the Objector.

DHARMADHIKARI, J.:— The petitioner in this case was elected as a Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, Balapur, in an election held in the meeting of the Panchayat Samiti on 4th April, 1975. One Shri J. H. Sarap, who was the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, tendered his resignation on 6-3-1975 and Vice-Chairman Shri Idhol also tendered his resignation on 5-3-1975. On account of these resignations vacancies in the offices of Chairman and Vice-Chairman were declared and thereafter the Chief Executive Officer, Zilla Parishad, Akola by exercising his powers under sub-section (1) of Sec. 75 of Maharashtra Zilla Parishads and Panchayat Samitis Act, 1961, referred to hereinafter as the Act, had chosen one Shri G. P. Patil, who was then working as the Chairman of the subject committee of the Zilla Parishad, to exercise the powers and perform the duties of the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti till the election of the Chairman takes place. Thereafter it appears from the record that the Chief Executive Officer directed the Block Development Officer, Panchayat Samiti, Balapur, to convene a meeting to fill in the vacancy of the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti. According to the petitioner, this was done by the Chief Executive Officer by virtue of the power vested in him under Section 75 read with Section 64 of the Act. In pursuance of this notice issued by the Block Development Officer a meeting took place on 4th April, 1975. All the members of the Panchayat Samiti participated and voted in the said meeting and the petitioner was declared elected as the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, as he obtained majority of votes. According to the petitioner, none of the members objected to the validity of convening of the meeting, nor they raised any dispute in this behalf. After the election was over, the Block Development Officer, Balapur requested the Collector, Akola to notify the name of the petitioner as per provisions of Section 9 of the Act. However, the Collector raised a dispute in this behalf and ultimately made a reference to the Commissioner, Nagpur Division, Nagpur under Section 68-A of the Act. The Commissioner, Nagpur Division, Nagpur, vide his order dated 11-12-1975 came to the conclusion that the meeting held was illegal and consequently the election of the petitioner as the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti held in the said meeting is also illegal. He, therefore, set aside the said election and directed the Chief Executive Officer, Akola to report the vacancy in the office of the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, Balapur, to the Collector, Akola.

2. Being aggrieved by this order passed by the Commissioner, Nagpur Division, Nagpur, the petitioner filed an appeal before the State Government under Section 68-A of the Act. The said appeal was dismissed by the State Government vide its order dated 1st June, 1976. Against these orders the present writ petition has been filed by the petitioner.

3. Shri Mandlekar, the learned counsel for the petitioner, contended before us that the order passed by the Commissioner, Nagpur Division, is without jurisdiction as nobody has raised a dispute challenging the election of the petitioner and the Collector had no power, authority or jurisdiction to raise such a dispute suo motu. He also contended that the meeting convened by the Chief Executive Officer by virtue of the power vested in him under Section 75 (1) of the Act is perfectly legal and valid. Even otherwise, even if it is assumed that there was any defect or irregularity in convening of the meeting then also the said defect or irregularity cannot vitiate the proceedings of the meeting in which the petitioner was elected as the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, in view of the provisions of Section 112 read with S. 118 of Act. According to Shri Mandlekar, the said defect or irregularity in convening the meeting had not affected the merits of the case, because all the members eligible to participate and vote at the meeting were present and the petitioner was elected by majority. Nobody had ever raised any objection in this behalf. Therefore, according to the learned counsel, both the authorities below have committed an error in setting aside the election of the petitioner as the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti.

4. So far as the first contention raised on behalf of the petitioner is concerned, it is quite obvious from the bare reading of Section 68-A of the Act that in the event of a dispute as to the validity of the election of a Chairman or Deputy Chairman of Panchayat Samiti, not only any member of the Panchayat Samiti, but even the Collector or any officer authorised by him in this behalf can refer the said dispute within 30 days from the date of election to the Commissioner for decision. Therefore, in terms this section confers a power upon the Collector to refer a dispute in this behalf to the Commissioner. This is what has been done by the Collector, Akola in the present case. On a reference being made by the Collector, Akola, raising a dispute in this behalf the Commissioner has decided the question. Therefore, in our opinion, the Commissioner was perfectly justified in entertaining the dispute referred to him by the Collector and deciding the same. In this view of the matter, there is no substance in the first contention raised by Shri Mandlekar.

5. So far as the second contention raised by Shri Mandlekar is concerned, for properly understanding the object and the scheme of the Act, it will be useful to make a reference to the relevant provision of the Act. Section 75 deals with the question as to how casual vacancies in the office of Chairman and Deputy Chairman are to be filled in Section 75 of Act, as it read at the relevant time, was as under:

"75. Casual vacancies in office of Chairman and Deputy Chariman to be filled up—

(1) In the event of a vacancy in the office of the Chairman or Deputy Chairman by reason of death, resignation, removal or otherwise, the vacancy shall, subject to the provisions of Sections 64 and 73, be filled as conveniently as may be by election of a new Chairman or Deputy Chairman;

Provided that, if for any reason the offices of the Chairman and Deputy Chairman become vacant simultaneously, the Chairman of a Subject Committee chosen by lot drawn by the Chief Executive Officer in such manner as he deems fit shall, pending the election of the Chairman exercise the powers and perform the duties of the Chairman.

(2) Where on account of any of the reasons aforesaid, the office of the Chairman becomes vacant or the offices of the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman become vacant simultaneously, the provisions of Section 67 shall be applicable, so far as may be, to the calling of a meeting and the procedure to be followed at such meeting for the election of a chairman; and after the election of a Chairman, in the next meeting of the Panchayat Samiti, the Deputy Chairman shall be elected." In the present case we are mainly concerned with sub-section (2) of Section 75 of the Act, which lays down that where on account of any of the reasons stated in sub-section (1) of Section 75 the offices of the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman become vacant simultaneously then the provisions of Section 67 shall be applicable so far as may be, to the calling of a meeting and the procedure to be followed at such meeting for the election of a chairman. In the present case also the offices of Chairman and Deputy Chairman became vacant simultaneously as both of them tendered resignations. Therefore, obviously the present case is governed by Section 75 (2) read with Section 67 of the Act. Therefore, the meeting for electing the Chairman could have been called under Section 67 of the Act alone, Section 67 of Act reads as under:

"67 (1) After a general election under sub-section (1) of Section 10 and clause (f) of sub-section (1) of Section 57, the Collector or any officer authorised by him by general or special order, shall, at least three days before the date fixed for the first meeting of the Parishad under sub-section (2) of Section 11, call upon the person falling under clauses (a) and (f) of sub-section (1) of Section 57, to elect a Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti.

(2) The chairman elected under sub-section (1) shall be entitled to attend the first meeting of the Parishad called under sub-section (2) of Section 11 as ex officio Councillor, and as soon thereafter as possible take charge of office of Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti from the outgoing Chairman.

(3) The meeting called under sub-section (1) shall be presided over by the Collector or the officer authorised by him as aforesaid. The Collector or such officer shall, when presiding over meeting have the same powers as the chairman of a Panchayat Samiti, when presiding over a meeting of the Panchayat Samiti has, but shall not have the right to vote;

Provided that, notwithstanding anything contained in Section 118, the Collector or such officer may, for reasons recorded in writing which in his opinion are sufficient, refuse to adjourn such meeting, or as the case may be, adjourn such meeting.

(4) If in the election of the Chairman there is an equality of votes, the result of the election shall be decided by lot to be drawn in the presence of the Collector or officer presiding in such manner as he may determine."

Section 67 confers a power of convening a meeting for this purpose upon the Collector. Sub-section (3) of Section 67 then lays down that the meeting called under sub-section (1) of Section 67 shall be presided over by the Collector or the officer authorised by him in that behalf. It further lays down that the Collector or such officer shall, when presiding over such meeting, have the same powers as the Chairman of a Panchayat Samiti when presiding over a meeting of the Panchayat Samiti has, but shall not have the right to vote. The proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 67 then lays down that notwithstanding anything contained in Section 118, the Collector or such officer may, for reasons recorded in writing which in his opinion are sufficient, refuse to adjourn such meeting, or as the case may be, adjourn such meeting. Therefore, it is quite obvious from the bare reading of the various provisions of the Act that to the meeting convened for the purpose of electing a Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, it is the provisions of Section 67 which shall apply and not the provisions of the Section 75 (1) of the Act.

6. The question as to what is the scheme of the Act in this behalf came for consideration before a Division Bench of this Court in Awantikabai v. V. T. Jagtap, (1964 Mah LJ 536). After making a reference to the relevant provisions of the Act, in para. 7 of the said decision this Court observed as under:

"Sub-section (2) of Section 75 states that where on account of any of the reasons aforesaid, the offices of the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman become vacant simultaneously, the provisions of Section 67 shall be applicable, so far as may be, to the calling of a meeting and the procedure to be followed at such meeting for the election of a Chairman, and after the election of the Chairman, at the next meeting of the Panchayat Samiti, the Deputy Chairman shall be elected. This sub-section, therefore, provides for the procedure to be followed when the offices of the Chairman and Deputy Chairman are both vacant. In such a case the provisions of Section 67 shall apply, so far as may be, to the calling of a meeting for the election of the Chairman. Under Section 67 only the persons falling under clauses (a), (c) and (f) of Section 57 (1) can be called upon to elect the Chairman of the Samiti. It has therefore, been urged on behalf of opponents Nos. 4 to 7 and 10 to 13 that only the persons who fall under clauses (a), (c) and (f) of Section 57 (1), can be summoned to attend the meeting convened to elect a Chairman under sub-section (2) of Section 75. A co-opted member does not fall under these clauses and it has, therefore, been contended that a co-opted member cannot be called to attend a meeting held to elect the Chairman, when both the offices of the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman are vacant. As pointed out above, a co-opted member can take part in and vote at a meeting held to elect a Chairman, when the office of Chairman only is vacant. He can also exercise the right of vote when a motion of no-confidence in the Chairman is moved. It could not have been intended by the legislature that while a co-opted member should be able to participate in the election of a Chairman when there is a casual vacancy in the office of Chairman and also in his removal, he should not have this right when in addition to the office of Chairman the office of Deputy Chairman is also vacant. No logical reason for making such a distinction has been suggested. The words "the calling of a meeting" in sub-section (2) of Section 75 will, therefore, have to be so construed as to avoid a result which could not have been contemplated by the legislature. We must so read the various provisions of the Act as to bring about harmony between them. Although, therefore, having regard to the language used in sub-section (2) of Section 75, there may at first sight appear to be some force in the arguments advanced on behalf of the opponents, a careful consideration of the various provisions of the Act shows that there is not much merit in them. Neither the Chairman nor the Vice-Chairman can call a meeting when both these offices are vacant. It is consequently necessary to authorise some other authority to convene a meeting for electing a new Chairman. If this object is borne in mind along with the fact that unlike an associate member a co-opted member enjoys a right to vote at the meeting of the Samiti, it will be clear that the words "the calling of a meeting" in sub-section (2) of Section 75 have reference only to the manner in which and the person by whom the meeting is to be called. The fact that the meeting is to be called in the manner provided in Section 67 would not, therefore, justify the exclusion from the meeting of members who are otherwise entitled to take part in it. In our opinion, therefore, a co-opted member is entitled to attend and vote at a meeting called by the Collector or the officer authorised by him to elect the Chairman, when the offices of the Chairman and the Deputy Chairman are both vacant."

Therefore, it is quite obvious that it is Section 67 of the Act which will apply to such a meeting and as per said provisions it is the Collector or the Officer authorised by him, who alone can convene the meeting. It is an admitted position that in the present case the meeting was not convened by the Collector or the Officer authorised by him, but it was convened by the Block Development Officer, who had acted under the direction of the Chief Executive Officer, of the Zilla Parishad. The Chief Executive Officer of the Zilla Parishad is not a Collector of the district. Therefore, obviously the meeting was not called by the person authorised to call the meeting, namely, the Collector or the Officer authorised by him.

7. However, it is contended by Shri Mandlekar that this defect or irregularity in convening the meeting will not invalidate the proceedings, namely, the election held in the said meeting. By virtue of the provisions of Section 118, Sections 111, 112 and 115 are made applicable to meetings of Panchayat Samiti. Section 112 of the Act reads as under:

"112 (1) During any vacancy in a Zilla Parishad, the continuing Councillors may act as if no vacancy had occurred.

(2) The Zilla Parishad shall have power to act notwithstanding any vacancy in the Councillorship, or any defect in the constitution, thereof; and such proceedings of the Parishad shall be valid notwithstanding that it is discovered subsequently that some person who was not entitled to do so sat or voted or otherwise took part in the proceedings.

(3) No act or proceeding of a Zilla Parishad shall be deemed to be invalid on account of any defect or irregularity in any such act or proceeding not affecting the merits of the case or on account of any irregularity in the service of notice upon any Councillor or for mere informality."

Shri Mandlekar is strongly relying upon sub-section (3) of Section 112 of the Act and according to him this is a case of mere defect or irregularity in convening the meeting and it cannot invalidate the election in view of the said provision. It is not possible for us to accept this contention.

8. It is well-settled principle that to constitute a valid meeting, it must be properly convened. If the Statute designates the authority who is competent to call a meeting, then that authority alone can convene the meeting. Generally the power to call the meeting rests with the Chairman or the President of the Body Corporate and convening of a meeting is always regarded as a statutory function. The statutory provision in this regard must be strictly followed as it is mandatory provision and any illegality in convening or calling the meeting would normally vitiate the decision taken at such a meeting as the transactions which take place in such a meeting are liable to be declared as ultra vires or illegal. In this context a reference could be made to a decision of this Court in Abaji Sitaram v. The Trimbak Municipality, (1904) ILR 28 Bom 66 wherein it was observed by a Division Bench of this Court that if the meeting is not called by the person authorised, then the defect is not cured by Section 27 (17) of the District Municipal Act. The said provision was somewhat similar to the provision of Section 112 of the present Act.

9. Rajasthan High Court had also an occasion to consider such a question in Vishwanath v. Pt. Jhamanlal (ILR (1957) Raj 1041). Somewhat similar contention was raised before Rajasthan High Court. Negating that contention, Rajasthan High Court observed in the judgment as under:

"It was urged on behalf of the opposite parties that this was merely an irregularity and that as all the members were present at 4 p. m. on the 25th of July, we should hold that the proceedings of the meeting were valid in fact. It is urged that Rule 3 is merely directory and not mandatory and as all members were present when the meeting was held, there has been no prejudice to the applicants. All that we need say in this connection is that we are of the view that Rule 3 is mandatory and it is the duty of the District Magistrate to follow it strictly. There must be reasons which led the Legislature or its delegate to give this power only to the District Magistrate and some of these reasons are well known and need not be mentioned here by us. It seems to us in these circumstances that the Legislature meant that Rule 3 should be strictly followed, and that a meeting for the election of Chairman should be called by the District Magistrate and District Magistrate only and by nobody else. If a meeting of this kind is called by anybody else, it is not in accordance with Rule 3 and no election of Chairman can take place at a meeting called by anybody other than the District Magistrate. Rule 3 provides that the District Magistrate may preside at such a meeting himself or may nominate someone else to preside for him, but it does not provide that a District Magistrate, if he does not call such a meeting himself, may authorise somebody else to call it. Obviously, therefore, Rule 3 contemplates that only the District Magistrate will call such a meeting. It must, therefore, be held to be mandatory and if a meeting is not called in accordance with Rule 3, it is not meeting at which the election of Chairman can be held."

10. Somewhat similar view was taken by the Madhya Pradesh High Court in Tejla v. Nandkishore, (1966 MPLJ 1014). Before the Madhya Pradesh High Court also a contention was raised in the above referred case that mere irregularity in the convening of the meeting cannot vitiate the meeting itself. Negativating this contention a Division Bench of the Madhya Pradesh High Court held that the provisions in that behalf, namely, the provisions of Section 47 (2) of the M. P. Municipalities Act, being mandatory, their strict compliance is necessary. The Madhya Pradesh High Court further relied upon the observations of the Supreme Court in the case of the Vice-Chancellor, Utkal University v. S. K. Ghosh, (AIR 1954 SC 217) and ultimately held that when the statute lays down the manner in which a meeting should be called for deciding any specific question, the meeting must be called in that manner and in no other.

11. From the various provisions of the Act it is quite obvious that the power to convene the meeting is conferred by the Act on the various authorities. Normally under Section 111 it is the President of the Zilla Parishad or the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, who is authorised to convene the meeting. Under Section 72, which deals with moving of motion of no-confidence against Chairman or Deputy Chairman of Panchayat Samiti it is the Collector who is authorised to convene a meeting similar is the provision relating to motion of no-confidence against President or Vice-President of Zilla Parishad, namely, Section 49 of the Act. Under Section 67 also a power to convene a meeting is conferred upon the Collector or the officer authorised by him. It seems to be the intention of the legislature that so far as these matters are concerned, an independent and impartial authority should be given the power to convene a meeting and to preside over it. The Collector is the head of the district, but is not concerned with Zilla Parishad or its administration. In that sense he is an independent authority. There are obvious reasons for choosing such an independent authority. This is one of the methods carved out by the Legislature for achieving the goal of free and fair election. It is the Collector or such officer authorised by him, who alone can preside over such a meeting.

12. Maharashtra Zilla Parishads (President and Vice-President) and Panchayat Samitis (Chairman and Deputy Chairman) (Election) (Amendment) Rules, 1965 lays down the definition of the term "Officer Presiding" which reads as under:

"2 (b) "Officer Presiding" means, in relation to any meeting of a Zilla Parishad or a Panchayat Samiti, the person empowered or competent to preside over such meeting as provided by or under the Act."

Then Section 67 (3) of the Act lays down that while presiding over such a meeting he has all the powers of the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti, except the right of vote. A meeting cannot be validly constituted unless it is presided over by proper authority. Normally the person entitled to preside over the meeting derives his authority under the concerned enactment or from the meeting itself. The Collector or the officer authorised by him derive their authority in this behalf under Section 67 of the Act. He has to carry out a statutory function. Therefore, the meeting contemplated by Section 67 of Act is special in nature.

13. In this case we are not dealing with the normal meetings of Panchayat Samiti, but with the statutory meeting. The meeting contemplated is for a special and specific purpose, namely, the election of Chairman. The members can validly act in a meeting which is duly convened. The power conferred upon the Collector or person authorised by him regarding calling of meeting and presiding over it is in terms imperative. The said power is conferred upon a public authority which is coupled with duty. The requirement that a proper authority must convene the statutory meeting is normally held to be mandatory. When the statute itself indicates the authority which must call such a statutory meeting then that authority alone is competent to convene the meeting. The election of the Chairman as per Section 67 of the Act can be held only in a meeting which is duly convened by Collector or person authorised by him. In a given case the authority competent to call the meeting might ratify the act of somebody else, before the meeting takes place. But in the case before us, Collector has not ratified the act of Chief Executive Officer, but on the contrary has himself raised a dispute about its validity by making a reference under Section 68-A of the Act. It is well-settled general rule that an absolute enactment must be obeyed or fulfilled exactly. If the meeting is not convened by the competent authority then it is not merely a defect or irregularity in calling the meeting but is an illegality which goes to the root of the matter. It involves a question of authority, power and jurisdiction. If the person calling the meeting has no jurisdiction to call it, then the meeting called by him is illegal ab initio. In our opinion such an illegality is not covered by Section 112 of the Act.

14. Therefore, having regard to the object of the Act as well as the intention of the Legislation, it is quite obvious that the provisions in this behalf are mandatory. If this is so, then, in our opinion, it was the Collector or the officer authorised by him in that behalf alone, who could have convened the meeting. The Block Development Officer, who was acting under the directions of the Chief Executive Officer of Zilla Parishad had no authority, power or jurisdiction to convene the meeting for electing the Chairman of the Panchayat Samiti. He had also no authority to preside over the said meeting. Therefore, the meeting convened by the Block Development Officer being wholly illegal and void ab initio, the election of the petitioner which took place in the said meeting was also illegal. Therefore, it was rightly set aside by the Commissioner, Nagpur Division, Nagpur.

15. Even otherwise from the copy of the proceedings produced before us, it appears that the Block Development Officer who was also the Secretary of the Panchayat Samiti had taken some decisions in the matter of rejection and acceptance of ballot papers. A grievance is also made on behalf of the respondent No. 3 that he had wrongly issued second ballot paper to one of the voters. Thus while presiding over the said meeting, the Block Development Officer had taken certain decisions, which had some effect on the voting pattern. Therefore, obviously having regard to the facts and circumstances of this case, it will have to be held that the convening of the meeting by the Block Development Officer and his presiding over the same has materially affected the merits of the case.

16. In this view of the matter, in our opinion, the orders passed by both the authorities below are perfectly legal. Therefore, there is no substance in this writ petition. The petition fails and is dismissed. However, in the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 91

(AT NAGPUR)

MASODKAR AND DIGHE, JJ.

Pyase Saheb Gulsar Chhotumiya Sawasi etc., Petitioners v. Dashrath Wasudeo Daff and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Applns. Nos. 1253 and 1337 of 1976, D/- 25-6-1976.*

(A) City of Nagpur Corporation Act 1948 (2 of 1950), Sections 15 (i), 63 and 348 — Election of Councillors — Disqualification — Contract with Corporation — "Contract" need not satisfy the provisions of Sections 63 and 348.

The election of the returned candidate was challenged on the ground that he was disqualified in view of the provisions of Section 15 (i) of the Act having directly a share or interest in the contract with the Corporation on all the relevant dates. It was alleged that he had since 1972-73 taken a licence of 5 Otas at Rs. 60/- per month and he continued to be under the licence and as such owned an interest or share in the contract with the Corporation, the Otas being the property of the Corporation. It was contended by the returned candidate that the term "contract" must necessarily mean a contract executed and in writing in accordance with the provisions of Sections 63 and 348 of the Act.

Held, that there was enough and sufficient material before the trial Court to infer that there existed a relationship under a contract of licence between the Corporation and the returned candidate and that clearly established the disqualification contemplated by Section 15 (i) of the Act. (Para 8)

The provisions with regard to the disqualification have been made in the interest of purity of public administration and so as to avoid the possible conflict of interest and duty attached to the public office. A pedantic approach or a literal meaning which will defeat the said provision is not postulated. The provisions of Section 63 are regarding the procedure for making contracts on behalf of the Corporation and there is nothing in terms of this section which will affect the relationship referable to a contract which may not strictly comply with the requirements of Section 63. Provisions of Section 348 mainly deal with the procedure regarding licences and written permission and are declaratory in nature. On the evidence in the case an inference could be drawn that, for the Corporation for all purposes the returned candidate was treated to be the licensee with regard to the property given in licence initially for the years 1972-73 and he was continued to be treated as the licensee of the Otas for the relevant period. (Para 7)

(B) City of Nagpur Corporation Act (1948) (2 of 1950), Section 428 (2) — Election set aside on ground of disqualification — Candidates contested more than two — Declaration of second highest candidate to be elected as councillor is not mandatory or automatic.

The scheme of the Rules framed under Section 420 (3) is in consonance with whatever is stated in Section 428 (2). In other words, after holding inquiry if the Court comes to the conclusion that there is a valid election, the statute indicates that the Court has to make an order confirming the declared result of the election. If the Court finds that the returned candidate was disqualified, then it has to declare that his election is null and void. If the Court finds that the election is not valid on any other ground, it has to make an order setting it aside. The Election Court is enabled in any of these cases to make a further declaration in favour of the candidate in whose favour the next highest number of valid votes is found, to be the elected candidate at such an election subject to any cause not permitting such a declaration. Obvious it is that this further declaration could be made only in a petition seeking such a relief and clearly making of such a declaration is a matter of adjudication and cannot be mechanical or automatic. (Para 15)

It is indeed clear that when there are only two candidates and one is subjected to statutory disqualification, the votes cast in favour of such disqualified candidate may be treated as having been thrown away; but that result would not automatically follow if there are more than two candidates in the field seeking election to one seat. (Para 13)

The phrase as available in the last sentence of sub-section (2) is "against whose election no cause of objection is found" and that has to be read along with the earlier clause "in whose favour next highest number of valid votes is recorded". The power conferred by that sub-section is enabling and is conferred to assess and decide upon the claim of all candidates, who may not, at the election be the next highest to the returned candidate, but yet may upon trial be entitled to such a declaration. In any case, that itself shows that the matter requires consideration and adjudication and it is not as if when the returned candidate is found disqualified, the automatic result is that the next candidates standing below him in the count gets elected in his place. (Para 16)

The deeming introduced or spoken of by sub-section (2) operates to clothe such declared election with all sense of substance and reality. Fiction statutorily enacted would be available to any of the candidates found by the Court to be entitled to such declaration. The construction seeking to have automatic declaration runs counter to the basic concept of election adjudication. Therefore, it can be held that only because the returned candidate has been found to be disqualified sub-section (2) does not indicate that all the votes earned by the disqualified returned candidate are required to be treated as votes wasted away. Those continue to remain valid unless proved to be thrown away and the matter is open for adjudication when the contest was between more than two candidates for single seat and cannot be determined automatically. (Paras 17, 19)

In the circumstances the trial Court having found the disqualification of the returned candidate, the only declaration it could make was that a casual vacancy had occurred and a fresh election be taken according to law to fill that vacancy. (Para 23)

AIR 1969 SC 604 = (1969) 2 SCR 90 13

In S. C. A. No. 1253 of 1976:—

N. S. Munshi, for Petitioner; C. G. Madkholkar (for No 1) H. S. Ghare (for No. 4) and M. L. Vaidya (for No. 11), for Respondents.

In S. C. A. No. 1337 of 1976:—

H. S. Ghare, for Petitioner; C. G. Madkholkar (for No. 1) N. S. Munshi (for No. 2) and M. L. Vaidya (for No. 11), for Respondents.

MASODKAR, J.:— Both these petitions arise out of the election proceedings filed by the respondent No. 1 before the District Judge, Nagpur under Section 428 of the City of Nagpur Corporation Act, 1948 (hereinafter called the Act) read with the Rules framed under Section 420 (3) (xviii) and (xix) of the Act (hereinafter called the Rules).

2. Respondent No. 1 the election-petitioner before the District Judge was the candidate to the election to elect a Councillor from Ward No. 31, called also Juna Motorstand Ward, of the City of Nagpur. There were other ten duly nominated candidates. The poll took place on 29-1-1975, counting on 31-1-1975 and the result was gazetted on 4th of February, 1975. At the counting the petitioner in the first petition Pyare Saheb, having secured 1132 votes being the highest in the number of votes polled, was declared elected. The election-petitioner polled next highest number of votes, being 803. The petitioner in another companion petition i.e., Special Civil Application No. 1337 of 1976 polled 700 votes. The other candidates similarly polled votes, the number of which need not be stated.

3. Election-petitioner claimed by the petition before the District Judge that election of Pyare Saheb from the said Ward should be set aside, he being disqualified in view of the provisions of Section 15 (i) of the Act having directly a share or interest in the contract with the Corporation on all the relevant dates, in that he had since 1972-73 taken a licence of 5 Otas at Rs. 60/- per month and he continued to be under the licence and as such owned an interest or share in the contract with the Corporation, the Otas being the property of the Corporation. It was also the case of the election-petitioner Dashrath that Pyare Saheb being disqualified and election-petitioner having polled the next highest number of votes should be declared as elected from that Ward. Having prayed for such a declaration he impleaded to the petition all the contending candidates as is required by the Rules.

4. At the trial the learned District Judge found upon material placed by the parties that in fact there existed a licence of 5 Otas the possession of which was taken initially by the returned candidate in the year 1972-73 and though the initial licence was in writing and stipulated a period of one year and thereafter there was no written licence executed, there was ample material to hold that the licence continued during the relevant period and that even on the date of evidence the returned candidate was in possession of the licensed property. He thus found that the returned candidate was disqualified to be the Councillor and adjudged his election as void. Having so found, because of the provisions of Section 428 (2) to which a little later on we will make a detailed reference, he purported to make a declaration in favour of the election petitioner solely on the basis that he was the candidate who had next highest number of votes polled.

5. By the first petition the returned candidate questions the validity of the first part of the order and by the second petition, original respondent No. 4 who was himself a duly nominated candidate and who has polled as stated earlier 700 votes, questions the validity of the latter declaration in favour of the election-petitioner. As we proceed to deal with these petitions and the several submissions made at the Bar, we will indicate the exact scope of the submission.

6. Taking the petition filed by the returned candidate before this Court, i.e., the first petition, it is indeed difficult to find any merit in the same. Mr. Munshi, the learned counsel appearing for the petitioner in this petition, argues that because of the provisions of the statute, particularly provisions of Section 63 and Section 348, upon true construction the provisions of Section 15 (i) which speak of any contract with, by or on behalf of the Corporation, must necessarily mean a contract executed and in writing in accordance with these provisions. Any other type of contract will not be enforceable against the Corporation and as such, according to the learned counsel, it is not a contract within the meaning of clause (i) providing for disqualification. The learned counsel, therefore, submits that the provisions regarding the making of the contract which should necessarily bind the corporate authority should be impliedly governed by the meaning of the word "contract" as laying down the disqualification.

7. The provisions with regard to the disqualification have been made in the interest of purity of public administration and so as to avoid the possible conflict of interest and duty attached to the public office. A pedantic approach or a literal meaning which will defeat the said provision is not postulated. The provisions of Section 63 are regarding the procedure for making contracts on behalf of the Corporation and we do not see anything in terms of this section which will affect the relationship referable to a contract which may not strictly comply with the requirements of Section 63. Provisions of Section 348 mainly deal with the procedure regarding licences and written permission and are declaratory in nature. There is hardly any dispute in the present case that for the initial year i.e., 1972-73 a written agreement of licence existed between the parties which was to expire on 31-3-1973 (See documents Exhs. 49 and 50 in the trial). What is being relied upon is the omission to execute the document for the period till the year 1974-75. It was urged that for renewal of the original licence no written application was made and, therefore, because of sub-section (6) of Section 348, there would be no licence as contemplated by Section 348 itself and if there was no licence as such, logically, the submission is, there is no contract. Sub-section (6) of Section 348 only states what will be the consequences if after the period of the licence has expired the licence is not renewed as far as the licensee is concerned. Sub-section (7) of Section 348 further makes it clear that such licensee pending decision on the application for renewal is entitled to act as if the licence has been renewed and sub-section (8) clarifies the position that mere acceptance of the fee will not clothe the licensee paying the fee with the right or entitlement, as a licensee. These provisions are of little assistance to the petitioner if we look to the evidence from which an inference can be drawn that, for the Corporation, for all purposes, the petitioner was treated to be the licensee with regard to the property given in licence initially for the year 1972-73. As the facts are, under Exh. 53 which is of 7-9-1974, on behalf of the Corporation, demand was made for all the balance of the rent including the period upto December 1974. Under Exh. 54 the petitioner applied that for making the payment of the lease-money two months' time should be given. Under Exh. 52 the Corporation accepted the payment of Rs. 720/- at the rate of Rs. 60/- per month till the year 1974-75. The receipt conclusively shows that Corporation accepted the petitioner to be the licensee with regard to Otas Nos. 19 to 23 which were initially given under the licence agreement Exh. 50, which document in no uncertain terms raises an inference that the petitioner continued to be the licensee of 5 Otas taken by him in the year 1972-73. Even on the date of the evidence, i.e., 13-12-1975, the petitioner, who has been examined at Exh. 59 as witness No. 1 for respondent No. 1 admitted that he had paid rent upto 31-3-1975. He further admitted that though he could have paid the rent and surrendered the possession even when he had decided to contest the election, he did not desire or intend to leave the possession of the Otas and, therefore, he paid the rent. On behalf of the election-petitioner, evidence of Corporation agent as P. W. 1 is clear enough to show that for the corporation rent was accepted till the year 1974-75 and the petitioner was continued and treated as the licensee of the Otas.

8. Thus we find that there was enough and sufficient material before the learned District Judge to infer that there existed a relationship under a contract of licence between the Corporation and the returned candidate and that clearly established the disqualification contemplated by Section 15 (i) of the Act. It is not possible to take any other view of the matter.

9. The election, therefore of the returned candidate was rightly set aside.

10. Coming to the question of the declaration that the election-petitioner, who had secured 803 votes, should be declared having been duly elected, the learned Judge has relied on the terms of sub-section (2) of Section 428 of the Act, observing that there is no cause for objection against the election of the election-petitioner. The order further states that admittedly the election-petitioner got second highest number of votes and therefore, because of the wording of sub-section (2), he has to be declared elected. It appears that it was urged before the learned Judge that having set aside the election on the ground of disqualification, the only course open was to direct fresh election. That submission was turned down presumably because the learned Judge thought that there is a mandate in sub-section (2) to declare the second highest candidate to be elected as the councillor from the ward.

11. Before us this part of the approach and this part of the declaration is strenuously challenged by the counsel appearing for the petitioner in this petition. It is submitted that such a declaration is not contemplated by the words of sub-section (2) of Section 428 and the matter has to be adjudicated by the election Tribunal. There is no automatic declaration available to the person who has polled the second highest number of votes, for the result of disqualification of the returned candidate will be to find out what would happen to the votes polled by the disqualified candidate at such an election. The burden that the election-petitioner or any other candidate is entitled to be so declared is always on the petitioner to show that the votes polled by the disqualified returned candidate were in fact thrown away or wasted votes and are not available for consideration. There being no evidence it is urged the declaration made by the learned District judge is entirely erroneous.

12. As against this, for the original election-petitioner it is contended that sub-section (2) of Section 428 posits a definite scheme of the statute and it should not be permissible to introduce an addition of words to its terms. What is contemplated by the Legislature is that in case the election of a returned candidate is found to be null and void because of the disqualification, there is automatic election of the candidate who has polled second highest number of votes. The enquiry as to the votes polled by the disqualified returned candidate in the wisdom of the Legislature has been ruled out and what remains is the declaration to be given in favour of the second candidate who has polled the highest number of votes. This process, according to the submission of the learned counsel, is mandatory and can be indicated by stages, first being finding out whether the election of a returned candidate can be declared null and void because of the disqualification. Having so found out, statute declares the candidate who has polled next highest number of votes as the duly elected Councillor in his place. This declaration can be put in jeopardy like any other challenge to election by pointing out the grounds on which such election can be set aside, like disqualification, corrupt practice or non-compliance with the procedure etc. In other words, the enquiry as to the validity of the votes earned by the disqualified candidate is excluded in the scheme of this type of adjudication. Reference was made by the learned counsel to the Rules also and particularly, to Rule 9, where the discrimination proceedings (sic) of counter-election petitions can be filed. From that it was submitted that unless such petition is filed and the election Judge upholds the ground in such a petition, the statutory declaration in favour of the second next candidate as a matter of course must be made.

13. Now to clear the ground before we proceed to consider the scheme of Section 428 and the powers of the election Court thereunder, we may at once state that more or less the election adjudication with regard to a finding that a particular returned candidate was disqualified, raises a question to be always adjudicated by the Election Tribunal in respect of the votes cast in favour of such disqualified returned candidate. Election by itself is a process to find out the choice of the majority from the given constituency. When the majority returns a candidate, he represents the whole constituency. The votes polled at such an election could be treated to be validly cast unless it is shown that these votes are just thrown away or wasted. The doctrine of "wasted vote" is known to Election Jurisprudence since the concept of finding the futility of exercise of that vote is in vogue. The voter or elector, consciously or with knowledge, may cast a vote in favour of a person who by reason of the disqualification attached to him and which is known to the voter could not in law be entitled to be elected or the vote may be treated as tainted or thrown away if it is procured by exercise of corrupt practice. Excepting these two types of cases, for which proof would be necessary, the normal legal presumption would be that a voter validly acts in exercise and in furtherance of his right and the vote cast by him is a valid one. The offshoot of this doctrine often creates the problem of consideration as to whether the votes earned by a given candidate who is found at the trial to be disqualified should be treated as entirely thrown away or should be available yet for the purpose of consideration in such an election adjudication. We may only refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in Vishwanath Reddy v. Konappa, (AIR 1969 SC 604) where the exception as well as the rule is indicated by all qualifications in a case where there were only two contesting candidates and one of them was found to be statutorily disqualified. The Court observed:

"..... When there are only two contesting candidates, and one of them is under a statutory disqualification, votes cast in favour of the disqualified candidate may be regarded as thrown away, irrespective of whether the voters who voted for him were aware of the disqualification and no fresh poll is necessary. This is not to say that where there are more than two candidates in the field for a single seat, and one alone is disqualified, on proof of disqualification all the votes cast in his favour will be discarded and the candidate securing the next highest number of votes will be declared elected. In such a case, question of notice to the voters may assume significance, for the voters may not, if aware of the disqualification have voted for the disqualified candidate."

Though undoubtedly the case arose under the provisions of the Representation of the People Act, that highlights the principal doctrine which governs the exclusion of the votes from the consideration by the Election Tribunal. It is indeed clear that when there are only two candidates and one is subjected to statutory disqualification, the votes cast in favour of such disqualified candidate may be treated as having been thrown away; but that result would not automatically follow if there are more than two candidates in the field seeking election to one seat.

14. Turning to the provisions of Section 428 of the Act, we may proceed to extract sub-sections (1) and (2) which read as follows:

"428. (1) If the qualification of any person declared to be elected for being a Councillor is disputed, or if the validity of any election is questioned, whether by reason of the improper rejection by the Commissioner of a nomination or of the improper reception or refusal of a vote, or for any other cause, any person enrolled in the municipal election roll may, at any time within fifteen days from the date on which the election of Councillor is notified under Sec. 16, apply to the District Court. If the application is for a declaration that any particular candidate shall be deemed to have been elected, the applicant shall make parties to his application all candidates who, although not declared elected, had contested the election from the same ward.

(2) If the District Court, after making such inquiry as it deems necessary, finds that the election was a valid election and that the person whose election is objected to is not disqualified, it shall confirm the declared result of the election. If it finds that the person whose election is objected to is disqualified for being a Councillor, it shall declare such person's election null and void. If it finds that the election is not a valid election it shall set it aside. In either cases it shall direct that the candidate, if any, in whose favour next highest number of valid votes is recorded after the said person or after all the persons who were returned as elected at the said election, and against whose election no cause of objection is found, shall be deemed to have been elected." Along with this we may indicate that rules have been framed which lay down the procedure regarding the contents of the petition, its presentation, its conduct and also the matters to be taken into account by the Court upon several challenges and the reliefs prayed for in such an election dispute.

15. These rules and the provisions of Section 428 permit any elector to question the validity of election on the grounds mentioned in sub-section (1) inter alia being improper rejection of a nomination or improper reception or refusal of a vote or any other cause which may include the cause regarding disqualification or want of qualification of the elected Councillor. It further shows that apart from disputing the validity of the election of the Councillor, it is permissible to pray by such petition that after the election is found to be null and void or invalid, any particular candidate should be declared to have been duly elected at such an election. The petitioner may be the nominated candidate or may be simple elector. In both such cases such prayer can be made. When the petition seeks such a consequential prayer, both sub-section (i) and Rule 1 (b) require that all nominated candidates at the election should be joined as parties to that petition. If the declaration is only with regard to invalidity of the election and no further consequential prayer is made, this requirement is not necessary to be followed. Having filed such a petition, the scheme of the rule shows that a proper election trial has to be held. Rule 15 goes on to indicate what should be the result if the Court comes to the conclusion upon the matters indicated by clauses (a), (b) and (c) of that rule. In other words, if the election is affected by corrupt practice or if it is affected by the corrupt practice committed by an elected candidate or his agent or the result of the election has been materially affected by any irregularity with regard to the nomination, the election would be declared as void. Rule 15 provides a proviso where the Court may not make a declaration if the conditions of clauses (a) to (d) in the proviso of the rule are satisfied. Rule 16 proceeds to lay down that if an election is declared void, the Court may either declare that a casual vacancy has been created or that the applicant or any other candidate has been duly elected. The scheme of these Rules clearly is in consonance with whatever is stated in sub-section (2) of Section 428. In other words, after holding inquiry if the Court comes to the conclusion that there is a valid election, the statute indicates that the Court has to make an order confirming the declared result of the election. If the Court finds that the returned candidate was disqualified, then it has to declare that his election is null and void. If the Court finds that the election is not valid on any other ground, it has to make an order setting it aside. The Election Court is enabled in any of these cases to make a further declaration in favour of the candidate in whose favour the next highest number of valid votes is found, to be the elected candidate at such an election subject to any cause not permitting such a declaration. Obvious it is that this further declaration could be made only in a petition seeking such a relief and clearly making of such a declaration in our view is a matter of adjudication and cannot be mechanical or automatic.

16. The phrase as available in the last sentence of sub-section (2) is "against whose election no cause of objection is found" and that has to be read along with the earlier clause "in whose favour next highest number of valid votes is recorded". The power conferred by that sub-section is enabling and is conferred to assess and decide upon the claim of all candidates, who may not, at the election be the next highest to the returned candidate, but yet may upon trial be entitled to such a declaration. In any case, that itself shows that the matter requires consideration and adjudication and it is not as if when the returned candidate is found disqualified, the automatic result is that the next candidate standing below him in the count gets elected in his place.

17. The deeming introduced or spoken of by sub-section (2) operates to clothe such declared election with all sense of substance and reality. Fiction statutorily enacted would be available to any of the candidates found by the Court to be entitled to such declaration. The construction seeking to have automatic declaration runs counter in our view to the basic concept of election adjudication. For all purposes, the Court has to apply its mind to the facts and circumstances so as to further the intention of the voters so as to find out the candidate who could be said to have got next highest valid votes. The term "valid" indicates the intention of the legislature and the votes earned by disqualified candidate are very well within the ken of consideration. That by itself would raise implicit question as to how those votes could have been distributed had disqualification been known or notified to the voters. Sub-section (2) does not render the result by itself to affect those votes so as to exclude them as simply thrown away or wasted.

18. Such an inference in favour of assumption that votes do stand thrown away cannot be deducted for more than one reason.

19. Firstly, such an inference would be against the basic concept of election dispute wherein not only the party but the entire body of concerned electorate is interested and would further work hardship on the constituency as a whole. A person getting a meagre number of votes or even a few votes as compared to the votes polled by the returned candidate, will be entitled to an automatic declaration and by itself that would be contrary to the possible choice of the constituency. Attempt has to be to ascertain the valid and free choice and such an approach would defeat it. Often in this country in ignorance of the disqualification majority of the voters cast their vote. In spite of this reality are we to attribute an intention to the Legislature that even though the candidate at second number having polled meagre number of votes he has to be statutorily declared elected once a disqualification is found against the candidate who has polled large majority of votes? Construction that will further the ends of justice — and here when we speak of justice, justice to the constituency and to the voter is implicit—should be put on the scheme indicated by the terms of the statute. We are inclined, therefore, to hold that only because the returned candidate has been found to be disqualified sub-section (2) does not indicate that all the votes earned by the disqualified returned candidate are required to be treated as votes wasted away. Those continue to remain valid unless proved to be thrown away and the matter is open for adjudication when the contest was between more than two candidates for single seat and cannot be determined automatically.

20. Secondly, we find that the clause "against whose election no cause of objection is found", is wide enough to take into account the consideration of the fact of the number of votes which were cast in favour of the disqualified returned candidate and possible distribution amongst other contesting candidates. That would include the candidate seeking to have declaration and will be required either to show that votes be treated as wasted or he would have got majority out of those votes upon fair possibility. There is no reason to restrict the term "cause of objection" as referring only to the grounds on which an election of the returned candidate can be challenged under the Act or under the Rules. The compass of this particular phrase in our view, would take in clearly the consideration of the votes that were earned by the disqualified returned candidate and when there are more than two contestants it will have to be shown how those votes would have been cast or as to whether were in fact thrown away by the voters.

21. Thirdly, we find it rather difficult to accept such a mechanical approach in the matters of adjudication of election disputes. We have before us Rule 16 which in terms permits the Election Court to make a declaration that a casual vacancy has been created or to make a declaration that an applicant or any other candidate has been duly elected. If what is contended for is accepted then this rule is rendered nugatory and otiose. For, upon the construction favouring automatic result no such power can be conceived in favour of the Court to declare vacancy in a petition where returned candidate is found to be disqualified and declaration of election in favour of some other candidates is sought. By itself rule throws light on the intention of the statute and permits alternative reliefs being granted. Provisions being express it is not possible to curtail its scope by such an approach.

22. Finally, we find that such a declaration in favour of the applicant or any other candidate can be made even in those cases where the election is not challenged only on the ground of disqualification of the returned candidate but on any other permissible ground. That itself would indicate that the applicant or any other such candidate to the satisfaction of the Election Court will have to show that he is entitled to a declaration that he should be deemed to have been elected. If the dispute is regarding the corrupt practice either committed at the election or by the returned candidate or his agent, obviously it would raise an issue when the consequential declaration of such a kind is claimed and that to the satisfaction of the Court it will have to be shown that there are tainted votes that are required to be treated as invalid and further that excluding those votes such a declaration is available either to the applicant or to any other returned candidate. Instance of similar type which will call for consideration of the other votes can easily be available and must be treated as present to the mind of the legislature. Further the burden in election dispute is on the petitioner to substantiate the claim for such type of declaration and that is indicated by the very words available in sub-section (1) and sub-section (2) of Section 428 taken together. In other words, before the declaration can be made, the election-petitioner will have to show that at the election in dispute either he himself or the candidate in whose favour such a declaration is sought would have been the returned candidate having earned the majority of the valid votes. It cannot be assumed that this rule is not available in the scheme of sub-section (2) of Section 428 of the Act.

23. For those reasons we do not accept the approach of the learned District Judge, for, he has not at all taken into account the votes polled by the disqualified returned candidate, being 1132 and its character. Indeed before us no material was shown and there is no evidence tendered by the election-petitioner with regard to these votes so as to hold that these can be treated as wasted or thrown away or on fair possibility the majority of it being available to any of the candidates. It was conceded that no such material has been placed on record. It follows therefore that election-petitioner was not entitled to the declaration that he only by the fact that he had polled at the election next highest number of votes stands elected as Councillor from Ward No. 31. The only declaration having found the disqualification of the returned candidate that could have been made by the learned District Judge was that a casual vacancy has occurred and the fresh election be taken according to law to fill the vacancy.

24. That being our conclusion, we hold that the learned District Judge was right in setting aside the election of Pyare Saheb Gulzar Chhotumiya from Ward No. 31 of the City of Nagpur. However, we find that the declaration granted that the election-petitioner, i.e., Dashrath Wasudeo Daff stands duly elected from that Ward, is made in error and the same is set aside. Instead of that, there would be a direction treating that there has occurred a casual vacancy in Ward No. 31 and fresh election be held according to law.

25. Special Civil Application No. 1253/76 is thus partly allowed, while Special Civil Application No. 1337/76 is allowed in its entirety. In the circumstances, there would however be no orders as to costs in any of the petitions.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 99*

(AT NAGPUR)

MASODKAR AND DIGHE, JJ.

Vithalrao Udhaorao Uttarwar and others, Petitioners v. The State of Maharashtra, Respondent.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1394 of 1975 etc.; D/- 13-8-1976.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 368 — Constituent power — Limitations of basic structures — Principles as laid down by Supreme Court in AIR 1973 SC 1461 and AIR 1975 SC 2299 summarised — Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act — Validity.

FIRST: Upon the constituent power having situs in Article 368 there are inherent limitations of the basic structure or framework of the Constitution or constitutional principles which are not indicated in the Constitution itself. The power under Article 368 is not akin to the original, plenary unlimited constituent power and is not therefore omnipotent.

SECOND: These basic structure principles include the fundamental constitutional contemplation of the permissive judicial review of the Constitutional Amendment Act so as to find out firstly whether in exercise of the constituent powers what is enacted is a law permissible by the premises of Article 368; and secondly whether the amendment in substance does or does not accord with basic structure doctrine or basic framework or basic principles of the Constitution. In the exercise of making an amendatory law by exercise of constituent power, it would be impermissible to render legislative judgments on cases which under the Constitution form part of the jurisdiction of the judiciary and is pre-eminently a judicial function.

THIRD: The law amending the Constitution would be bad if it affects or abrogates the basic structure as enumerated and summarised in AIR 1975 SC 2299 which includes fundamental principles of equality of status and opportunity. The right to property is not part of basic structure nor constitutional amendment laws can be affected by that principle.

FOURTH: The ordinary law either made by the Parliament or by the State Legislature cannot be subjected to challenge on the ground of basic structure or constitutional framework or principle and that there exists no paradox in constitutional theory in arriving at such a position.

FIFTH: Only by reason of the fact that such ordinary legislation is placed in Schedule Nine by the Constitutional Amendment Act, the challenge to that law on the ground of the basic structure or framework of the Constitution is not available. For the purposes of the law it retains the character of a law made by the Legislature with reference to its powers under Articles 245 and 246 of the Constitution. (Para 67)

Applying these summarised principles as are relevant, it is obvious that the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act placing the amended statutes in issue in the Ninth Schedule cannot be questioned nor those Acts can be questioned on the ground of basic structure doctrine which is only applicable to the Constitutional Amendment Laws as such. The same would be position with regard to Presidential Order made under Article 359 (1-A) of the Constitution. (Para 68)

* (Decision of Supreme Court in appeal against this decision is reported in AIR 1977 SC 915—Ed.)

(B) Constitution of India, Article 31-B — Constitutionality — Does not affect the basic structure principles.

Article 31-B does not affect any of the enumerated basic structure principles evolved by AIR 1973 SC 1461. On the other hand, it subserves the constitutional purpose. (Para 73)

There is hardly any doubt that by Article 31-B the matters are left to the high constituent power to be exercised by Indian Parliament in accord with the procedure indicated by Article 368. There being thus a constituent procedure, there being an indication of principles by its very placement in Part III and there being an obvious purpose for which Article 31-B was enacted, there is no reason to doubt the validity of Article 31-B, only because it puts under eclipse the challenges based on Part III to the laws otherwise competently made by the Legislatures. (Para 75)

Merely upon apprehensions of abuse the provisions cannot be questioned as being violative of any basic structure or framework of the Constitution. On the other hand it is apparent that Art. 31-B by its very contemplation has been superimposed to further and to fortify the basic structure of the Constitution. The Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951 enacting Article 31-B, therefore, is not open to challenge. (Para 75)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 359 (1-A) — Constitutionality — Does not run counter to the basic structure of the Constitution.

Original Article 359 (1) permitted suspension of the remedy itself with regard to certain rights to be mentioned in the Presidential Order, the selection being left to the discretion of the President himself. That would have indirect result of rendering possessor of the right disabled to enforce the same by remedy in Court of Law. Now what would have been the indirect effect is clarified by permitting the President to make an order expressly suspending the rights conferred by Part III by specification. That would permit laws and executive actions to be taken which otherwise would have been void, only during the period of emergency. The provision on the face of it being part of the original scheme with regard to emergency matters is merely enabling and it appears is necessary for the exigencies that eventually have to be met by the authority of the President,

Only because such a power is given, Court cannot be asked to strike Clause (1-A) of Article 359 down by stamping it to be running counter to the basic principles of the Constitution. (Paras 85 and 91)

The provisions of Art. 359, Cl. (1-A), are really meant and intended to further fortify the conditions so as to maintain security of India during the period of grave emergency. On the face of it it is reasonable to think that the President who is charged to take steps while the country is engulfed by conditions threatening its integrity would apply his mind and make appropriate selection as may be necessary to meet the challenges emanating from the conditions available about the choice of rights reasonably selected for the purpose of suspension. Only because those rights may include certain fundamental rights like life and liberty or right of equality, the provision cannot be rendered unconstitutional or as running counter to the basic structure of the Constitution. If all those rights were to yield as they must to the security of the country, its reasonableness cannot at all be questioned. AIR 1976 SC 1207, Rel. on. (Para 85)

(D) Constitution of India, Articles 359 (1-A) and 14 — Presidential Order dated 27-6-1975 — Constitutionality.

On the basic framework or basic-feature-theory any challenge to the legality of the Order made by the President of India under Article 359 (1-A) of the Constitution suspending the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 14 along with other rights is not tenable. (Paras 92, 93)

(E) Constitution of India, Article 301 — Enactments fixing the ceiling and acquiring surplus land — Article 301 not violated — Mah. Agricultural Land (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Preamble.

Regulatory measures taken by the Statute to control immovable property cannot be termed as having effect on the inflow or outflow of economic concourse in the country. Only because the entitlement to hold land above the ceiling limits is curtailed, it does not follow that the resultant economic venture itself is put in any type of barricade. The concept of "freedom" in the context of land necessarily means the freedom to possess, freedom to enjoy and freedom to deal with it. Providing for the ceiling of such property is only to chisel or limit the extent of these rights in the property. In spite of ceiling, the agriculture which can be said to be trade and commerce and its intercourse is fully left free. To what extent the land should be available to citizen for the purpose of exploitation by agricultural and allied pursuits can always be defined by law. Once the pith and substance of the law is of such kind it follows that the trade or the commerce and its flow as far as agriculture is concerned, is neither impeded nor in any manner affected, for, within the limits it is free and the limits are permissible.

(Paras 97, 99 and 100)

(F) Interpretation of Statutes — Punctuation — Importance of.

Though undoubtedly punctuation is a minor element in the construction of the statute, sometimes if the statute is carefully punctuated its considerations assume importance and throws light on the intention of the makers of the statute.

(Para 112)

(G) Constitution of India, Art. 31-B — "Inconsistent with any provision of this part" — Construction.

The phrase "inconsistent with any provisions of this Part" is wide enough and need not be specifically controlled by the phrase "takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by any provisions of this Part". When the inconsistency is spoken of, it is obvious that it is inconsistent with any of the provisions and not only with the rights conferred by Part III.

(Paras 113, 114 and 119)

(H) Constitution of India, Article 25 — Mah. Agricultural Lands (Lowering of Ceiling on Holdings) and Amendment Act, 1972 (21 of 1975), Pre. — Mah. Agricultural Lands (Lowering of Ceiling on Holdings) and (Amendment) Amendment Act (47 of 1975), Pre. and Mah. Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Amendment Act, 1975 (2 of 1976), Pre. — Not violative of Article 25.

The impugned Acts do not in any manner affect the right conferred by Article 25, nor abridge the extent of that right. Even assuming that there is some cloud cast upon that right by the Act in that property which could have been utilised or is meant to be utilised for religious purposes even then the exercise of right to freedom as covered by Article 25 which is subject to other provisions of Part III would not be affected, Article 31-B being the provision contained in Part III of the Constitution and if read with Article 25 of the Constitution would afford protection to such laws placed in Ninth Schedule even if property used for religious purposes is affected. Therefore, challenge on any such ground on the basis of Article 25 is not well merited. AIR 1976 Bom 94, Rel. on. (Para 125)

(I) Mah. Agricultural Lands (Lowering of Ceiling on Holdings) and Amendment Act, 1972 (21 of 1975), Pre. — Mah. Agricultural Lands (Lowering of Ceiling on Holdings) and (Amendment) Amendment Act (47 of 1975), Pre. — Act No. 47 of 1975 — Cannot be challenged on the ground that it would have no operational field.

On the date Legislature made Act No. 47 of 1975, for its purposes Act No. 21 of 1975 was available and once the same was put into effect it would operate upon the terms of Act No. 21 of 1975 as have become part of the original Act.

(Para 131)

Act No. 47 of 1975 refers for the purpose of amendment to the Act No. 21 of 1975 as 'the Amending Act' and provides by different sections ranging from 2 to 8 how the Amending Act shall stand amended upon the enforcement of Act No. 47 of 1975. That term is intended to mean clearly the provisions of Act No. 21 of 1975 and by reference would operate with all force, wherever Act No. 21 of 1975 is operative. No anomaly is introduced nor any antilogy is raised. For reasons obvious it was left to the power of the State Government so to give effect to Act No. 21 of 1975 and then to make effective Act No. 47 of 1975. The Legislature did not injunct otherwise.

(Para 130)

(J) Constitution of India, Articles 37 and 245 — Directive principles — Relevancy of, in deciding validity of Statute.

The submission that the Court should strike down the laws because some of the directive principles do not appear to have been kept in view by the Legislature cannot be upheld.

(Para 132)

The law cannot be compelled to make the premises of directive principles by judicial interpretation which would mean its enforcement. Nor it would be proper to treat the directive principles in the constitutional scheme as limitations or fetters on the legislative powers. Case law discussed.

(Para 133)

(K) Constitution of India, Arts. 31-C and 39 (b) and (c) — Amendments of the Mah. Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961) replete with the principles underpinned by Art. 39 (b) and (c) — Protection from the challenge under Articles 14, 19 and 31 is, therefore, available because of Article 31-C.

(Paras 136, 137, 138)

(L) Constitution of India, Art. 31-A, Second proviso — Mah. Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961) (as amended) Section 23 — Section 23 not invalid on ground of violation of Article 31-A, second proviso.

It is well settled that the word "estate" in Article 31-A takes in the acquisition by the State of the rights in agricultural lands. The other conditions of the proviso are that such agricultural estate must be held by a person. The said estate must be under his personal cultivation. The estate must be within the ceiling limit applicable to the person concerned fixed by any law for the time being in force and the acquisition must operate upon such land and the law must provide the payment of compensation at a rate not less than the market value of such estate. All these conditions must co-exist before the injunction of the proviso can be effectively answered. For the purposes of the proviso the lands above the ceiling limit fixed by a law are not part of the right to claim compensation at the market rate as contemplated. If the land or the estate that is being acquired is below the ceiling limit, then and then the proviso enjoins that the law must make a provision regarding the compensation at the market rate. The submission, therefore, that even upon acquisition of the surplus land there must be such a compensation and there is any vice in Section 23 or the scheme regarding compensation for surplus land prescribed by the present law is not available on the basis of this proviso.

(M) Constitution of India, Art. 31-A, Second proviso — Mah. Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Section 4 (1) Explanation — Not violative of Art. 31-A, Second proviso — "Family unit" is a person — General Clauses Act (1897), Section 3 (42). AIR 1974 Punj 162 (FB), Diss. from.

As far as the person is concerned as contemplated by second proviso to Article 31-A "family unit" is a person within the meaning of the General Clauses Act, Section 3 (42) and there is no antilogy enacted by the scheme of the Act and further there is equitable, reasonable and workable scheme enacted by laws premises. Therefore, the terms of the second proviso of Article 31-A are fully answered and by reason that Act clearly being a measure of agrarian reform it having received the Presidential assent it is immune on its own terms being challenged on the basis that there is any violation of the fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution. AIR 1974 Punj 162 (FB), Dissented from.

(Paras 167, 172, 173 and 204)

(N) Mah. Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Sections 12, 13 and 40-A — Validity — Criticism that Sections 12 and 13 expose minors to penal consequences without any guidelines, held, not well founded — Penalty under Section 40-A is not imposed as a matter of course but only after prosecution after obtaining sanction of Collector.

(Para 178)

(O) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Sections 8, 9 and 10, Explanations 1 and 2 — Provisions cannot be criticised as confiscatory.

(Para 182)

(P) Constitution of India, Arts. 31-A, 31-B and 31-C — Operational difference between protection afforded by Articles 31-A and 31-C on one hand and Article 31-B on the other.

Each of the articles has independent protective potential. Articles 31-A and 31-C operate by their own force upon legislation of the type mentioned in those articles and satisfying the conditions of those articles render attacks emanating from inroads upon Articles 14, 19 and 31 as unavailable. By law either of the State or Union satisfying the conditions of Articles 31-A and 31-C immunity is made implicit in these regards without there being any need or necessity and evoke the constituent power under Article 368 of the Constitution. However, when that power is exercised by Parliament amending Ninth Schedule and the law made is placed there, Article 31-B springs into action to offer total protection and immunity to such law from any challenge whatsoever under Part III of the Constitution. Effects of these independent provisions have to be independently observed and applied. (Para 188)

(Q) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Section 3 (1) — Word "person" — Meaning.

The word "person" refers to individual person and not to "the family" as a person. There may however be other juristic persons contemplated by the Act. This is clear because of the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 3. (Para 195)

(R) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Sections 3 and 4 — Validity.

There exists a clear rationale underlining the scheme of both Sections 3 and 4 and no exception can be taken that there is any unfairness introduced affecting concepts of any personal law. Having determined entitlement as far as extent of land is concerned, personal law is free to operate and determine rights of persons under it. (Para 196)

(S) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Sections 2 (5) and 5 — Uniform fixation of Ceiling area — There is no vice in such fixation. (Para 201)

(T) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Sections 2-A and 44-A — Validity — There is no excessive delegation nor abdication of legislative power — Constitution of India, Article 245.

(Paras 207, 208)

(U) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Section 44-B, Proviso — Interpretation of.

Pleaders by themselves are the class of authorised agents and that particular professional is subjected to prohibition. Proviso, however, makes it clear that in a case of disabled persons the authorised agent who may include even a professional would be able to represent the interest of the minor or lunatic or any other person under disability.

(Para 213)

(V) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Section 44-B — Validity — Merely because Lawyer is not permitted, the provision cannot be stamped as violating natural justice. (Paras 215, 216)

(W) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Section 44-B — Applicability.

The operation of Section 44-B is prospective and restricted to the Act which is amended by Amending Acts Nos. 21 of 1975, 47 of 1975 and 2 of 1976. To the proceedings pending when those Acts came into force obviously Section 44-B would not be applicable and prohibition against "Pleader" would not be available therein. (Para 220)

(X) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Section 13 (3) — Validity.

Forfeiture as penalty after full hearing in the very nature of things cannot be questioned as unjust. To lay down the penalties and its scheme by themselves are the matters within the legislative competence. (Para 225)

(Y) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Section 17 (1) (as amended) — Validity — Provision cannot in any manner be said to be unreasonable. (Para 227)

(Z) Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), Section 21-A (1) — Validity.

It is not correct to say that the provisions are confiscatory, unjust and may put premium on the omission of the authorities under the Act to take possession of the land and subject the innocent holders to the pecuniary liability to pay compensation or damages. This provision cannot in any manner be treated as unconnected or unconcerned with agrarian reforms or the main object of the statute. (Paras 229 and 230)

3. At the outset it must be stated that in Special Civil Application No. 49 of 1976, decided by this Court on 22nd and 24th of June 1976 (Madanlal Rupchand Jethalia v. State of Maharashtra), the same said enactments were found to be valid. However, the contention, as we will indicate hereinafter, advanced on behalf of the petitioners at considerable length, is that that decision has not been rendered correctly and there is an obvious possibility of the contrary view on the matter and therefore the matter requires reconsideration. It has also been urged that some of the grounds raised by these petitioners were not raised nor are decided by that decision.

4. We thought it just and reasonable to give full hearing to the petitioners looking to the fact that from the eight districts of Vidarbha more than two thousand land-holders feel themselves aggrieved by the legislative enactment regarding the lowering of ceiling on holdings of agricultural land. Prima facie under the new process contemplated by law they are aggrieved. Indeed in the economic structure of the agrarian society in this country love for land haunts the life of men and sometimes tends to become oppressive means of aggrandisement. Though objectivai premises of the present Act are meant to secure egalitarian economics in the field of agriculture by pre-empting regulatory limits on holdings and further providing for equitable distribution of surplus land to landless, here before us is a mass of men complaining that its terms are unjust, unfair, unreasonable and above all unauthorised by the constitutional contemplation. Judicial scrutiny of such measures is the part of social engineering in a democratic set-up that adds vitality to the rule of law and acts as a balm to the rancouring and brooding sense of injustice.

5. We must observe at the threshold that once the co-ordinate Bench of this Court finds on a point and upholds the validity of the enactment, the issue as far as this Court is concerned clearly stands adjudicated. Unless the petitioners succeed in making out a case that the said judgment requires reconsideration and persuade us to take contrary view, the matter is not open as we are bound by the same.

6. The impugned Acts Nos. 21 and 47 of 1975 and Act No. 2 of 1976 are the Amending Acts to the original Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (Act No. 27 of 1961). All these enactments have been put in the Ninth Schedule to the Constitution of India by the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act, 1976. The original Act as amended from time to time was also put under the protection of the said Schedule by Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, 1964, followed by Constitution (Thirty-Ninth Amendment) Act, so as to cover the entire body of the Acts along with the Amending Acts. The purpose of these enactments is the agrarian reforms by providing for ceiling on the holdings of agricultural lands and further providing for finding surplus agricultural land and its acquisition for equitable distribution thereof. By Maharashtra Act No. 27 of 1970, in the preamble of the original Act further declaration as to its purpose was provided by the statement that the Act is a measure to provide that the lands taken over from undertakings and the integrity of which is maintained in compact blocks for ensuring the full and efficient use of the land for agriculture and its efficient management through Corporations, including a Company owned or controlled by the State, be granted to such Corporations or Company; and for matters connected with those purposes were also stated to be the part of objectivai statement in the preamble.

7. Under the Constitution the supportive Legislative entries for all these are in List II of Seventh Schedule at Item 14 regarding agriculture, Item 18 regarding land and in List III at Item 42 regarding acquisition and requisitioning of property. Those entries read with Article 245 of the Constitution permit the State Legislature to enact laws regarding land and rights in or over land as well transfer and alienation of agricultural land. Further it enables the State to make laws regarding the acquisition and requisitioning of immovable property like land. In pith and substance, these laws emanate from the powerspring of these entries.

8. In State of Maharashtra v. Madhavrao Damodar Patil, (AIR 1968 SC 1395), original Act as amended by Maharashtra Act No. 13 of 1962 was found to be protected after its insertion in Ninth schedule because of Article 31-B of the Constitution. The question of amending Acts Nos. 16 and 33, 37 of 1969 and 27 of 1970, amending the original Act was eventually decided by the Supreme Court in Godavari Sugar Mills v. S. B. Kamble, (AIR 1975 SC 1193), the same being protected by reason of Article 31-A of the Constitution. Similarly this Court in Wasudeo v. State, (AIR 1976 Bom 94) negatived the challenge to some of the provisions of the original Act on the basis of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) and 25 of the Constitution because the same had the protection of the Constitutional umbrella erected by Article 31-B of the Constitution.

9. Act No. 21 of 1975 by Section 2 makes a Constitutional statement to the effect that the Act was enacted "for giving effect to the policy of the State towards securing the principles specified in clause (b) and clause (c) of Article 39 of the Constitution of India, and in particular, but without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing declaration, for providing that the ownership and control of the agricultural resources of the community, are so distributed as best to subserve the common good, and also that the operation of the agricultural economic system does not result in the concentration of wealth and means of agricultural production to the common detriment". Thus by its terms it erects a statutory shield under Article 31-C of the Constitution.

10. We may now proceed to indicate the spread of the petitions at this stage and now we propose to deal with the same.

11. There are petitions which question the validity of the whole enactment as well certain specific provisions of the Act itself. Mainly the validity of the enactment is questioned on the ground that these enactments infringe the constitutional injunction with regard to the property and the rights declared and guaranteed in favour of the landholders. Constitutional challenge is a four-fold one. Firstly, it seeks to assert incompetency of the Legislature arising either because law is not made in accordance with the terms of Article 31-A and/or Article 31-C or because it is made contrary to the declared guarantee of Article 301 of the Constitution. Secondly, it is the rampart raised on the base of basic structure of the Constitution. It is said that Article 359 (1-A), Article 31-B or Ninth Schedule cannot protect State Legislation if it affects basic structure doctrine and robs the constitutional premise of this vitality. Thirdly, constitutional incompetency of the Legislature is put in issue because it is submitted that certain provisions run riot beyond the geographical jurisdiction, power and limit of the State Legislature and the doctrine inherent in Seventh Schedule that the writ of laws can run effectively within the boundaries of the State, has been infringed. The challenge proceeds to assert that some of the provisions of this law infringe the federal principles of the State autonomy and in fact is a legislation that is made against the doctrine of territorial limits. Fourthly, certain provisions to which reference would be made in the judgment are said to be artificial, unreasonable, unworkable and alien to the object of agrarian reforms contemplated by the law and as such are in fact and in substance made in colourable exercise of legislative power. It is submitted that these provisions be struck down as invalidly enacted.

12. The second group of petitions which have been filed and admitted or are put before us upon the orders of the Single Bench further question the validity of the orders made under the Act by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal confirming the orders of the Surplus Land Determination Tribunals as those petitions have been filed after the petitioners were subjected to the process of the present law.

13. The third group of petitions are at the stage of admissions and they have also been put along with these petitions, for, they substantially are covered by either of the group noted above. We have heard the counsel even appearing in those petitions.

14. The fourth group of petitions cover the same said ground but have been filed after the Surplus Land Determination Tribunals made the orders and without filing the appeal as provided for by the Act.

15. We propose to deal with all these cases in the manner hereinbelow indicated and these groups will stand decided by the eventual directions given at the conclusion of the judgment.

16. We would begin by alluding to the well-settled rules of interpretation relevant for the purpose of these petitions upon the debate addressed by the learned Advocates before us on both sides.

17. First and foremost principle is that once a law is made by the competent Legislature, it has to be approached with the presumption that it is constitutionally valid and every doubt has to be resolved so as to uphold its validity. (See Madhubhai v. Union of India, (AIR 1961 SC 21) and V. M. Syed Mahammad and Company v. State of Andhra, (AIR 1954 SC 314)). The second equally available principle is that by interpretation the law cannot be rendered invalid and if there are two interpretations equally possible, one that tends to uphold its validity has to be preferred: [See: In re Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, (AIR 1941 FC 72), State of Bombay v. R. M. D. Chamarbaugwala, (1957 SCR 874) = (AIR 1957 SC 699); Jagdish Pandey v. Chancellor, Bihar, (AIR 1968 SC 353); Jothi Timber Mart v. Calicut Municipality, (AIR 1970 SC 264) and State of M. P. v. D. N. C. P. Hill Colliery Co., (AIR 1972 SC 614)].

18. The third vital principle is that we will not be asked to embark upon the task of considering the constitutionality of a law unless the person before us is affected by the same; nor it will be right for this Court to decide the larger questions than deemed necessary by the issue raised in any given petition. [See: Hans Muller v. Superintendent, Presidency Jail, Calcutta, (AIR 1955 SC 367) and Suraj Mall v. A. V. Vishwanatha Shastri, (AIR 1954 SC 545)]. We must with this make it clear that Court cannot be asked to sit in judgment over the wisdom of the Legislature merely upon the premises of justice or injustice flowing from the law questioned. There cannot possibly be any appeal to us on such count once we find law is made with competence and is valid.

19. Keeping in view these basic principles, we propose to deal with the matters raised severally by the learned counsel in support of the petitions. Here we heard several learned submissions advanced by the counsel appearing in support of the petitions and we propose hereinafter to summarise the submissions of all the learned counsel. It may be stated that Mr. R. M. Hajarnavis and Mr. Dharmadhikari, Y. S. learned counsel appearing for the petitioners, mainly argued the matter in various aspects thereof. The other learned counsel M/s. S. N. Kherdekar, J. N. Chandurkar, B. R. Mandlekar, R. N. Deshpande, V. Mohta and L. Mohta, Pendharkar, V. R. Padhye, V. S. Sohoni, R. M. Johrapurkar, B. P. Jaiswal, M. S. Choudhari, C. P. Kalele, S. V. Naik, M. Q. Qazi, S. G. Deshpande, D. K. Khamborkar, V. D. Deshmukh, C. G. Madkholkar and Y. S. Athale either supported the submissions so raised or raised their independent points which will be indicated in the summary of the submissions which we propose to make. At this stage it may be mentioned that Mr. Mandlekar has also moved an application for sending the case to the Full Bench. That aspect of the matter will also be considered at the appropriate stage. The learned counsel addressed us at considerable length and in their respective petitions with considerable industry tried to demonstrate the effect of the present law on the rights of the petitioners.

20. As the case involved the question of challenge to constitutional amendments, notice was issued to Attorney-General of India in some of the petitions and the learned Advocate-General of the State of Maharashtra Mr. R. W. Adik appeared and addressed us on these matters. In his terse, pithy and profound submissions, the learned Advocate-General countered the several contentions raised in this petition, to which we will make a reference as we proceed to deal with the respective issues involved.

21. The substance of these submissions is that the Maharashtra Act No. 21 and Act No. 47 of 1975 under challenge do not firstly satisfy the requirements of agrarian reforms. Even if these enactments may be treated to be the statutes regarding the agrarian reform, they do not satisfy the test of the second proviso to Article 31-A of the Constitution. Article 31-A of the Constitution protects the laws relating to agrarian reforms from challenges based on Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution and it is urged is a fetter on the legislative power as contemplated by Article 245 of the Constitution. It is submitted with considerable conviction that legislative power with regard to laws regarding agrarian reforms in this country not only flows from Article 245 of the Constitution, but it is expressly subjected to the stipulations of Article 31-A and the law in its present shape and reach cannot be saved even if protected by Article 31-B unless it is consistent with the second proviso appended to Article 31-A. Only because the law is placed in Ninth Schedule and offered the constitutional protection, the requirements of Article 31-A which are legislative in scope and operate upon the Legislature's competence do not cease to be the part of the Constitution. About the earlier decision of this Court in Madanlal Rupchand's case (S. C. A. No. 49 of 1976, D/- 24-6-1976) (Bom) (supra) it is submitted that the ratio of that judgment treating that the proviso created a negative fundamental right is against the plain reading of Article 31-A which is a fetter on legislative power. Reliance is placed on the decisions of the Supreme Court in Sudararamier and Co. v. State of A. P., (AIR 1958 SC 468, at para 42). Jeejeebhoy v. Assistant Collector, (AIR 1965 SC 1096 at para 7), State of Bihar v. Kameswar Singh, (AIR 1952 SC 252) and Kesavananda Bharati v. State of Kerala, (AIR 1973 SC 1461).

22. In this aspect of the matter it is further urged that the provisions of Section 4 of the Act, now amended enacting the concept of 'family unit' and its premises are contrary to the second proviso to Article 31-A. The term 'person' in that proviso is referable to natural or juristic person and it was impermissible for the legislature to first constitute a unit of such person and then to prescribe ceiling. Family unit not being a person and being an artificial concept, it is urged, does not satisfy the test of the second proviso. Reliance is placed on the Full Bench decision of Punjab and Haryana High Court in Sucha Singh Bajwa v. The State of Punjab, (AIR 1974 Punj and Har 162) followed in Saroj Kumari v. State of Haryana, (AIR 1975 Punj and Har 353). Section 4 is further attacked on the ground that it is arbitrary, colourable legislation providing for clubbing of persons together and is really a colourable device, confiscatory in character. Reliance is placed on Kshetra Mohan v. E. P. T. Commissioner, (AIR 1953 SC 516); K. Kunhikoman v. State of Kerala, (AIR 1962 SC 723); A. P. Krishnaswami v. State of Madras, (AIR 1964 SC 1515) and Gowli Buddanna v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Mysore, (AIR 1966 SC 1523) and the decision of this Court in Baburao v. State of Maharashtra, (1974 Mah LJ 385) to submit that 'family unit' as contemplated by this law is entirely artificial and is fraught with discriminatory results as indicated in the scheme of the impugned Acts.

23. The ratio of Venkatrao v. State of A. P., (AIR 1975 AP 315) (FB) and Bhaskar v. State of Karnataka, (AIR 1975 Karnataka 55) is being distinguished on the basis that the case in Inder Singh v. State of Punjab, (AIR 1967 SC 1776) has not been correctly applied by those Courts. 'Family unit' according to the submissions cannot be treated as a legal entity nor is a natural person. It is merely a device to club the property of the minors and unmarried daughters and eventually deprives them of the same. The results are invidious, discriminatory.

24. Section 4 read with the provisions of Sections 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 23 and 43-A of the Act works out unjust, discriminatory vague and hard results. Pertinent attention was drawn to the provisions of Section 4 (2) which operate upon the declarations of dissolutions of marriages made by the Court after September 26, 1970, which are directed to be ignored for the purposes of determination of the ceiling area to be held by the family unit. It is, indeed, submitted that the unreasonableness and irrelevant character of the concept of family unit is writ large and the counsel complains that the device is apparently to club the strangers though they had ceased to be bound by the marriage or family tie and thus is incompetently resorted to. It is urged that the grouping of minors and women in this unknown and unreasonable unit offends the known family group as well as in its working under the Act results are reached quite contrary to the contemplation of Article 15 (3), Article 14 as well Article 31-A of the Constitution. The natural event of a person being major or person being married is sought to be operative in favour of constituting discriminatory approach with regard to the rights of minor and unmarried females. It is also urged that the concept cannot be sustained even by declaration upon the Act No. 21 of 1975 that this is a measure answering the requirements of Article 31-C of the Constitution.

25. Mr. Kherdekar, one of the learned counsel argued that Article 31-B inserted by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951, itself is invalid. He similarly questions the validity of the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act, 1976, by which the Acts in issue have been placed in the Ninth Schedule of the Constitution. Both these attacks on the constitutional amendments are based on the principles available on the BASIC STRUCTURE i.e., Kesavananda Bharati's case (supra). The submission is that Article 31-B itself is a device which can rob off the total basic structure of the Constitution. It is fraught with disastrous consequences. Some of the learned counsel submitted that Article 31-B is totally limited in scope and reach and it does not cure the defect of the Legislative incompetency. That matter arose because of the provisions contained in Part III of the Constitution. At the most the constitutional umbrella of Article 31-B would protect the laws from the challenges based on fundamental rights as contained in Part III. If each and every provision of Part III is intended, the argument proceeds, the vice in making of Article 31-B is implicit and on the face of it cannot be said to be a provision made competently by resort to the power under Article 368 of the Constitution. It is urged that in the basic structure, equality of status has now been recognised to be the part of the basic constitutional principles. Equality, therefore, is referable to the premises of Article 14. The citizen or the person cannot effectively enjoy the premises of equality or premises of equal status without the adjunct of property. It is submitted therefore on the strength of the decision available in the election case i.e., Smt. Indira Nehru Gandhi v. Rajnarayan, (AIR 1975 SC 2299), that though the law purports to affect the right in property, in effect it is open to question on the ground that it affects the equality principle under the Constitution. Invocation to Article 31-B would not validate the defect on that count. Judicial review is yet available to test the premises of the law on the basis as to whether it satisfies the equal protection as well equality of status contemplated by the basic principles of constitutional theory.

26. Thus in the first part of the submission of the learned counsel there is challenge to the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951 inserting Article 31-B. There is further challenge to the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act putting the present statutes in the Ninth Schedule. Similarly Mr. Dharmadhikari questions the validity of the Constitution (Thirty-eighth Amendment) Act, inserting clause (1-A) to Article 359 of the Constitution, on the same said ground that it affects the basic structure of the Constitution. The point regarding Art. 359 (1-A) of the Constitution is raised because of facts available on record, which may be briefly stated at this stage so as to avoid further repetition.

27. As we stated the original Act, till the stage of several amendments (has affected) by Acts Nos. 16/68, 33/68, 37/69 and 27/70 were found to be protected by Article 31-A as well because of its inclusion by Article 31-B in Ninth Schedule; (See Godavari Sugar Mills v. S. B. Kamble, AIR 1975 SC 1193 and State of Maharashtra v. Madhavrao Damodar Patil, AIR 1968 SC 1395). Under the original Act, there is no challenge available under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution and on the basis of any other fundamental right. The challenge on the ground of Article 25 i.e., the original Act affected the religious freedom has been negatived by this Court because of the constitutional umbrella erected by Article 31-B; (See Wasudeo v. State, AIR 1976 Bom 94).

28. The present Amendment Acts i.e., 21/75 which has substituted amended Chapters II and III for the original Chapters in the principal Act is followed by further amendment to the Amending Act by Act No. 47 of 1975 and there is further Amendment Act being Mh. A. No. 2 of 1976. When these Acts were made, the Presidential order of June 25, 1975 made a proclamation of emergency under Article 352 (1) of the Constitution. On June 27, 1975, the President of India further made order with reference to clause (1) of Article 359 declaring the right of any person to move any Court under Articles 14, 21 and 22 of the Constitution and all proceedings to remain suspended for the period of emergency declared under Article 352 (1) of the Constitution. That order was in addition to the earlier orders made under Article 359 (1) of the Constitution. Constitution (Thirty-Eighth) Amendment Act, 1975, amended Article 352 as well as Article 359 by adding to the former, clauses (4) and (5) and to the latter clause (1-A). That was published in the Gazette on August 1, 1975. The present enactments were put into effect on September 19, 1975 as far as Act No. 21 of 1975 is concerned, on September 20, 1975 as far as Act No. 47 of 1975 is concerned and on January 3, 1976 as far as Act No. 2 of 1976 is concerned, i.e., after the Presidential Order of June 27, 1975.

29. Faced with these facts, it is submitted that the insertion of Cl. (1-A) in Article 359, by Section 7 of the Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, 1975, cannot have the effect of suspending the basic structure and basic principles of the Constitution. Challenge to laws that affect the basic structure of the Constitution should be treated to be alive. The concept of basic principle cannot be controlled by the state of emergency or by any other declaration made by the President who himself is the creation of the Constitution and the orders made by such office under the Constitution cannot eclipse the challenges based on the basic features of the constitutional statute. If the effect of insertion of clause (1-A) is to affect that basic principle or structure, it is urged that the Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, 1975, which inserted the said clause by Section 7 has been incompetently made.

30. The newly added Article according to the submission operates upon the enforcement of the remedy and affects the basic rights as contained in Part III of the Constitution. That is not a measure to give immunity. Therefore, it is urged that declaratory reliefs that certain laws have been incompetently made because of the fetters operative upon the legislative powers as contemplated by Part III of the Constitution can still be made by the Courts possessing original jurisdiction. To the extent of such a declaration the scrutiny of the law is effectively permissible in spite of the Presidential Order and in spite of Article 359 (1). In fact, Clause (1-A) is a colourable device and the argument proceeds, therefore, to assert that the basic rights including the one of judicial review as contemplated by Art. 32 and Article 226 of the Constitution are affected and, therefore, such a provision cannot stand in the way of the petitioners in seeking the redress against the law that affects obviously his right to hold property and maintain equality of status. After all, the ratio of the Election Case is that equality is the basic principle fundamental to the Constitutional Law, the Presidential Order putting enforcement of Article 14 in eclipse because of the power conferred by Article 359 (1-A) is itself bad. Mr. Dharmadhikari proceeds to classify the laws as being Ordinary Law and the Constitutional Law, the latter being the Constitutional Amendment laws. According to the learned counsel, the principle of constitutional law permits that the constitutional law must satisfy the test of the principles of the basic structure or framework of the Constitution. The law placed in the Ninth Schedule partakes in the nature of the Constitutional Law, because that requires exercise of power for effecting amendment to the Constitution. Therefore, on the principles of basic structure or basic framework of the Constitution, the law will have to be tested. The argument proceeds, such laws though put in the Constitutional umbrella of Article 31-B must be examined and should satisfy the requirements of basic structure or basic framework or basic principle of the Constitution. If, on the scrutiny the laws affect those principles, the Courts are not incompetent to declare them to be void. According to the learned counsel, thus the scrutiny on the basis of Articles 14, 15, 19 (d) (e) and (f) and Article 39 (a) and (f) to test the validity of the laws in issue is a scrutiny to find the basic constitutional structure and not a scrutiny shut out by the Presidential Order. The argument is that under the constitutional premise, there is an injunction to protect the weaker sections of the society, particularly women and minors. That obligation must be treated as fundamental and basic to the constitutional framework and cannot be violative and the challenge cannot be defeated by merely placing the Act in Ninth Schedule. So is the argument based on equality of status and equal protection of laws though with regard to property. It is indeed contended that if democratic set-up is basic concept, then equality before law is equally basic being the part of democratic set up. That principle is affected clearly by the provisions in issue. Article 31-B is a frail device to protect such laws.

31. As to the directive principles under Article 39 (b) and (c) and Article 31-C, the learned counsel submits that upon the closer scrutiny it will appear that the requirements of Article 39 (b) and (c) are not satisfied. Similar is the position with regard to the Article 31-A of the Constitution.

32. One of the learned counsel appearing in group of petitions raised the question at the foot of Article 301 of the Constitution. It is urged that this law affects the freedom of trade and commerce being the agriculture. According to Mr. Mohota, in various manners this freedom has been barricaded and in fact the law is so unreasonable that after it was so enforced, the matters of equality, price, local conditions of the land etc., all have been swept away and the rights to property have been shrunk to such a low that in a given case it amounts to total confiscation and snatch of any further agriculture. The law being extra-territorial it is urged, the movement of trade on agriculture and/or of commerce, agricultural produce is patently affected. Reliance is placed on Atiabari Tea Co. v. State of Assam, (AIR 1961 SC 232), Automobile Transport Co. v. State of Rajasthan, (AIR 1962 SC 1406) and the District Collector Hyderabad v. Ibrahim and Co., (AIR 1970 SC 1275).

33. Coming to the law once again the submissions are that the premises of the present laws do not in fact relate to agrarian reforms. The classification of land is fraught with inequality and is totally colourable if it is compared with the earlier scheme of the laws on the same said principle. It is urged that the provisions of Sections 12, 13 (3), 16, 17, 21-A and 27 are bad being vague, indefinite and unworkable as well having no rational basis. It is submitted that in Indian Society family is not merely a social unit but a religious concept governed by several laws and differing religions. There are laws regarding succession, inheritance and the principles with regard to the appropriation of property which have religious sanction. All that concept is shaken up by the premises of the present law and the religious freedom is seriously affected by the unreasonable and artificial units and grouping of their rights together. The provisions of Sections 2 (a) and 44-A regarding the constitution of Tribunals have been put in issue on the ground that essential legislative function has been abdicated and the vice is of excessive delegation. The very concept of constituting such Tribunal affects the principles of basic adjudication of the property rights. There being no qualifications laid down for the appointment of the members of the Tribunals the Legislature has left it to the sweet fiat of the executive to constitute the Tribunals who have been given immense powers over the property and working of the rights under the Act. This is more so because of the enactment of Section 44-B which prohibits Pleaders from being engaged in proceedings. The provisions of Section 44-B are challenged because it is said that they violate the basic concept of natural justice and there is no reasonable ground to exclude the pleaders who can effectively represent the interest of the person who may face the penalty before the Tribunal and who may not be able to guard his own interest. The requirements of Section 12, Sections 13, 17 and other penal provisions were pressed in aid to point out the obligations of the proceeding. It is urged that the provision on the face of it is colourable in nature and deprives the party from being given any hearing whatsoever, though the consequences of the proceedings are serious in that he loses the property or faces the penalty. It is however urged that certain provisions of the Act which permit retrospective operation are arbitrary and have no reasonable nexus whatsoever. It was stated for the State that 26th September, 1970, was the date when the Chief Ministers' Conference met in Delhi to review the provisions regarding ceiling to evolve a national policy in that regard and that date is given for the purposes of prospective operation. An affidavit is put in in some of the petitions to say that they were not aware of any such conference nor had any knowledge from any source about the said conference.

34. One more point which according to the petitioners goes to the root of the matter is raised because of the two Acts. Act No. 21 of 1975, which is an amending Act and which was made operative on 19th of September, 1975, is said to have become the part of the original Act on 19th September, 1975, because it was put into effect on that date. The other Act No. 47 of 1975, which is styled as the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Lowering of Ceiling on Holdings) and (Amendment) Amendment Act, 1975, was brought into force on 20th of September, 1975. The argument is that because the earlier Act was put into effect on 19th it became the part of the original Act and nothing survived as Amendment Act, 1975. Therefore, Act No. 47 of 1975 would not operate upon any other Act. Reliance is placed on Shyamrao Parulekar v. D. M. Thana, (AIR 1952 SC 324) to point out the effect of the amendment. Mr. Hajarnavis who raised this point with considerable conviction argues that Act No. 47 of 1975 is a stillborn law. In effect it brought about the results which drastically change even the ceiling areas. He relied upon the changes made by Act No. 47 of 1975 with regard to the area of land to be retained by the person or family unit and the class of land to submit that this law cannot operate because there is no Act No. 21/75 available for the purposes of further amendment. It is, therefore, said that at any rate Act No. 47 of 1975 should be adjudged to be a bad piece of legislation.

35. Two questions were raised, one by Mr. Kherdekar with regard to Section 4 (2) of the Act regarding the dissolution of marriage and their statutory effacement from an anterior date 26-9-1970 and another by Mr. Athaley regarding whether the Hindu idol is a person within the meaning of the Act so as to be able to hold property till the ceiling limit. We make it clear at the very outset that we are not called upon to enquire into the validity of the provisions of Section 4 (2), for, before us there is no case where the marriage is being ignored at the foot of Section 4 (2). The question for all purposes is left open. As far as the question raised by Mr. Athaley is concerned, we had already made clear when he argued the matter that it merely raises a question of interpretation and application of the law which can be appropriately considered by the authorities under the Act first or any other remedy available to the petitioners in that regard. That question is also being left open.

36. Then is the question regarding the extra-territorial operation of the provisions of Sections 3 (1), 3 (2) and Section 4 along with Sections 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 16, 17, 18, 21, 23, 43-A as well as 47. Some of these sections create penalties, while some direct ignoring transfers and other devices and operate retrospectively for that purpose. The submission is that on the face of the scheme of these sections, there is clear extra-territorial operation both with regard to the subject as well with regard to the liability. It is urged that for making such laws the Maharashtra Legislature is incompetent. It can only enact laws which will be operative in its own territorial jurisdiction. It is further submitted that there is no territorial nexus sufficient or real which will permit such a legislation. According to the submission, the nexus has to be arrived at by the legislative relations with regard to the object, thing or activity about which the law is made. Reliance is placed on the Full Bench decision of this Court reported in State v. Narayandas, (AIR 1958 Bom 68), Wallace Bros. and Co. Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (AIR 1948 PC 118), State of Bombay v. R. M. D. Chamarbaugwala, (AIR 1957 SC 699), Tata Iron and Steel Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, (1958 SCR 1355) = (AIR 1959 SC 452), State of Bihar v. Sm. Charusila Dasi, (AIR 1959 SC 1002), Kochuni v. States of Madras and Kerala, (AIR 1960 SC 1080). It is urged that the view taken in Madanlal Rupchand's case of the Division Bench is clearly unsustainable with regard to the extra-territorial operation as well as with regard to the nexus on which the law operates.

37. As the questions are raised regarding the constitutional amendments questioning the validity of the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951 enacting Article 31-B questioning validity of the Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act inserting Clause (1-A) to Article 359 and questioning the validity of the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act, 1975, and as is the duty of the Court when such questions are raised to decide the same, we begin by observing what we feel to be the correct position according to us about the constitutional amendments.

38. The situs and the conspectus of the power to amend the Constitution is in Part XX, Article 368 thereof. By Constitution (Twenty-Fourth Amendment) Act, 1971, clause (1) was substituted and in terms Constitution now declares that "Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution, Parliament may in exercise of its constituent power amend by way of addition, variation or repeal any provision of this Constitution in accordance with the procedure laid down in this article". The width and scope of this clause is declaratory as well operational. It is made clear that Indian Parliament possesses the supreme constituent power. Except the procedure required to be followed by terms of Article 368, the operational field of that power is potentially available with regard to addition, variation or repeal of any of the provisions of the Constitution. In Constitutional theory, it must be assumed that the omnipotent sovereign power as far as Indian Constitution is concerned now vests in the Parliament which represents for all constitutional purposes the people of the country. The omnipotent sovereignty is derivative to the extent that the Indian Parliament in law and by its creative force represents the people of India. In any developed polity it is recognized principle that the ultimate sovereignty is in the people of the country from whom springs all legitimate authority of other organs. Constitution being the fundamental law for governance by its terms as available in Article 368 indicates the seat of constituent power for effecting changes in that fundamental law and further lays down the procedure therefor. By sheer logic of language and the underlying principles of the omnipotence of such sovereign constituent power, indeed it is difficult to imply limitations on the power in its operational sphere. Language of the Charter of the Constitution in this regard per force should receive broad and natural construction and narrow pedantic views based on apprehensions of the abuse, misuse of undue arrogation of such power so as to construct anomaly or unclarity has to be avoided. It would be salutary to refer to what was stated by the Privy Council in The Queen v. Burah, ((1878) 5 Ind App 178) (PC):

"..... The established Courts of Justice, when a question arises whether the prescribed limits have been exceeded, must of necessity determine that question; and the only way in which they can properly do so, is by looking to the terms of the instrument by which affirmatively, the legislative powers were created, and by which, negatively, they are restricted. If what has been done is legislation, within the general scope of the affirmative words which give the power and if it violates no express condition or restriction by which that power is limited (in which category would, of course, be included any Act of the Imperial Parliament at variance with it), it is not for any Court of Justice to inquire further, or to enlarge constructively those conditions and restrictions."

The high principles so stated by the Privy Council have been applied to the interpretation and even in finding the basic structure or the basic principles in this constitutional doctrine in Kesavananda Bharati v. State of Kerala, (AIR 1973 SC 1461).

39. Two correct propositions emerge with regard to the exercise of the judicial scrutiny by interpretation with regard to the exercise of the constituent power from the observation which is a high law as far as the constitutional theory is concerned. Firstly, the Courts should scrutinise instrument to find out the positive terms thereof. Secondly, the Court should seek to restrict the power if there are express limitations put on the exercise of that power by the terms of the statute. The doctrine of express limitation on the power, if applied on first principles, it would be obvious that in constitutional theory upon the contents of Article 368 which is the Charter conferring constituent power, except the procedure required to be followed, no other express conditions or restrictions or limitations have been imposed or made operative. It would be legitimate to infer in the context that the width and the amplitude of Article 368 and its scope does not permit any inhibition on the exercise of the power provided it is exercised for the purposes mentioned therein.

40. In constitutional theory exercise of constituent power cannot be mixed with the procedure prescribed for that exercise of power. By laying down the procedure, the fundamental instrument does not lay down limitations on the content of such power. It is always prudent that power and procedure for its exercise should be separately understood and latter need not be confused with the former.

41. To this it must be added what is germane in the doctrine of separation of powers in a democratic State. The submissions, as were advanced before us, are always pressed in aid as if this too is operative limitation upon the concept of constituent power. In theory the separation of legislative, executive and judicial wings of Government is the product of some seminal principles of political governance which may draw upon the Charter of the Constitution. These departments or agents of State Power are the creative organs for the total governance of the country. In law it is the Government that itself functions by these three departments, each of whom have inbuilt sphere of activity. They owe their origin and source as well its existence and operation to the Constitution of the State itself. By the felt dictates of historical necessities, the charter of governance of the fundamental law makes choice of full and complete separation of powers by resort to enumerative and exhaustive declarations and devices work out lines of limitation. There is no contradiction contemplated if the Charter of the Constitution tends to permit overlapping of authority. The source of limitation therefore, of such derivative power has to be searched for and found in the express terms of the fundamental law itself and not elsewhere. By very nature of things and by the wisdom of the experience the given people may evolve a system which will not answer the theory of isolation in authority or tight separation of power. What particular polity would have for themselves as a fundamental law and what premises and what character and content would it possess are clearly the matters that form part of the political power which makes the part of the constituent power itself. The Courts erected by the constitutional premises after all are the State functionaries. They cannot, nor do possess any constitutional or political power in the sense stated here. The doctrine of scrutiny or review by Courts is limited by the express purpose of the creation of Courts. Judicial power so properly called should be understood as distinct and unconnected with the political power, the latter having contents of effectuating political measures and policy. Distinctively the constituent-power is original political authority and is best subserved by its omnipotence in any sovereign country. Any limitation by scrutiny or review by any other organ which owes its origin to the fundamental instrument emanating from that power would lead to antilogical as well practical areas of confrontations.

42. As the High Court of the State under the Indian Constitution and having the function if question is raised to find the constituent power and its possessor in the constitutional document, we would have, left to ourselves, leaned to take the view that after the Constitution (Twenty-Fourth Amendment) Act, 1971 which in terms declared what was implicit in Article 368, the challenge raised before us was unentertainable. From the very beginning it would be impermissible exercise to admit any debate with regard to the Constitution Amendment Acts, on the basis of the wisdom or on the basis of public policy, except to the extent that the procedure for exercise of the constituent power expressly stated has not been followed or the purpose for which the power is necessarily to be exercised has not been reached. As we stated above, Article 368 by itself has laid no inbuilt express limitation and clause (2) thereof indicates procedure and by proviso requires that the law should also be ratified in the specified matters governed by sub-clauses (a) to (e) by the Legislatures of not less than one-half of the States. Further the doubt that was debated at the foot of Article 13 stands expressly resolved by clause (3) of Art. 368 in that nothing in Article 13 would apply to any amendatory law made under Article 368. Thus on plain and grammatical first reading, the exercise of the constituent power is not limited in any manner. It should be legitimate to infer from the terms of Article 368 itself that the judicial organ represented by Courts would only be entitled to see whether the constituent power has been exercised in the manner prescribed and for the purposes of the constituent power. It follows that we cannot be asked to sit in appeal over the wisdom, over the policy or over the matters of exigencies of the amendatory laws affecting changes in the Constitution.

43. All this we observe with full awareness that much debate in respect of Article 368 and in respect of the Constitution (Twenty-Fourth Amendment) Act has been raised and now holds the authority of law as far as we are concerned because of Article 141 of the Constitution. It has been accepted by the highest Court of the country that the words of Article 368 (1) still possess ambiguity and the constituent power referred to in Article 368 cannot be equated to the constituent power which is exercised while framing the original Constitution and further that the words 'any provision' indicate an inbuilt inhibition against the exercise of the constituent power itself. Having found areas of ambiguity the limitations on the exercise of the constituent power have been judicially recognised. Though we feel that the situs and conspectus of power is totally omnipotent by the plain reading thereof, it appears to us to be a mere exercise by rendering obiter which has little value.

44. Truly the field is not virgin. Powerful criss-cross columns of powerful beams of light of thoughts have explored and searched the inter-crevices of all that this Article 368 holds out as the constituent power in favour of the Indian Parliament. We are bound to apply the law as declared by the highest court in this country because of the dictates of Article 141 of the Constitution, whatever may be our views on law in this regard. Therefore, the exercise before us eventually would be an exercise of finding ratio of the decisions of the Supreme Court and its application and not any original exercise.

45. We begin by referring to few stages of the constitutional history. In this regard what is eventually to be found out are the principles that would be effectively applied to the controversy before us. The Constitution (First Amendment) Act, which came into force on 18th June, 1951 within almost 2 years of the Constitution becoming effective inter alia enacted Article 31-A as well Article 31-B of the Constitution and was questioned before the Supreme Court in Sankari Prasad's case (AIR 1951 SC 458) and the constitutional amendment was upheld. The law on this aspect of the matter has been consistently applied on the footing that Article 13 (2) of the Constitution did not put fetters on the constituent power, till decision in Sajjan Singh's case (AIR 1965 SC 845) was rendered. In Sajjan Singh's case the Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act was found to be validly enacted as the subject-matter of the Act fell within Article 368 and in Golak Nath v. State (AIR 1967 SC 1643) the ratio of Sajjan Singh's case as also of Sankari Prasad's case was put in issue and the majority of the learned Judges found that Article 13 operated as a fetter on the amendatory power with regard to the Constitution vested in Parliament, the power being the part of reser-duary item of the legislative list given in Schedule VII with regard to the Union subjects. Thus in Golak Nath's case for the purposes of the constitutional theory, Article 368, as it then stood was found to be not the situs of the constituent power and it was treated to be the power referable to the Union List and the residuary Article. Consequently it being a power to make laws it was treated to be always subject to Article 13 of the Constitution. Thus Golak Nath's case overruled the principles on which Sankari Prasad and Sajjan Singh's cases upheld the constitutional amendment to the Indian Constitution.

46. The Parliament, therefore, passed Constitution (Twenty-Fourth) Amendment Act, 1971 which came into force on 5th November 1971. The Article to which we have made a reference was amended by that Act. Because of the direct pronouncement of the Supreme Court, that amendment was necessitated and there was eventually challenge to the Constitution (Twenty-Fourth Amendment) Act in Kesavananda Bharati's case which we propose to call as the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE reported in AIR 1973 SC 1461. There the Constitution (Twenty-Fourth Amendment) Act was put in issue, so also the power of the Parliament to amend the Constitution and its conspectus as operative upon the provisions of the Indian Constitution.

47. Before we understand the holdings of the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) as far as relevant for our purpose, because much reliance is placed on that case, we may indicate that in Kunjukutty Sahib v. State of Kerala, (AIR 1972 SC 2097), Kerala Land Reforms Act, 1964, i.e. as amended by Act No. 35 of 1969, was found to be invalid because it did not satisfy the requirements of Article 31-A of the Constitution. By Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act, which came into force on 19th of June 1972, the said Act was placed in the Ninth Schedule and put under the protection of Article 31-B. In the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE the validity of that Act was also questioned. Similarly the Constitution (Twenty-Fifth Amendment) Act enacting the original Article 31-C was also questioned in that case. As a matter of historical holding we may state that right to property on the strength of Article 31 and Article 19 (1) (f) was the subject-matter of different pronouncements leading upto the Bank Nationalisation case, R. C. Cooper v. Union of India (AIR 1970 SC 564) which had eventually led the Parliament to enact the Constitution (Twenty-Fifth Amendment) Act, 1971.

48. In this judgment for the sake of brevity and for the sake of indicating the topics we have already proposed to call Kesvananda Bharati's case (AIR 1973 SC 1461) as BASIC STRUCTURE CASE, which was eventually considered in Smt. Indira Nehru Gandhi v. Rajnarayan (AIR 1975 SC 2299) which we would call as ELECTION CASE. The third important case and the decision of the Supreme Court so often cited before us is that of A. D. M. Jabalpur v. Shivkant Shukla (AIR 1976 SC 1207) and we propose to refer to it in this judgment as LIBERTY'S CASE.

49. It must be at once observed that the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) overruled Golak Nath's case (AIR 1967 SC 1643) (supra). It accepted the Constitution (Twenty-Fourth Amendment) Act, 1971 as validly made and it further ruled that what was implicit in Article 368 from the very beginning had been made explicit by the amendment to Article 368 itself by the Parliament. This is the highest recognition of the finding of the constituent power in Article 368 itself. With regard to the Constitution (Twenty-Fifth Amendment) Act inserting the Article 31-C the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE found by majority that the later declaration appended to Article 31-C was not competently made by the Constitution Amendment Act by the Parliament. It struck down that declaration but upheld the validity of the main Article 31-C. The Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act, 1972 which protected the Kerala Land Reforms Act which was found to be invalid because not being in conformity with Article 31-A was entirely upheld by the majority though numerical minority Judges indicated that the question could be left open to be decided by the appropriate Constitution Bench. The learned Chief Justice Sikri in terms made a reference to that effect in the judgment rendered by him in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE, but the majority of the learned Judges upheld the Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act, which afforded protection because of Art. 31-B to the two Kerala Land Reforms Amendment Acts.

50. The BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) further ruled by majority that though Article 368 is the situs of the constituent power in favour of the Indian Parliament it was not entirely omnipotent like the power that initially and primarily vests in the body like Constituent Assembly. Its exercise in terms found to be open to judicial scrutiny and judicial review available in the Indian Constitution, because the words of Article 368 indicated certain ambiguous results and because the Indian Parliament was merely conferred with the amendatory power which by its very nature is limited, the Court found that there was inbuilt limitation which operates upon the content of the law regarding the amendment to the Constitution. These limitations were spelt out by the learned Majority Judges of the Supreme Court which is now styled by the phrase as Basic structure or Basic framework of the Constitution. Each learned Judge enumerated illustrations of the basic structure or basic framework of the Constitution. Accordingly if the amendatory law made by recourse to Article 368 affected the basic-structure or framework of the Constitution, it would be impermissible piece of constitutional legislation.

51. The learned Majority Judges in favour of this proposition did not lay down definitively what the structure means though as stated above, illustrative lines and items are to be found in the differing judgments. As far as we are concerned, the moot question is whether Part III of the Constitution as originally enacted and which deals with the fundamental rights and lays down certain other matters is basic structure or basic framework of the Constitution not amenable to the power that vests in Parliament because of Article 368. On closer scrutiny it appears that the majority of the Judges in BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) have not treated the entire Part III of the Constitution as basic structure so as to be a limitation on the constituent power emanating from Article 368 of the Constitution. It is needless to refer to the judgments in detail. Suffice it to say that the learned Judges including the learned Justice Ray, as he then was, Justice Palekar, Justice Mathew, Justice Beg, Justice Dwivedi and Justice Chandrachud did not render any judgment in favour of basic structure or framework of the Constitutional doctrine. Learned Judge Khanna who constituted the majority of the Judges in favour of the limited power of amendment upon basic structure or basic features doctrine has rendered a summary of his findings. In paragraph 1550 of the judgment at page 1903 of the AIR report this summary is available at points (vii) and (viii) and the learned Judge observes:

"(vii) The power of amendment under Article 368 does not include the power to abrogate the Constitution nor does it include the power to alter the basic structure or framework of the Constitution. Subject to the retention of the basic structure or framework of the Constitution, the power of amendment is plenary and includes within itself the power to amend the various articles of the Constitution, including those relating to fundamental rights as well as those which may be said to relate to essential features. No part of a fundamental right can claim immunity from amendatory process by being described as the essence or core of that right. The power of amendment would also include within itself the power to add, alter or repeal the various articles.

(viii) Right to property does not pertain to basic structure or framework of the Constitution."

Thus in the holding of the learned Judge Khanna, the power of amendment is plenary and includes within itself the power to amend the various articles of the Constitution including those relating to fundamental rights as well as those which may be said to relate to essential features. No part of a fundamental right can claim immunity from amendment by being described as essence or core of that right. This is subjected, however, to the basic structure or framework of the Constitution. The right to property according to the summary of the judgment by the learned Judge does not pertain to basic structure or framework of the Constitution.

52. Thus following the judgments delivered though we are bound by each and every judgment coming from the Highest Court, the finding of the ratio depends on the numerical strength behind the principle eventually decided by that Court. The numerical strength in our view clearly indicates that in BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) the Supreme Court did not by majority treat the entire Part III of the Constitution as basic-structure or basic framework of the Constitution of India. As far as the right to property is concerned, there is a clear statement available from the Seventh Judge, to which we have already made a reference and it appears to be the ratio upon the holding of the learned Seventh Judge that the right to property cannot at all be treated to be the basic structure or framework of the Constitution and that right as enacted in the Constitution original or otherwise cannot be treated to be a fetter or a limitation upon the constitutional amendatory power repositied in the Indian Parliament under Article 368 of the Constitution.

53. We now proceed to make reference to ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) (supra). There the problem before the Supreme Court was raised because of the Constitution (Thirty-Ninth Amendment) Act, 1975 and the challenge was to Article 329 (A4) and (A5) inserted by that amendment. Along with those amendments it is useful at this stage to state that the Representation of the People (Amendment) Act (Act No. 58 of 1974) and Election Laws Amendment Act (Act No. 40 of 1975) which was placed under the constitutional umbrella by Art. 31-B were also questioned both on the ground of basic structure or framework of the Constitution and on other grounds including the equality at the foot of Art. 14.

54. The case undoubtedly was decided on the footing that BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) rendered by the Supreme Court laid down the correct constitutional and binding principles to be made applicable to the controversies before the Supreme Court. However, ELECTION CASE itself raised some original and basic problems and sought solution from the Supreme Court including the problem which is being raised as to the finding that was rendered in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE. In the judgment of the learned Chandrachud J. the ratio of the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE is tried to be summarised and the following observations in para. 664 may be quoted with advantage:

".....The ratio of the majority decision is not that some named features of the Constitution are a part of its basic structure but that the power of amendment cannot be exercised so as to damage or destroy the essential elements or the basic structure of the Constitution, whatever these expressions may comprehend. Sikri, C. J. mentions supremacy of the Constitution, Republican and Democratic form of the Government, secular character of the Constitution, separation of powers, federalism and dignity and freedom of the individual as essential features of the Constitution. Shelat and Grover, JJ. have added to the list two other features; the mandate to build a welfare State, unity and integrity of the Nation. Hegde and Mukherjee, JJ., added sovereign democratic republic, Parliamentary democracy and the three organs of the State form the basic structure of the Constitution. Khanna, J., held that fundamental rights are not a part of the basic structure and therefore, they can be abrogated like any other provisions. He observed that basic structure indicates the broad outlines of the Constitution and since the right to property is a matter of details, it is not a part of that structure. The democratic form of Government, the secular character of the State and possibly judicial review are according to the brother Khanna a part of the basic structure of the Constitution. It is obvious that these are merely illustrations of what constitute the basic structure and are not intended to be exhaustive. Shelat and Grover, JJ., Hegde and Mukherjee JJ., and Reddy J., say in their judgments that their list of essential features which form the basic structure of the Constitution is illustrative or incomplete. For determining whether a particular feature of the Constitution is a part of its basic structure, one has perforce to examine in each individual case the place of the particular feature in the scheme of our Constitution, its object and purpose, and the consequences of its denial on the integrity of the Constitution as a fundamental instrument of country's governance. But it is needless for the purpose of these appeals to ransack every nook and cranny of the Constitution to discover the bricks of the basic structure. Those that are enumerated in the majority judgments are massive enough to cover the requirements of Shri Shanti Bhushan's challenge

It is clear that about learned Khanna, J.'s holding in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE learned Chandrachud J. has made a reference to the effect that Khanna J. found that the fundamental rights were not the part of the basic structure and therefore, they can be abrogated like any other provisions. Khanna J., who was also a party to the ELECTION CASE examined his own judgment rendered in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE. In the context of the point raised regarding the fundamental rights being basic or not, the learned Judge explained his own earlier judgment and negated any inference that he did not treat fundamental right as being basic. In this regard Khanna J. in paragraph 198, page 2349 made reference to BASIC STRUCTURE CASE and observed that in that case the majority ruled that the power of amendment of the Constitution contained in Article 368 did not permit altering the BASIC STRUCTURE of the Constitution and the Seven Judges who constituted a majority were correct that the democratic set up was part of the Constitution. In further paragraph 210 on page 2354 the learned Judge observed:

"If there is amendment of some provisions of the Constitution and the amendment deals with matters which constitute constitutional law in the normally accepted sense, the Court while deciding the question of the validity of amendment would have to find out in view of the majority opinion in Keshavananda Bharati's case (AIR 1973 SC 1461), as to whether the amendment affects the basic structure of the Constitution."

As to the holding in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE, the learned Judge discussed the matter in paragraph 251, page 2369 and after quoting from the judgment observed:

"It would appear from the above that no distinction was made by me so far as the ambit and scope of the power of amendment is concerned between a provision relating to fundamental rights and provisions dealing with matters other than fundamental rights. The limitation inherent in the word 'amendment' according to which it is not permissible by amendment of the Constitution to change the basic structure of the Constitution was to operate equally on articles pertaining to fundamental rights as on other articles not pertaining to those rights."

After referring to the summary extracted above at point No. (vii), the learned Judge in paragraph 252 observes thus:

"It has been stated by me on page 685 of the judgment (already reproduced above) that the secular character of the State, according to which the State shall not discriminate against any citizen on the ground of religion only cannot likewise be done away with. The above observations show that the secular character of the Constitution and the rights guaranteed by Article 15 pertain to the basic structure of the Constitution. The above observations clearly militate against the contention that according to my judgment fundamental rights are not a part of the basic structure of the Constitution, I also dealt with the matter at length to show that the right to property was not a part of the basic structure of the Constitution. This would have been wholly unnecessary if none of the fundamental rights was a part of the basic structure of the Constitution."

55. Thus in ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) the learned Judge Khanna explained his earlier holding in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) by saying that the fundamental right under Article 15 and the concept of secularism formed the basic structure of the Constitution but at the same time clarified that the right to property was not in his view the basic structure or framework of the Constitution.

56. What was stated in ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) by Chandrachud J. further may be summarised here so as to clearly understand what these two cases indicate as ratio relevant for the present premises and debated before us. The learned Chandrachud J. in paragraph 665 of the judgment after quoting the ratio of the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) in paragraph 664 (cit. sup.) observed:

"..... I consider it beyond the pale of reasonable controversy that if there be any unamendable features of the Constitution on the score that they form a part of the basic structure of the Constitution, they are that: (i) India is a Sovereign Democratic Republic; (ii) Equality of status and opportunity shall be secured to all its citizens, (iii) The State shall have no religion of its own and all persons shall be equally entitled to freedom of conscience and the right freely to profess, practise and propagate religion and that (iv) the Nation shall be governed by a Government of laws, not of men. These, in my opinion, are the pillars of our constitutional philosophy, the pillars therefore, of the basic structure of the Constitution" (underlining ours.) Thus in the holding of learned Chandrachud J. the pillars of the Constitution have been enumerated being Sovereign Democratic Republic, equality of status and opportunity, secularism citizen's freedom to religious worship and rule of law.

57. Taking both these cases i.e. BASIC STRUCTURE CASE and ELECTION CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461 and AIR 1975 SC 2299) together, it could be observed safely that each and every article or the right guaranteed by Part III of the Constitution is not treated as basic nor is there a limitation on the amendatory power that vests in the Indian Parliament under Article 368 of the Constitution. If only the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE is taken into account for the purposes of determining the ratio, it is obvious to us as was also found by Chandrachud J. in ELECTION CASE, that Part III of the Constitution was not treated to be the part of basic structure or framework of the Constitution including right to property as forging any limitation on the sovereign constituent power contained in Article 368 of the Constitution. Even taking the judgment of learned Khanna J. in ELECTION CASE only secularism and Article 15 have been added to the basic structure or basic principle. The right to property is not found to be the basic structure either in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE or in the ELECTION CASE.

58. In paragraph 668, learned Chandrachud J. further enunciated the guideline when the theory of basic structure was pressed in aid in matters seeking judicial review of the constitutional amendments by Indian Courts. The learned Judge observes:

"..... Since the Constitution, as originally enacted, did not consider that judicial power must intervene in the interests of purity of elections, judicial review cannot be considered to be a part of the basic structure in so far as legislative elections are concerned. The theory of basic structure has to be considered in each individual case, not in the abstract, but in the context of the concrete problem."

It is thus obvious that while asking judicial review of the constitutional amendments the whole theory of basic structure or basic framework of the Constitution cannot be invoked. In the context of the problem posed, relevant principles alone will have to be examined and applied for finding out whether treating it as the basic structure or basic framework of the Constitution the amending Act could be said to be incompetently made.

59. It is enough to observe at this stage that this high holding of the Supreme Court shows that right to property is not a basic structure or basic framework, nor is it a basic principle of the Indian Constitutionalism. The very ratio of upholding the Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973

SC 1461) by the Supreme Court clearly shows that this doctrine of basic structure cannot be usefully pressed in aid when the rights affected are rights in property and further when the laws affecting those rights are put under the Constitutional umbrella erected by Art. 31-B of the Constitution by amending Schedule IX. For the present purposes, therefore, it would suffice to observe that whatever is being questioned before us as a challenge to the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act which amended the Ninth Schedule and put the amended statute dealing with rights in property, under the protection of Art. 31-B stands sufficiently negated by the ratio in BASIC STRUCTURE CASE itself, and further as explained by the learned Judges in the ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299). Reference to the laws in issue which have been put in the Ninth Schedule of the Constitution by Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act is to the laws relating to land as an object of property and rights in or over the same. These have been put under the constitutional umbrella. The right to property being not basic structure of the Constitution, nor being the basic principle of the Indian Constitutionalism, the challenge to the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act on the basis of the basic structure theory cannot but be rejected.

60. A collateral issue which can be disposed of at this stage is challenge to the present amending Acts on the basis that the basic structure doctrine is violated by these laws. The four constitutional pillars quoted above from the judgment of Chandrachud J. are said to have been shaken by the premises of the provisions of these Acts. It may be mentioned that the same said challenge is made to the Presidential Order directing suspension of enforcement of Article 14 during the period of emergency because of Article 359 (1-A), as amended. We will deal with the question of validity of the Article 359 (1-A) later. Upon the ratio of the judgments in BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) as well ELECTION CASE it appears to us that challenge to laws or order is not permissible on the ground that these contravene any basic principle or framework.

61. We have made reference to the controversy in the ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) before the Supreme Court which included the challenge to amendments effected to the Representation of the People Act and Election Laws

(Amendment) Acts. One of the attacks to these amendments expressly negated by the Supreme Court rested on the basic structure or framework of the Constitution relying on the earlier decision rendered in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461). In the judgment of the learned Chief Justice reference is made to this aspect of the matter in paragraph 137, page 2332 and para. 153, page 2335. The learned Chief Justice observed:

"The constitutional validity of a statute depends entirely on the existence of the legislative power and the express provision in Article 13. Apart from the limitation the Legislature is not subject to any other prohibition." The learned Chief Justice further observed:

"The contention of the respondent that the Amendment Acts of 1974 and 1975 are subject to basic features or basic structure or basic framework fails on two grounds. First, legislative measures are not subject to the theory of basic features, or basic structure or basic framework. Second, the majority view in Kesavananda Bharati's case (AIR 1973 SC 1461) (supra) is that the 29th Amendment which put the two statutes in the Ninth Schedule and Article 31-B is not open to challenge on the ground of either damage to or destruction of basic features, basic structure or basic framework or on the ground of violation of fundamental rights."

62. Mathew J., referred to this part of the controversy in paragraph 346 onwards. In paragraph 347, the learned Judge observed after making reference to the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461):

"But I do not find any such inhibition so far as the power of Parliament or State Legislatures to pass laws is concerned."

The learned Judge referred to the inhibition, meaning inhibition that is operative upon the amendatory process of the Constitution and made a clear statement that that inhibition was not operative on the power of the Parliament or State Legislatures to pass laws under Articles 245 and 246 of the Constitution. In paragraph 357 the learned Judge further observed:

"It is rather strange that an Act which is put in the Ninth Schedule with a view to obtain immunity from attack on the ground that the provisions thereof violate the fundamental rights should suddenly become vulnerable on the scope that they damage or destroy a basic structure of the Constitution resulting not from the taking away or abridgment of the fundamental rights, but for some other reason"

63. There is no support from the majority in Bharati's case (AIR 1973 SC 1461) for the proposition advanced by counsel that an ordinary law if it damages or destroys basic structure should be held bad or for the proposition that a constitutional amendment putting an Act in the Ninth Schedule would make the provisions of the Act vulnerable for the reason that they damage or destroy a basic structure constituted not by the fundamental rights taken away or abridged but some other basic structure."

64. Learned Beg J., answered the problem referring to the submissions of the counsel as follows: (Para 477)

"The learned counsel for the election petitioner contended that, as a candidate at an election, the Prime Minister and the ordinary candidate should enjoy equal protection of the laws and should be afforded equal facilities irrespective of the office occupied by one of two or more candidates. Such an attack upon the validity of this amendment seems to me to be possible only under the provisions of Article 14 of the Constitution. But as Act 40 of 1975, has been placed by Section 5 of the 39th Amendment in the protected 9th Schedule of the Constitution, it becomes immune from such an attack. After the practically unanimous opinion of this Court in Kesavananda Bharati's case (AIR 1973 SC 1461) (supra) that such an immunisation of an enactment from an attack based upon an alleged violation of the chapter on fundamental rights is constitutionally valid. I do not think that a similar attack can be brought in through the back door of a 'basic structure' of the Constitution." The learned Chandrachud J. in paragraph 692 observed:

"..... The argument regarding the invalidity of the Representation of the People (Amendment) Act, 58 of 1974 and of the Election Laws (Amendment) Act, 1975, has however, no substance. The constitutional amendments may, on the ratio of the fundamental rights case, be tested on the anvil of basic structure. But apart from the principle that a case is only an authority for what it decides, it does not logically follow from the majority judgment in the Fundamental Rights case that ordinary legislation must also answer the same test as a constitutional amendment. Ordinary laws have to answer two tests for their validity: (1) The law must be within the legislative competence of the Legislature as defined and specified in Chapter I, Part XI of the Constitution and (2) it must not offend against the provisions of Article 13 (1) and (2) of the Constitution. 'Basic structure' by the majority judgment, is not a part of the fundamental rights nor indeed a provision of the Constitution. The theory of basic structure is woven out of the conspectus of the Constitution and the amending power is subjected to it because it is a constituent power. 'The power to amend the fundamental instrument cannot carry with it the power to destroy its essential features' — this, in brief, is the arch of the theory of basic structure. It is wholly out of place in matters relating to the validity of ordinary laws made under the Constitution."

65. Before we summarise the effect of these holdings for the purposes of the present controversy, we may indicate that even the result reached in these two cases i.e. BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) and the ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) upon the constitutional Amendment Acts does not at all help submissions addressed before us for the petitioners. By the result of these cases if the ratio were to be worked out, in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE eventually only the declaration which foreclosed the judicial review about the matters in Article 31-C was held to be offending the basic structure. That declaration which was the part of Article 31-C enacted by the Constitution (Twenty-Fifth Amendment) Act, 1971 stated:

"..... and no law containing a declaration that it is for giving effect to such policy shall be called in question in any court on the ground that it does not give effect to such policy."

This declaration was eventually found to be offending the basic structure or basic framework of the Constitution. In other words, the judicial review that was simply foreclosed by a declaration made by the Legislature enacting the Act and as under the Constitution judicial review was fundamental such a declaration was found to be inhibited by the basic structure doctrine enunciated therein. Somewhat similar result is indicated by the eventual holding in ELECTION CASE. There the provisions of Article 329 (A-4) inserted by Constitution (Thirty-Ninth Amendment) Act, 1975 were struck down, though different reasons have been given by the learned Judges for reaching to that conclusion and it appears to us to be more or less unanimous verdict that Clause (4) operated upon the field of judicial review and in fact rendered a legislative judgment upon the case which was either decided or was alive before the competent Court to be adjudicated according to the constitutional premises.

66. The ratio indicated by the result, if that be the guide for finding the ratio of the cases, goes to the extent that the constitutional amendments that affect the basic concept of judicial review and pre-empt in the garb of constitutional amendment a legislative judgment upon the cause would not partake in the constitutional amendment and would be bad as affecting basic principle. Such provision introduced by amendment would not partake in the nature of amendment of the provision of the Constitution, for, as the learned Chief Justice put in the ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) that will be rendering a legislative judgment. In our view, therefore, about the result obtained in both the cases upon which reliance is being placed, the fundamental principle that weighed with the Court to strike down the constitutional amendment and as explained supra was that because of those provisions of the constitutional amendments there was foreclosure of the judicial review extant in the Constitution or for that rendered a legislative judgment upon the cause. This resulting position too from these judgments does not help the petitioners in the present cases for raising challenges to the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act which is validly and competently made.

67. It is now useful to take a summary of the findings in both the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE and ELECTION CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461 and AIR 1975 SC 2299) together about the principles which are relevant and applicable in the present controversy. These principles can be stated together and appear to us to be as follows:

FIRST: Upon the constituent power having situs in Article 368 of the Constitution, there are inherent limitations of the basic structure or framework of the Constitution or constitutional principles which are not indicated in the Constitution itself. The power under Article 368 is not akin to the original, plenary unlimited constituent power and is not therefore omnipotent.

SECOND: These basic structure principles include the fundamental constitutional contemplation of the permissive judicial review of the Constitutional Amendment Act so as to find out firstly whether in exercise of the constituent powers what is enacted is a law permissible by the premises of Article 368 of the Constitution; and secondly whether the amendment in substance does or does not accord with basic structure doctrine or basic framework or basic principles of the Constitution. In the exercise of making an amendatory law by exercise of constituent power, it would be impermissible to render legislative judgments on cases which under the Constitution form part of the jurisdiction of the judiciary and is pre-eminently a judicial function.

THIRD: The law amending the Constitution would be bad if it affects or abrogates the basic structure as enumerated and summarised in ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) which includes fundamental principles of equality of status and opportunity. The right to property is not part of basic structure nor constitutional amendment laws can be affected by that principle.

FOURTH: The ordinary law either made by the Parliament or by the State Legislature cannot be subjected to challenge on the ground of basic structure or constitutional framework or principle and that there exists no paradox in constitutional theory in arriving at such a position.

FIFTH: Only by reason of the fact that such ordinary legislation is placed in Schedule Nine by the Constitutional Amendment Act, the challenge to that law on the ground of the basic structure or framework of the Constitution is not available. For the purposes of the law it retains the character of a law made by the Legislature with reference to its powers under Articles 245 and 246 of the Constitution.

68. Applying these summarised principles as are relevant for the purposes of submissions made before us, it is obvious that the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act placing the amended statutes in issue in the Ninth Schedule cannot be questioned nor those Acts can be questioned on the ground of basic structure doctrine which is only applicable to the Constitutional Amendment Laws as such. The same would be position with regard to Presidential Order made under Article 359 (1-A) of the Constitution.

69. Now what survives for consideration on the constitutional aspect of the challenge is referable to the submissions advanced against the Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, 1975, which amended Article 359 by inserting Clause (1-A) and other submissions made to challenge Article 31-B itself which was amended by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951.

70. The validity of Article 31-B as enacted by the Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951 appears to us to be fully reinforced by the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) itself. There, as we stated above, inter alia Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act was questioned which had put the Kerala Land Reforms (Amendment) Act No. 35 of 1969 and Kerala Land Reforms (Amendment) Act, 1971 (Kerala Act No. 25 of 1971) in the Ninth Schedule. The efficacy and validity of the provisions of Article 31-B was not at all doubted. On the other hand it was observed that the provision of Article 31-B was an independent provision affording immunity to the laws placed in the Ninth Schedule independently of Article 31-A of the Constitution. Once that immunity is available, the provisions of Part III in regard to laws providing for acquisition of any estate or any right therein would be rendered wholly immune from challenge. Upon the ratio of the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE where the first doctrine of basic structure was formulated and where the Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act was in terms upheld, it is difficult to understand the submission that because of the basic structure doctrine now Article 31-B should be held to be vulnerable or is assailable. Article 31-B itself is on the Statute Book along with Article 31-A since the first amendment of the Constitution. It is too late and too futile to question the validity of that provision on the assumption that the constitutional device of Article 31-B is likely to be abused or likely to create Para-Constitution always running counter to the fundamental or basic structure of the Constitution itself.

71. To us it appears. Article 31-B has primarily constitutional purpose and is equally basic as any other Article in Part III of the Constitution.

72. If we begin to question the validity of any of the provisions of an Article like Article 31-B on the supposed or likely result or apprehension of misuse of that power, we are merely beating the rope for the snake. Where the constituent power vests the judgment to select the laws for affording the constitutional umbrella to the wisdom of the sovereign body like Parliament responsible to the people of this Country, such considerations are wholly irrelevant and spring from distrust in the very principle of popular sovereignty which is the corner stone of the Indian Constitution.

73. Article 31-B does not affect in our view any of the enumerated basic structure principles evolved by the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461). On the other hand, it subverts the constitutional purpose. After all, Parts III and IV of the Constitution appear to evolve a composite scheme for the governance of the country. There is underlying assurance given to the people regarding dispensation of political, social and economic justice. The Constitution assures that in the state of just conditions, liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship along with equality of status and equality of opportunity will be rendered available to the people at large. The directive injunctions in Part IV are the matters for the governance of the country and in terms it dictates that these principles shall be applied as the duty by the State in making laws. The rule of law that is eventually to be ushered by these guiding principles will have to subserve the needs of the tenets of provisions contained in Part IV so as to achieve a state where social, economic and political justice shall prevail. These principles and these constitutional premisses have to operate to restructure the social, economic and political life of the society as much as to confer upon the members thereof the fruits of liberty and equality. In the making of these constitutional premisses, the life of the people, their economic, social and cultural conditions involving levels operating and resulting inequality as well conditions oppressive between man and man are all part of the constitutional experience that can hardly be glossed over. Rights are not mere exhortations. Possessor of right has to be conscious, able, activist. Conditions that tend to bind masses in processes of mute economic and social subjections undo the capacity of the political person to enjoy, to realise or to stand by the right so guaranteed. On closer analysis the rights conferred by Part III are active principles to be upheld by applying the principles of governance enunciated as basic to the State particularly by Part IV of the Constitution. It follows such constitutional conferment of right cannot affect the eventual objective the Constitution has placed before itself the objective to offer justice to the people as the collective entity in social, economic and political field and to achieve just conditions for all where exploitation and oppression in human or material relations shall for ever be banished.

74. Indeed there has to be a yielding away by a few of the interests for the benefit of many as well by individual in favour of the community of material resources if such just state of national existence has to be eventually restructured. The process of constitutional engineering has pragmatics of people's interest and that cannot be imprisoned by reference to individual claim for right to material means of production and exploitation. The wide gap of economic existence between man and man as well the social, political and cultural effects emanating therefrom and legislative restructuring of the same enjoined upon the State are all primary and necessary considerations inbuilt in the premises for enacting provisions of Article 31-B of the Constitution. Laws under its protection are meant to be of vital matters requiring yielding away the other provisions of Part III of the Constitution.

75. The selection of enactments for the purpose of affording statutory shield or constitutional umbrella is matter of serious consequences and that itself offers the guiding principles to uphold the article. There is hardly any doubt that by Article 31-B the matters are left to the high constituent power to be exercised by Indian Parliament in accord with the procedure indicated by Article 368. There being thus a constituent procedure, there being an indication of principles by its very placement in Part III and there being an obvious purpose for which Article 31-B was enacted, we do not find any reason to doubt the validity of Art. 31-B, only because it puts under eclipse the challenges based on Part III to the laws otherwise competently made by the Legislatures. As stated above, the fountain spring underlying the enactment of Article 31-B itself appears to us to be fundamental in view of the dictates of directive principles. Further the basic contemplation of the Constitution that the legislature which makes an Act or the authority which makes Regulation is the best Judge of the social and economic facts and circumstances available to it so as to make a law in the interest of the community or the people is sufficient guarantee that the provisions are not likely to be abused. But for the umbrella of Article 31-B it is easy to conceive and it has been the experience that several community laws were struck down as running counter to the rights conferred upon the individual as enshrined in Part III. Moreover process of amendment of Ninth Schedule indicates a circumspect and selective modality. Before the law gets the protection, it is required to be made by the competent Legislature itself. Secondly there is full or complete permissive scrutiny available because unless the Parliament in exercise of Article 368 decides to afford the constitutional protection to such a law, Article 31-B and its protection does not hold the law in the state of immunity from Part III of the Constitution. This inbuilt legislative and constitutional process is enough safeguard against complaints of abuse or erection of paraconstitution in Ninth Schedule. There being thus underlying principles to harmonize several competing fields of constitutional rights and objectives and further there being quite a possible legislative and constitutional review in the matter of selection and choice before the laws are placed in the Ninth Schedule, we have no hesitation in holding that merely upon apprehensions of abuse the provisions cannot be questioned as being violative of any basic structure or framework of the Constitution. On the other hand it is apparent that Article 31-B by its very contemplation has been super-imposed to further and to fortify the basic structure of the Constitution. The Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951 enacting Article 31-B therefore, is not open to challenge. To the interpretation of Article 31-B itself, we will turn a little later on.

76. One of the the learned counsel Mr. V. R. Padhye referred to Chandrachud J.'s observation in ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) and drew our attention to the national struggle for independence and what was at stake in that struggle. He fervently urged that it is the duty of the Court to consider the history of the constitutional document in the light of the aspirations of the people as eventually reflected in the original Constitution. He submitted that the constituent power is being abused by such enactments of amendments. In fact there are historical limitations on that power flowing from the struggle for independence and, therefore, we should lean towards the holding against the validity of Article 31-B which operates to the detriment of the large class of property holders and which could never have been conceived by the original makers of the Constitution.

77. Firstly, in the Court of law, there cannot be any appeal on the ground of sentimentality. Fervour of the national struggle which represents the movement of the people of this country had then the limited objective i. e. to achieve freedom from foreign subjugation. Having attained the freedom it is for the people of the country as free sovereign polity to restructure the life of the nation and for that to find out appropriate legal and constitutional modality so as to have equitable and just governance of their own. It is in exercise of those seminal powers that the Constituent Assembly framed the original Constitution and by the very original Charter reposed the constituent power by enacting Article 368 in the Parliament responsible to the People. The Indian Parliament thus being repository of constituent power, the matters of enacting appropriate constitutional laws must be left to its wisdom and to its constitutional judgment. Judicial review, of necessity, is a limited exercise of known limitations. We have already stated that the provision of Article 31-B cannot be questioned on the basis that the amendment of Ninth Schedule is likely to be abused by the Parliament while exercising the power under Article 368 of the Constitution. If such logic were to prevail in a Court of law, we fail to see why Arts. 245 and 246 along with lists in Seventh Schedule be not treated as vulnerable. Approach of such a kind is totally fallacious and is the offspring of fictitious fears.

78. Now we turn to the Constitution (Thirty Eighth Amendment) Act, 1975 which inserted Clause (1-A) in Article 359 of the Constitution. The vice that is being complained of is that this newly added article purports on the face of it to be the part of emergency provision. It is urged that under its premises a wide mischief of suspending the very basic principles underlying the Constitution is permitted. Reliance was placed on the observations of Chandrachud J. in ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299) that equality before law was the basic structure and the same cannot be taken away even by the Constitutional amendment. It was urged, such effect can be attempted by putting in jeopardy and complete eclipse the equality so basic by simply making of the order under the newly added Cl. (1-A) to Art. 359 (1) of the Constitution. It is submitted that the width of the power as conferred by Clause (1-A) would take in equality conferred by Part III of the Constitution including life, liberty, religious freedom and even secularism flowing therefrom. Strong emphasis was laid on the decision of the Supreme Court in LIBERTY'S CASE (A. D. M. Jabalpur v. S. Shukla, AIR 1976 SC 1207) to show what happened because of the Presidential order to the right to life and liberty enshrined in Part III of the Constitution. It was submitted in LIBERTY'S CASE that the basic right under Article 21 was put under eclipse and ultimately the Courts were rendered powerless, the remedy being not available to the detenus. Again reliance was placed on the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) to build up the submission that some of the rights in Part III would conform to the basic-structure, particularly, Art. 14 thereof. If by the device of amending Article 359 (1-A) Article 14 can be put in the state of suspension it is submitted that the power conferred on the President of India is inchoate, untrammelled, uncontrolled and therefore, conspicuously bad and running counter to the basic structure of the Constitution.

79. As stated while considering some of the aspects of the matter, these submissions too raise contentions emanating from considerations of apprehension and abuse of the power that is eventually conferred by the incorporation of Clause (1-A) in Article 359. Constitutional amendments competently enacted cannot be attacked on any such ground. That is an elusive approach. The power or jurisdiction created and its purpose are always reflected by the objectual motivations of the statute. What is use and what is abuse are all matters of exercise of power. Theoretical apprehensions in this regard cannot render the provision invalid. As we have said earlier, the Presidential Order which put in eclipse Article 14, is subjected to the challenge to the limited extent, that it affects the basic structure. Upon the summarised holding of the cases, that is, the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) and the ELECTION CASE (AIR 1975 SC 2299), we have found ample (sic) to observe that the Order is unassailable on any such ground, for the same reason as the ordinary law cannot be challenged on the basis of the basic-structure doctrine.

80. It would be trite in this context to observe that in a democratic setup strong public opinion is the only guarantee and the limitation upon all exercise or the supposed abuse of the power by the authorities or agents of the State. It is equally trite to say that merely because power is conferred it tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely. All this furnished no ground to find a legal vice that would render enactment of Article 359 (1-A) unconstitutional. That provision has been competently enacted by recourse to the procedure as indicated by Article 368 of the Constitution. Even in LIBERTY'S CASE (AIR 1976 SC 1207) the same was not challenged and on closer scrutiny and applying the principles to which we have made reference Article 359 (1-A) inserted by the Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, in our view would reveal that it does not affect any basic-structure or any basic framework of the Constitution.

81. Part XVIII of the Constitution has always been the part of our Fundamental Law. That enacted the scheme of emergency provisions and permitted the President of the country to proclaim state of emergency upon satisfaction of the matters stated in Article 352 (1). Reference to that provision would indicate that the President has to be satisfied about the existence of grave emergency wherein security of India or any part of the territory thereof is threatened either by war or external aggression or internal disturbances. By adding Clause (4) by the very Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, which is not in issue before us, it is made clear that the President may exercise the power to issue different proclamations on different grounds being war or external aggression or internal disturbances or imminent danger of war or external aggression or internal disturbance, and such satisfaction is made conclusive and not open to the judicial review. The effect is indicated by Article 353, firstly, lifting the fetters on the executive power of the Union and making it operative to give directions to any State with regard to executive powers. The power of the Union Parliament to make laws during the period of proclamation of emergency is further fortified and augmented. By Article 354 the President is permitted to suspend the operation of Articles 268 to 279 relating to distribution of revenues subject to the eventual order being laid before the Parliament. An obligation is cast by Article 355 upon the Union to protect every State from aggression and internal disturbance. Article 356 deals with the matters when there is failure of constitutional machinery in a State and enables the President to make order in that regard and Article 357 is the part of the same scheme. Article 358 by itself suspended the provisions of Article 19 during the emergency and made it possible to make law or to take executive action unfettered by the terms of Article 19 to the extent indicated in that article.

82. Clause (1) of Article 359, as it was available before the Constitution (Thirty Eighth Amendment) Act, permitted the President to make order declaring that the right to move any Court for the enforcement of such of the rights conferred by Part III as will be mentioned in the order and proceedings pending in any Court for such enforcement of the right would remain suspended during the period of the proclamation or for a shorter period as may be specified. Article 360 related to making of proclamations when the financial stability of credit of India or in any part of the territory was threatened.

83. This scheme, it would be seen is the part of the constitutional contemplation underlying Part XVIII in that the President in whom the executive power of the Union vests—(Art. 53 (1))—and in whom the supreme command of all the forces of the Union vests because of Article 53 (2), is further enabled to deal with the matters in the state of grave emergency. The proclamations contemplated by Article 352 are made to subserve the security of India which may be threatened either by war or external aggression or internal disturbances. The founding fathers of the Constitution were aware that the hard-won freedom of the country is subject to threats of war and external aggression and is not immune from internal disturbances. In such state, the threat is to the life and existence of the polity of the country as such. To deal with those matters effectively, the emergency provisions are the necessary part and parcel of the constitutional premises. In face of war or aggression or disturbances, it is indeed clear that there can hardly be any appeal to finer sense of values. The voice of reason stands silenced by the boom of arms and the basal elements explode to surface. Concepts of life, liberty, expression, all stand negated by the march of organized or unorganized acts of violence. Social and political security stands gravely perverted. To keep the body-polity strong, unified and on the march to meet these forces, is the obligation cast on the President by resort to the provisions of Part XVIII of the Constitution. The President is enabled to take effective steps to meet these challenges and aggressions. That he should be so armed with emergency powers is the original contemplation and appears to be equally basic to the framework of the Constitutional premises. Indeed in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) sovereignty and integrity of India are treated to be the part of basic framework of the Constitution. To protect and reinforce that structure the emergency provisions are clearly enacted.

84. What Clause (1-A) of Art. 359 does is to permit the President to make an order and remove the fetters that may be operative because of Part III of the Constitution, upon the power to make law or to take executive action during the period of emergency. By the very nature, such a power is merely ancillary to the purpose of emergency rule. When security of the country is threatened by war or external aggression or internal disturbances, it is but proper and reasonable to find the power which will be operative irrespective of the constitutional fetters imposed by Part III of the Constitution, Clause (1-A) to Article 359 thus furthers the cause of the integrity and security contemplated by the basic-structure of the Constitution. Enforcing of the rights through the remedy of Courts could be suspended during the period of emergency by virtue of earlier Clause (1) of Article 359. Now it is made clear that that right itself can be subjected to the process of suspension. What was implicit in the scheme of Clause (1) of Article 359 has really been made explicit. Without remedy there can hardly be any right. Enforceability is the part and parcel may the juristic soul of the concept of right. It is not mere moral exhortation. If it is so, it would not partake in the nature of right. Right is not only an injunction against the State action but has a positive content, the fruits of which can be realised by the constitutional remedy.

85. Original Article 359 (1) permitted suspension of the remedy itself with regard to certain rights to be mentioned in the Presidential Order, the selection being left to the discretion of the President himself. That would have indirect result of rendering possessor of the right disabled to enforce the same by remedy in Court of Law. Now what would have been the indirect effect is clarified by permitting the President to make an order expressly suspending the rights conferred by Part III by specification. That would permit laws and executive actions to be taken which otherwise would have been void, only during the period of emergency. The provision on the face of it being part of the original scheme with regard to emergency matters is merely enabling and it appears is necessary for the exigencies that eventually have to be met by the authority of the President. Only because such a power is given, we cannot be asked to strike Clause (1-A) of Article 359 down by stamping it to be running counter to the basic principles of the Indian Constitution. The provisions of Article 359, Clause (1-A), in our view are really meant and intended to further fortify the conditions so as to maintain security of India during the period of grave emergency. On the face of it it is reasonable to think that the President who is charged to take steps while the country is engulfed by conditions threatening its integrity would apply his mind and make appropriate selection as may be necessary to meet the challenges emanating from the conditions available about the choice of rights reasonably selected for the purpose of suspension. Only because those rights may include certain fundamental rights like life and liberty or right of equality, the provision cannot be rendered unconstitutional or as running counter to the basic structure of the Constitution. If all those rights were to yield as they must to the security of the country, its reasonableness cannot at all be questioned.

86. We feel fortified by the judgment delivered by the Supreme Court on this aspect of the matter in LIBERTY'S CASE — (A. D. M. Jabalpur v. S. Shukla, AIR 1976 SC 1207). Though the Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, 1975 was not challenged expressly before the Supreme Court, the Court, however, examined the nature of the amended provision contained in Part XVIII of the Constitution and its impact on the right to life and liberty as contained in Article 21 of the Constitution. Amongst others the majority judgment read with LIBERTY'S CASE decided as a ratio that once Presidential Order competently issued under Article 359 (1-A) suspends the fundamental right to life and liberty as envisaged by Article 21, the possessor of the right cannot have any locus standi to move the writ petition questioning the validity of the detention orders made under Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971, during the period the Presidential Order is in force.

87. Close reading of the judgments in LIBERTY'S CASE (AIR 1976 SC 1207) indicate that this ratio was arrived at because of the very nature of the emergency powers contained in Part XVIII of the Constitution. The learned Chief Justice observed:

"The suspension of right to enforce fundamental right has the effect that the emergency provisions in Part XVIII are by themselves the rule of law during times of emergency. There cannot be any rule of law other than the constitutional rule of law. There cannot be any pre-Constitution or post-Constitution Rule of Law which can run counter to the rule of law embodied in the Constitution, nor can there be any invocation to any rule of law to nullify the constitutional provisions during the times of emergency."

88. Chandrachud J., ruled that Article 359 (1) is as much a basic feature of the Constitution as any other and it would be inappropriate to hold that because in normal times the Constitution requires the Executive to obey the laws made by the Legislature, therefore, Article 359 (1) which is an emergency measure, must be construed consistently with that position. The learned Judge further ruled that the argument of basic feature is wrong for yet another reason that Article 359 (1) does not provide that Executive is free to disobey the laws made by the Legislature and further that the 'Rule of Law' argument like the 'Basic Feature' argument is intractable; the emergency provisions contained in Part XVIII of the Constitution which are designed to protect the security of the State are as important as any other provisions of the Constitution and that the true construction and effect of Article 359 (1) does not violate the rule of law.

89. Bhagwati J., on this aspect observed that whilst a Presidential Order issued under Article 359, Clause (1) is in operation, the rule of law is not obliterated and it continues to operate in all its vigour that the executive is bound to observe and obey the law and it cannot ignore or disregard; and that if the executive commits a breach of the law, its action would be unlawful, but merely the remedy would be temporarily barred where it involves enforcement of any of the fundamental rights specified in the Presidential Order.

90. It follows from these statements contained in the Judgment in LIBERTY'S CASE (AIR 1976 SC 1207) that the emergency provisions contained in the Constitution are to be treated basic to the Indian Constitutional Law and the amendment made to Article 359 by inserting Clause (1-A) is clearly explanatory and enabling to make appropriate declaration with regard to the suspension of rights contained in Part XVIII of the Constitution so that the emergency situation can be effectively and without any detriment are met by the legislative organs of the State as well as by the Executive. For all purposes, it appears to subserve the basic emergency provisions as contained in the integral scheme of the Constitution itself. It is neither unguided nor untrammelled. The exigencies of situations in emergency periods by themselves and in the very nature of things would evoke the necessity to make appropriate orders. Like any other enabling provision in the Constitution, Clause (1-A) confers the power on the President, who is the authority to make the emergency declarations, to appropriately make the order suspending the given fundamental rights so as to effectively meet the challenge in the interest of the security of the country that may arise because of such emergent conditions. We do not find any substance in the complaint that the constitutional provision leaves the matter at large and can be subjected to abuse by lifting the fetters of Part III from the legislative and executive operations. After all in such matters the choice and selection thereof must be left to the conscious exercise of power by the highest office in the country.

91. In the sum we do not feel that on the doctrine of basic structure or basic principles, Clause (1-A) added to Article 359 (1) by the Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, 1975 can be treated as incompetently enacted. On the other hand, it appears to us to have been added to fortify the concept of the constitutional basic provisions regarding the Emergency Rule of Law. We accordingly reject the submissions raised before us that Section 7 of the Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, 1975 which enacted Clause (1-A) of Article 359 should be declared ultra vires.

92. As to the challenge to the Presidential Order of June 27, 1975, because the President has included in his order Article 14 to be suspended during the period of emergency, we have already stated that such challenge cannot be raised on the ground that there is breach of basic structure or basic framework of the Constitution. It was submitted that Article 14 has been chosen by the President in colourable exercise of the power so as to abrogate the basic equality available in the Country.

93. Firstly, there is no material before us to hold that the emergency conditions which necessitated the proclamation by the President did not require the suspension of the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 14 of the Constitution. We cannot be asked to adjudge the validity of the express emergency powers by mere reference to the high quality of the principles of equality and its basic nature by reference to certain cases. Mere invocation of principles is not a substitute for facts on the basis of which the Presidential Order purports to have been made. Moreover, it must be assumed that the President of this country makes his choice with full consciousness of the circumstances and the facts available in the situation while making the emergency orders contemplated by Article 359 (1-A) of the Constitution. The President being the highest functionary charged with an obligation to maintain security and integrity of the country always must be presumed to act in the interest of the security of the country. For all purposes the President is the constitutional Judge of the facts and circumstances that emerge and upon which his powers are required to be exercised. The ground on the basis of which such selection is made must always be presumed to be present in the circumstances upon which the emergency powers operate. The effect of such order by its very nature is temporary suspension of certain rights and is not a permanent eclipse thereof. Such a temporary emergent measure taken in the interest of the security of India being basic in itself need not further, in our view, satisfy the test of other basic constitutional principles nor is it open to challenge on any such ground. To infer otherwise would be to arrogate to ourselves the high, complicated and difficult task of examining the facts and circumstances which the Constitution has placed in the realm of the consideration of the President of the country. On the basic framework or basic-feature-theory we do not think any challenge is possible to the legality of the Order made by the President of India under Article 359 (1-A) of the Constitution suspending the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 14 along with other rights.

94. This discussion will indicate that the points raised against the validity of Constitution (First Amendment) Act, 1951, Constitution (Thirty-Eighth Amendment) Act, 1975 and Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act, 1975 have to be rejected. Similarly the point raised that ordinary laws that is like the present Amending Acts can still be tested on the doctrine of the basic structure equally fails.

95. Now we turn to other aspects of the matter which are already enumerated above. Before we go ahead to examine the challenge to the laws that the provisions of Art. 31-B and Art. 31-C are not satisfied, it appears proper that we may deal with the argument that has been advanced on the basis that Art. 301 of the Constitution has been violated by the present enactments. As stated above, it was said that the entire Acts in issue, violate the freedom of trade and commerce guaranteed to every citizen of this country; under Article 301 of the Constitution. We have indicated the cases on which reliance was placed by the learned counsel who argued that matter.

96. This aspect of the matter, in our view, does not really call for any serious debate, for it appears to us that the submissions overlook the very object of the Act and the Constitutional guarantee under Article 301 of the Constitution. The law has been made to provide for more equitable distribution of land and to ensure a ceiling of land to persons who are related to land and owning or cultivating the same for the purpose of agriculture. By providing ceiling on holding of land clearly a regulatory measure about the holding of immovable property, like land is enacted. That the Legislature has the required competence to so regulate is not doubted before us. Even, therefore, assuming that holding of land for agricultural production is a trade or commerce, the laws in pith and substance are regulatory in nature. The guarantee of Article 301 of the Constitution does not affect the regulatory measures even in the field of trade and commerce.

97. Decisions mentioned supra do not really help to resolve the problem raised by the learned counsel nor are appropriate for the present controversy. In fact the decisions in Atiabari Tea Company v. State of Assam, (AIR 1961 SC 232), Automobile Transport Co. v. State of Rajasthan, (AIR 1962 SC 1406) and the District Collector, Hyderabad v. Ibrahim and Co., (AIR 1970 SC 1275) were rendered in the context of the restrictions imposed upon the movement of trade, commerce and intercourse. The substance of the freedom in this regard that fell for consideration was whether the statutes created any barricade in the free exchange of trade and commerce and intercourse guaranteed by Article 301. By very nature the land is immobile and the term 'trade' even if inclusive of agriculture would mean productive activity over and with reference to that land. By providing for ceiling of such immobile property within the limits of the State, it cannot be said that any barricade that will affect the movement of trade or freedom of commerce itself are being created. As we have said it is mainly a regulatory measure and perfectly within the competence of the State Legislature. How much land a person or family unit shall hold within the State and its enacting cannot in any manner be said creating barricades upon the movement of trade or commerce of agriculture.

98. Heart-matter and the central piece of this Article 301 is the term 'free' used in the context of trade, commerce and intercourse so as to maintain economic concourse in the country. The term 'free' indicates the movement of trade, of commerce and its intercourse. Freedom from restraints in the matters of commercial activities is constitutionally declared and guaranteed at the foot of the article. The freedom of movement extends to intra-State as well inter-State trade or commerce. Legal erections of unreasonable inhibition which will impede the economic concord in this country have been constitutionally stamped out except to the extent of its regulation and necessities therefor. The aim and object of this guarantee is clearly to achieve homogeneous national economy of the people.

99. The grievance at the foot of this Article can possibly be that flow of movement of trade or commerce or economic intercourse by any means of law is impeded or inhibited. Regulation or laying down lawful limits to hold property for all purposes goes to support the freedom of trade rather than impede the same. 'Freedom' according to law and according to this guarantee is the touchstone. Regulatory measures taken by the Statute to control immovable property cannot be termed as having effect on the inflow or outflow of economic concourse in the country. Only because the entitlement to hold land above the ceiling limits is curtailed, it does not follow that the resultant economic venture itself is put in any type of barricade. The concept of 'freedom' in the context of land necessarily means the freedom to possess, freedom to enjoy and freedom to deal with it. Providing for the ceiling of such property is only to chisel or limit the extent of these rights in the property. In spite of ceiling, the agriculture which can be said to be trade and commerce and its intercourse is fully left free. To what extent the land should be available to citizen for the purpose of exploitation by agricultural and allied pursuits can always be defined by law. Once the pith and substance of the law is of such kind, it follows that the trade or the commerce and its flow as far as agriculture is concerned, is neither impeded nor in any manner affected, for, within the limits it is free and the limits are permissible. No person or citizen possessing property can have claim to freedom to hold limitless land on the footing that his holding should know no bounds. In the days when the flow of life is being tailored by several social and cultural scissors, such an approach would be a pure antithesis and unrealistic seeking to possess the land that touches the horizons. The lure of land and its reasonable control cannot be equated as impeding the economic movement guaranteed by Article 301 of the Constitution.

100. We may mention that even before the present Amending Acts were so questioned, it appears that such an argument advanced before this Court has been ruled out: (The Godavari Sugar Mills v. S. B. Kamble, (1975) 77 Bom LR 261). The present submission challenging the enactment fixing the ceiling and acquiring surplus land based on Article 301 of the Constitution, therefore, must fail.

101. Let us now turn to the provisions of Article 31-B itself. So as to understand its impact on the present controversy, we have already upheld the validity of Article 31-B, and ruled that it is immune from challenge on the ground that it violates any basic structure of the Constitution.

102. Before we extract and examine the provisions of Article 31-B, we may indicate that the provisions of Article 31-B have been usefully applied and several times held to be affording total protection to laws from challenges based on Part III of the Constitution.

103. Though Dhirobha Devisingh Gohil v. State of Bombay, (AIR 1955 SC 47) was not eventually approved in the later judgments by the Supreme Court in Golak Nath's case it is useful as providing a point of reference. In view of Golak Nath's case (AIR 1967 SC 1643) being overruled by the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE, (AIR 1973 SC 1461) it is possible to look back to what was found by the Supreme Court in Gohil's case. The provisions of the Bombay Taluqdari Tenure Abolition Act were questioned in Gohil's case. The challenge was on the ground that the provisions violated Section 299 of the Government of India Act. The provisions of the Bombay Taluqdari Tenure Abolition Act were protected because they were included in the Ninth Schedule and were under the constitutional umbrella of Article 31-B. The Court rejected the challenge by observing that the protection under Article 31-B is not merely against the contravention of certain provisions but an attack on the ground of unconstitutional abridgement of certain rights. It will be illogical to construe Article 31-B as affording protection only so far as these rights are taken away by an Act in violation of the provisions of the new Constitution but not when they are taken away by an Act in violation of Section 299 of the Government of India Act, which has been repealed. The intention of the Constitution to protect each and every one of the Acts specified in the Ninth Schedule of the Constitution from any challenge on the ground of violation of any of the fundamental rights secured under Part III of the Constitution irrespective of whether they are pre-existing or new rights is placed beyond any doubt or question by the very emphatic language of Art. 31-B. Hence the Court found that the validity of the Bombay Taluqdari Tenure Abolition Act which was included in the Ninth Schedule was not questionable on the ground of violation of the provisions of Section 299 of the Government of India Act. It is indeed clear that in Gohil's case one of the challenges was based on the legislative incompetence. While considering the challenge the Court observed:

"The challenge now made to the validity of the impugned Act is based on the alleged violation of that right. Nor does this challenge cease to be in substance anything other than a challenge in respect of the violation of the said right notwithstanding that under Section 299 of the Government of India Act the right is secured in terms which restricts the power of the Legislature and operates as a restraint on its competency. What under the Government of India Act was a provision relating to the competency of the Legislature, was also clearly in the nature of a fundamental right of the person affected." (underlining ours).

The Court applying the ratio of the case in State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh, (AIR 1952 SC 252) observed:

"A careful perusal of the judgment however shows that the challenge allowed was as to the competency of the Legislature to enact certain provisions of the impugned Act which in the opinion of the majority of the Court, were in the nature of fraud on the exercise of the legislative power."

104. In Ram Kissen v. Divisional Forest Officer, (AIR 1965 SC 625) the provisions of West Bengal Estate Acquisition Act (Act No. I of 1954, as amended by Act No. 25 of 1957) having been placed in the Ninth Schedule and having the protection of Article 31-B because of Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act, were questioned inter alia on the ground that there was absence of a provision for compensation for the acquisition of the rights by the enactment itself. Coming to the protective effect of Article 31-B, the Court observed:

"Learned counsel drew our attention to the provisions quoted and submitted that the learned Judges erred in their constitution of these provisions and that in fact no compensation was provided, but this question about the Constitutional validity of the amending Act does not really fall for consideration because learned counsel for the appellant did not contest the position that after the enactment of the 17th Amendment to the Constitution, and the inclusion of West Bengal Act I of 1954 among those specified in Schedule IX, the absence of a provision for compensation for the acquisition of the appellant's rights would not render the West Bengal Act or the acquisition thereunder unconstitutional."

The observations of the Supreme Court in Ram Kissen Sinha's case indicate that even a law regarding the acquisition providing for no compensation like the one before it could be protected from challenges under Part III, if it had been placed in Ninth Schedule.

105. In N. B. Jeejeebhoy v. Assistant Collector, (AIR 1965 SC 1096) provisions of Article 31-B were noticed by the Supreme Court in the context of the argument that Articles 31-A and 31-B should be read together, and Article 31-B would only illustrate cases which would otherwise fall under Art. 31-A. The Court indicated the effect of Article 31-B by pointing out that the said Article was not governed by Article 31-A. The Court observed:

"We, therefore, hold that Article 31-B is not governed by Article 31-A and that Article 31-B is a constitutional device to place the specified statutes beyond any attack on the ground that they infringe Part III of the Constitution."

(Underlining is ours). Thus Jeejeebhoy's case is an authority also that any attack on the basis of any provision of Part III is not available once the statute is protected by Article 31-B.

106. In Latafat Ali Khan v. State of U. P., (AIR 1973 SC 2070) the Supreme Court had the occasion to observe with regard to the rule framed under an Act placed under the protective umbrella of Article 31-B. The challenge to the rule was on the basis that it violated Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 31 (1) of the Constitution. Negativising the challenge, the Court observed:

"It seems to us that if a statutory rule is within the powers conferred by a Section of a statute protected by Article 31-B, it is difficult to say that the rule must further be scrutinised under Articles 14, 19 etc."

Eventually as we have stated above, the Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act which was put in issue in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE — (Kesavananda's case), (AIR 1973 SC 1461) was an enactment putting the Kerala Land Reforms Act, which in Kunjikuttty v. State of Kerala, (AIR 1972 SC 2097) was not found to be violative of Article 31-A and the Supreme Court in the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE upheld the Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act.

107. From these cases and particularly the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE, (AIR 1973 SC 1461) it is apparent that Article 31-A and Article 31-B are independent provisions; that the law that may not satisfy Article 31-A can still be protected by Article 31-B of the Constitution and once such protection is afforded it cannot be questioned on the ground that it violates any of the rights guaranteed by Part III of the Constitution. Thus about rights there can hardly be any debate or dispute and Constitutional shield erected is strong enough to repel any attack based on rights conferred by any provision including Art. 31-A of the Constitution.

108. Before us, however, an argument is made in spite of these decisions, that Article 31-A which is an independent provision than Article 31-B, as stated above, carves out a fetter on the legislative power and is in the nature of a proviso with regard to the specified laws to be read with Article 245 of the Constitution or Art. 246 as the case may be. In our view, such type of submission overlooks the plain width in which Article 31-B has been couched and has been pre-eminently enacted.

109. We proceed now to extract the said Article so as to find its plain reading and its protective effect on the laws against the challenges arising out of the provisions of Part III.

"31-B. Without prejudice to the generality of the provisions contained in Article 31-A, none of the Acts and Regulations specified in the Ninth Schedule nor any of the provisions thereof shall be deemed to be void, or ever to have become void, on the ground that such Act, Regulation or provision is inconsistent with, or takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by, any provisions of this Part, and notwithstanding any judgment, decree or order of any court or tribunal to the contrary, each of the said Acts and Regulations shall, subject to the power of any competent Legislature to repeal or amend it, continue in force." (Underlining ours).

110. We have underlined the provisions out of the body of Article 31-B to emphasise what appears to us to be the primary connotation as operating upon each and every provision contained in Part III. Article 31-B itself is a protective statutory shield and its grammatical construction should be approached and understood in plain terms and given effect to by what it states in express terms, Act or Regulations or provisions of the laws may be rendered void because those are enacted inconsistently with any provisions as contained in Part III which is fundamental part of the Constitution. Similarly the Act, Regulation or provision may be rendered void because the same takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution. Both types of contingent invalidation affecting the legality of the laws appears to us intended to be covered by the express wide terms employed herein. It would not be proper to read Article 31-B as a mere proviso to Article 13 of the Constitution. On the other hand it is self-contained and self-operative and explicit in effect and purpose. It cures the defect of rendering the Act or Regulation void, which may arise even without reference to Art 13 itself. Like any other provision of the Constitution, the language of the article must receive its own independent interpretation uncontrolled by the considerations of the other Articles unless context or necessity of interpretation requires otherwise. Undoubtedly aid of other articles may throw light upon the intent expressed by the Constitutional terms, but the rule primordial is that each Article in Constitutional document should be read plainly should receive first construction on the basis of the language used therein.

111. It was suggested as one of the constructions that when Article 31-B refers to "inconsistencies with any provision in this Part", it has in its contemplation the term 'provision' as used by Article 394 and further it only covers cases contemplated by the first clause of Article 13 and when this article uses the phrase "takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by any of the provisions of this Part" it is suggested that it refers back only to Article 13 (2) of the Constitution. It is further urged that the "comma" after the preposition 'by' indicates that inconsistency with any of the rights conferred by the provisions of the Act is only contemplated. In other words, if the laws are inconsistent with provisions which do not confer rights but are mere provisions indicating matters other than rights Article 31-B would not be operative.

112. We find it difficult to follow any such approach which constricts the scope of Article 31-B itself. Article 31-B in all its prints appears to us carefully punctuated and we cannot lose the significance of the use of "comma" placed after the preposition 'by' followed by the words 'any provision in this part'. Though undoubtedly punctuation is a minor element in the construction of the statute, sometimes if the statute is carefully punctuated its considerations assume importance and throw light on the intention of the makers of the statute.

113. Comma here, after the preposition 'by' appears to have been used with purpose to give meaning to the earlier phrase 'is inconsistent with any provisions of this Part'. Before comma there are two operational clauses, both ending by two prepositions, one ending with 'with' and another by 'by'. These 'inconsistent with' or 'conferred by, any provisions of this Part, have to be commonly read. So read, both the prepositions 'with' and 'by' make ample and clear reading the provisions of Art. 31-B. Thus read, the protection or immunity offered by the Article 31-B would be operative when any Act, regulation or provision is inconsistent with any provision of Part III or secondly when it takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by Part III.

114. So read the provision does not in any manner require to be read as only subject to Article 13 of the Constitution. Article 13 is declaratory and is in two parts. It declares void pre-constitutional laws if they happen to be inconsistent with the provisions of Part III. It enacts also constitutional injunction against the State for not making any law which would take away or abridge the rights conferred by Part III and if such law is made, it declares such law to be void to the extent of the contravention. Sub-clause (2) of Article 13 would render the Acts void if the law takes away or abridges the right conferred by Part III. The term 'conferred by' is of wide import. It means 'give' or 'bestow'. The provisions regarding the conferral of the right are contained in several provisions and other articles and some of the articles themselves indicate how the rights so bestowed can be subjected to the process of law. Scheme of Legislation to be enacted as operative upon the field of rights constitutionally conceived can be termed as enacted by the "provisions of the Part III" and is apart from "the rights conferred" by that part,

115. Rights are declared as in Article 14—equality before law or Article 29 (1)—Protection of interests of minorities or Article 31 — right of minorities to establish and administer educational institutions. There are rights conferred by negative declarations as contained in Article 15 — Prohibition of discrimination on grounds of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth, permitting, however, the State for making any substantial provision for women and children — Article 15 (3). Similar is the position with regard to the right of opportunity in the matters of public employment. Article 16 and provisions to make appropriate law in favour of certain class of persons Clauses 3, 4, 5 of Article 16. There is provision like Article 17 which contains a declaration in the matter of abolition of untouchability and Article 18 in the matter of abolition of titles. Right to freedoms is enacted in Article 19 which is subject to exceptions contained in the provisions of sub-articles (2) to (6) in favour of certain laws and making of laws in that regard. Similarly 'life' and 'personal liberty' is subject to the procedure established by law (Article 21). Article 22 offers protection against arrest and detention and lays down the mandatory procedure when a person is arrested and detained in custody. Right against exploitation in Article 23 is similarly couched first declaring the right and then making a provision permitting the State as indicated by sub-article (2) to impose compulsory service for public purposes. Article 24 prohibits employment of children in hazardous employment. Right to freedom of religion is subject to public order, morality and health and the other provisions of the Part as stated in Article 25 (1). The right to property is stated in a negative manner and injunctive in its content for stating that "no person shall be deprived of his property save by authority of Law". Then follow sub-articles (2), (2-A), (2-B), (3), (4), (5) and (6). Sub-article (2) being again an injunction from compulsory acquisition or requisitioning of the property for public purpose. Articles (2-A) and (2-B) take into account the law and sub-article (3) requires the law made in terms of Cl. (2) to be reserved for consideration of the President and necessity of obtaining the Presidential assent. Article 32 is a constitutional remedy to move the Supreme Court and is a fundamental right, not liable to be suspended except as otherwise provided for by the Constitution.

Article 33 is a power of Parliament to modify the rights conferred by the Part in their application to the Armed forces. Article 34 deals with restriction on rights in the state of martial law. Article 35 is declaratory provision in favour of the Parliament to make laws with regard to matters as stated in Clauses (a) and (b) thereof.

116. This review of several articles for the present purpose indicates that the rights conferred by Part III are on citizen, person, body or denomination and further are subject to restrictions to be imposed in accordance with different provisions of the part. Restrictive provisions available in Part III are clearly intended to be operative upon the rights and are none-the-less "the provisions as contained in Part III" and by resort to those provisions, the rights may be abridged or be eclipsed.

117. The words "right conferred by this Part" could be properly understood therefore as against the context of the rights bestowed by Part III. The matters of permissible legislative provisions are matters of provisions. Articles 31-A and 31-C, for example, are the provisions regarding the savings of laws on the ground that such laws are inconsistent or take away or abridge any of the rights conferred by Articles 14, 19 or 31 of the Constitution of India and not matters of right as such. It is obvious that inconsistency may arise if laws do not appropriately answer requirements of such provisions.

118. Inconsistency with such of the provisions on this Part that would arise and that would affect the rights either by abridgement or by taking away the rights bestowed by the Part would lead to a result of invalidity. Such inconsistency in any law would thus be the contravention contemplated by Article 13 (2) of the Constitution and to the extent of such inconsistency in that law, which eventually takes away or abridges the right, the law would be void. It would thus appear that the terms of Article 13 (2) are broad enough to affect the laws which are inconsistently made with the provisions of Part III itself that deal with the conferral of rights. Speaking illustratively a law which is inconsistently made and operating upon the rights bestowed under Articles 14, 19 and 31 and not fully satisfying the requirements of Article 31-A of the Constitution either because it did not comply with the specific provisos ap-ended to that article or the law which is not appropriately made in keeping with the second proviso may be rendered void because of Article 13 (2) read with the rights conferred by Articles 14, 19 and 31. But such a law that would be an instance of inconsistent legislation as far as Article 31-A is concerned would not be rendered void once it is placed under the constitutional umbrella of Article 31-B.

119. As we read it, the phrase 'inconsistent with any provisions of this Part' is wide enough and need not be specifically controlled by the phrase 'takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by any provisions of this Part'. When the inconsistency is spoken of, it is obvious that it is inconsistent with any of the provisions and not only with the rights conferred by Part III. Similar phrase is used in Article 31-A in Cl. (1) before the two provisos indicating the effect upon the law consistently made in terms of Article 31-A and the declaration is that such law shall not be deemed to be void on the ground that it is inconsistent with or takes away or abridges any of the rights conferred by Article 14, Article 19 or Article 31. Similar identical phrases are used while indicating the immunity effects upon laws covered by Article 31-C of the Constitution. It is undoubtedly therefore clear that the inconsistency with any provisions of this Part is not merely inconsistency with regard to the positive rights declared. That may arise because the law may not satisfy the requirements of some other provisions contained in Part III which by itself may not be the positive provision conferring rights under Part III.

120. All this construction became necessary because one of the submissions is that Article 31-A is an enabling legislative provision permitting making of laws in the matters of agrarian reform like the acquisition of property by State of any estate or of any rights therein or the extinguishment or modification of any such rights and unless all the provisions of Article 31-A are fully satisfied, the law made by legislature by recourse to its power under Article 245 for agrarian reforms would be still void and would not be protected by Article 31-B of the Constitution. Article 31-A appears to us to be a provision of the Constitution by which laws inconsistent with the rights conferred by Articles 14, 19 and 31 can be effectively made for the purposes stated in sub-clauses (a) to (e) of Cl. (1) of Article 31-A. Such law has to satisfy the provisos in that the law so made has to be reserved for the consideration of the President so as to have Presidential assent and if the law provides for acquisition of estates held by a person for personal cultivation within the ceiling limit under any law for the time being in force then such law of acquisition of property has to provide payment of compensation at a rate which would not be less than the market value thereof. Law so made would be immune from challenge flowing from the rights conferred by Articles 14, 19 and 31 and though inconsistent with those rights, would be valid and enforceable. Second proviso to Article 31-A, even if treated as a right to receive compensation conferred by this part is nonetheless a provision contained in Part III.

121. What is contained in Article 31-A need not be imported for application and understanding of provision of Article 31-B. These are all independent provisions and the law that may not satisfy the requirements of Article 31-A may yet be well protected because of statutory shield if put in Ninth Schedule and conferred by Article 31-B in spite of the fact that it is inconsistently enacted with the provisions of Article 31-A. The clear ratio of the BASIC STRUCTURE CASE (AIR 1973 SC 1461) which we have discussed in the earlier part of this judgment appears to us an authority for such a position, for, in Kunjukutty's case (AIR 1972 SC 723) the laws which were eventually placed under the statutory shield of Article 31-B were found to be inconsistently made with Article 31-A and yet the Supreme Court by majority upheld the Constitution (Twenty-Ninth Amendment) Act placing those laws under the protection of Article 31-B and laws immune from such challenge.

122. As found above the same legal and constitutional effect is evidently achieved by the Constitution (Fortieth Amendment) Act placing the amendment Acts in issue in the Ninth-Schedule though the Acts themselves may not be on any ground satisfying the requirements of Article 31-A of the Constitution or even Article 31-C of the Constitution. The effect of the placement of the Acts in the Ninth Schedule is that the Acts are immune from challenge on any ground based on inconsistency with the provisions of Part III for taking away or abridging any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution.

123. Here, there now is a challenge that the Amending Acts in issue, affect the right guaranteed by Article 25 of the Constitution regarding the freedom of religion. We propose to dispose of this issue at this stage itself.

124. The freedom guaranteed by Article 25 is not a freedom to hold unrestricted property nor can it be so conceived. The moral Codes of Religion mainly concern with the way of life of the man and lay down principles of interests in given society without any guarantee to hold or possess the property. By its very nature rights of property are secular and extra religious. The content of religious freedom is personal so as to permit holding of belief and to practice freely according to one's individual judgment, conscience any religious faith. No doubt, conduct in the matters of preaching religious faith as a measure of awakening consciousness in or acceptance by fellow being is the part of the purpose of propagation. Dissemination of ideas about mundane as well super mundane matters to the community at large is all that this freedom connotes. (See: Commissioner, Hindu Religious Endowments v. Sri Lakshmindra Tirth Swamiar of Shri Shirur Mutt, (1954 SCR 1005) = (AIR 1954 SC 282) and Ratilal v. State of Bombay, (1954 SCR 1055) = (AIR 1954 SC 388)). However, this freedom is clearly declared subject expressly to other provisions of Part III of the Constitution. It is obvious that freedom of religion and the freedom of conscience extends not only to the citizens but to persons and to denominations. Religious convictions and matters of conscience can be articulated by its preaching and practising subject to public order and morality and health as well other provisions of the Part III of the Constitution by which this right has been guaranteed. It is difficult to accept that right to hold property either because it is possessed by individuals or group of persons or denominations propagating a given religion and further there exists religious tenets laying down the principles of succession or inheritance or its application should be treated as the part of the right conferred by Article 25 of the Constitution. The character of the right is limited by the express declaration contained in clause (1) of Article 25 entitling any person to freedom of conscience and the right to freely profess, practise and propagate religion. Sub-article (2) expressly permits the State to make laws regarding the activities which are economical, commercial in character though associated with religious practices (See: Commissioner, Hindu Religious Endowments v. Sri Lakshmindra Tirtha Swamilar of Shirur Mutt, 1954 SCR 1005 = (AIR 1954 SC 282)).

125. It being clear that Article 25 does not confer by itself the right to property, nor the right to property can be treated as part of the religious right recognised thereunder such argument has little force. The complaint that personal laws of succession or inheritance or maintenance of minors and widows and dependants as well laws regulating the extent of interest in property would run counter to the provisions of the impugned enactments and, therefore, Article 25 is violated appears to us as fallacious and not warranted at all. The impugned Acts do not in any manner affect the right conferred by Article 25, nor abridge the extent of that right. Even assuming that there is some cloud cast as is being canvassed upon that right by the Act in that property which could have been utilised or is meant to be utilised for religious purposes even then the exercise of right to freedom as covered by Article 25 which is subject to other provisions of Part III would not be affected. Article 31-B being the provision contained in Part III of the Constitution and if read with Article 25 of the Constitution would afford protection to such laws placed in Ninth Schedule even if property used for religious purposes is affected. Therefore, challenge on any such ground on the basis of Article 25 is not well merited. (See: also Wasudeo Mahadeo v. State, (AIR 1976 Bom 94)).

126. Having disposed of the question regarding Article 31-B and its effect we would now turn before we consider the challenge on the basis of Article 31-A and Article 31-C to one small point raised by the petitioners. That point has something to do with the effect and the application of the two Acts i.e. Acts Nos. 21 and 47 of 1975. The argument is that Act No. 47 of 1975 is a dead letter because the earlier Act which was amended by that Act already put in force and as such had become the part and parcel of the original Act on 19th of September 1975. So the Act No. 47 of 1975 which was put into effect on 20th September 1975 had no Act upon which it would have an operational field.

127. All these submissions and the reference to the Supreme Court judgment in Shamrao v. D. M., Thana, AIR 1952 SC 324 proceeds over a central concept and i.e. as soon as Act No. 21 of 1975 was brought into effect by the Notification of the State Government it ceased to have existence as an enactment or a piece of legislation upon which Act No. 47 of 1975 could operate. A little probing into the terms of these two enactments would reveal that by construction of this kind no such logical consequences at all ensue.

128. The Legislature in its wisdom made both these Acts and left the date of their application to be notified by the State Government, Act No. 21 of 1975 which was gazetted on 7th of August 1975 required the State Government by subsection (2) of Section 1 to make the notification regarding the enforcement date. Accordingly the State Government notified the date as 19th September 1975 on which date the Act became effective in the sense it subjected the original Act to amendments made by Act No. 47 of 1975. As stated in Shyamrao V. Parulekar v. District Magistrate, Thana, (AIR 1952 SC 324) the amendments inserted by this Act in the original Act would be treated to have been made by pen and ink in the original body statute.

129. Act No. 47 of 1975 was passed and gazetted on 19th September, 1975 i.e. the day when Act No. 21 of 1975 was put into effect. That Act obviously was passed with reference to the provisions of Act No. 21 of 1975 and purported to amend the provisions of that Act. Instead of the Legislature itself declaring that this Act upon its passing would become a part of the Act No. 21 of 1975, it provided that it shall come into force on such date as the State Government may by notification appoint. In other words the latter Act which was an amending Act of earlier amending Act would not be effective unless so notified and enforced by the State Government. For the purpose of putting into effect the provisions of this Act, the legislative intent is always to keep the terms of Act No. 21 of 1975 available so as to effectively amend the same from the date to be notified by the State Government. Only because that date happens to be notified later on, the amendments enacted by the Legislature cannot be said to have been rendered nullity or nugatory. Simple effect of the second enforcement would be to incorporate by pen and ink the terms of the provisions in original Act as amended by Act No. 21 of 1975 to the extent enacted by Act No. 47 of 1975.

130. The salutary doctrine of reference operates for the purpose of interpretation and construction of statutes. That emanates by the very exigencies to keep the statutes available for the legislative purposes. By reference to earlier amending Act, the second amending Act can effectively introduce further changes in the body of the original Act though the former has become part and parcel thereof. The power to make such amendment in this manner always exists and the matter is purely one of interpretation. Once this is granted, wherever there occurs a reference to the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Lowering of Ceiling on Holdings) and (Amendment) Act, 1972 in Act No. 47 of 1975 it would mean the provisions as contained in that Act and to that extent that would have to be read out and corrected by pen and ink in the structure of the original Act. Act No. 47 of 1975 refers for the purpose of amendment to the Act No. 21 of 1975 as 'the Amending Act' and provides by different sections ranging from 2 to 8 how the Amending Act shall stand amended upon the enforcement of Act No. 47 of 1975. That term is intended to mean clearly the provisions of Act No. 21 of 1975 and by reference would operate with all force wherever Act No. 21 of 1975 is operative. No anomaly is introduced nor any antilogy is raised. For, it is perfectly permissible for the State Government to notify earlier or on simultaneous dates for effectuating the provisions of Act No. 47 of 1975 which would have made this Act that part of Act 21 of 1975 and thereafter notify the date of Act No. 21 of 1975 for the purpose of enforcement. For reasons obvious it was left to the power of the State Government so to give effect to Act No. 21 of 1975 and then to make effective Act No. 47 of 1975. The Legislature did not injunct otherwise. It is common experience that the Legislature in its wisdom always follows such device of leaving the matters of notifying enforcement dates to the State Government. That is clearly because of several good reasons including administrative and executive exigencies and knowledge thereof which Executive Government better possesses. This power undoubtedly partakes in minor legislative function. The effect however of such a device merely is that from that date of enforcement the statute becomes operative and enforceable. As far as Legislature is concerned, the law stands enacted reflecting the will of the Legislature once the same is gazetted as an Act duly made. Thereafter there is no such stage as 'non-existence of an Act'. Enforceability of an Act of the Legislature and the existence of the Act are two independent matters. Even before enforcement and after such enforcement, it is available as an Act for the purposes of amendatory legislative process.

131. Once all this is clearly conceived the submission must fail. On the date Legislature made Act No. 47 of 1975, for its purposes Act No. 21 of 1975 was available and once the same was put into effect it would operate upon the terms of Act No. 21 of 1975 as have become part of the original Act. The argument that both these enactments besides being vague have made some drastic changes in their premises cannot advance the submission as to the nature, existence and effect of Act No. 47 of 1975.

132. Having thus found that both the Acts 21 and 47 of 1975 further amended by Act No. 2 of 1976 are operative in the field, we now turn to considerations relevant to the terms of Articles 31-C and 31-A along with the directive principles contained in the Constitution with reference to Article 39 (b) and (c) of Chapter IV of the Constitution. We may note at the outset that some of the learned counsel submitted before us that while examining the validity of such enactment because of the protection available under Article 31-C it should be permissible course for this Court to find whether the enactment runs counter to some other directive principles. One of the learned counsel made a reference to Article 39 (a) for pointing out that the rights of minors as well women in the matters of means of livelihood are being subjected to treatment which will render them destitute in spite of the directive principles contained in clause 39 (a). Another learned counsel questioning the validity of one of the provisions namely, Section 2-A along with Section 44-A of the Amendment Act with regard to the constitution of Surplus Land Determination Tribunals made a complaint at the foot of the directive principles as contained in Article 50 that the principle of separation of Executive and Judiciary though fundamental principle of governance as enunciated by that article is being violated because the land is being taken for the purposes of State and the State itself has been given the power to appoint its officer to be the Tribunals so that there is complete go-by given to the directive principles and its contemplation in Article 50. At the time of considering the submissions based on Sections 2-A and 44-A, we will have further occasion to refer to this aspect of the matter. Suffice it to say at this stage that the directive principles of State policy as Article 37 itself lays down are not enforceable principles though the Constitution recognises them as fundamental principles for the governance of the country and requires the State to apply the same while making the law. Because of Article 37 we cannot be asked to enforce clearly any of the principles or the contemplations underlying such provisions of directive principles. It is indeed a principle guiding the State policy and it is for the State eventually to choose given principle while making an enactment. The inference that follows from Article 37 itself appears to have utility firstly while approaching the laws these should receive construction in consonance with the directive principles of the State policy. As Courts we would lean towards that interpretation which will subserve the directive principles and if the laws are susceptible to two interpretations the one upholding the directive principles and subserving its ends and the other running counter to the principle enacted, the one that subserves the directive principle would be eminently followed. (See: Balwantrai v. Union of India (AIR 1968 All 14) and F. N. Balsara v. State of Bombay (AIR 1951 Bom 210) (FB)). However, the provisions of Part IV and its purposes in the constitutional processes are clearly enabling and there is no compulsive course indicated by any of the provisions. Suffice it to observe that the submission that the Court should strike down the laws because some of the directive principles do not appear to have been kept in view by the Legislature cannot be upheld. (See: B. B. Ramecha v. Mandsur M. C. AIR 1960 Madh Pra 20 and Jaisingh Pyara v. Gram Panchayat, Singhanwala, AIR 1965 Punj 232).

133. The Supreme Court in State of Bombay v. Balsara, (1951 SCR 682) = (AIR 1951 SC 318), Hanif Qureshi v. State of Bihar (AIR 1958 SC 731) and in Bijay Cotton Mills Ltd. v. State of Ajmer (AIR 1955 SC 33) consistently looked to the relevant directive principles while understanding and considering the validity of the Acts which were questioned on the basis of fundamental rights referable to Article 19 of the Constitution. In State of Bihar v. Kameshwar Singh, (AIR 1952 SC 252) the requisition of land for subserving the purpose of clauses (b) and (c) of Article 39 was treated to be for the public purpose within the meaning of Article 31 (2). This is ample authority to indicate that the use of directive principles in the matters of challenge before us to the laws like the present one is limited by the very nature of the principles declared to be fundamental in the governance of the country. While upholding the legislative policy of the law upon interpretation it would subserve the given principle available in Part IV of the Constitution and that would be found as underlying constitutional requirement met by the law. The law, however, cannot be compelled to make the premises of directive principles by judicial interpretation which would mean its enforcement. Nor it would be proper to treat the directive principles in the constitutional scheme as limitations or fetters on the legislative powers.

134. Once we observe like this, it follows that we cannot be asked to colour our judgment by reference to directive principle of Article 39 (a) or Article 50 of the Constitution as the arguments were advanced before us.

135. The root matter is what is the purpose of the law and whether if those purposes accord well with the principles specified in clause (b) or (c) of Article 39 so that the statute gets protection of Article 31-C. Principles of Article 39 (b) and (c) are to the effect that the State is enjoined to evolve a policy in the making of its laws to secure that the material resources of the community are distributed to subserve the common good. In other words, clause (b) of Article 39 refers to the distributive justice in the matters of material resources available to the community. The principle underlying clause (c) of Article 39 is clearly to restructure the economic system of the society so as to avoid the concentration of wealth and means of production to the community detriment. It is a principle inhibiting monopoly of means as well as of wealth.

136. Turning to the present enactments in our view apart from the declaration contained in Section 2 of Act No. 21 of 1975 to which we have already made a reference, there is ample evidence in the terms and contemplation as well as in the working of the statutes that both these principles are in fact furthered by the provisions of these laws. Act No. 21 of 1975 is meant to lower down the ceiling of holding of land that was initially imposed by the original Act. The purpose of the original Act was to put maximum limit on agricultural holdings of the persons and further to acquire land for the distribution to the class of persons who were otherwise not possessing land. Lowering down the ceiling limit cannot have any other purpose and the law in terms states to what purpose the surplus land would be utilised. It provides that after the ceiling is so declared, the surplus land shall be taken possession of in the prescribed manner and it shall be deemed to be acquired by the State for the purposes of the Act (Section 21' (4)). Chapter VI deals with distribution of surplus land and indicates how the same shall be distributed. The landless person appears to be the first priority who may have become landless by certain reasons as indicated by sub-section (2) or sub-section (3). Thereafter the weaker sections of the community who are landless are indicated by sub-section (4) of Section 27. They include scheduled castes, scheduled tribes, nomadic tribes and other backward classes. Sub-section (5) of Section 27 thereafter indicates the order of priority in whom are included the persons who are landless. It is not necessary to delineate the whole scheme in this regard. Suffice it to observe that the emphasis is to lower down the ceiling area of the holding of a person as contemplated by law so that the surplus is acquired and distributed to the classes of persons in accordance with Chapter VI.

137. The amendments of the Act are therefore replete with the principles underpinned by Article 39 (b) and (c) of the Constitution. In the agrarian society land is a valuable means of the economic system itself. We will refer to it later on when we consider the Art. 31-A of the Constitution and in that context the concept of agrarian reforms. However suffice it to say at this stage that roots of monopoly landlordism and its social and economic effects which lie in the recent past are all matters of common knowledge and legislative strategy to free the society therefrom. The feudal system of holding lands because of the conferment of titles and jagirs or watans and the concentration of economic power with it are all parts of historical experience of Indian society.

138. The Legislature is presumed to know all these facts and their far-reaching effects on the material resources of the community or economic system which subserves the common good so as to enact limits of viable unit of land and permit the persons to till the same and to acquire surplus land for public purposes and to permit landless persons to take the same which in turn would better effectuate the agricultural production and do away concentration of economic resources like the land. In our view, nothing can be more clear. If that be the primary scheme of the law, requirements of Article 39 (b) and (c) of the Constitution would be answered. Eventually laws would be protected from the challenges under Articles 14, 19 or 31 of the Constitution because of statutory shield of Article 31-C of the Constitution. Only because the law for the purpose of making available the surplus land seeks method of clubbing of properties like land, the principle underlying is not affected.

139. Now we turn to the challenge that these laws are not protected under Article 31-A. Under this aspect of the matter two main submissions, as we indicated above, are discernible, one based on second proviso appended to Art. 31-A and second on the aspect of the family unit as contemplated by Section 4 of the Act along with certain other provisions set out as said to be not satisfying the concept of agrarian reform. It is apparent that Article 31-A, particularly permits acquisition by the State of any estate or of any rights therein or any extinguishment or modification of any such rights and the law has to satisfy the conditions of two provisos. That raises the question as to the concept and reach of laws regarding agrarian reforms and its enactments.

140. The original Act till the stage of several amendments as we stated earlier has been found to be the piece of legislation subserving the agrarian reforms. The present amendment Acts substitute the amended Chapters II and III for the original Chapters in the principal Act followed by further amendments. They have one integral scheme and it is difficult on the face of it to see how the scheme cannot but be termed as a scheme furthering the agrarian reforms in the State.

141. The case relating to lowering down of the ceiling area of land is not a haphazard device found by the State Legislature. It has clear national history and is a part of the national policy.

Lowering down of ceiling as a measure of national land policy so as to better subserve the agrarian economy has been undertaken by several States and almost simultaneously as is evident from the statement filed before us on behalf of the State showing how revised ceiling laws in different States have been put into effect between the period ranging from 1970 to 1975.

142. It would be appropriate here to take a purview of the movement of agrarian reforms in the country and significant hall-marks thereof. Such reference to economic movements available in the national policy is quite necessary and permissible though juridically there has always been attempts to keep plan and policy out of the ken of consideration.

143. As back as in 1949 Agrarian Reforms Committee of the leading political party, Indian National Congress, made a report and national policy on land reforms eventually found place in the shape of First Five-year Plan. The objective of the First-Five Year Plan was to increase the agricultural production and to diversify the agricultural economy so as to achieve the higher level of efficiency. The First Five-Year Plan further outlined the broad principles of its strategy that there should be absolute limit upon the extent of land which any individual may hold to be fixed by the State, having regard to the agrarian history of the State and its problems and further that cultivation and management of the land by an individual owner should conform to standards of efficiency to be determined by law. Land Reforms Panel was formulated in 1955 and it made a report of 'Size of Holdings'. Amongst other, recommendations, it initiated a policy of imposition of ceiling on land for the purposes inter alia of reducing glaring inequalities in ownerships and use of land. The Reforms Panel indicated that a farm which yielded a gross average income of Rs. 1,600 or a net income including remuneration for family labour of Rs. 1,200 and is not less than a plough unit or its multiple in area, may be considered as a 'family holding'. It recommended three family holdings for an average family of five members. It was further advised that family being the real operative unit in land ownership as in land management, the members of the family should be taken into account and husband, wife and dependant sons and daughters and grand children may be reasonably included in the concept of family.

144. The Second Five-Year Plan after review of the Committee's recommendations emphasized measures of agrarian economy with high level efficiency and productivity. It, in fact, emphasised the need to build up progressive rural economy removing disparities in the ownership of land. Imposition of ceiling during Second Five-Year Plan as a measure of social justice was recommended. Further the family holding was advisedly stated to be an operational unit and an area of land which can yield a certain average income. The Second Plan in terms rejected the concept of family holding and recommended the scheme as an operational unit. The Third Five-Year Plan reiterated the objectives of the Second Five-Year Plan with emphasis on elimination of elements of exploitation from agrarian system in the country.

145. The Fourth Five-Year Plan noted these developments and observed that the State laws on the subject were far from being perfect and there is every need for effective legislation.

146. Under these planned objectives the original Ceiling Law was made effective in the State. The All India Chief Minister's Conference held on 28th and 29th of November 1969 noted the progress and the difficulties in the country to achieve these objectives by means of law. As a result of deliberations certain States began revising the ceiling laws having objectives of reducing the ceiling limits and providing for standard holdings. Again the Conference of the Chief Ministers was held on 26th September, 1970 and on its agenda Ceiling on Land was the high topic. The deliberations of the Conference further resulted in examination of the issue of the ceiling on agricultural holding by the Central Land Reforms Committee. The Office of the Land Reforms Commissioner under the Ministry of Agriculture was created in October 1970 and all this history is presently available in the paper published by the Ministry of Agriculture on 'Ceiling on Agricultural Holdings'. (Government of India 1972 Publication by P. S. Apu.)

147. The case for 'Low Ceiling' as a national objective was advocated as flowing from the considerations of social justice. Pertinent reference was made to Articles 39 and 40 regarding the State policy to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting as effectively as may be a social order in which justice, social, economic and political, shall inform all the institutions of national life. It was suggested that the fixing of ceiling on agricultural holdings at a low level will subserve all these objectives. The Government Publication observes:

"In this country a simple and effective means for ensuring a measure of social and economic justice will be a radical redistribution of land. Agriculture has had and, will continue to have for years to come, a dominant position in the Indian economy. It contributes nearly 50 per cent of the national income and over 70 per cent of the population depends upon agriculture and allied occupations for subsistence. (P. 19)." The publication further observes:

"..... In such a situation social and economic justice call for a more equitable distribution of the available agricultural land. (P. 19)."

"In Indian conditions it is only the ownership of land which can provide a minimum of social security and raise the social status of the under-privileged. (P. 20)."

"These measures will lift those at the bottom of the social ladder, namely, the share-croppers and the landless labourers, to a higher status. (P. 21)."

148. Specifically the drawbacks of big holdings were pointed out and the case of smaller holdings operated by family labour was essentially recommended. For, such smaller holdings will be cultivated more intensively leading to enhanced overall production. Simultaneously there would also be fuller utilisation of the available manpower. The report observes:

"..... Thus there is considerable force in the argument that a radical redistribution of land leading to a substantial increase in the area under owner-cultivation will have beneficial results on the utilisation of labour in agriculture. (P. 25)" and again "..... Thus there is enough social and economic justification for fixing ceiling on agricultural holdings at a low but viable level in this country. (P. 25)."

149. After these recommendations, it is now legislative history that laws were enacted drawing upon the inspirational pattern of decisions emanating from the Chief Ministers' Conference of 26th September 1970 on national level and the work of Commission on Land Reforms. The conclusions of the Chief Ministers' deliberations eventually were formulated by July 23, 1972 and the same have been placed on the record of the present petitions. Those conclusions related to the level of ceiling in all States and recommended inter alia that the maximum area of ceiling should not exceed 54 acres. The conclusions do indicate also that in the case of land having assured irrigation, the ceiling should not exceed 27 acres. The matters below 54 acres were left to the discretion of the State Government. Unit of application of ceiling was indicated by the standard family being husband, wife and minor children and the methodology of the clubbing was recommended, followed by a recommendation that the major child should be treated as a separate unit for the purpose of application of ceiling. Retrospective operation to such laws was recommended to be given by not later than January 24, 1971. With regard to compensation certain guiding principles were also enunciated along with the distribution of land and the measures therefor. This historical background eventually resulted in Drawing Bill No. 56 of 1972, published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette, Part V, dated 10-8-1972, pages 385-413 and the Maharashtra Legislature deliberated on the Bill in August 1972 as is evident from the Assembly Debates available: (See: Assembly Debates—Vidhan Sabha Karyawahi, Vol. 35 and the Council Debates in Vol. 35). Actually the Bills were introduced on 14-8-1972 and passed on 18-8-1972 in the Assembly while it was introduced in the Council on 21-8-1972 and passed on 26th August 1972. As stated above the Bill had the guidelines in the national policy to which we have made a reference, firstly in the planning objectives and secondly, in the special recommendations with regard to the land reforms. Though the Act was passed in 1972, as we have already stated, it was made effective law on 19th of September 1975.

150. The basis of this Act and its operational area in the State has a clear objectual premise and has to be understood and can be best demonstrated if a few statistics are stated at this stage. We directed the State to file affidavits with regard to statistical data, relevant for our purpose. There is also available data in 1971 census publications.

151. On the basis of 1971 census the State of Maharashtra has a total geographical area of 3,07,762 sq. kms., having a coastal line of 720 kilometres had a population of 5.04 crores of people. The State is geographically divided in Bombay, Poona, Aurangabad and Nagpur Divisions, having 26 districts for the local and revenue administration. It has several types of cultivations ranging from the Sea-coasts areas to the hilly tracks and to the fertile beds of the rivers. The State's population, according to 1971 Census, 68.8 per cent inhabited rural areas in 35778 villages. The figure of total number of towns is only 289, 17 of which are above 1,00,000 population and 25 between 50,000 and 1,00,000 population. It is thus clear that the majority of the State resides and habitates in rural sector. Turning to agriculture, that shows that the number of cultivators in the State as per 1971 Census was 65.37 lakhs and the land sown was 1,84,62,000 hectares. The labour involved included the labour of the agricultural labourers as per the figure of 1971 numbering 53.93 lakhs. Out of the population in the rural areas of 3,47,01,000 as per the Census Report, 54,29,631 were the landless labourers. In 1971-72 the State had total irrigated land to the extent of 16,51,000 hectares, roughly 9 per cent of land available under cultivation. The figures indicate that in 1972-73, 52 per cent of the geographical area was sown and it was in the range of 173 lakhs hectares. Out of this, 71 per cent, was under food crop, while the range of non-food was 29 per cent. The approximate provisional figures for the year 1974-75 foodgrains show a turnout of about 78 lakhs tonnes as food production. 1972 figures of the livestock is 264 lakhs, while the poultry 122 lakhs. These figures by themselves indicate that the State has an agricultural economy having its large base in rural areas mainly depending on the use and product of the land and its allied use. The figure of landless labourers in the agricultural sector does not include other landless classes. Along with this two more figures need be taken into account which are stated in the affidavit. Under the original Ceiling Act, the State could acquire surplus land to the extent of 1,34,152 hectares, while under the present measures the expected target is to net further surplus land to the extent of 1,50,000 hectares as surplus. It will appear that the first days of ceiling in the State had achieved a limited objective, indicated by the figures stated above and still the State was inhabited by several lakhs of landless persons. The expected objective under the lowering down the ceiling has been, therefore, properly indicated to be

1,50,000 Hectares, which will be available for distribution as enacted by Chapter VI of the Act.

152. To us the amending Acts appear to be prosilient products firstly of the historical national policy regarding the lowering down of the ceiling limits of agricultural holdings in the State for achieving twin objectives of higher agricultural efficiency and providing a strategy for dispensation of economic and social justice in the rural sector of the State, particularly to the landless poor and petty peasants. The deliberations on the national level indicates the principles of finding economically viable and co-efficient units of persons that can reasonably exploit limited area of land for the purposes of best use of agricultural production and to take over excess areas for the purposes of distributive justice to be made available to the landless and poor sections of the community.

153. Chapter II, as substituted by Amendment Act is titled as 'Lowering of Ceiling on Holdings', while Chapter III as 'Restrictions on Transfers and acquisitions and consequences of contraventions'. Sections 3, 4 and 5 provide a composite scheme by laying down the ceiling limit of the holding of a person or a family unit. Chapter IV deals with surplus land and how the same has to be worked out and achieved. Chapter V makes provision with regard to quantum of compensation and payment for the land so acquired from the surplus-holder. Chapter VI deals with the distribution of land to which we have made a reference above. The First Schedule has to be read with Section 5. That shows a uniform ceiling area indicated with reference to the districts in the State. The provisions of Section along with the class of land described in columns 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the First Schedule is indicative that the class of land is to be understood as defined and contemplated by Section 2 (5) of the Act. Thus providing for uniform unit of land which in the legislative premise is a viable unit for the purpose of exploitation by a person or family unit contemplated by law is the principal measure made effective by these provisions. That objective, as we have stated above, is to avoid landlordism or concentration of wealth and further to effectuate intensive agriculture. Such uniform scheme cannot but be the reform contemplated in the agricultural field.

154. The concept of agrarian reforms is not a static formula. It is, in fact, dynamic in operation and reach. Its scope has been noted to be wide enough so as to subserve the agrarian community interest. [See: State of Kerala v. G. R. Silk Mfg. (AIR 1973 SC 2734, para 3). Kh. Fida Ali v. State of J. & K. (AIR 1974 SC 1522, paras 13 and 14) and State of Haryana v. Sampuran Singh, (AIR 1975 SC 1952, paras 6, 9, 10 and 11)].

155. Agriculture in India has always been the chief support of the people. Ninetenth of the population habitated under different conditions is distinctly rural and three-fourth of the population since long is dependent upon agriculture and allied pursuits like dairy farming, stock raising, forestry etc. Having variety of climates and variety of soils, there is divergence even in the cultivation and the yields available in different parts of the country as well different parts of the State. Coupled together, there is a constant pressure on land because of steep rise in population. Agriculture, in essence, is not only the way of life of large majority of the people but is the backbone of Indian economy. The dimensions of the agrarian reforms are per force wide and unfolding because of the social and economic structure available. None can doubt that with the change brought about by technological advances in the State, even the traditional resource-use pattern in agriculture has considerably transformed and there has been intensification as well diversification of land uses.

156. The concept of reforms by itself is a modality which touches both cultural pattern of life of the people and their economics. For reforms, it is not only a way of life that has to be subjected to object oriented change but also the entwined interplay of relations between man and man and man and land require rearrangement. Appropriated modality that will do away with the conditions of exploitation of labour, oppression of poor landless peasantry which result from monopoly concentration of means of wealth and prowess of land, are justifiable and as such justiciable matters of the agrarian reforms when landlords and their premises are subjected to regulation.

157. It is experience recognised by theory as well by reformists' movements in the field of agriculture all-world-over that presently 'agriculture' encompasses and includes proper 'agri-business'. The problems arising out of widening gap in wealth, income and power between the land monopoly and the landless labour along with the conditions operative in under-developed agriculture and unplanned rural conditions lead to states of poverty, want, unemployment and even man-made famines. These too make up matters of serious concern for legislation. Reforms, therefore, insist on intensification and diversification of land-uses which will result in increase in production and achieve upshot in productivity of the land and of labour. That has to begin with neat set of the land as a unit available for distribution in rural structure where it is the material means of production. Along with the resource-use pattern, the considerations of the non-use or under-utilisation of the land and labour, coupled paradoxically with the over-exploitation and waste of resources actually in use either because of erosion, loss of fertility, salinisations, deforestation are all being treated species of issues of policy and planning. The reforms moreover act as the balancing levers between agrarian and other economic sectors.

158. We emphasise here that with the term 'agrarian reforms' and under its seminal contents go variety of economic matters and issues. The 'agri-business', that is, its part stands for modernisation of agriculture covering agricultural activities along with the agricultural related industries or services, which would by itself be an enormous aggregate of actual and potential business. Taken widely, the reforms involve individuals or organizations concerned with production as well distribution including marketing of food and other agricultural produce. Thus movement of reforms stretches right from tiller to consumers and affect series of closely related activities beginning with possession of land, its exploitation or eventual use and marketing of the produce. For, action and decision taken at one point of the system may impinge or affect on the other point of the economic chain involved in the system.

159. To this must be all added the historical experiences available in the extant system of land possession, ownership and exploitation, that had roots in the colonial feudalism instilled in this country by the English rulers. Large estates of land belonging to a single landlord or to the village community were settled initially by the East India Company for the purpose of collection of taxes conferring several types of tenures or rights in different parts of the country. The feudal landlords were the net product under whom teaming tenants and labouring landless tilled the soil without any proportional or no return. That resulted in formation of class structures and economic sections differently situate around land and its uses.

160. Variety of tenancies, including rights flowing from year to year against fixed payments transferable, heritable arose around and on the land. A large class of landless labouring poor by the very operation of economic cycles of this feudal system of landholding steadily increased in number and now habitate the rural India. With independence the feudal proprietary and Zamin-dari rights in several forms were first done away with by legislative measures and in the second stage principle of 'land-to-the tiller' was too made effective by several tenancy legislations. All these laws that regulated the structure of agrarian rights and clearly the milestones of agricultural reforms.

161. By Constitution (Seventeenth Amendment) Act which provided the protection to such laws that was eventually upheld as valid. [See: L. Jagannath v. Authorised Officer, Land Reforms, Madurai, (AIR 1972 SC 425)]. Close on the heels of the regulatory reforms finding viable parcels of land for exploitation for tillers were enacted by ceiling legislations. We have seen that all the emanate principally in the national policy evolved and applied in the shape of the original Act i.e. Act No. 27 of 1961.

162. The reality available in the rural sector and economic compulsions under which the mass of landless poor are engaged in this productive venture essential to the community at large and necessity of growth of productions are clear fountain springs of the present system of law providing for specified units of land called "ceiling areas". That would ensure and intensify the uses of land in best of the manner. Further it would permit distribution of surplus land to the needy and landless or economically depressed which would add to their total joy of economic and cultural existence.

163. A reference to Section 28-1AA of the Act which permits granting of surplus land taken over under Section 28 in favour of cultivating corporations owned and controlled by the State is indicative of the State Policy that in a given case the State may step into the field of agriculture by creating public Corporations which will tend to have compact and integrated blocks of land for better exploitation and diversification of uses of land. The enabling provisions in Section 28-1AA go a long way to indicate further reach of legislative concept of agrarian reform. Thus all the primary and operation scheme of these laws in our view clearly promotes the measures of agrarian reforms.

164. Some submission has been advanced as noted above at the foot of second proviso of Article 31-A and that requires to be noticed at this stage. Article 31-A, Second proviso, lays down certain conditions with regard to the laws to be made for the acquisition by the State of any estate. It is well settled that the word "estate" in Article 31-A takes in the acquisition by the State of the rights in agricultural lands. The other conditions of the proviso are that such agricultural estate must be held by a person. The said estate must be under his personal cultivation. The estate must be within the ceiling limit applicable to the person concerned fixed by any law for the time being in force and the acquisition must operate upon such land and the law must provide the payment of compensation at a rate not less than the market value of such estate. All these conditions must co-exist before the injunction of the proviso can be effectively answered. For the purposes of the proviso the lands above the ceiling limit fixed by a law are not part of the right to claim compensation at the market rate as contemplated. If the land or the estate that is being acquired is below the ceiling limit, then and then the proviso enjoins that the law must make a provision regarding the compensation at the market rate. The submission, therefore, that even upon acquisition of the surplus land there must be such a compensation and there is any vice in Section 23 or the scheme regarding compensation for surplus land prescribed by the present law is not available on the basis of this proviso.

165. The second complaint is with regard to the concept of the 'person' and the contemplations of this proviso of Article 31-A. It is said that in view of the provisions of Article 367 of the Constitution, the terms and phrases available in other parts of the Constitution are to possess the meaning as is contemplated by the provisions of the General Clauses Act, 1897. So applied, it is only the individual natural person and the acquisition of his estate below the ceiling limit could be contemplated by the second proviso. According to the submission the 'family unit' could not be treated as 'person' within the meaning of the proviso because it is an artificial collocation or group of persons constituted by Section 4 (1) and Explanation appended thereto in this Act. It is not "a person" proper and, therefore, if the lands are to be acquired they will have to be provided for compensation as indicated by the second proviso to Article 31-A separately to each person. Certain decisions referred to supra are relied on this aspect. We propose to consider here this aspect of the matter.

166. General Clauses Act, 1897 defines 'person' as follows:

" 'person' shall include any company or association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not."

The definition is illustrative and is not exhaustive. The rule of interpretation regarding such inclusive definitions has always been to treat the other entities who would not have strictly within the definition to be the part thereof, because of illustrative enactment of such definition. The inclusive part of the definition in terms indicates that it would take in any incorporated or unincorporated body of individuals or other associations. As far as considerations closer to social and religious groups of persons are concerned, it appears that it is well recognised that a joint Hindu family has been treated to be a juristic person. [See Gangaram v. Dharamsi, (AIR 1935 Nag 250), A. G. Pandurao v. Collector of Madras, (AIR 1954 Mad 1049) and Apaji Kulkarni v. Ramchandra, ((1892) ILR 16 Bom 29 at p. 39) (FB)]. It is undoubtedly true that in the decided cases the mode of living and enjoyment of property of the group of persons living under the name and style of joint family subserved that findings to hold that such entity answered the concept of juristic person.

167. The definition however clearly permits to look for the group of individuals to be brought or placed in the bracket of entity called 'person' for the purposes of a given law. Incorporation which results in juridical creation of personality is not essential. Groups of individuals known and recognised by law as an entity, for all purposes of General Clauses Act would be "the person" and nothing less. It is possible for law to constitute persons or treat specified and related group of individuals to be the 'person'. It has been noted by this Court in Baburao v. State, (1974 Mah LJ 385 at p. 392) that "the person" must be recognised by the State as a person and should be capable of rights and liable to duties. These two elements i.e. capacity to possess rights and subjection to obligations and duties are matters of legislative results. Tested from this basic juristic approach, a group of persons which are primarily bound by certain relations can be classed for the purposes of land law to be the 'person'. There is in fact no inhibition in that regard on the legislative power and we do not see why "a family unit" which comprises of the husband and wife or wives and their minor children either being sons or being unmarried daughters for the purposes of the law cannot be treated as a group of individuals and subjected to rights and obligations under the provisions of given statute. Once the body of individuals and we have no doubt that what explanation to Section 4 (1) does is to create a body of individuals obviously known to be related to each other, are treated by a law as one entity, that would always answer for the purposes of Section 3 (42) of the General Clauses Act the requirement of a person. By so grouping and finding law "a person" for the purposes of law, it cannot be said to be defeating the second proviso of Article 31-A of the Constitution.

168. Moreover, it is fallacious to attack the premises of Section 4 (1) along with the Explanation of the Act that it is an artificial, unknown unit of strangers put together arbitrarily by the Legislature so as to commit legislative fraud to take away the property. That is not very sound approach nor sustainable challenge. The very purpose of law is to subject the estates of the person or group of persons who enjoy such estate together to lower limit of ceiling and out of excess to create a pool of surplus land for community distribution. Recognised groups related to land would always be primary objects of permissive legislative activity and criticism on this count is entirely unrealistic. We may here indicate what was noted by this Court in Baburao's case (1974 Mah LJ 385) about the social facts in this regard. That case arose under the scheme of the Original Ceiling Act i.e. Act No. 27 of 1961 and the question posed before the Court was, whether an individual residing with his family could claim the benefit of Section 6 so as to retain the property to the extent of two ceiling areas available because the family had members more than five for computation under Section 6. This Court accepted the contention of the land-holder that an individual residing with the known relations who are dependent upon him either because of natural, or social or blood affinity would all constitute the 'family', and that such individual though he may be personally holding the property would be entitled to the benefit of Section 6, as it then existed to retain the property by computing against each of the member the area permitted by that provision to the extent of two ceiling areas. The argument for the State that family as such must hold the land or must have title and interest in the land was not accepted by this Court. Soon after the decision was so rendered, the present legislative scheme has been enforced and it is indeed salutary to read in the present scheme the results which are more clear and avoids all sorts of ambiguities.

169. Firstly the concept of 'family unit' is now defined by Explanation to Section 4 (1) and entitlement in Section 6 as amended at present, is made restricted to the members so included in the family unit. Though the definition of the term 'family' is retained in the present Act as was in the old Act and "Family" is included in the definition of the word 'person' in the present enactment, Section 6 has been entirely substituted and is made only applicable to the unit called the 'family unit' where there are specified persons who alone can be the members of the family unit. The intention is to clarify what was otherwise ambiguous and open to interpretation. Now instances like Baburao's case are not now likely to occur in the present scheme and the substituted Section 6.

170. Another thing which can be noted with advantage is that in Baburao's case, this Court after considering the concept of the 'family' looked to the sociological growth of the social group called 'family' under the Indian context and upheld the contention that individual living in family answers 'the family' for the purposes of then existing Section 6. Suffice it would be to refer to the concept of family as enunciated in that case. After noting the deliberations of the All India Seminar on the "Indian Family in the Seventies" it is noted that the result of the Seminar has been pointed out to be that the traditional typology of 'joint', 'nuclear' and 'matrifocal' families was a useful one for the exploration of the situation of the families in India. The second statement available from the deliberations of that Seminar is to be that there was a general consensus in the sociological observations that in India there is a gradual break-down of the joint family and the movement is towards individual family units and that this variation in familial structure is accompanied by emotional as well as economic strains on the family. In the sociological field, therefore, it is recognised passage that the Indian family has come out of the stage known as 'Joint Family' and is marching in transition towards 'nuclear family' that grows around an individual or two of them as the earning unit for self and for those who depend upon them either living together or earning together. Baburao's case noted that this fission from unit to unit is the part of modern social experience. It was therefore observed that if an individual having a family answered to the term of 'family' as distinguished from Joint Hindu Family, he would be within the term 'family'. That case notes:

"Several social principles, therefore, may have their interplay while determining whether a particular group answers the term "family". A "family" may be determined by applying the principle of dependence or residence or relationship and laws applicable to such groups."

(Underlining ours). While considering the argument of concept of 'family' as such against the contest of holding of 'land' in the original Ceiling Act it was observed:

"If a restrictive meaning is given, as contended for by the State, that it must be the family, who as a group must own the land and then it is only those groups or units which own the property as a unit that would get the benefit of Section 6 and no other. Such a view would render the provisions completely restrictive in scope and ambit. No doubt, upon surface reading of that provision, it does indicate a collocation or a group of persons either living under one roof or one domain and related with each other must as such hold land. However, in the social context and the background available in the State it is a matter of common experience that a family consisting of one head and having children and a spouse, owns the land by the head and depends for livelihood on such land by cultivating it. For such family agriculture is the way of life, for it depends for maintenance on such land. Any member of such a family can cultivate land and for the purpose of the Act it is personal cultivation." (Emphasis added).

171. Thus in Baburao's case (1974 Mah LJ 385) this Court applied the principles of relation and dependence as subserving the need to form a group and treated it as a common group under the social and existing pattern in which social life in agrarian society is obtained. If approached in this manner, explanation appended to sub-section (1) of Section 4 brings forth and operates on known social phenomenon. That reads:

"A 'family unit' means,—

(a) a person and his spouse (or more than one spouse) and their minor sons and minor unmarried daughters if any; or

(b) where any spouse is dead the surviving spouse or spouses, and the minor sons and minor unmarried daughters; or

(c) where the spouses are dead, the minor sons and minor unmarried daughters of such deceased spouses."

It firstly defines the term "family unit" including therein a person and his spouse or more than one spouse and their minor sons and minor unmarried daughters and if any of the spouses is dead the surviving spouse and the minor sons and minor unmarried daughters or where the spouses are dead, the minor sons and minor unmarried daughters of such deceased spouses.

172. The groups indicated by Clauses (a), (b) and (c) severally, it cannot be denied, are known groups wedded together firstly by marriage and being the offspring are entwined by blood relation. The inclusion of minor sons and unmarried daughters and putting them together with their mother or father clearly indicates the principle of dependence which is known to the state of law; the minor being disabled and dependent and looking for the care to others. By very nature such person either survives by maintenance provided for by others and even if owning land looks to others for its management and exploitation. The social group often resides under one roof and shelter having commensuality in each other's interest.

173. There is clear rationale and reasonableness in finding and carving out such social group of persons as a unit. Particularly when such a unit is related to land it would normally be one economic unit. Socio-economic realism operative in the field of land cultivation is under-pinned by these premises.

174. We have already referred to the recommendation in this regard that evolved a national policy regarding the agrarian reform and there too for obvious reasons "the family unit" of such type was eventually conceived as a viable unit to be made unit for the entitlement of ceiling area. Thus such enacting is not by any standard an irrational grouping of persons. Legislature here is clearly aware of the social facts available in enjoyment of land and drawn on expertise of the reports on national reforms. Moreover, if there are more members than five, Section 6 indicates how the additional area will be allowed to be retained by such unit. Mapping out such parcels of land and making them available to the stated group of persons who are inter-linked because of relations and because of social and natural dependency and mode and manner of life, cannot at all be said to be artificial, unworkable or unjust. On the other hand, read with Section 6, it shows legislative circumspection and care to allow further land if there are more than five members in the family unit.

175. It is said that this grouping of persons is exposed to results which are discriminatory, unnatural and unjust. It was suggested that the major person has been treated with a benefit so are also the widows, while it is complained that married daughters are unnecessarily left out. In the scheme of the Act no such unjust or discriminatory results are contemplated. If there be a major person, the premise of the law is clearly that he can hold land possessed by him as owner or tenant to the extent of ceiling area. Every major individual thus stands first and principal beneficiary and as such separate class for legislative consideration. In other words a major individual is treated an economic viable unit and as such related to land ever capable to exploit and to cultivate the ceiling area. That is, for such person is no more dependant on his father or mother and himself is working and toiling agent to put land to the best of its uses. Natural state of majority and its concomitant indicia are sufficient to treat him as a separate class than that of minor.

176. Married daughter, it is social and common experience walks out of the family of her father. She severs, in many societies under law, the relations with her matrifocal family and becomes part of the family of her husband or procreates a new family. She cannot be any more the member of the family because of the social complexion arising out of marriage-institution. Law may allow her to carry her property to another family where she becomes the wife of her husband. Her property will be taken care of in that family unit which will be counted with her husband. Thus for proving for major persons separately as individual unit and not permitting married daughter to be counted as member of family unit, the law operates on reasonable social premises and no exception is available.

177. Our attention was invited to certain provisions of the Act to show that the minor's property is being affected and there is no safeguard worked out by the law itself. Particular emphasis was in this regard, along with other provisions, laid on provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 16. We may indicate that that provision does not control the collocation as the group of the family unit. What would be the effects and results of law if the property of the minor is frittered away is not the subject-matter of the Ceiling Act, nor we can colour our judgment by any such considerations, once we find that there are good and sufficient reasons to bracket the minor with his/her mother and/or father. In the matters of interpretation there cannot be answers on hypothetical premises that the father and mother who are in charge of the minors interest — nay the trustees, would betray the same by surrendering minor's property at the stage of selection of land for retention by the family unit. Option is given because under Section 4 (1) the property is clubbed together. The selection is clearly for and in favour of the interest of the whole unit and matters of respective interests and rights in property retained will legally attach and inhere in the proportion of the interest by the members of the unit. Ceiling law being clearly a law regarding entitlement of the unit to hold land, principles of proportional interests being preserved would still remain operative in the land retained by the unit. By itself selection does not operate therefore to the detriment of the minor because initially his/her property being grouped with others to the extent of share pooled into unit that would remain always available. Further these provisions are merely enabling the spouses and have to be read subject to other obligations including the obligation of a guardian or a trustee operating upon such property and its care.

178. Provisions of Sections 12 and 13, it was said, expose minors to penal consequences without there being any guidelines in the scheme of Section 12 with regard to filing of returns on his behalf. Here the criticism is not well founded. In the first proviso appended to Section 12 (2) it is clearly indicated that in the case of minor and lunatic return will be furnished by the guardian. Thus for this guardian is obligated and legislative premises are neither vague nor confusing. We cannot countenance the argument that minor will be subjected to penalty because of the fault of the guardian, nor can we be asked to hold that there is any injustice likely to be meted out to the minors because of the bracketing him with his father and mother. We are further not impressed by the argument that Section 40-A which provides for penalty would be invoked against the minor, he or she, having been included in the unit called the family unit. There too it is obvious that the matter is not of course, but the prosecution has to be after the previous sanction is accorded by the Collector who is responsible Revenue Officer of the State in the district. Only because such penal provisions are made which are of general application and which have their independent purpose in the scheme of the Act it does not lose its validity or vitality. It is perfectly possible for the legislation of such kind to find out reasonable mode of enjoyment of property of the group of people and club them together as a unit so as to achieve the declared objectives of agrarian reforms to which we have made reference above.

179. Before we part with the definition and concept of "the family unit", we propose to make few observations with regard to some obvious matters. In the social context "unmarried major daughter" is a social reality available in an agrarian society. In some societies daughters do not possess any interest in the land and in some they do. In the property clubbed for family unit though there may exist a married major daughter very much working and dependant member of the family, Section 6 does not permit for the purposes of computing her to be the member nor can she be included in the definition of the member of the family unit. We do not find any good reason why this type of person, i. e. major unmarried daughter in a family has not been treated to be the member of the family. Economic laws are eventually to meet the social facts and reach justice evenly. However this is all for the Legislature to decide whether such a person appropriately can be included as a member for permitting better benefit of Section 6 in favour of the Family Unit.

180. Secondly here we observe, the anomalous results expressly leaving the question open about the validity of sub-section (2) of Section 4 as its operation is retrospective by almost five years i.e. from 26th September 1970. In the State as well outside dissolution of marriages by custom is a common mode and way of life in several communities of the people. There are several social groups, tribes, castes as well several different religious entities that operate their marriage system differently and dissolutions are permitted by respective customary law. The effect of dissolution of marriage is to snap the civil as well familial and religious tie between husband and wife and upon valid dissolution in law rendering them strangers fully free to marry, free to procreate, free to be a family all anew. It is not unknown that the wife of one may marry another may further get the dissolution and again enter remarriage with other. By giving retrospective operation for about 5 years to collocate such strangers in "Family Unit" only because they happened once to be tied in the bond of marriage which is differently treated in different castes and communities appears to us ex facie unreasonable. Moreover the provision of sub-section (2) does not operate with a presumption as is the scheme of Sections 8, 9 and 10 of the Act. That shuts clearly the proof to establish that the dissolution of marriage was not meant to avoid the effects of the law. Section 4 (1) is a provision of clubbing of land together of diverse or joint interests. Results of Section 4 (2) in a given case would be to put quite the strangers in one bracket and subject them to liability only by reason of past relation. However, question of validity of Section 4 (2) does not arise in any of the petitions before us and we have made these observations after hearing the learned Advocate-General on this aspect so that the legislative machinery may take note of the same to make provisions more reasonable and fair keeping in view the social and customary rights of the people.

181. Now complaint at the foot of alleged confiscatory results of certain provisions upon the interests of the members of the family unit.

182. Section 8 prohibits transfers, Section 9 acquisitions, Section 10 lays down the consequences and Section 11 disregards certain partitions. By explanation as far as to the first part regarding the scheme evinced by Sections 8, 9 and 10, Explanations (1) and (2), is criticised as confiscatory. We do not think so. These are enacted clearly to give effect to the purposes and objects of the Act and Explanation (1) below clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 10 merely enacts a rule of evidence and casts the burden to prove otherwise on the party who wishes to stand by transactions and its validity. Under law, transfer or conveyance of immoveable property is normally effected by duly registered documents. Plea based on second explanation, therefore, does not call for further construction in this context. Suffice it to observe that both the Explanations appended below Cl. (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 10 contemplate that all bona fide transactions if properly proved upon equitable consideration will always be respected by law. Such enactments indicating results regarding burden of proof and statutory presumptions are efficacious measures of known legislative activity. The parties who are within the prohibitions of law regard being had to its purposes should begin within statute's presumption and rebut it by proving it to be otherwise. The particular type of proof and its standard are matters involving facts and circumstances in each case. The very fact that adjudication is possible is a sufficient safeguard to any member of the unit including minor.

183. So too would be the case with regard to the partitions within the meaning of Section 11. Reference was made to the provisions of Section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act and other equitable doctrines operating and judicially applied in the matters of transactions and transfers of property and it is said entire equity is eclipsed by the drastic scheme to ignore partitions. All this overlooks constant premise that "equity" is not a concept that flourishes apart from given law. Law pre-empt conditions which are equitable in its view. When premises of law rule, equity cannot be invoked to control it. Legislature in this field is the sole Judge and its enactments have to receive interpretation that will further its object which must be approached as equitable and not otherwise. Known experience of men to grab land and fight for it by devious means of colourable devices so as to avoid material acquisition of surplus land for public purpose, all further the enactment of the provisions of Sections 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the Act. Moreover presumptions enact rule of evidence untouched by the eventual adjudication whereunder the party can prove bona fides so as to rebut statutory presumption. Adjudication and its possible result are themselves matters of clear equity that respects transactions of the parties. It is tall claim that considerations of equity should help those who stand to defeat the law. Claimant at equity should have stainless transactions and clearer conduct before invoking its principles. Further modern Legislature that acts in socio-economic-political areas possesses omnipotence to structure conditions and restructure rights. Transactions by parties with regard to property, it is primary, must accord with law concerning it and there is nothing supervening sacrosanct about it. Thus law's objective being candid and clear positing permissive modality of raising presumption and providing for adjudication, the grievances against these provisions are entirely unmerited. We reject the same.

184. Turning to some of the decisions relied upon by the several learned counsel in this regard firstly of the Supreme Court, we do not find any support for the propositions advanced that the Legislature disabled either in its wisdom or in its policy to collocate such natural group of persons in "a family unit" and that clubbing could not be done as to achieve the objects of agrarian reforms by providing ceiling and for acquiring lands for the distributive justice. In Gowli Buddanna v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Mysore, (AIR 1966 SC 1523), the Supreme Court interpreting the provisions of the Income-tax Act in Section 3 observed that a Hindu coparcenary is a much narrower body than the joint family; it includes only those persons who acquire by birth an interest in the joint or coparcenary property, these being the sons, grandsons and great-grandsons of the holder of the joint property for the time being. Therefore there may be a joint Hindu family consisting of a single male member and widows of deceased coparceners. The Supreme Court further ruled that the plea that there must be at least two male members to form a Hindu undivided family as "a taxable entity" had no force. Thus the case on the other hand helps to uphold the validity rather than negative it.

185. The case in A. P. Krishna-swami Naidu v. State of Madras, (AIR 1964 SC 1515) arose under the Madras Land Reforms (Fixation of Ceiling on Land) Act, Section 5 and Chapters II and III and there following the decision in K. Kunhikoman v. State of Kerala, (AIR 1962 SC 723), the Court observed that the 'family' has been given an artificial definition. The 'family' itself was quoted by Section 3 (14) to mean the person, the wife or husband as the case may be of such person and his or her minor sons and unmarried daughters, minor grandsons and unmarried grand-daughters in the male line, whose father and mother are dead. The provision was attacked as violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. The Court observed that—"We are of opinion that this contention is correct and the ratio of that case (K. Kunhikoman v. State of Kerala, AIR 1962 SC 723) applies with full force to the present case. It was observed in that case that "where the ceiling is fixed ... by a double standard and over and above that the family has been given an artificial definition which does not correspond with the natural family as known to personal law, there is bound to be discrimination resulting from such a provision." In the present case also 'family' has been given an artificial definition as will immediately be clear on reading Section 3 (14) which we have set out above. It is true that the definition of 'family' in Section 3 (14) is not exactly the same as in the Kerala Act. Even so there can be no doubt that the definition of the word 'family' in the present case is equally artificial."

And it was further observed:

"The provision of Section 5 (1) results in discrimination between persons equally circumstanced and is thus violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. This will be clear from a simple example of an undivided Hindu family, which we may give. Take the case of a joint Hindu family consisting of a father, two major sons and two minor sons, and assume that the mother is dead. Assume further that this natural family has 300 standard acres of land. Clearly according to the personal law, if there is a division in the family, the father and each of the four sons will get 60 standard acres per head. Now apply Sec. 5 (1) to this family. The two major sons being not members of the family because of the artificial definition given to 'family' in Section 3 (14) of the Act will be entitled to 30 standard acres in the case of each will be surplus land. But the father and the two minor sons being an artificial family as defined in Section 3 (14) will be entitled to 30 standard acres between them and will thus lose 150 standard acres, which will become surplus land. This shows clearly how this double standard in the matter of ceiling read with the artificial definition of 'family' will result in complete discrimination between these five members of a natural family." (Underlining added as emphasis in the submission).

186. The case for several reasons would be distinguishable because there 'family' itself was defined which was artificial and contrary to the concept of the 'family' known to Hindu law. Here the law as found on the other hand creates a unit of persons naturally related and residing together. 'Family' is independently defined by this law which includes Hindu undivided family and group of persons who by custom or usage live together and can be "a person". For the purposes of Section 4 which provides for clubbing of property each member who is included in the definition of 'family unit' by Explanation may not possess land and yet he may be part of the family unit worked out for the purposes of permitting maximum two ceiling areas read with Section 6. Moreover, if family unit can be treated as a person created by this law, that would be entitled to hold like any other person land to the extent provided. Major person being treated as a separate class for the purpose of legislation having obvious indicia as related to land and such person being entitled to hold land denominated by ceiling area, question of personal law does not affect the provision of Article 14 of the Constitution. Land law is secular in character and operates on economic plane fixing limit the material wealth of production. Reasonable, viable, working, productive unit is the differentia and thus validly enacted. Principles emphasised in this case do not affect these criteria.

187. Moreover in further passage of pronouncement and coming rather closer we have the decision of the Supreme Court in L. Jagannath v. Authorised Officers Land Reforms, Madurai, (AIR 1972 SC 425). There the 'family' of the type which was being considered in the earlier case of Krishnaswami Naidu (AIR 1964 SC 1515) (supra) as defined by Section 3 (14) of the Madras Act was treated to be immune from attack under Art. 14 of the Constitution because of the placement of the Act under the statutory shield of Art. 31-B of the Constitution. It is ample, therefore, to observe that even assuming strictly that this is an artificial collocation of persons put together under the concept 'family unit' and such a group is subjected to obligation to surrender surplus land after clubbing the properties together and there results any disparity or discrimination in law as the Act itself has been placed in the Ninth Schedule such considerations of equality of Art. 14 of the Constitution would not be available.

188. For this we must emphasise the operational difference between the protection afforded by Article 31-A, Article 31-C on one hand and Article 31-B of the Constitution on the other to the legislation. Each of the articles has independent protective potential. Articles 31-A and 31-C operate by their own force upon legislation of the type mentioned in those articles and satisfying the conditions of those articles render attacks emanating from inroads upon Articles 14, 19 and 31 as unavailable. By law either of the State or Union satisfying the conditions of Articles 31-A and 31-C immunity is made implicit in these regards without there being any need or necessity and evoke the constituent power under Article 368 of the Constitution. However, when that power is exercised by Parliament amending Ninth Schedule and the law made is placed there, Article 31-B springs into action to offer total protection and immunity to such law from any challenge whatsoever under Part III of the Constitution. Effects of these independent provisions have to be independently observed and applied. Applying the principles in L. Jagannath's case (supra) we reject the plea regarding violation of Article 14 of the Constitution.

189. Reference was made to the Full Bench decision of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in Sucha Singh Bajwa v. State of Punjab, (AIR 1974 Punjab 162) and Saroj Kumari v. State of Haryana, (AIR 1975 Punjab & Har 353). The Full Bench of the Punjab and Haryana High Court in Sucha Singh Bajwa's case considered the definition of the term 'family' as available in Section 3 (4) of the Punjab Land Reforms Act, 1973 and did not accept the contention that it was competently made. However, noticing the terms 'family' from the Maharashtra Act, the Full Bench in paragraph 20 observed:

"From the definition of the word 'family' in that Act it is quite clear that an entity known to the law was particularised as a family which owned land as such and no artificial family was created for the purposes of that Act, as has been done by the Punjab Legislature in the Act under challenge."

The argument put forth before the Full Bench was that the term 'family' could not receive artificial definition and the definition did not answer the requirements of the person as contemplated by Section 3 (42) of the General Clauses Act and, therefore, did not satisfy the proviso to Article 31-A (1) of the Constitution. We have stated above, how we look at the problem and we respectfully disagree from what has been stated by the Full Bench. On the other hand, learned Advocate-General drew our attention to the Full Bench decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court reported in Maddukuri Venkatarao v. State of M. P. (AIR 1975 AP 315), where the Full Bench decision of the Punjab and Haryana High Court (supra) has been in terms referred and dissented from. The definition of the term 'family unit' in Section 3 (f) in Andhra Pradesh Land Reforms (Ceiling on Agricultural Holdings) Act, 1973 was upheld by relying upon the legislative competence for the purposes of imposing ceiling which was an agrarian reform. [See: discussion in paragraphs 136, 143 and 144 of the report]. We are in respectful agreement with what is found by the Full Bench of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in this case.

190. Some argument is based on the footing of the reasonableness of the earlier scheme of the Act, i. e. the original Act and results indicated by the Amending Acts. It is said that there the natural social unit family could hold land and the ceiling treated it as a unit by itself, for, in the definition of the word "person" family is included. By the concept of holding land, family could remain in lawful and actual possession as owner or tenant. Further it could cultivate land by labour of any member of the family to answer personal cultivation and further there was a scheme to indicate who would be the member of such family having reasonable nexus or relation inter se as well as with land. This social economic unit, it is argued, is disrupted by the present scheme of the Act and in place of 'family' now 'person' who is individual major holder of the property is entitled to hold one ceiling area and further "the family unit" is made entitled to hold to the maximum two ceiling areas, the ceiling area itself having been lowered down to a static formula to the optimum of 54 acres. Substitution of Section 6, definition introduced by Section 4, scheme of finding out individual interests laid down by Section 3 (1) (a) from the interests of family are dictated statutory inroads having no rationale upon the structure of the family which according to the learned submissions is either a social or religious organ close to land and to the people in the State.

191. We are not unmindful of the social conditions and how people live in social-state. But that is no reason to substitute our judgment in place of the legislative judgment in the matters of rights in property. The function of the Court and that of judicial review is limited by its very purpose. We have already shown that there appears to be supervening salient principles operative upon legislative premises which have rational nexus with the relations of the group of the people and possible necessity to regulate the way of their life related to land. Once we find so, it is difficult to countenance all these arguments. Rationally the scheme is not to confer any new rights but to restrict and regulate the rights pre-existing with reference to extent and area. That is the concept of ceiling on land. If the right existed in the group of persons it is common legal experience that it would still be worked out to the extent of individual interests involved in such right. Existence of "Family" as a social group is not further guarantee of its existence as economic unit. If laws are to usher socio-economic relations by permissive measures nothing in the present scheme is irrational. In this regard the legislative judgment clearly furthers basic underlying policy of reforms and does not appear to us to be open to charge of any unreasonableness.

192. In the present scheme, it is obvious that under Section 3 (1) any individual by himself holding property as contemplated by this law is entitled to retain the property to the extent of one ceiling area. If such individual happens to be a member of "the family unit" and there are other members not exceeding five his entitlement is the entitlement of the Unit and along with others, is limited to one ceiling area. If however in the unit there are more members than five, such unit can claim to retain land to the extent of two ceiling area. Each economic major member and unmarried may hold land to the extent of one ceiling area, though he may be originally the member of the family. Each married person equally may hold land to the same extent. If there be two brothers both major and representing units those will be treated upon their entitlement separately provided they are holders of property. Section 3 (1) (a) permits computation of interest out of joint interests and works out a beneficial scheme and carves out separate ceiling areas. There is no disparity introduced in this the obvious principle being that the economic unit of the land should be correlated to the reasonable working hands available for the purposes of exploitation and the cultivation of agriculture. Only because family as such is not made the unit and such computation is to be worked out we do not think that there are any unworkable harsh or unjust results reached by the statute.

193. We may in fact indicate here the fallacy of all these arguments. In the present Act too 'family' is defined and includes a Hindu undivided family and in the case of other persons a group or unit the other members of which by custom or usage are joint in estate or possession or residence. By term 'person' this family is included in the concept of 'person'. 'To cultivate personally' has been defined in Section 2 (9) and includes cultivation by his own labour or by the labour of any member of his family or even by hired labour or by servants. 'Owner' has been similarly identically defined as in old Act in Section 2 (21), as also the word 'tenant' in Section 2 (30). All these definitions are to operate unless the context otherwise requires.

194. Coming to the declaration of Section 3 (1) which prescribes prohibition on holding of land in excess of ceiling area, the words used are to the following effect: "Subject to the provisions of this Chapter and Chapter III, no person or family unit shall, after the commencement date, hold land in excess of the ceiling area, as determined in the manner provided". Explanation is: "A person or a family unit may hold exempted land to any extent." Under sub-section (2) of Section 3, declaration regarding the surplus land is required to be made and it is stated that in determining surplus land from the holding of a person or as the case may be, of a family unit, the fact that the person or any member of the family unit has died shall be ignored. In sub-section (3) of Section 3 it is indicated how for the purposes of calculating the ceiling and surplus land the interests of a person who is a member of the family have to be worked out. Similarly it is stated how his joint interest in Co-operative Society or joint estates or firms has to be worked out. Sub-section (4) of Section 3 directs that no land shall be taken into consideration for more than once.

195. It appears to us that reading the composite scheme of Section 3 together, the word 'person' refers to individual person and not to 'the family' as a person. There may however be other juristic persons contemplated by the Act. This is clear because of the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 3. There the Legislature in terms directs the death of "the person" be ignored for the purposes of determining the surplus having reference to the relevant date. A natural person alone would answer this contemplation. Similarly in sub-section (3) legislative scheme directs finding out of the separate interest of 'the person' from the family property or from other joint estates. Along with sub-section (4) enacting that the same shall not be counted twice over, this integrated scheme unmistakably indicates that for the purposes of entitlement of the ceiling limit the first and primary unit is the person or the natural individual and the second cognate unit contemplated is 'the family unit' as defined and explained in the Explanation appended to sub-section (1) of Section 4. We are expressly leaving out the case of any other juristic entity and restricting these statements to an individual and the group of individuals living as 'family'.

196. Therefore even though there may be Hindu undivided family or other joint family, holding landed property, the individual interests of each major member will have to be found out separately and worked out in the manner indicated by sub-section (3) of Section 3. It follows that if there be a Hindu joint family taking a case for example having three major individuals, their interests notionally would be worked out to find out their individual entitlement to retain one ceiling area as 'a unit' for themselves irrespective of how they would carry on the enjoyment of the property. Similarly such a family may have more than one 'family unit' and its entitlement will have to be found out. This salutary scheme understood in this manner permits property to be held in viable units and does not lead to any unjust or hard results. May be by such computation Legislature in fact retained basic concept of any Joint Family or Hindu Joint family in fact for there is no compulsion to partition property here but only finding out and working out entitlement of areas of land. There exists thus a clear rationale underlining the scheme of both Sections 3 and 4 and no exception can be taken that there is any unfairness introduced affecting concepts of any personal law. Having determined entitlement as far as extent of land is concerned, personal law is free to operate and determine rights of persons under it.

197. Now we turn to some other complaints raised during the arguments. Firstly, it is said that the classification of land and fixation of the uniform ceiling in the schedule along with the definitions of Section 2 (5) and Section 5 shows patent and invidious discrimination and a preference to certain persons who may happen to hold land in better located and fertile areas of the State. It was stated that old scheme in the original Act was based on the several considerations which included the local rain-fall, assessment and several such other factors and the ceiling areas were fixed having reasonable nexus with the local conditions of different areas of the State and therefore, in some areas the ceiling was 64 as in Kolhapur, while it was 124 or 126 in other parts like Ramtek in Nagpur district. Now as it is both at Kolhapur and Ramtek, area of 54 acres has been pre-empted and on the face of it it is discriminatory.

198. The scheme of the present Act undoubtedly is somewhat rigid and uniform with regard to the fixation of the ceiling areas. Section 2(5) which defines "Class of land" along with Schedule lays down the ceiling areas having correlation with the class of land. In our view the debate raised on this count is important only as a legislative policy upon which the validity of the law cannot be tested. Once the power to legislate a law to fix the ceiling bestowed to the State Legislature is accepted, it is indeed difficult for the Court to review such legislative judgments in this regard. By the very nature of things the Legislature is possessed of better means of knowledge of its people and their resources as well as conditions available in the entire State and is the best Judge of the legislative modality operative in a particular field. Only because the original Ceiling Act provided for fixing a ceiling taking into account the climatic and local conditions including assessment and the present enactment departs from those criteria and instead prefers uniform standard ceiling areas, the inference does not follow that there has been any inbuilt or demonstrable inequality perpetrated by the Statute. It must be noted that the present Act became operative in 1975, while the first Ceiling Act was enacted and put into force in 1962. The development in the agricultural field between this period of about 13 years is a relevant factor till within the knowledge of Legislature. Judicial notice can be taken of the strides overall in that the State has bettered irrigation schemes providing for facilities to cultivate land and it has effects on the yield of agriculture. There is progressive evidence available all around of intensification of the uses of the land for agricultural and allied purposes and upshot in value of land evidences it. There have been established in the State specialised agricultural Universities so as to disseminate knowledge of all agricultural and allied subjects and to train personnel who will assist better cultivation of the land and promote scientific outlook. Facilities of providing insecticides, pesticides, better seeds, manures are matters of strategy planned by the State to increase the agricultural yield by appropriate economic inputs. The nationalisation of Banks and availability of agricultural loans in rural sectors on better scales further is a boost to agrarian economy. Thus all these steps appear to have set the stage to enact a law regarding uniform ceiling areas of lands to be made, available for agricultural exploitations.

199. What Section 2 (5) defines is the 'class of land' with reference to the irrigation facilities and capacity of yielding of crops of the soil. Classes (a) to (c) indicate an intelligent differentiation with regard to the lands having facilities of irrigation from different sources while classes (d) and (e) refer to dry crop lands with reference to a location thereof in the districts mentioned in class (d) particularly. This classification is in terms related and correlated to ceiling area fixed under Section 5 read with First Schedule, the main principle being the possible capacity of land regarding agricultural yield by means or irrigation. The ratio between lands irrigated and lands non-irrigated clearly shows the legislative indicia chosen for this purpose. If land be the economic unit subjected to proper exploitation for the purpose of yielding crops and subjected to other allied uses, then such matters of classification of lands have reasonable, rational nexus.

200. We have already made reference to the national policy in this regard and the principles evolved therein. Though it is no doubt true that the climatic conditions vary broadly in the regions of the State, that alone cannot be the criterion for permitting the larger areas to be retained by the landholders. With modern know-how and direct personal cultivations the Legislature expects that smaller, better-managed intensified agriculture should be the aim to tone up the rural economy and to achieve objective of growing more food and having yield of other allied agricultural products in the larger interests of the community.

201. Mere possibility of better yield in a given area than the other areas in our view cannot be emphasized as leading to unjust result or of inequality between holder and holder. In agronomics such a static approach cannot be sustained. For, much depends on the expertise, capital, availability of better seed, market, appropriate sowing and tending of crops along with availability of manure and irrigational facilities. Moreover, the legislative plan clearly is to settle the agricultural economy keeping in view several long-term objectives. Such a pattern of uniform holding is available in other States too and has been expressly upheld also by the Supreme Court: (See Indarsingh's case (AIR 1967 SC 1776 (Paras 7 and 8)) and L. Jagannath v. Authorised Officers Land Reforms, Madurai, AIR 1972 SC 425). We therefore do not see any vice in such a uniform fixation of the ceiling areas,

202. It was contended upon this aspect of the matter that the State has chosen the agricultural sector for effectuating the policy of the State leaving other sectors like Industrial and Urban Sectors untouched. It is indeed the complaint that by so providing a smaller ceiling upon the agricultural holdings the State is practising inequality and inequity for those engaged in agriculture while others engaged in the industrial field would not be governed by any ceiling as such and that would result in widening of economic gap.

203. Such an argument even under Article 14 would not be tenable. The ceiling on land by itself is a reasonable classification and there cannot be any appeal that there must be uniform ceiling with regard to every type of economic venture. Even if any such argument is available, we think these are the matters of State Policy. What should be done with the Industrial economy or with the urban economy cannot be the determinative factor while testing the legality or validity of the ceiling imposed in the field of agriculture. The appeal should lie somewhere else and not to the Court.

204. In the sum thus we answer that as far as the person is concerned as contemplated by second proviso to Article 31-A "family unit" is a person within the meaning of the General Clauses Act Section 3 (42) and there is no antilogity enacted by the scheme of the Act and further there is equitable, reasonable and workable scheme enacted by laws premises. In our view, therefore, the terms of the second proviso of Article 31-A fully answered and by reason that Act clearly being a measure of agrarian reform it having received the Presidential assent it is immune on its own terms being challenged on the basis that there is any violation of the fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution.

205. We now turn to the provisions of S. 2-A and S. 44-A along with Sec. 44-B of the Act. Section 2-A directs the State Government to constitute Tribunals necessary for each area for the purposes of the Act. The said Tribunal is called the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal. Sub-section (3) states that each Tribunal shall consist of not less than 3 members of whom one shall be a person who holds or has held a civil post under the State not below the rank of a Tahsildar and such person shall be the Chairman. Power is conferred upon the State Government to constitute and dissolve such Tribunals from time to time. Quorum is to be prescribed by the rules to be framed under the Act. The Tribunal has to act by majority opinion and when it is equally divided Chairman's opinion has to be the decision. The arguments on this aspect of the matter were mainly advanced by few learned counsel, Mr. Pendharkar and Mr. Mohota. Similarly other learned advocates Mr. Desh-

206. It is said in these submissions that there is abdication of essential legislative function in favour of the State Legislature in constituting the tribunals and no guiding principles with regard to qualification of members have been laid down by the Legislature. Reliance has been placed on this aspect of the matter on the two judgments in M/s. Devi Das v. State of Punjab, (AIR 1967 SC 1895) and State of Punjab v. Khan Chand, (AIR 1974 SC 543).

207. We really fail to see how such an argument can assist if a closer look is taken of the scheme of Section 2-A and Section 44-A of the Act. We have referred broadly to the scheme of Section 2-A. It indeed lays down by its own terms and object of the Act the most significant guideline. Sub-section (3) of Section 2-A requires that the Tribunal shall consist of not less than 3 members of whom one shall be a person who holds or has held a civil post under the State not below the rank of a Tahsildar. Sub-section (6) to which we have made a reference indicates that the decision of the Chairman has primacy. In the Revenue Administration of the State, Tahsildar is an officer upon whom several revenue duties have been vested by the provisions of the Land Revenue Code and other laws. His qualifications are laid down and the office is known to the Legislature to be conversant with the matters connected with land and revenue. Thus naming the Chairman by office itself subserves the need of laying qualification and as well the qualification. It is implicit in the scheme of such constitution of Tribunals that some matters must be left to the executive discretion. The other members upon the Tribunal advisedly will have to be appointed by the State Government by notification looking to the purpose and object of the Act and adjudication contemplated. It is expected by the scheme that the persons will be drawn from the locality over which the Tribunal has jurisdiction and further that they would be conversant with the matters which are required to be dealt with by or before the Tribunal. It indeed appears to us to be a wholesome provision. To permit such constitution of Tribunals, which will be closer to the community and closer to the area and which will possess by necessary implications expected expertise and experience about the conditions of the land and people are clear matters of legislative indications in this regard. Moreover, the purpose and the object of the Act itself are sufficient guidelines for such constitution after specifying the Chairman who would be of rank not below that of Tahsildar. There is thus no excessive nor abdication of legislative powers in such a scheme. There can hardly be heard any complaint if such a Tribunal eventually closer to people for whose benefit and for whose interest distributive justices have to be administered. Moreover, there is further system of appeal to Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal as well Revisions to Commissioner and to State. Further aggrieved party can seek constitutional remedy available under Article 227 of the Constitution. The entire scheme therefore taken into account is not open to challenge on these grounds. The decisions relied upon do not help to further the submission.

208. The scheme of Section 2-A read with Section 44-A having nominated the Chairman by rank and authority as indicated above and having sufficient guidelines has yet another eloquent facet. There existed an age-old system of adjudicating bodies dealing with justice or causes which had roots in the social experience of the people, based on associative principles of justice. That evoked support, popularity as well the community sanctions. There is clear evidence of such Courts like those of Kula, Sreni, Puga, (See Mayne's Hindu Law PP. 12-13). That system did work with impartial and yet vigorous approach. It also added to the speed and expeditious dispensation of justice in the causes brought before it. The system was close and akin to the life of the people and its experience as recorded proved to be robust being free from technicalities and responding popular faith and community response.

209. Even in the modern World, community Courts or People's Court or Elective Courts are not matters of any alien experience to juridical thought. The system adopted in the developed nations have applied adequate chosen principles to suit best to the conditions and circumstances available in a given polity and for the purpose of given adjudication. Elective Courts backed by popular propaganda for election in the United States of America and the People's Courts and lay Judges of USSR are all successful experiment actions of value. System of such Courts does dynamically operate in the field of justice. (See: Essay by Prof.

Harold J. Laski on Law and Justice in Soviet Russia; The Ends of Justice by V. R. Krishna Iyer in 'Social Mission of Law.').

210. It appears to us that Land Courts or Land Tribunals now contemplated by the present scheme is healthy experiment indicative of return to our roots of associative and community justice principles and hence we cannot be apprehensive of its modality and effectiveness. The members would be essentially drawn from the community or locale likely to be affected by the decision. The Chairman has to be well-versed responsible Revenue Officer. Courts cannot be asked to condemn such salutary scheme on the ground of possible executive favouritism in appointments of illiterate or interested persons on such Tribunals once the legislative competence in this regard is granted. It all depends how eventually the administration of land-justice is carried on and how fairly these tribunals discharge their high function, for honesty and conscience are not the fruits that only flower with education. Health of system of Court depends on several factors, one being constant vigil of inner and outer conscience of the Judge and its constant rapport with community conscience and mind. Indeed modern World Juridical thinking accepts that in such community system of Courts there are clear advantages as the function and role of Court is much wider and can well be educative as well as paternal in socio-political developments. (See: "Justice in the USSR" Chapter XII by Harold J. Berman). We have premise to hope that land Courts would function in the spirit of detachment, impartiality and by dispensation of just premises dispel doubts about the objectives of land justice in the State. These Tribunals thus would have community backing and by its rule educate the public opinion as it acts as parental organ in rural life.

211. Turning to the provisions of Section 44-B in essence the attack is that there is a cloud cast upon the effective right of representation in favour of the land-holder who is exposed to serious consequences of taking away of the property, forfeiture, confiscation and even subjected to penalty. It is said that the principles of natural justice have been violated. It is further urged that the legislature in this field has been unrealistic in not taking into account the magnitude of the ignorance of the body peasantry, who will be subjected to the process of law at large and possibility of their being exploited in the situation if they are not effectively represented by expert professionalists.

212. The provisions of Sec. 44-B, firstly call for interpretation and secondly we will be indicating our reasons as to why we do not think that there is any inroad upon any vested right with regard to the matters of legal representation. That provision reads as follows:

"S. 44-B: Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or any law for the time being in force no pleader shall be entitled to appear on behalf of any party in any proceedings under this Act before the Authorised Officer, the Tribunal, the Collector, the Commissioner, the State Government or the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal."

Provided that, where a party is a minor or lunatic his guardian may appear and in the case of any other person under disability, his authorised agent may appear.

Explanation: For the purposes of this section, the expression 'pleader' includes an advocate, attorney, Vakil or any other legal practitioner." (Underlining added).

213. By the main part of the section "pleaders" as such are excluded from appearance in the proceedings under the Act and prohibition operates upon that class. Explanation added to this section shows that "Pleader" includes an advocate, attorney, Vakil or any other legal practitioner. The Explanation throws light on the term "Pleader" used in the main part of the section. It was not even countered by the learned Advocate-General that by "Pleader" the main provision indicates that the professional class of Advocates, attorneys, Vakils or other legal practitioner is only excluded. The proviso as is well-settled does not merely carve out an exception, but sometimes explains that but for the proviso would not have been effectively understood as the part of the legislation: (See Ishvarlal v. Motibhai, AIR 1966 SC 459 at page 462). Pleadings by themselves are the class of authorised agents and that particular professional is subjected to prohibition. Proviso, however, makes it clear that in a case of disabled persons the authorised agent who may include even a professional would be able to represent the interest of the minor or lunatic or any other person under disability. This interpretation clearly accords well with the scheme inherent here.

214. Having placed such construction on Section 44-B, we feel little hesitation in holding that no exception can be made to law here enacted. It is not apposite function of the Court to test the validity of the provision by reference to the arguments based on the possibility of exploitation, possibility of oppression or possibility of misrule. In spite of the best of the provisions permitting experts and professionals the life of man and society is replete and riddled with these thickets. On the other hand it is proper and safe always to assume that the Legislature is aware of the total social effects of all relevant factors and with purpose departs from normal rules of representation.

215. There appears to be a clear scheme underlying the composite structure of the Tribunal as indicated by Section 2-A read with Ss. 44-A and 44-B as amended. Having directed the constitution of the Tribunal wherein the members or at least the Chairman have better knowledge of the locality and are armed with experience about the matters touching land, it was natural to provide a direct system of adjudication so as to further its justices by placing the person concerned face to face with the Tribunal. The provision brings the land-holder again close to the process of land justice also as to ensure just and fair considerations of all the relevant matters and the concerned claims. This face to face and spot to spot modality by such composite scheme cannot go well with the professional class. Nor it can play important role in such type of modality in the matters of dispensation of justice. This professional exclusion in relevant perspective is clearly meant to accelerate the speed of agrarian reforms and is not in any sense condemnation of any professional class much less that of pleaders in the State. There may be several reasons present to Legislative mind including the necessity to speed the land justice and by the modality create direct and new awareness amongst the peasantry itself by asking them to participate directly in its process. "Pleader" as an expert no doubt has a responsive role to play in the dispensation of justice and that institution by and large has proved its vital necessity in the field of law. But only because prohibition is enacted it does not follow that any legislative judgment is rendered against that class for there are clear premises of direct participatory educative modality of justice herein enacted. We do not feel that the scheme is in any manner unjust, unworkable or defective, nor can we persuade ourselves to hold that it affects the principles of natural justice.

216. After all principles of natural justice are not matters of any static formula. The right of hearing or right of representation depends on the express contemplation of given statute or of law and type of adjudication. The premises of land justice which has to operate upon land as a means of economic sustenance and to make pool or surplus for the community interests cannot be scissored by such strait-jacket submissions. There is full opportunity provided to everyone concerned at several stages right from the stage of notice (Section 17), return (Section 12), enquiry and statutory issues to be answered (Sections 14 to 18) and eventual declaration (Section 21). Merely for lawyer is not permitted, scheme cannot be stamped as violating natural justice.

217. Further it appears that there is settled authority as far as this Court is concerned in that such questions are the matters of legislative power and do not impinge upon the validity of the enacting provisions. In Mulchand v. Mukund, (AIR 1952 Bom 296) the Division Bench of this Court was asked to consider validity of the Rule 36 framed under the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act which did not permit lawyers to appear. What the Bench then said can be usefully stated with regard to the complaint before us:

".....But whether before a particular tribunal a lawyer should be allowed to appear or not is a matter of policy with which this Court cannot primarily be concerned. All that we may point out is that it may lead to considerable hardship if in important matters where complicated questions of fact or law arise a litigant is denied the right and privilege of being represented by a lawyer of his choice. It may be that the arbitrators themselves or those presiding over judicial or quasi-judicial tribunals themselves may feel the necessity of having the help and guidance of lawyers. Rule 36 is so absolute and so drastic in its terms that even if the arbitrators wanted the assistance of lawyers they are precluded from allowing practitioners to appear before them. The arbitrators may also feel that in a particular cause a litigant's rights would be affected or jeopardised by his not being permitted to fight his cause through a lawyer. But Rule 36 as framed gives no discretion whatever to the arbitrators. We would suggest to Government to consider whether it is not advisable to reframe Rule 36 so as to give a discretion to the arbitrators whether to permit lawyers or not and not to permit Rule 36 to remain in its absolute, unqualified form."

218. Whatever was observed by the Division Bench in Mulchand's case we make the part of our observations as far as the scheme of Section 44-B is concerned (and) leave the matter for considerations of the Legislature, in view of the decision of this Court as well reasons indicated by us above. Reliance placed on this aspect of the matter on Ramoo Bapoo v. State of Maharashtra, (1974) 1 Serv LR 568 = (1973 Lab IC 1638) (Bom) and Pett v. Greyhound Racing Association Limited, (1968) 2 All ER 545 at 549 is not at all apposite.

219. One small matter herein remains to be mentioned in Special Civil Application No. 1494 of 1976. Mr. Sohni complained that even to the pending proceedings under unamended law the bar of Section is being applied and that "the pleaders" are being prohibited. He made a complaint with regard to the petitioner in that petition and that necessitates the making of a few observations.

220. As already stated, Sec. 44-B has been added by amended Acts. The first Amending Act itself to which the second Amending Act added further amendments followed by Act No. 2 of 1976, a saving section being Section 5 of the Act No. 21 of 1975 has been enacted. Section 5 of Act No. 21 of 1975 in terms saves all the proceedings which were taken under the provisions of the original un-amended Act as if that Act had not been amended. Even without such a provision the principles of Section 7 of the Bombay General Clauses Act would operate when there is repeal. Express provision in Section 5 indicates that the proceedings under the original Act have to be continued as if that Act had not been amended. Right of representation by a pleader necessarily is a vested right and cannot be treated as merely formal, for it has consequences including the one that the appeal can be filed by the professional duly authorised in that behalf. These rights involving the proceedings pending and already initiated would obviously be affected leading to unjust results if Section 44-B is also made applicable to original Act. Therefore, in view of the provisions of Section 5 of the Act No. 21 of 1975 and also the provisions of Section 7 of the Bombay General Clauses Act, it appears to us reasonable to hold that the proceedings initiated under un-amended Act or the original Act will have to be continued as if Section 44-B had not been placed on the statute book. In other words, the operation of Section 44-B is prospective and restricted to the Act which is amended by Amending Acts Nos. 21 of 1975, 47 of 1975 and 2 of 1976. To the proceedings pending when those Acts came into force obviously Section 44-B would not be applicable and prohibition against "Pleader" would not be available therein.

221. Now we turn to the specific attacks on certain sections of the Amending Acts. Sub-section (3) of Section 13, Section 17 and Section 21-A (1) are questioned stating that there is an element of confiscation of the property and these provisions have no reasonable nexus to the object of agrarian reforms. Mr. Chandurkar, Mr. Kalele and Mr. Mohota all submitted that these provisions have been incompetently enacted.

222. The provision of sub-sec. (3) is the part of the scheme which enjoins upon a person or a member of the family unit to submit returns under Chapter IV by reason of Section 12. It is upon filing of returns the proceedings in ceiling adjudication are initiated. Section 12 obliges a person or the family unit governed by clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1) or by the provisions of sub-section (2) to furnish to the Collector within whose jurisdiction any land in the holding is situate a return in the prescribed form. The return has to give the details as mentioned in Section 12 and prescribed by the rules. The Act being the law as applicable even in future after the commencement date, the obligation to file returns within stated time has to be specified. Section 12 (A) confers power on the State Government to extend time for filing returns by an order to be published in official gazette. What would be the consequences of failure to submit the return is the subject of Section 13 itself.

223. On the plain reading of Section 13, its scheme in sub-section (1) indicates that it is possible for the person to explain the delay in submitting return within the time specified in Section 12. It follows that if the explanation is reasonable, no penalty of the kind indicated by clause (a) of sub-section (1) can be imposed. There is other ground for the purposes of penalty indicated by clause (b) of sub-section (1) where knowingly a false return is furnished. Sub-section (2) of Section 13 is a power of the Collector to issue notice if in the view of the Collector, there is a failure by a person or a member of a family unit to follow the injunction of Section 12. If after such proceedings are initiated upon notice, the Collector comes to the conclusion that without reasonable cause the notices had failed to submit the return within time or had submitted knowingly the false return, the Collector is enabled firstly to impose a penalty provided by sub-section (1) and further is enabled to require such a person to submit a true and correct return within a period of fifteen days from the date of the order. After such an order is made under sub-section (2) and in spite of that if a person or a member of a family unit so directed fails to comply with the order within the time granted by the Collector, then the penal consequences indicated by sub-section (3) ensue. These consequences are operative upon the surplus land held by such a defaulting holder of property. Free from encumbrance the right, title and interest in such surplus land would stand forfeited to the State Government subject to Chapter IV.

224. Thus it is penal consequence enacted that operates only on the surplus land and not on the land which is within the ceiling limit. With regard to such surplus land the provision declares that right, title and interest of the person shall stand forfeited and vest in the State without further assurance. The very use of the words 'surplus land' and subjecting it to forfeiture shows that all other enquiry as contemplated by other provisions of the Act will be gone into including the stage indicated by Section 16 permitting choice with regard to selection of land for retention. Upon declaration made under Section 21, the surplus delimited would stand forfeited, the legal effect being the entitlement to receive the compensation under Chapter V of the Act for the surplus land will stand extinguished.

225. This type of forfeiture as penalty after full hearing in the very nature of things cannot be questioned as unjust. To lay down the penalties and its scheme by themselves are the matters within the legislative competence. If in spite of law persons choose to act with impunity they render themselves liable to be dealt with by the penal laws. The scheme indicated above is one integrated scheme and the provision for penalty of forfeiture operates only on eventual compensation that could have been claimed under Chapter V and nothing else. It cannot be treated as harsh or unfair. After all, by the premises of the law the entitlement to hold land is co-extensive only to the ceiling area. After the coming into force of the Act the surplus held by a person or the family unit is available to the State to be acquired in the manner provided by this law. The provision regarding the payment of compensation and the entitlement thereto arises not under any other law but by the terms of this law i.e., Chapter V thereof. Instead of providing a further imposition of fines or other types of penalty, the Legislature devised to cover the field of penalty as co-extensive with the right, interest and title in the surplus land. No exception can be taken to such a scheme only because as was faintly submitted, that in a given case the penalty would be too meagre if the surplus is very small fragment of land and in others it will be too harsh if the surplus found is large holding of persons. There does not appear to be any sound principle to subject each and every person to the same quantum of punishment. The principle is whatever entitlement would have arisen to receive the compensation because of the quantum of surplus land is being deprived, to that person. That principle would uniformly affect every one to the extent he holds the surplus land. The scheme of both Sections 12 and 13 is indicative that there is adjudication provided before the consequences can ensue. That is by itself a salutary safeguard. The provisions of Section 13 (3), therefore, in our view are validly made and cannot be struck down on any principle on which reliance was placed.

226. With regard to the other section, the challenge is to the last part of sub-section (1) of Section 17 added by the Amending Act. That deals with the effect of public notice issued under sub-section (1) of Section 17 and when issue is about the knowledge of the contents of such notice. It statutorily states that issuance of the notice shall be the conclusive proof thereof as against the person who may raise any objection. It was urged that this would work untold hardship and open floodgates for frauds and even innocent persons would lose the right and remedy provided for by the Act. The submission is that in agrarian society there are several transactions which are benami and which are not reflected in revenue papers and the opportunity to show that really the contents of the notice issued under sub-section (1) of Section 17 were not known to the persons concerned likely to be affected by the proceedings should not be robbed of and the contrary indicated by the statute is replete with unreasonableness and as such the provision is enacted in colourable exercise of the legislative power.

227. In our view the argument is devoid of any merit and is based on hypothetical situation. Firstly, sub-section (1) of Section 17 is merely a rule of evidence and though the words used are 'conclusive proof' with regard to the contents of the notice, it raises a presumption in that regard. Like any other presumption, if a person is subject to real fraud, the challenge on the ground of fraud, mistake or jurisdiction is not at all ruled out. These are legal defences available wherever juridical presumptions arise and operate. Moreover the scheme of sub-section (1) and sub-section (2) has to be viewed together so as to work out a reasonable result. Sub-section (2) enjoins issuance of the individual notices to the holders and to the persons known to be interested. It must be presumed that the legislature obliges the authority to issue these individual notices. Thus the immediate requirement of giving notice and calling upon the persons who are known to be interested is fully satisfied. Apart from these notices contemplated in sub-section (2), the amended section with regard to the public notice issued in the manner prescribed in the villages creates a rule of evidence with regard to the knowledge of the contents of such notices once the public notice is properly issued. Having provided for in sub-section (2) the notices to the holders and to the persons known to be interested in the property, such a provision has been made only to avoid undue delays and cannot in any manner be said to be unreasonable. To test the reasonableness in the matters of such procedural provision, it is ample if there is assurance that the person known and likely to be affected is informed about the proceedings contemplated under the Act and nothing more. All that is evident herein.

228. Section 21-A (1) which has been added by the Amending Act is subjected to the criticism that its provisions are confiscatory, unjust and may put premium on the omission of the authorities under the Act to take possession of the land and subject the innocent holders to the pecuniary liability to pay compensation or damages. It is said that because of this the same should be declared as invalid.

229. This provision cannot in any manner be treated as unconnected or unconcerned with agrarian reforms or the main object of the statute. The scheme particularly of Section 21 reflects that after the declaration is made of the surplus land under sub-section (4) such surplus land has to be surrendered in possession of the State immediately. Upon delimiting the ceiling and finding the surplus, two legal effects ensue. As far as the surplus land is concerned, entitlement of State to possession of the said land arises followed by an obligation on the surplus holder to hand over the possession thereof. Indeed, in agrarian society love of land is notorious fact and nobody wishes to part with the property which is a powerful means of production. To counter-balance this tendency after lawful declaration of the surplus, reasonably, the present provision appears to provide a mere consequence. The day the surplus is declared the entitlement of the surplus holder to be in possession of such surplus land under law stands extinguished and he has to be ready to part with it. In spite of such lawful extinction of entitlement if he continues to hold the possession of land he can be subjected even on general principles to pecuniary liability for the fruits of wrongful enjoyment, to be assessed in the manner prescribed.

230. Like any other proceedings therefore these are enabling provisions giving rise to the pecuniary liability and its ascertainment. That essentially calls for an appropriate adjudication by the authority concerned. The concept of "damages" introduced and the legislative intent by use of the term 'compensation' are all sound guidelines to infer its intent in that regard and the apprehensions expressed cannot be appreciated. In a given case if really it was the State or its agency which defaulted the taking of the possession in spite of the landholder's willingness to hand over the possession of the surplus land so determined, there would be neither any award of damages nor any entitlement of the State to claim the same. The concept of damages abhors unjust enrichment; and compensation has to be only commensurate with the wrongful loss caused by others. That by itself assures us that the provision is a well-merited one and is designed to achieve the speedy acquisition of surplus land for the eventual purpose of its distribution according to the provisions of law. We reject all the arguments that the provisions are invalidly enacted.

231. A submission was further advanced that certain provisions have been made retrospective to effect as from 26-9-1970, and that it is arbitrary fixation of the time and open to be struck down because it is arbitrary, affects vested rights and has no nexus to any particular purpose.

232. The affidavit filed on behalf of the State indicates that that was the date when the Chief Ministers' Conference was called at the national level and first move to lower down ceiling including other eventual decisions in that regard were taken on agenda. That turned the leaf in the history of ceiling so as to open public debate not only in this State but all over the country. The Chief Ministers' Conference itself directed that the dates anterior to January 1971, should be fixed for the retrospective operation of lowering the ceiling limits. It has been said on affidavit that the deliberations of the Chief Ministers' Conference were got known and people were knowing that the ceiling limit is likely to be lowered. To avoid the effect of lowering down of the ceiling, the Legislature intended, it is stated, to put the date 26-9-1970 and give retrospective operation to certain provisions for the purposes of effectuating the agrarian reforms.

233. As against this, affidavits were filed in some of the petitions to say that they were not knowing about the so-called Chief Ministers' Conference or the decisions taken thereat nor according to the affidavits the same were publicised. Certain decisions pressed in aid on the question that when the validity of such fixation of dates is in issue, there must be evidence to indicate that the same was widely published or widely known so that by fixation of any such date, the purpose of the Act would have been defeated.

234. As we have over-emphasised in the present judgment that like any other matter it is within the legislative competence to give retrospective operation to any law. The purpose of such legislative policy may become clear if the history to which we have made a reference is taken into account. In fact from the publications issued by the Government of India to which we have made a reference under the authority of the Lands Reforms Commissioner, the case of lowering down of ceiling areas in whole country appears to have been an hot issue and was being debated through several media and on several levels. First concrete orientation step towards such policy was that the Chief Ministers were called on the national level to meet in the capital on 26-9-1970. Thus there is some rationale indicated by the historical events which began with that conference and prior to which there was already a case debated in the country by the competent authorities including the economists and agronomists regarding the lowering down of the ceiling areas. Thus in our view there is clear available evidence to find reasonable relation of the date 26-9-1970. Once we find this relation the other arguments that certain petitioners were not knowing about the policy decisions is of no avail. Making of the law and its competency does not depend on the individual knowledge of a particular person. We reject the argument on this aspect also.

235. At this stage we direct that the group of 30 cases being Special Civil Applications Nos. 1527, 1931, 2199, 2197, 2115, 2131, 2200, 1726, 1725, 1894, 1494, all of 1975 and Nos. 2476, 2477, 2478, 1072, 1073, 2990, 5, 266, 267, 3438, 2533, 637, 606, 1033, 1103, 1104, 1106, 3410 and 2172 of 1976 should be separated for in those only the live question with regard to extra-territorial operation of the law is raised. In these petitions too the common points with the group of these cases obviously stand concluded by the judgment now delivered by us.

236. As a result of these conclusions, excepting the Civil Application filed in Special Civil Application No. 1840 of 1976 being Civil Application No. 1378 of 1976 which we propose to dispose of by separate judgment we hold that there is no merit in any of these petitions and accordingly all these petitions raising the questions noted above and numbering 2661 would stand dismissed on the points raised in those petitions. In our view, as far as these points are concerned, the judgment rendered by the Bombay Bench in Special Civil Application No. 49 of 1976 does not require any reconsideration. There are groups of cases as we have indicated in the beginning of the judgment which challenge the validity of the enactments on several grounds and all these cases therefore stand dismissed. Petitions wherein applications for amendment are filed would stand dismissed as amended. There are groups of cases numbering 145, which have been filed after the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal's Order. The points about the validity of the law raised in those petitions stand concluded by this judgment and to that extent the petitions are dismissed. Those petitions will now be placed before the Single Judge to be dealt with on the merits. There are petitions filed directly after the order made by the Surplus Land Determination Tribunal without filing appeal numbering about 31. That group of petitions is also dismissed. The petitioners in those petitions would be at liberty to follow the remedy if any according to law to question the validity of the order made by the S. L. D. T. on merits. Though we dismiss all these petitions together, we make no order as to costs.

237. Prayer was made in Special Civil Applications Nos. 1918/75, 1949/75, 1694/75, 1970/75, 1948/75, 408/76, 2076/76, 1904/75, 1955/75, 1394/75, 154/76, 161/76, 763/76, 722/76, 331/76, 1394/76 and 340/76 by the learned counsel M/s. S. R. and R. N. Deshpande and Special Civil Application Nos. 1533, 1553, 1574, 1654, 1655, 1656, 1658, 1659, 1660, 1714, 1719, 1721, 1744, 1745, 1746, 1748, 1749, 1750, 1751, 1752, 1753, 1754, 1755, 1847, 1851, 1852, 1856, 1857, 1990, 1991 and 2017 all of 1975 and Nos. 66, 86, 88, 89, 90, 113, 114, 115, 413, 414, 427, 429, 431, 432, 433, 434, 728, 733, 735, 853, 850, 881, 886, 1028, 1038, 1132, 1133, 1382, 1435, 1757, 1974, 2433, 2830 and 2702 of 1976 by Shri L. Mohota for grant of leave to appeal to Supreme Court under Articles 132 and 133 of the Constitution. We do not think that any question arises for grant of such leave. The judgment we have delivered applies the law laid down by the Supreme Court. We reject this prayer.

Orders accordingly.

(A) Bombay Rent, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 5 (11) (c) — Tenant — Mistress of tenant living with him along with their children at time of his death is member of his family.

The mistress of a tenant who was living with him along with their children in the disputed premises at the time of his death must be regarded as a member of his family for the purposes of Section 5 (11) (c). The question is not so much about the legal status as wife but whether she would have been regarded by an ordinary man or a layman as a member of the deceased tenant's family at the time when he died. Hawes v. Evenden, (1953) 2 All ER 737, Followed.

(B) Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 5 (11) (c) — Statutory tenant — Right to remain in possession devolves on the death only in manner provided by Act.

A statutory tenant has no interest in the premises occupied by him and he has no estate to assign or transfer. He has merely the protection of the statute in that he cannot be turned out so long as he pays the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and performs the other conditions of the tenancy. His right to remain in possession after the determination of the contractual tenancy is personal; it is not capable of being transferred or assigned and devolves on his death only in the manner provided by the statute. Thus the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased statutory tenant as such who were not staying with him could claim no right to be the tenants of the premises under Section 5 (11) and it is only a member of his family residing with him in the premises at the time of his death who could claim to be a tenant under Section 5 (11) (c). V. N. Damle, for Appellants; K. J. Abhyankar, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT :— This appeal raises an interesting question under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the "said Act"). The facts necessary for appreciation of the contentions raised in this appeal lie within a narrow compass. The dispute in the appeal relates to a house in E Ward, Kolhapur, bearing City Survey No. 692/1-2. This house belonged to one Suresh Vasudeo Dongarkar, who sold the same to the plaintiff, who is the respondent herein, on 29th November 1964. One Chintamani Mithari had rented the said house, which I propose to refer hereafter as "the said premises" from Suresh Dongarkar at a rent of Rs. 10/- p.m. He was what has come to be known as a statutory tenant in respect of the said premises. The said Chintamani died in or about 1962. In 1965 the plaintiff instituted a suit being Regular Civil Suit No. 310 of 1965 in the Court of the Joint Civil Judge, Junior Division, Kolhapur, against one Muktabai Nikam, the mother of the appellants before me. The case of the plaintiff was that Muktabai was the mistress of the said Chintamani and was living in the said premises with Chintamani. After the death of the said Chintamani, the defendant continued to stay in the said premises with her children. It was contended by the plaintiff that on the death of Chintamani, the possession of Muktabai, the defendant, became wrongful and that she was a trespasser. After serving a notice on the defendant, the plaintiff filed the said suit for possession of the said premises. The defendant, Muktabai, in her written statement raised several contentions with all of which I am not concerned here. It was, inter alia, contended by her that she was the legally married wife of the deceased Chintamani and it was denied by her that she was a trespasser in the said premises. The learned Joint Civil Judge held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the defendant was a trespasser in respect of the said premises, although he observed that there was no satisfactory evidence on record about the marriage between the defendant and Chintamani. It was held by him that even assuming that the defendant was a mistress of the said Chintamani, as she was staying with Chintamani in the said premises along with her children at the time of Chintamani's death, she was a "tenant" in respect of the said premises in view of the provisions of Section 5 (11) (c) of the said Act. The plaintiff preferred an appeal in the District Court at Kolhapur being Civil Appeal No. 428 of 1966. This appeal was disposed of by the learned Extra Assistant Judge, Kolhapur. It was held by the learned Assistant Judge that the defendant had failed to prove that she was the legally wedded wife of the said Chintamani Mithari. It was held that she was a mistress in the exclusive keeping of the said Chintamani and could not be regarded as a tenant in respect of the said premises within the meaning of the said term in Section 5 (11) (c) of the said Act. It was, however, made clear by the learned Assistant Judge that he did not express any opinion about the rights, if any, acquired by the illegitimate children of the said Chintamani, who were admittedly staying in the same premises along with their mother, the defendant. This shows that the learned Assistant Judge has not made any observations regarding the rights, if any, of the appellants, in their capacity as the illegitimate children of the deceased tenant, Chintamani, in the said premises. The learned Assistant Judge allowed the appeal and decreed the suit filed by the plaintiff. It is against this judgment and order that the defendant came up by way of this appeal to this Court.

2. It may be mentioned that during the pendency of this appeal, the defendant died and the appellants have come on record as her heirs and legal representatives.

3. As the arguments in the appeal turn mainly on the provisions of Cl. (c) of sub-section (11) of Section 5 of the said Act, it might be useful to set out the relevant provisions of sub-section (11) as they stood at the material time. These provisions were as follows:

" 'tenant' means any person by whom or on whose account rent is payable for any premises and includes—

(c) any member of the tenant's family residing with him at the time of his death as may be decided in default of agreement by the Court."

4. The first question which I have to consider is whether in view of the fact that the defendant Muktabai has been found to be a mistress in the exclusive keeping of the said Chintamani, it could be said that she was a member of his family for the purpose of clause (c) of sub-section (11) of Section 5 of the said

Act. It may be mentioned that the facts found, about which there is no dispute here, show that at the time when the said Chintamani died, the defendant was living with him along with their illegitimate children in the said premises.

5. Reference can usefully be made in this connection to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Hawes v. Evenden, ((1953) 2 All ER 737). In that case the defendant had lived with the tenant of a dwelling-house to which the Rent Restrictions Act applied, as his mistress, for some twelve or thirteen years prior to his death. They had two children, one of whom had been adopted by foster parents, while the second child was living with her parents at the time of the tenant's death and thereafter continued to live with the defendant at the same house. After the tenant's death the landlord claimed possession of the house from the defendant, who contended that she was entitled to the protection of Section 12 (1) (g) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, as a member of the deceased tenant's family. The question really was whether the defendant could be regarded as a member of the deceased tenant's family residing with him at the time of his death. It was held that since the evidence justified a finding that the tenant, the defendant, and their children all lived together as a family, the defendant was a member of the deceased tenant's family within Section 12 (1) (g) and was therefore, entitled to the protection of the sub-section. It appears from the judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered by Somervell, L. J., that the correct test to be applied to such a case is:

"Would an ordinary man, addressing his mind to the question whether the woman (defendant) was a member of the family or not, have answered 'Yes' or 'No'?"

It has been made clear in the judgment that the principle laid down therein applies to a case where it is found that the defendant was living with the deceased tenant as his mistress along with their child or children. In view of this decision, it would appear that there is no reason why the defendant who was living with the said Chintamani along with their children in the said premises at the time of Chintamani's death should not be regarded as a member of his family for the purposes of Section 5 (11) (c) of the said Act. It is true that the above decision is of an English Court, but I see no reason to take a different view in this connection regarding the provisions of Cl. (c) of sub-section (11) of Section 5 of the said Act.

6. It was submitted by Mr. Abhyankar, learned counsel for the respondent, that only a legally wedded wife of the deceased tenant could be considered to be a member of the family for the purpose of Section 5 (11) (c) of the said Act. The question, however, as pointed out by the Court of Appeal, is not so much about the legal status of the wife, but whether she would have been regarded by an ordinary man or a layman as a member of the deceased tenant's family at the time when he died. It will also be useful to bear in mind, as pointed out by the learned Civil Judge, that under the Hindu Digest, which was in force in Kolhapur, the position is that even a mistress would be a member of a joint Hindu family. In view of this, I fail to see why the defendant could not be regarded as a member of the family of the deceased Chintamani residing with him at the time of his death.

7. Although in respect of the question as to whether the defendant could be regarded as a member of the family of the deceased Chintamani I have taken the view that the decision of the learned Assistant Judge is erroneous, it was contended by Mr. Abhyankar that there were several other grounds by reason of which the defendant could not claim the protection of Section 5 (11) (c) of the said Act. It was pointed out by Mr. Abhyankar that the facts found on the record show that apart from the defendant, who was his mistress, and his illegitimate children by the defendant, Chintamani had left surviving him his legally wedded wife and legitimate children. It was submitted by him that in view of this, the only persons who were entitled to claim tenancy under Section 5 (11) (c) of the said Act were the lawfully wedded wife and the legitimate children of the said Chintamani and not the defendant. It was pointed out by Mr. Abhyankar that under the opening words of sub-section (11) of Section 5 of the said Act, a tenant means a person by whom or on whose account rent is payable. It was submitted by him that in the case of a contractual tenancy on the death of the tenant even the heirs of the deceased tenant who were not staying with the deceased tenant in the premises would yet be persons by whom or on whose account rent is payable and would, therefore, be tenants under sub-section (11) of Section 5 of the said Act. It was further urged by him that the same position would prevail even in the case of the death of a statutory tenant viz. a tenant who was continuing in possession after the termination of his contractual tenancy. In my view, these contentions of Mr. Abhyankar, even if they are accepted, do not make any difference in the case before me. The question which has to be considered here is whether the defendant Muktabai, was a tenant in respect of the said premises or a mere trespasser. It is not very material to consider as to whether the legally wedded wife and the legitimate children of Chintamani would also be tenants in respect of the said premises. It was urged by Mr. Abhyankar that if there were any legitimate heirs of a tenant, persons claiming under Cl. (c) of sub-section (11) of Section 5 of the said Act merely as members of the tenant's family residing with him at the time of his death would be necessarily excluded in view of the fact that Cl. (c) occurs in the inclusive part of the definition of the term "tenant" in sub-sec. (11). In my view, there is no substance in this contention. The provisions of sub-section (11) show that "tenant" means a person by whom or on whose account rent is payable for any premises; and also included in the definition of the term "tenant" is a member of the tenant's family residing with him at the time of his death as may be decided in default of agreement by the Court.

8. Quite apart from this, in the present case, Chintamani was admittedly a statutory tenant. As appears from the decision of the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas (P) Ltd. v. Anandji, (AIR 1965 SC 414), it is the well settled position in law that a person remaining in occupation of the premises let to him after the determination or expiry of the period of the tenancy is commonly though in law not accurately, called a statutory tenant. Such a person is not a tenant at all; he has no estate or interest in the premises occupied by him. He has merely the protection of the statute in that he cannot be turned out so long as he pays the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and performs the other conditions of the tenancy. His right to remain in possession after the determination of the contractual tenancy is personal; it is not capable of being transferred or assigned and devolves on his death only in the manner provided by the statute. A statutory tenant has no interest in the premises occupied by him and he has no estate to assign or transfer. In the present case, it is undisputed that the lawfully wedded wife and the legitimate children of Chintamani were not living in the said premises at all, but in another house. Chintamani, as already pointed out, was a statutory tenant, his contractual tenancy having been determined prior to his death. In view of this, it appears to me that the heirs and legal representatives of Chintamani as such can claim no rights to be the tenants of the said premises under Section 5 (11) of the said Act and it was only a member of Chintamani's family residing with him at the time of his death in the said premises as may be decided in default of agreement by the Court who can claim to be the tenant of the said premises.

9. In support of his contention that the wife and the legitimate children of Chintamani were the only persons entitled to the tenancy rights in respect of the said premises, Mr. Abhyankar has referred to certain decision, to which I might now refer. He first drew my attention to the decision of Bhasme, J., in Gool Rustomji v. Jal Rustomji, 73 Bom LR 600 = (AIR 1972 Bom 113). In that case the dispute regarding the tenancy rights was between a brother and sister, who were the son and daughter respectively of the deceased Rustomji Lala who was the contractual tenant of the premises in question. The daughter (petitioner) claimed that under the Will made by the deceased tenant, the tenancy rights in the suit flat were given to her. It was submitted in that case by Mr. Abhyankar, who appeared for the daughter, that once it was held that the daughter, had become the tenant under the first part of Sec. 5 (11) (c) then it was not necessary to consider the various other clauses. Rejecting this submission it was observed by Bhasme, J., that "If the expression 'tenant' means only a person who acquires the tenancy rights of the deceased tenant either as a heir or under the Will, then the other clauses will become redundant. It is true that as a person who gets the contractual tenancy rights under the Will the petitioner (daughter) can claim to be the tenant within the meaning of the first part of Section 5 (11) of the said Act. But that by itself will not take away the rights which can be claimed by the various other persons under the clauses which follow."

In the first place, this decision relates to the case of a contractual tenancy and not a case where the deceased was a mere statutory tenant as in the case before me. Moreover, the observations, which I have set out above, far from supporting the contention of Mr. Abhyankar, tend to negative the same in so far as they clearly show that Bhasme, J., was of the view that even in respect of a contractual tenancy although such tenancy might devolve on an heir or a legatee of the deceased tenant under the opening part of Section 5 (11) of the said Act, the rights claimed by other persons under the clauses which follow the opening part of sub-section (11) would not be taken away.

10. Reliance was next placed by Mr. Abhyankar on an unreported decision of K. K. Desai, J. (as he then was) in Civil Revision Application No. 1556 of 1963 in this Court (Minoo, J., Patel v. Jamshedji B.), decided on 9th February, 1966 (Bom). My attention was drawn by him to the observations in this decision which run as follows:

"..... It would be extremely difficult to hold that by reason of the provisions in Section 5 (11) (c) rights of heirs of a deceased contractual tenant were sought to be extinguished. In spite of the provisions in Section 5 (11) (c), it would require to be held that the rights of heirs of a deceased tenant must be preferred to the rights of mere members of the tenant's family as referred to in Section 5 (11) (c). It is not possible that mere members of a tenant's family would be declared to be tenants under that section so as to defeat the rights of the heirs of a deceased tenant in the contractual tenancy. Having regard to the above situation, it appears to me that the question of tenancy as under Section 5 (11) (c) in favour of mere members of a tenant's family can arise only when the contractual tenancy is found to have been terminated before the death of a tenant and the heirs entitled to continue in occupation are unable to settle their disputes regarding their claim to be held as tenants."

In my view, these observations, which do not constitute the ratio of the case, are not of much assistance in the case before me, because they relate expressly to the question of a contractual tenancy and the observations themselves show that in the case of a statutory tenancy the position might be different. Moreover, I share the hesitation expressed by Bhasme, J., in accepting the view that even when there is a contractual tenancy the mere fact that there is an heir or a person entitled under a Will to the tenancy rights of the deceased tenant would exclude the claim of the members of the family of the deceased tenant residing with him as members of his family at the time of his death to the tenancy rights under Section 5 (11) (c).

11. My attention was next drawn by Mr. Abhyankar to the decision of Tulzapurkar, J., in First Appeal No. 164 of 1963 in this Court, decided on 19th August, 1964. It has been held there that merely because a special definition of the term "tenant" is given in Section 5 (11) (c) of the said Act it cannot be said that the rights of the heirs under the law of inheritance are abrogated. This decision, in my view, has no application to the case before me. In the first place, it relates to the case of a contractual tenancy whereas in the case before me, the deceased tenant Chintamani was merely a statutory tenant. Moreover, as I have already pointed out earlier, I am not concerned with the question as to whether the rights of the heirs of Chintamani under the law of inheritance are abrogated but merely with the question as to whether the defendant had any tenancy rights in the said premises or was a mere trespasser.

12. It was next submitted by Mr. Abhyankar that even as far as the defendant and her children are concerned, in view of the fact that there was no determination by the competent Court under the said Act as to which of them was the tenant, it could not be said that the defendant was the tenant in respect of the said premises and she could not claim any right as such. In the first place, such a contention has not been raised in any of the Courts below, and, in my view, it cannot be raised at this stage. Moreover, the provisions of clause (c) show that if the members of the deceased tenant's family residing with him at the time of his death are unable to decide by agreement as to which of them should be regarded as the tenant within the meaning of the said term in sub-section (11) of Section 5 of the said Act, that question has to be determined by the Court. This, however, cannot mean that apart from the person who is determined to be the tenant, the other members of the deceased tenant's family who were living with him at the time of his death as members of his family would become trespassers in the said premises. Although one of them may be recognised to be the tenant, the others would be certainly entitled to stay in the said premises.

13. Finally it was pointed out by Mr. Abhyankar that it appears from the affidavit of the plaintiff filed in Civil Application No. 1349 of 1969 in this second appeal, for stay of execution, that the plaintiff has already obtained possession of the said premises and has demolished the same in pursuance of certain municipal notices. It was submitted by him that in view of this the appeal was futile, as possession of the said premises could not be restored to the appellant therein. In my view, these considerations are not relevant for purposes of the decision of this appeal. What I have really to consider is whether the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession in the suit filed by him against the defendant and whether the decree passed by the learned Assistant Judge in Civil Appeal No. 428 of 1966 is justified. As I have already pointed out earlier, I have come to the conclusion that the learned Assistant Judge was in error in having passed the said decree and the suit of the plaintiff was liable to be dismissed. The question as to whether the appellants are entitled to have the possession restored to them is not one which I need consider at this stage. Such a question can be considered as and when an application is made by the appellants for restoration of possession.

14. In the result, the appeal is allowed, the order and decree passed by the learned Assistant Judge are set aside and the suit filed by the plaintiff is dismissed. Looking to all the facts and circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

VAIDYA, J.:— The above Letters Patent Appeal is on the basis of the leave granted by S. K. Desai, J., against his judgment dated 22nd November, 1971, in Second Appeal No. 1403 of 1969 and involves a point of limitation under Article 136 of the Limitation Act, 1963.

2. Second Appeal No. 1403 of 1969 was filed against the decision of the District Judge, Thana, dated July 4, 1969, setting aside an order passed by Civil Judge, Junior Division, Palghar, in Regular Darkhast No. 34 of 1967, dismissing the said darkhast on the ground that though the darkhast was in time under Article 136 of the Limitation Act, 1963, the darkhast was liable to be dismissed because the subject-matter of the decree was not in possession of the judgment-debtor (respondent No. 7), being lis pendens, was hit by Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act and the decree was executable as the darkhast was in time.

3. In that second appeal the decision of the learned District Judge was set aside on the ground that the period of limitation provided under Article 136 of the Limitation Act, 1963, will have to be calculated from the date of the decree which, in the case, would be from April 14, 1952, which was the date of the appeal decree in Civil Appeal No. 342 of 1949 and not from August 31, 1963, which was the date of the order made in Misc. Application No. 81/1976 for the amendment of the decree.

4. The material facts may be briefly stated as follows. The decree in execution was passed on April 20, 1952, in Civil Suit No. 219 of 1947 in which the plaintiff-decree-holder had sought possession of certain property on the basis that he had purchased the same at court sale which was duly confirmed by the Court. He obtained possession of a portion of the suit property but in respect of another portion there was obstruction, and hence a suit was filed to remove that obstruction. On April 20, 1949, a decree was passed by the Civil Judge, Junior Division, in favour of the plaintiff. On April 14, 1952, Civil Appeal No. 342 of 1949, filed against the said decree, was dismissed.

5. In the meanwhile, the decree-holder had filed a darkhast, being darkhast No. 122 of 1951, on April 20, 1951 and it was decided on January 17, 1957. Without the decree-holder getting satisfaction of the decree, he transferred it in favour of respondent No. 7 on March 7, 1956. Thereafter on November 14, 1962, the decree-holder filed Miscellaneous Application No. 81 of 1962 for amendment of the decree, which was decided on August 31, 1963.

6. The result of the amendment has been, with respect, correctly summarised by S. K. Desai, J., in paragraph 4 of the judgment as follows:—

"The decree, after it was amended, provided for a declaration that the Plaintiff was the owner of the land in suit. The Defendants were ordered to remove their hut from the property in suit and deliver vacant possession of the land to the Plaintiff. It was further ordered that if the Defendants failed to remove the hut and deliver vacant possession of the land to the Plaintiff, the Plaintiff to remove the same through Court at the Defendants' costs. This was in substitution of the original provision in the decree that the Defendants shall remove the hut and the plaintiff was entitled to get the hut removed at the cost of the Defendants. The remaining part of the decree providing for costs remained unchanged. It is clear that the original decree was incomplete and in order to do full justice, the amendment was allowed by the learned District Judge, Thana. Therefore, on 16th June, 1967, the present Darkhast was filed, ..."

7. Relying on the amended decree, therefore, the darkhast was filed on June 16, 1967 and the learned Judge, relying on certain decisions under the repealed Section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, took the view that the period of 12 years should be calculated with effect from April 14, 1952 and not with effect from the date of the amendment, viz., August 31, 1963.

8. The view taken by the learned Judge is challenged before us on the ground that Article 136 was substituted in the Limitation Act, 1963, for Section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure which was repealed by Section 28 of the Limitation Act, 1963 and for Article 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908. It is contended that so far as Article 136 is concerned, the words are:—

"When the decree or order becomes enforceable or where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods, when default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which execution is sought takes place."

We are of the view that the contention must be upheld because the decree in the present case became enforceable, so far as the complete possession of the property in dispute was concerned, only after the amendment of the decree as pointed out by S. K. Desai, J.

9. Previous legislation may be relevant to the interpretation of later statutes in two ways: (1) The course which legislation on a particular point has followed often provides an indication as to how the Act at present in force should be interpreted, and (2) Light may be thrown on the meaning of a phrase in a statute by reference to a specific phrase in an earlier statute dealing with the same subject-matter. Under Section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a view appears to have been taken that the date of the decree for the purpose of limitation under that section was the date of the original decree and not the date of the amendment.

10. So far as Article 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, was concerned, there was a specific clause which states that where the decree has been amended, the period of limitation should be calculated from the date of the amendment. The Legislature, having regard to the technical pleas which appear to have been raised with regard to the amended decree, has repealed Section 48 and also Article 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, as it stood before 1963 Act and has used the expression, "when the decree or order becomes enforceable, etc., etc."

11. In the present case the defendants were ordered by amendment to do certain things and on their default to do so, delivery of possession was to be made to the plaintiff and the plaintiff could remove huts of the defendants through Court. A declaration was also given in favour of the plaintiff that he was the owner of the land in suit. In view of this, with great respect we are unable to agree with S. K. Desai, J. in holding that the date which is material for the purposes of limitation is the date of the original decree and not the date of the amendment. There cannot be any doubt that if the date of the amendment of the decree, viz., August 31, 1963, is taken into consideration, the darkhast is well within time under Article 136 of the Limitation Act, 1963.

12. Mr. Abhyankar, the learned Counsel for the Respondents, tried to urge a new point which does not appear to have been urged before S. K. Desai, J., though it was raised and negatived before the learned District Judge. Apart from the fact that the learned District Judge has rightly negatived the contention having regard to the provisions of Section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act that the darkhast could not be resisted by judgment-debtor No. 7, who became transferee pendente lite we are of the view that it is not open to Mr. Abhyankar to urge any point which was not urged on behalf of the Respondents before S. K. Desai, J.

13. Mr. S. A. Desai, who appeared for the Appellants and who had appeared before S. K. Desai, J., made a statement at the Bar that no such point was urged on behalf of the Respondents before S. K. Desai, J. It is not open to us to allow the parties to agitate the point which was not considered by the learned Judge who has given leave to file Letters Patent Appeal.

14. In the result, the Letters Patent Appeal is allowed. The order passed by S. K. Desai, J., on November 22, 1971, is set aside and the judgment and the order passed by the learned District Judge, Thana, on July 4, 1969, is restored. In all the facts and the circumstances of the case, there shall be no order as to costs of this Court.

Appeal allowed.

Civil P. C. (1908), Order 40, Rule 1 — Equitable mortgage — Appointment of receiver.

In the case of an equitable mortgage or a simple mortgage the fact of interest being in arrears, with something more, would be sufficient for the Court to exercise its discretion and appoint a receiver on the footing that it was just and convenient to do so. Thus where the conduct of the defendant clearly showed that he took advantage of his own sisters, paid interest for sometime and thereafter declined to pay the principal sum as well as interest on the mortgage deed on the plea that somehow in his own way of thinking he had repaid the full amount which was due from him, held that it was just and equitable that a receiver should be appointed. C. C. Chhaya, for Appellant; M. R. Kotwal with S. R. Chitnis, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— This appeal arises from a dispute between a brother and a sister in relation to a certain family property, which was dealt with as far back as 1951 in a partition deed between the plaintiff, as one of the sisters, and the other brothers and sisters including the defendant Yusufally as one of the brothers.

2. In the events that happened an equitable mortgage appears to have been executed soon after the execution of the aforementioned partition deed by which the property in suit came to be owned by defendant Yusufally.

*(Against decision of G. H. Guttal, Judge, City Civil Court at Bombay in Short Cause Suit No. 9354 of 1974.)

3. It requires to be noticed that the equitable mortgage is evidenced by a registered document dated the 10th of June 1952, the document having been duly admitted and registered on the 25th of July 1952.

4. Although the mortgage amount which was Rs. 11,000/- in so far as the plaintiff is concerned (the other sum of Rs. 11,000/- being due to the plaintiff's sister Safiabai since deceased) there was also a provision in the Indenture of mortgage itself that after the principal sum or any part thereof and interest became payable, the defendant would execute an English mortgage in favour of the plaintiff and her other sister Safiabai. Neither the principal amount was paid nor was an English mortgage executed.

5. It would appear that the two sisters for some reason, it may perhaps have been sisterly affection for their brother, were content to allow the matters to remain as they were, because it is on record that the defendant Yusufally was regularly paying interest on the mortgage amount, at least to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has stated in her affidavit that the defendant Yusufally had agreed to pay interest at 12 per cent, instead of 6 per cent, as provided in the Indenture of mortgage, and that this amount of Rs. 110/- per month he paid to her regularly by way of interest till April 1971, after which he ceased to make the payments. The plaintiff further states that it was only then that the defendant Yusufally sought to tender interest at the rate of 6 per cent, per month, i.e., Rs. 55/-, which the plaintiff did not accept.

6. In any event, as a result of these disputes and the stoppage of payment of interest by the defendant to the plaintiff, the plaintiff filed the suit in the City Civil Court at Bombay for a declaration that the defendant was liable to pay to her a sum of Rs. 15,710/- with further interest on Rs. 11,000/- at 12 per cent, per annum from the date of the suit till the date of the decree and for interest thereafter till realisation. There was also a prayer that it may be declared that the said amount be charged on the property which was the subject-matter of the mortgage.

7. Then followed the prayer that on the defendant's failure to pay the amounts, the suit property should be ordered to be sold.

8. There was also a prayer in the plaint that pending the hearing and final disposal of the suit, the Court Receiver should be appointed to take charge of the mortgaged property.

9. The plaintiff thereafter took out a Notice of Motion for the appointment of a receiver and in her affidavit in support of the Notice of Motion sought to show the reasons and the circumstances on which it was just and convenient that a receiver should be appointed. One of the grounds taken was that the defendant was in arrears of interest and that he had also to pay the estate of the other sister Safiabai (since deceased) and that the property was very old and in a dilapidated condition. The suggestion was made that the defendant having put tenants all over the property and there being heavy litigation and taxes being in arrears the plaintiff's security for the amounts advanced and the interest thereon was in jeopardy.

10. The learned Judge of the City Civil Court (Judge Guttal) disposed of the Notice of Motion by a very short order comprising three paragraphs and he seemed to feel that the plaintiff had failed to establish that the security on which she had advanced the loan ran the risk of deterioration. He then noticed the defendant's averments that the property in question was worth Rs. 80,000/- and that it was insured for a sum of Rs. 46,000/-, and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's case that the security was in jeopardy was destroyed and that, therefore, "there is no case for appointment of receiver".

11. It is against this order that the plaintiff Bai Fatubai has come in appeal and Mr. Chhaya, the learned Advocate for the appellant-plaintiff, has contended that if regard be had to the history of the case; the fact that there is a registered mortgage deed in existence; that interest is in arrears and that the conduct of the defendant is improper then it can be validly contended that the plaintiff has set out a prima facie case that it is just and convenient that a receiver of the property in suit should be appointed.

12. The case of the respondent-defendant, broadly speaking, is that the moneys said to have been paid by him to his brothers and sisters at the time of the execution of the partition deed dated the 30th of November 1951 were in fact not paid; that the plaintiff was entitled to receive from him only a sum of Rs. 8,653/- as a result of the arrangement envisaged by the partition deed; that the equitable mortgage was a sham document and not intended to be acted upon; and that if regard be had to the payments actually made by him to the plaintiff Fatubai and the allocation of such payments towards capital and interest, then it would be found that nothing is due to the plaintiff. Thus according to the defendant the question of appointing a receiver does not arise.

13. Mr. M. R. Kotwal, the learned Counsel for the respondent-defendant, after referring to some of the factual aspects of the matter as to the execution of the partition deed and the deed of mortgage and how, according to him it is prima facie clear on the record that he has discharged all his liabilities to the plaintiff, argued that even if it be held that there was a mortgage in existence, the plaintiff cannot have a receiver appointed as of right merely because the principal amount is not paid or the interest is said to be in arrears.

14. A number of authorities have been cited by both the Advocates and the first point to be considered is whether a receiver can be appointed in the case of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, popularly but erroneously referred to in India as an equitable mortgage.

15. The first authority referred to by Mr. Chhaya is a judgment of the Supreme Court in K. J. Nathan v. Maruthi Rao, AIR 1965 SC 430, where the true nature of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds was considered. The Supreme Court set out the three requisites for such a mortgage as being (1) debt, (2) deposit of title deeds, and (3) an intention that the deeds shall be security for the debt.

16. The Supreme Court then went on to observe that although a mortgage by deposit of title deeds as provided by Section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was often described as an equitable mortgage, there was an essential distinction between an equitable mortgage as understood in England and a mortgage by deposit of title deeds under Section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act in India. The Court held that an equitable mortgage in England did not operate as actual conveyance, though it was enforceable in equity. But under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, a mortgage by deposit of title deeds was one of the modes of creating a legal mortgage whereunder there will be transfer of interest in the property mortgaged to the mortgagee.

17. There can be no manner of doubt that the Supreme Court has now laid down that under the law of India a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, though it is limited to specific cities, is on par with any other legal mortgage.

18. In this view of the matter, a mortgage by deposit of title deeds has the same effect in law as a simple mortgage, in the sense that there is a transfer of interest in the property mortgaged to the mortgagee, although there is no right to possession of the mortgaged property in the mortgagee.

19. The next authority cited on behalf of the plaintiff is the judgment of the Rangoon High Court in Ally Ramzan Yezdi v. M/s. Balthazar and Son Ltd., AIR 1936 Rang 290, where it was firstly held that in the case of a simple mortgage or of a mortgage by deposit of title deeds itself, unless there was an agreement to that effect expressly made, neither the right to possession nor the right to rents and profits are part of the interest which is transferred to the mortgagee. The Rangoon High Court then went on to hold that in a mortgage suit, where interest is in arrears, the Court will normally appoint a receiver. It is on this aspect of the judgment that Mr. Chhaya, the learned Advocate for the appellant-plaintiff, wishes to rely, and the passage on which he so relies reads as follows:—

"..... Now, the Court is entitled to appoint a receiver under Order 40, Rule 1, whenever it is deemed just and convenient to do so; for example, in a mortgage suit when interest is in arrear the Court will normally appoint a receiver at the instance of the mortgagee as of course, whether or not the property appears to be a sufficient value to cover the mortgage debt and interest, and whether or not the right of the mortgagee to obtain a personal decree against the mortgagor subsists or has been lost;"

20. Now, it requires to be noticed that in that case the Court was of the view that it was not just that a defaulting mortgagor, after the mortgagee had taken steps to enforce his security, should be allowed to batten upon the rents and profits without paying either the principal or the interest due under the mortgage.

21. In other words, in so far as the Rangoon High Court was concerned, it was found that the fact that the interest was in arrears was sufficient to enable the Court to appoint a receiver at the instance of a mortgagee.

22. Reference was then made to a Division Bench judgment of this Court in Damodar Moreswar v. Radhabai Damodar, 40 Bom LR 1266 = (AIR 1939 Bom 54), where Chief Justice Beaumont, who spoke for the Court, said that—..... "there is not the slightest doubt that the Court has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver in the case of a simple mortgage whether before or after a preliminary decree."

23. Upon the question whether in the particular case before the Court it was just and equitable to appoint a receiver, the Court thought that there could be very little doubt because at the time the application was made not only was interest in arrears but rates and taxes were also in arrears and the property was, therefore, in jeopardy. It is interesting to note that the learned Judge in terms stated that he reserved his opinion as to whether interest being in arrears by itself would have been sufficient to hold that it was just and equitable that a receiver should be appointed. In other words, this decision of the Bombay High Court left the sufficiency of interest being in arrears, as a ground for the appointment of a receiver in a mortgage suit open.

24. Mr. Kotwal, the learned counsel for the respondent-defendant, has cited a number of authorities in support of his contention that the mere fact of interest being in arrears is not enough to furnish a ground for the appointment of a receiver. Mr. Kotwal first referred to a judgment of the Madras High Court in Ethirajalu v. Rajagopalachari, AIR 1929 Mad 138. In that case it was held that where a simple mortgagor makes default in paying interest and the mortgaged property falls in value, the case is fit for the appointment of a receiver. Mr. Kotwal suggests that this shows that default in paying the interest by itself is not sufficient but other factors must also be present, such as, the fact that the mortgaged property was falling in value so that it was necessary to take hold of it by appointing a receiver.

25. Now, as a matter of fact this judgment of the Madras High Court really does not support the case of Mr. Kotwal because after discussing several authorities, this is what was stated:

"..... I think the result of the authorities is that while Courts would not ordinarily deprive the mortgagor of his possession in cases where the mortgage is a simple mortgage, there may be circumstances created either by the conduct of the mortgagor or connected with the state of the property which may render it necessary in the interests of justice and for the protection of the mortgagee that a receiver should be appointed. It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule laying down under what circumstances the Court will appoint a receiver. But ordinarily there should be some loss or detriment not foreseen by the mortgagee at the time when he chose to take a simple mortgage and allow possession to remain with the mortgagor which loss could not be compensated except by the appointment of a receiver."

26. It was on the basis of these observations that the Madras High Court having regard to the facts of the case before it, the default of the mortgagors in paying the interest and the fall in the value of the mortgaged properties, thought it fit and proper that a receiver should be appointed.

27. In the next case which was cited, viz., Bireshwar v. Sudhansu Shekhar, AIR 1947 All 157, the Allahabad High Court, after holding that the Court had the power to appoint a receiver of the property the subject of a simple mortgage in a suit by the mortgagee against the mortgagor in possession of the mortgaged property, felt that because the general ground upon which the Court normally appoints a receiver was the protection of the property for the benefit of persons who had an interest in it, the mere fact that interest on the mortgage amount was in arrears or that the mortgagor's object was merely to delay the final determination of the suit was not sufficient to show that it was just and convenient that a receiver should be appointed, unless the Court was also satisfied that the conduct of the mortgagor was such that it would not merely be to postpone the final determination of the rights of the parties but to imperil the realization by the mortgagee of the amount secured by the mortgage.

28. Now, it would seem that this authority proceeds on the footing that in a simple mortgage, the mortgagee is not entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property.

29. I should have thought that the Court has to consider whether it is just and convenient on a consideration of the entire background of the case and the conduct of the mortgagor as well as the fact that interest is in arrears.

30. Mr. Kotwal also referred to two judgments of the Rajasthan High Court in Onkarlal v. Rampal, AIR 1961 Raj 179 and Banshi Dhar v. Ghisalal, AIR 1962 Raj 225, where that Court held that the mere failure to pay interest by itself was not sufficient.

31. Now, it is not really necessary for me to discuss the several authorities in greater detail because this High Court in Damodar v. Radhabai, (AIR 1939 Bom 54) (supra) clearly held that the fact of interest being in arrears, with something more, would be sufficient for the Court to exercise its discretion and appoint a receiver on the footing that it was just and convenient to do so.

32. On this position of the law, I will now proceed to consider the factual aspects in order to decide whether the plaintiff had made out a prima facie case for the appointment of a receiver on materials placed on record.

33. First of all it requires to be noticed that the equitable mortgage on the basis of which the suit has been filed is evidenced by a solemn document executed by the parties and registered under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act.

34. At this interlocutory stage there is no reason for the Court to overlook a registered Indenture of mortgage which is shown to have been executed by the parties. It is true that the defendant has alleged that the mortgage deed was a sham and colourable document and was not intended to be acted upon. This may be so, but it will have to be proved to be so by the defendant at the trial and the burden lies heavily on him. The argument of Mr. Kotwal that even at this stage it has been shown prima facie that the mortgage deed is a sham and colourable document is clearly untenable.

35. It requires to be noticed that the Indenture of mortgage dated the 10th of June, 1952, refers in its Second Schedule to the partition deed dated the 30th of November, 1951, made between the several parties, including the plaintiff and the defendant herein. Although a copy of the partition deed has not been placed on record, there is no dispute that the partition deed was executed by all the concerned parties, and that the value of the property shown therein was Rupees 34,692-8-0 and further that the consideration for the conveyance in favour of the defendant Yusufally was shown as Rupees 25,795/-. All that Mr. Kotwal now contends is that although the parties had signed at the foot of the document to show that they had received the moneys, in fact the consideration money was not paid.

36. Now, once again at this interlocutory stage the Court must take into consideration the document as it exists subject to the defendant proving at the trial in such manner as may be provided by law that in fact the consideration money was not paid and that a certain amount was still due and payable to the plaintiff.

37. The result of the above discussion is that this Court must proceed on the footing that there was a deed of partition dated the 30th of November, 1951, which was followed shortly thereafter by the Indenture of mortgage, whereby the said partition deed, as a document of title, was deposited for the purpose of creating a mortgage by deposit of title deeds, as evidenced by the registered Indenture of mortgage itself.

38. Now, it is interesting to notice that even prima facie the contention made on behalf of the defendant that the alleged mortgage deed was a sham and colourable document and was not intended to be acted upon is belied by the fact that by a writing dated the 20th of December, 1966, the defendant Yusufally signing as "Y. E. Nagree" certifies that a sum of Rs. 1,320/- was paid by him to Fatubai daughter of Esmaljee Nagree and widow of Fidally N. Lala during the financial year 1965-66 at the monthly rate of Rupees 110/-, being interest on mortgage. At the foot of this writing, which is Exh. C, to the plaint, there is a statement that—

"This amount is being paid for the last many years."

Now, this shows that on his own showing, the defendant was paying interest at 12 per cent. on the mortgage and that he had been paying similar amounts for the last many years. It is not suggested that that was another mortgage between the parties on which this interest was paid.

39. Then, again an extract from the property register card, Exh. D to the plaint, has been produced in relation to the property in suit, wherein it is mentioned that an equitable mortgage was executed on the 10th of June, 1954, in favour of Fatimabai and Safiabai daughters of Ismailji Nagri.

40. Now, it would appear that in 1974 an engrossment of a Release Deed was prepared by Messrs. Dadla and Co., who are admitted to be the then common Attorneys of the parties, presumably with the object of the defendant paying off the plaintiff the principal sum of Rs. 11,000/- along with interest due. As a matter of fact, the engrossment contained at the foot thereof a receipt which reads as follows:—

"Received the day and year first hereinabove written of and from the within named Borrower the sum of Rupees eleven thousand being the full consideration money within mentioned to be by him paid to me."

41. If reference is made to the last paragraph of the engrossment of the Deed of Release, it will be noticed that there is a reference to Bank of India Pay Slip No. NGP 0065050 dated the 22nd of February, 1974, for the amount, i.e., Rupees 11,000/-.

42. It is significant that the Bank of India Pay Slip as shown on the separate receipt for interest amount of Rupees 5,000/- which was also prepared bears the number of the Bank of India slip as NGP 0065051 dated 22-2-1974 for Rs. 5,000/-.

43. It is the plaintiff's case that these two documents, that is to say, the engrossment of the Deed of Release and the Receipt for interest both duly stamped, were sent to the plaintiffs for her signature and in fact she signed the engrossment as well as the receipt. It is also significant that the defendant had kept ready with himself the Bank Pay Slips bearing consecutive serial numbers both dated the 22nd of February, 1974. In the face of this it is idle to suggest that the plaintiff has failed to make out a prima facie case that there was a registered document which shows that the principal sum of Rs. 11,000/- was advanced by her to her brother Yusufally and that in February, 1974, the repayment of the amount together with the interest due thereon was imminent. It is stated that the defendant refused to go along with the reconveyance transaction because of some collateral dispute between him and the plaintiff's son.

44. It was vehemently suggested by Mr. Kotwal on behalf of the defendant that the Indenture of Mortgage itself shows that the interest payable was at the rate of 6 per cent. On this basis, he argues that if the amounts paid by him are allocated partly by way of interest at 6 per cent. and partly by way of return of capital, then it will be found that he had repaid the entire amount due. The defendant seeks to place reliance on a statement of account prepared by him, which is Exh. 1 to his affidavit in reply.

45. It requires to be noticed that this statements of account as prepared by the defendant is at variance with his certificate dated the 20th of December, 1966, where he refers to Rs. 1,320/- as interest for the year 1965-66, being the interest at the monthly rate of Rs. 110/-. The amount of Rs. 110/- on the principal sum of Rs. 11,000/- clearly shows the calculation of interest to be at the rate of 12 per cent. and indeed it is the plaintiff's case that the defendant Yusufally was paying her interest at Rs. 110/- per month for all these years upto 1971 and it was only in 1971 that the defendant for the first time sought to contend that he would pay interest at the rate of Rs. 55/- per month, which she did not accept.

46. It is appropriate now to notice the conduct of the defendant. While taking me through the history of the case Mr. Kotwal stated that the suit property originally belonged to the plaintiff Fatubai, her sister Safiabai and their mother Rakhibai in the following shares:—

Fatubai	4 annas,
Safiabai	4 annas,
Rakhibai	8 annas.

47. On the 20th of October, 1951, Rakhibai died so that the interest of the plaintiff and the defendant and other brothers and sisters in the suit property under the relevant law came to be as follows:— Yusufally, the defendant, 2 annas; Ibrahim, other brother: 2 annas; Abdul Karim, another brother 2 annas; Fatubai, the plaintiff, 5 annas; and Safiabai, the other sister 5 annas.

48. It was on this footing that on the 30th of November, 1951, that is to say, within 20 days of the death of Rakhibai, a deed of partition was got executed wherein the suit property was valued at Rs. 34,692-8-0 and a sum of Rs. 7,000/- was deducted as being the amount due and payable to Atikabi (a stranger to whom the property had been mortgaged) and the consideration for the conveyance of the suit property to the defendant Yusufally was fixed at Rs. 25,795/-. In other words, even though the defendant Yusufally had only a share of 2 annas he managed to obtain the property all for himself.

49. As to the consideration amount payable by him, the partition deed shows that Rs. 25,795/- were paid. It requires to be noted that the defendant now contends that the amount was in fact not paid at that time. He does not say why it was not paid.

50. As to loan amount shown in the Indenture of mortgage, his first contention is that Rs. 11,000/- was not loaned to him by the plaintiff and his second contention is that he has returned Rupees 8,653/- which, according to him, was all that was due to the plaintiff.

51. I asked Mr. Kotwal why a mortgage deed for Rs. 11,000/- was executed in so far as the plaintiff Fatubai is concerned, when, according to the defendant, all that was due to her was Rupees 8,653/- on the basis of the Partition Deed. His answer was that this was so because there were cordial relations between the brother and sister at that time. I regret, I am unable to accept an answer of this kind. It may have been possible to contend that as between a brother and a sister an odd amount may be rounded off to the nearest rupee or even the nearest hundred, but there is no explanation as to why if the defendant's contention is true that only Rs. 8,653/- were due to the plaintiff, the amount was not paid at the time of the execution of the partition deed and again why a mortgage was executed for Rs. 11,000/- in so far as Fatubai, the plaintiff, is concerned and Rs. 11,000/- in so far as the other sister, Safiabai was concerned.

52. It is difficult to believe the defendant's case as to the alleged circumstances and the reasons surrounding the execution of the partition deed dated the 30th of November 1951 and the Indenture of mortgage dated the 10th of June, 1952. It is also difficult to believe the defendant's version that the arrangement was that he was to pay Rs. 110/- per month partly towards capital and partly towards interest on Rs. 8,653/-.

53. The conduct of the defendant clearly shows that he took advantage of his own sisters, arranged for the whole of the property to be conveyed to him, paid interest for some time and thereafter declined to pay the principal sum as well as interest on the mortgage deed on plea that somehow in his own way of thinking he had repaid the full amount which was due from him.

54. There is no dispute that the defendant has not paid anything to the plaintiff from May 1971 and on his own view of his rights and obligations he has no intention of doing so.

55. On consideration of the totality of the facts and circumstances as spread across the record, a prima facie case has clearly been made out by the plaintiff that the principal amount on the mortgage is due and that the interest thereon is in arrears from May, 1971. It has also been shown that the conduct of the defendant has been to assert his ownership of the property without meeting his obligations under the arrangement as evidenced by the Partition deed and the Indenture of mortgage. There is also the fact that in the Deed of mortgage itself there is a covenant that on the defendant's failure to pay the amount due on the mortgage (and the principal amount was payable in 1956) he was duty bound to execute an English mortgage which would have entailed his handing over possession of the mortgaged property to the plaintiff and the other sister Safiabai.

56. The record prima facie shows that the suit property is tenanted by several persons and that there are a number of disputes and some amount of litigation. There is also the contention that the property is not in good condition.

57. In these circumstances, I consider it just and equitable that a receiver should be appointed.

58. The learned Judge was in error when he approached the matter on only one ground, i.e., whether the security was liable to deteriorate. The learned Judge failed to consider the several other factors which are spread over the record and in particular that the interest was in arrears and the conduct of the defendant prima facie improper.

59. The order of the learned Judge dated the 15th of July, 1975, in so far as he did not appoint a receiver and rejected prayer (a) of the Notice of Motion is set aside and the Notice of Motion is made absolute not only in terms of prayer (b) but also in terms of prayer (a).

60. I also find that this is a matter which should be heard expeditiously because on a prima facie view of the case the plaintiff Fatubai has been deprived of her moneys for a considerable period of time.

61. I, therefore, direct that the suit be expedited and it should, as far as may be, heard in the month of March, 1976.

62. In the result the appeal is allowed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 177DESHPANDE AND MRIDUL, JJ.

Anandrao Dinkarrao Shinde and another, Petitioners v. P. G. Patil and others, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 184 of 1976, D/- 23-1-1976.

(A) Shivaji University Act (1974), Section 86 — Reference by Vice-Chancellor suo motu without requisition — Not incompetent.

Section 86 enables the Vice-Chancellor to make a reference suo motu to the Chancellor on the questions of interpretations detailed therein. Making of such reference is discretionary. Proviso to Section 86, however, makes it obligatory on him to make such reference when there is a requisition. Thus the main section and its proviso are respectively directory and mandatory provisions. Looked at this way, when the Vice-Chancellor made a reference suo motu to the Chancellor without the requisition of not less than 25 members of senate, the reference cannot be said to be incompetent.

(B) Shivaji University Act (1974), repealing Act of 1962, Section 12 (4) — Prohibition against holding office of Dean for two consecutive terms — Prohibition applies to Deans elected under repealed Act and holding such offices at commencement of new Act.

Section 12 (4) prevents holding of the office of the Dean for two consecutive terms, thereby prohibiting the then holder of the office from contesting such election afresh. Ordinarily the words 'consecutive terms' would mean the terms undergone and worked out under the new Act and the term held under the repealed Act would be irrelevant. The words cannot include such terms without some indication of any such Legislative intent. The intention, however, to keep the offices of Deans going is indicated by the sweeping provisions of Section 91 (ii) and (xi). Moreover, Section 91 (xi) creates a fiction of their having been appointed under the new Act and for its purposes.

This apart, under Section 7 (b) of the Bombay General Clauses Act, repeal of any enactment does not "affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed, or anything duly done or suffered thereunder". This would be of course so, as indicated in the opening part of this section "unless a different intention appears". There is no such different intention in the new Act to affect operation of the repealed Act adversely against the continuance of so elected Deans or the election held for the said office. The Deans elected under the repealed Act and holding offices at the commencement of the new Act would attract the prohibition against the eligibility to contest election for the next consecutive term. 1952 AC 109, Relied on. M. L. Pendse, for Petitioners; Raja S. Bhonsale (for Nos. 1 and 2) and A. C. Agarwal, Asst. Govt. Pleader (for No. 3), for Opponents.

DESHPANDE, J.:— The petitioners were elected as Deans respectively for the Faculties of Commerce and Arts in the Shivaji University at Kolhapur on 10th November, 1972. These elections were held under the provisions of the Shivaji University Act of 1962 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Repealed Act') and the Statutes framed thereunder. Section 25 thereof provided that there should be a Dean for each Faculty and that he should be elected by the Faculty from amongst its members. The term of the office of the Dean was left to be prescribed by the Statutes. Under Statute 104, the term of the Dean was limited to three years. It was, however, open for the Dean to seek re-election. On 31st May, 1974, the 1962 Act was repealed by the Shivaji University Act of 1974 (referred to hereinafter as 'the new Act'). Under Section 12 of the new Act also, a Dean for each Faculty is to be elected by the Faculty from amongst its members other than the student members. Under sub-section (3) itself the term of the office of the Dean is limited to three years and sub-section (4) prevents any person from holding the office of the Dean for two consecutive terms.

2. The Registrar of the Shivaji University issued a notice on 5th January, 1975, calling upon the members of all Faculties to elect Deans for the respective Faculties. Under the said notice such elections were to be held on 27th January, 1976, and nominations were invited before 10th January, 1976, last date for withdrawal of the nominations being fixed on 13th January, 1976. The said notice also indicated that the persons holding office of the Dean at the commencement of the 1974 Act would not be eligible to contest the election to the said office.

3. It appears that some doubt had arisen about the true import of Section 12 (4) and the eligibility of existing Deans to contest elections, even before the issuance of the above notice. The Vice-Chancellor referred this question of interpretation to the Chancellor under Section 86 of the new Act. The Chancellor declared that the prohibition under Section 12 (4) also applied to the Deans, elected under the repealed Act and, holding such offices at the commencement of the new Act. Direction in the notice to the above effect is based on this decision of the Chancellor. Validity of this decision and the above direction in the notice is challenged in this Special Civil Application by the above petitioners, who desire to contest elections.

4. Mr. Pendse, the learned advocate for petitioners contends that the reference by the Vice-Chancellor to the Chancellor without the requisition of not less than 25 members of senate is not competent as also the decision thereon. It is not disputed before us that the reference was made by the Vice-Chancellor suo motu under Section 86 without such requisition and the letter dated 19-2-1975 conveys the Chancellor such a decision thereon. It was also not disputed that prohibition, stipulated in the notice of the Registrar against the existing Deans from contesting the election afresh, is based on this decision. Close reading of Section 86 indicates that it enable the Vice-Chancellor to make reference to the Chancellor on the question of interpretations detailed therein either (1) on the motion of any person or body directly attracted or (2) suo motu. Making of such reference, however, appears to be discretionary and entirely a matter of his choice. This is what the word "may" should indicate. The proviso to this section, however, makes it obligatory on him to make such reference when there is a requisition. This is what the word "shall" indicates. Thus the main section and its proviso are respectively directory and mandatory provisions, the obligatory situation arising, only when there is a requisition for the same. Looked at this way, it should be difficult to hold that the reference made by the Vice-Chancellor suo motu was in any manner irregular or incompetent. It is, however, not necessary to pursue this point further as the decision is not conclusive and is open to examination in this writ petition on its own merits.

5. As indicated earlier, it was open for the petitioners to contest the election afresh after the expiry of the term of three year period, under the repealed Section 25 read with statute 104. Section 12 (4) of the Act, however, prevents holding of the office for two consecutive terms, thereby prohibiting the then holder of the office from contesting such election afresh. Ordinarily the words 'consecutive terms' would mean the terms undergone and worked out under the new Act and the term held under the repealed Act would be as much irrelevant as such terms of Dean held under other enactments and in other Universities. The words cannot include such terms without some indication of any such Legislative intent.

6. Mr. Bhonsale and Mr. Agarwal, the learned Advocates for the respondents, contend that acts done, elections and offices held, including elections of offices of Deans under the repealed Act, are deemed to have been done and held under the new Act by virtue of saving provisions of the new Act. Reliance was placed on Section 91 (ii) (a) and 91 (xi) of the Act in support of this contention. It is obvious that in the event of there being any legislative fiction, of the offices held under the repealed Act being treated as under the new Act, the fiction shall have to be given effect to, and in that case by virtue of such fiction the Deans elected under the Repealed Act and holding office at the commencement of the Act would be deemed to have been prevented from contesting the election afresh. In that case by seeking election, they would virtually be trying to hold office for consecutive terms prohibited under Section 12 (4) of the Act. This necessitates close examination of the two clauses of Section 91.

7. Section 91 (ii) (a) is as follows:

"All members of the Senate, the members of the Syndicate and the Academic Council, the Boards of Studies and other authorities, bodies and committees of the University constituted under the said Act, and in office immediately before the commencement of this Act, shall be deemed to be respectively the members of the Senate, of the Executive and Academic Councils, the Boards of Studies and other corresponding authorities, bodies and committees of the University, and shall, until the date, being not later than six months from the date on which this Act comes into force, on which the Vice-Chancellor declares that the Senate has been duly constituted, exercise all the powers and perform all the duties conferred on the authorities, bodies and committees under this Act;"

Under Sections 17 and 22 of the repealed Act, Deans of all the Faculties were the ex-officio members of the Senate, and the Academic Council respectively. Under the above clause, the Deans like other members of these two bodies, are deemed to have become the members of corresponding bodies under the new Act, and also are enabled to exercise the powers conferred on them as such members under the new Act. It however does not save, their elections to the offices, or their holding of the office on the strength thereof, or continuity therein. In other words, the clause only saves the membership of the Deans of the above two bodies and of other bodies in which membership is held by them ex-officio, obviously to ensure the continuity and functioning of such bodies till the same are reconstituted under the new Act. The clause, however, pre-supposes that such membership is otherwise subsisting and the holders of the offices of Deans are otherwise enabled to hold them under some other provision. This clause does not require the elections of these Deans held under the repealed Act to be deemed to have been held under this Act, nor does it enable the Deans to discharge and perform their several other statutory functions as such Deans. The Deans cannot also be considered to be "authorities" referred to in this clause, as they are not one of the authorities notified under Section 16 of the repealed Act and Section 19 of the new Act, though ordinarily Deans could have easily been held to be such authorities. There is also much substance in the contention of Mr. Pendse that Deans cannot appropriately be brought under the connotation of the word "bodies" sought to be saved under this clause. Section 91 (ii) (a), therefore, cannot be pressed into service for deeming the Deans elected under the repealed Act to have been elected under this Act.

8. Section 91 (xi) is as follows:

"The appointment of the Registrar and all other officers and employees of the University constituted under the said Act, and validly made under that Act, and subsisting immediately before the commencement of this Act, shall be deemed to have been made under and for the purposes of this Act; and the Registrar and such other officers and employees shall continue to hold office and to act, subject to the conditions governing the terms of their office or employment, except in so far as such conditions may be altered by a competent authority."

This clause is aimed at saving the appointment of the Registrar and all other officers and employees, provided (1) the same are validly made under the repealed Act, and (2) the same were subsisting at the commencement of the Act. Such appointments made under the repealed Act are required, under this clause, to have been "under and for the purposes of this Act". Under Section 10 of the repealed Act and under Section 8 of the new Act, Deans are expressly shown to be the 'officers' of the University along with the Vice-Chancellor and the Registrar and others. This clause thus ensures continuity of the Deans elected under the repealed Act, even after its repeal. The clause creates a fiction of their having been appointed under the new Act and for its purposes.

9. Mr. Pendse, however, contends that the clause is essentially aimed at saving, the appointments of salaried servants and not of elected honorary officers. He firstly relies on the use of the expression "appointment" and emphasises how inappropriate it is to warrant inclusion therein of the elected officials like the Deans. The contention is, no doubt, attractive and plausible. It, however, loses its edge once it is borne in mind that officers under both the enactments include even such elected Deans along with salaried servants like Registrar and Librarians. The Deans ordinarily would answer the connotation of the word "authority" whose constitution under the repealed Act is to be deemed to have been continued under the Act by force of clause (ii) (a) of Section 91. We had to reject such contention because of his being excluded from the purview of the "authorities" under Section 19 of the Act and corresponding Section 16 of the repealed Act. For this very reason, Deans cannot be excluded from the purviews of Officers covered by clause (xi) of Section 91. It is true that ordinarily person elected to an office is not described as being appointed thereto. Even so, such expression cannot be said to be wholly inappropriate and unknown to the legal dictionary to indicate occupation of post by process of election. According to Oxford English Dictionary, Volume I, page 409, item 8, the word "appointment" includes the process of "nominating to, or placing in, an office". A person can be placed in office as such effectively by nomination, selection, promotion as by election, and each one of these processes can be described broadly by the word "appointment". Provisions of Sections 253, 255, 285 (b) of the Companies Act 1956 are instances in point which speak of appointment of Directors, though majority of them are elected.

10. Secondly, salaried 'officers' also happen to be "employees". It was not necessary to introduce the word "officers", if clause were intended to cover only salaried employees. Reliance was also placed on the words of the clause indicating that officers and employees were to continue to hold offices and act "subject to conditions governing the term of their offices or employment" till the same are altered by competent authority. Apparently, this gives an impression as though the clause seeks to protect the service conditions of the salaried employees. But there is nothing to exclude, the reference being even to the terms of offices of the Deans,

11. It was also argued that even when the Vice-Chancellor and the Registrar are included in the list of 'officers' under both the enactments, the term of each one of them is specifically saved under clauses (i) and (xi). Absence of such specific reference, according to Mr. Pendse, indicates the legislative intentment of not saving the elections of the Deans held under the repealed Act. We are unable to see any merit in this contention. Both these officers are of undoubted importance to the functioning of the University and Legislature seems to have made specific provision for their continuance, out of abundant precautions. In fact, clauses (ii) and (xi) in between them exhaust all the Committees, authorities, bodies and officers and employees whose appointments and constitutions under the repealed Act are sought to be saved and continued under the new Act. It is difficult to find any good reason or basis as to why the legislature could have intended to exclude Deans alone from the saving clauses. The circumstance that the membership of all the members, including that of the Deans of the Senate and the Council, is saved, indicates the legislative intentment to ensure continuance and saving of even the holder of the said offices.

12. This apart, under clause (b) of Section 7 of the Bombay General Clauses Act, repeal of any enactment does not "affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed, or anything duly done or suffered thereunder". This would be of course so, as indicated in the opening part of this section "unless a different intention appears". We have already discussed above how there was no trace of any such different intention in the new Act to affect operation of the repealed Act adversely against the continuance of so elected Deans or the election held for the said office. In fact, the intention to keep such offices going is what is indicated by the sweeping provisions of sub-clauses (ii) and (xi) of Section 91. The Deans elected under the repealed Act and holding offices at the commencement of the new Act would attract the prohibition against the eligibility to contest election for the next consecutive term. The decision of the Chancellor and the notice of the Registrar, both are thus valid.

13. Mr. Pendse then contends that such deeming provisions may at the most save the elections held under the repealed Act and enable the incumbents to hold office till the elections under the new Act are held. But, contends Mr. Pendse, these cannot have the drastic effect of importing any prohibition against the right to stand for election. The contention is devoid of any merit. As held in East End Dwellings Co. Ltd. v. Pinbury Borough Council, (1952) AC 109, the Courts are bound to give full effect to the legislative fictions within their limits and corollaries and direct consequences thereof also need to be recognised as part of the said fiction. One such plain consequence of the election under the repealed Act being deemed to have been held under the new Act, and for its purposes, would be to prevent the so elected person from contesting the election under the new Act, the term under which would amount to a consecutive term within the mischief of Section 12 (4) of the new Act.

14. Mr. Pendse also faintly suggested that any such interpretation would result in giving retrospective effect to Section 12 (4) without any basis of warrant therefor in the new Act. Reliance was placed in this connection on the judgment in the case of Re: A Solicitor's Clerk, (1957) 3 All ER 617. We are unable to see how the question of any retrospectivity arises herein at all. Ratio of the above case itself militates against any such contention. Disqualification of the Solicitor's Clerk on the basis of a provisions introduced in 1956 for conviction for larceny and embezzlement suffered in 1953, was held to be valid, it being found to have involved no question of retrospectivity. The case thus does not help. Drawing on preenactment, acts and omissions of any individual, for the requisites of disqualification does not involve giving retrospective effect to such enactment.

15. There is thus no merit in this petition.

16. Rule discharged.

17. There will be no order as to costs in the circumstance of this case.

Petition dismissed.

DHARMADHIKARI AND SAWANT, JJ.

R. P. Ghosh, Applicant v. Smt. Pramilaibai Ravindra Puri and others, Opponents.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 327 of 1972, D/- 2-8-1976.*

(A) T. P. Act (1882), Section 106 — Suit for ejectment by legal representatives of deceased landlord — Termination of tenancy by original landlord for bona fide occupation — Permission under Cl. 13 (3) (vi) of C. P. and Berar Letting of Houses and Rent Control Order obtained — Death of landlord — Suit by legal representatives competent — Notice enures for benefit of successors in title. (C. P. and Berar Letting of Houses and Rent Control Order 1949, Clause 13 (3) (vi)).

Where a landlord having obtained the permission of the Rent Controller for terminating the tenancy of the tenant for bona fide occupation of himself and his family under Clause 13 (3) (vi) of the C. P. and Berar Letting of Houses and Rent Control Order terminates the tenancy by validly serving a notice under Section 106 of the T. P. Act and dies thereafter, a suit for ejectment brought by his legal representatives is competent.

(Para 14)

In such a case since the proceedings under the C. P. and Berar Letting of Houses and Rent Control Order are already decided and the orders passed therein have become final they are binding on the parties. Further in pursuance of the permission granted by the Rent Controller, the original landlord had also issued a quit notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act to the tenant. Before the death of the original landlord the tenancy of the tenant also stood terminated. Thereafter the legal representatives filed a suit for ejectment against the tenant. After the death of the landlord his legal Representatives the plaintiffs became the owners of the house. They also became the landlords of the suit property and were entitled to receive the rent of the house. A notice to quit under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is to be given by the lessor to lessee. The lessor will obviously include the successor-in-title, that is, heirs. Therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to serve such a notice upon the defendant. If the notice was already given, then it enures for the benefit of successors-in-title of the original lessor. Furthermore the permission was sought by the original landlord from the Rent Controller on the ground that he wanted the premises for his bona fide residence and of his family, as they had no other house of their own in the city. Obviously exclusive jurisdiction is vested upon the Rent Control authorities to decide the rights of the parties arising out of the Rent Control Order. A decision of the Rent Controller in this behalf is binding upon a Civil Court and it is not open for Civil Court to go behind the said order. A. Shelot, for Applicant; R. S. Buxy, for Opponents.

DHARMADHIKARI, J.— The non-applicants-plaintiffs filed a suit for ejectment, damages, mesne profits etc., against the applicant-defendant. It is an admitted position that the applicant-original defendant was a tenant of the premises on a monthly rent of Rs. 14/- per month. Original Landlord Ravindra Puri filed an application, amongst other grounds, under Clause 13 (3) (vi) of the Central Provinces and Berar Letting of Houses and Rent Control Order, 1949, referred to hereinafter as the Rent Control Order, seeking permission to serve a notice terminating the tenancy of the applicant-defendant on the ground that he required the premises for his and his family's bona fide personal occupation. Such a permission was granted to late Ravindra Puri by the Rent Controller on 30-3-1970. An appeal filed against the said order was dismissed by the appellate authority on 27-8-1970. Thereafter Ravindra Puri served a notice upon the defendant-tenant under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. When the initial notice came back with a postal endorsement that the tenant had already left the place on 15-12-1970 a fresh notice was affixed to the conspicuous part of the suit house, when according to the plaintiffs, the defendant was inside the house and he refused to accept the notice when tendered. Thus, according to the plaintiffs, the tenancy of the defendant-tenant was validly terminated by a notice dated 13-12-1970 which was affixed to his house on 15-12-1970 terminating his tenancy with effect from 1st January 1971. In the suit the plaintiffs had also claimed notice charges, damages, mesne profits etc.

2. The defendant-tenant resisted the suit and contended that the quit notice was not validly served upon him. He further contended that the original Landlord Ravindra Puri having died on 4-2-1971, that is, after the service of notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, the suit filed by his legal representatives is not maintainable. According to the applicant-tenant, the permission was secured by late Ravindra Puri on the ground that he required the premises for his bona fide personal occupation. It is on this ground alone the permission was granted by the Rent Controller. Ravindra Puri died on 4-2-1971 after securing the permission and serving the notice. The ground on which the permission was sought and granted to late Ravindra Puri was personal to him and, therefore, after his death the cause of action did not survive. The permission granted by the Rent Controller stood exhausted with the death of late Ravindra Puri and it was obligatory on the part of his legal representatives, the present plaintiffs-non-applicants, to prove their own bona fide need independently. Since this has not been done and since a fresh permission from the Rent Controller is not obtained by the legal representatives of deceased Ravindra Puri the present suit is not maintainable.

3. It is pertinent to note at this stage that as Ravindra Puri died on 4-2-1971, the present suit for ejectment was filed by his legal representatives, namely his widow and his minor children. At the trial on behalf of the plaintiffs, Smt. Pramilaibai, plaintiff No. 1 and Madan Thakur (P. W. 2) were examined. A certified copy of the order passed by the Rent Controller was also placed on record. On the other hand, on behalf of the defendant, the defendant himself entered into the witness-box.

4. After appreciating all the evidence on record, the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, Nagpur, came to the conclusion that on 15-12-1970 the notice was tendered to the defendant-tenant and he refused to accept it, and therefore it was affixed at a conspicuous place on the house occupied by the defendant as a tenant. In this view of the matter, the learned Judge recorded a finding of fact that the quit notice was validly served on the defendant on 15-12-1970. The learned Judge also negatived the contention raised on behalf of the defendant that the suit was not maintainable, because the cause of action was personal to late Ravindra Puri and after his death the present plaintiffs, his legal representatives, had no locus standi to file the present suit unless they obtained a fresh permission from the Rent Controller, In the result, therefore he passed a decree against the defendant ordering him to deliver vacant and peaceful possession of the suit premises and also to pay the damages. Against this judgment and decree of Small Cause Court, Nagpur, a revision application was filed by the defendant-tenant under Section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act.

5. When the matter came up for hearing before the Single Judge of this Court, as the learned Judge found that the matter involves an important question of law relating to the question as to whether the legal representatives of the landlord can proceed to institute a suit after obtaining the permission of the Rent Controller on the ground of bona fide need and requirements of the landlord, who died before the suit is filed and as the learned Judge further found that in view of the subsequent decision of the Supreme Court in Smt. Phool Rani v. Naubat Rai Ahluwalia, (AIR 1973 SC 2110), the earlier decision of this Court in Husseinbhai v. Navayug Chitrapat Co. Ltd., 1969 Mah LJ 30 = (AIR 1969 Bom 194) requires re-consideration, the matter was referred to the Division Bench.

6. Shri Shelot, the learned counsel for the applicant-tenant, contended before us that the impugned notice was not served upon the tenant in accordance with the provisions of Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act.

7. In our opinion there is no substance in this contention. Once the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs and particularly the evidence of Madan Thakur (P. W. 2), is accepted, it is quite obvious that on 15-12-1970 the plaintiffs tried to serve a notice on the defendant-tenant. The said notice was dated 13-12-1970. The defendant refused to accept the said notice when tendered and, therefore, as no other alternative was left to the landlord, the said notice was affixed to the conspicuous part of the premises, which are occupied by the defendant as a tenant. It is pertinent to note that on earlier occasion when a notice by registered post was sent to the defendant-tenant on his office address, it came back with an endorsement that he had left. In these circumstances, in our opinion, the landlord was fully justified in affixing the notice to the conspicuous part of the premises as per the provisions of Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, when the tenant refused to accept the same when it was again tendered to him on 15-12-1970. In this view of the matter, in our opinion, the learned Judge of the Small Causes Court was fully justified in coming to the conclusion that the service of the notice on the tenant was perfectly legal and valid.

8. It was then contended by Shri Shelot that under the provisions of the Rent Control Order it was late Ravindra Puri who had filed an application under Clause 13 (3) (vi) on the ground that he needed the house for the purpose of his bona fide occupation. After securing such a permission he had also served a notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. However, thereafter before institution of the suit itself he died on 4-2-1971 and the suit came to be filed on 9-3-1971 by his legal representatives. Therefore, according to Shri Shelot, the permission granted by the Rent Controller was on the ground which was personal to deceased Ravindra Puri. In this view of the matter, the legal representatives of the landlord have no locus standi to institute a suit or to proceed further with the proceedings because the cause of action which was personal to deceased Ravindra Puri had perished with him. In support of his contentions Shri Shelot has strongly relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in Smt. Phool Rani v. Sh. Naubat Rai Ahluwalia, (Cit. supra) (AIR 1973 SC 2110). It is not possible for us to accept these contentions.

9. For properly understanding the controversy involved in this revision application it will be worth-while to refer to certain important provisions of the Rent Control Order. The terms "Landlord" and "tenant" are defined in Clauses 2 (4) and (5) respectively of the Rent Control Order, which read as under

2 (4) "Landlord" includes the person who is receiving or is entitled to receive the rent of a house whether on his own account or on behalf of himself and others or as an agent or trustee, or who could so receive the rent or be entitled to receive the rent if the house were let to a tenant; and

2 (5) "Tenant" means any person by whom or on whose account rent is payable for a house and includes a sub-tenant and a person continuing in possession after the term of his tenancy has expired."

The relevant provisions of Clauses 13 (1), (2) and 13 (3) (vi) of the Rent Control Order, which deal with the seeking of previous written permission of the Rent Controller read as under;

"13 (1) No landlord shall, except with the previous written permission of the Controller,—

(a) give notice to a tenant determining the lease or determine the lease if the lease is expressed to be determinable at his option; or

(b) where the lease is determinable by efflux of the time limited thereby, require the tenant to vacate the house by process of law or otherwise if the tenant is willing to continue the lease on the same terms and conditions.

(2) A landlord who seeks to obtain permission under sub-clause (1) shall apply in writing to the Controller in that behalf:

Provided that where the tenancy is for a specified period agreed upon between the landlord and the tenant, no application under items (vi) and (vii) of sub-clause (3) shall be entertained by the Controller before the expiry of such period.

13 (3) If after hearing the parties the controller is satisfied—

(vi) that the landlord needs the house or a portion thereof for the purpose of his bona fide occupation, provided he is not occupying any other house of his own in the city or town concerned; he shall grant the landlord permission to give notice to determine the lease as required by sub-clause (1)."

From the bare reading of Clause 13, it is obvious that a prohibition is imposed upon a landlord to give notice to determine the lease of the tenant unless he obtains a previous written permission of the Rent Controller. The order passed by the Rent Controller, subject to the provision of an appeal and review, is final. The Rent Control Order confers an exclusive jurisdiction upon the authorities constituted under the Rent Control Order to decide the issues arising out of said order. It is obvious from the provisions of Clause 13 that the permission sought by the landlord for giving a notice to the tenant determining the lease on the grounds enumerated therein can be granted by the Rent Controller alone. Unless the Rent Controller is satisfied that conditions laid down in Clause 13 are fulfilled, it is not open to him to grant such a permission. Once such a permission is granted by the Rent Controller, then the landlord is at liberty to serve a notice upon the tenant terminating his tenancy as per the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. It is the Transfer of Property Act which then applies. Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act does not require that a reason for determining the tenancy should be specifically stated in the notice itself. It is not necessary under the Law to set out the grounds for termination in a notice to quit. The contents of notice to quit and its service etc., are wholly governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. The provisions of the Rent Control Order do not come into play nor they can affect the question of notice to quit, its requirement or its service etc. Once a valid permission from the Rent Controller is obtained, the provisions of the Rent Control Order are in addition to those of the Transfer of Property Act. Therefore, before a tenant can be evicted by the landlord, he must comply with the provisions of Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Rent Control Order does not in any way abrogate Chapter V of the Transfer of Property Act which deals with leases. The notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is essential for bringing to an end the relationship of a landlord and a tenant. Unless the relationship is validly terminated, the landlord does not get right to obtain possession of premises by evicting the tenant. Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act does not provide for the satisfaction of any additional condition. The Rent Control Order only provides that such a notice cannot be given unless a written permission of Rent Controller is obtained. It does not lay down any further condition so far as the quit notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is concerned. The filing of a suit for ejectment is an independent action. The combined effect of this is that it contemplates two distinct proceedings, one relating to granting of a written permission by the Rent Controller to give notice to determine the lease under the provisions of the Rent Control Order and thereafter filing of a suit for ejectment before a competent Civil Court after giving necessary notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Rent Controller or the authority constituted under the Rent Control Order has no authority or jurisdiction to eject a tenant or deliver possession of the property to the landlord. This is the province of a Civil Court. The filing of the ejectment suit after giving a notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is not the continuation of the proceedings instituted before the Rent Controller, but it is an independent and distinct proceeding which is governed by the Code of Civil Procedure and the Transfer of Property Act. Therefore, in our opinion the law laid down by the Supreme Court in Smt. Phool Rani v. Sh. Naubat Rai Ahluwalia, (AIR 1973 SC 2110) (cit. supra) will have to be understood in this context. If so read, we are further of the opinion that the said decision is obviously distinguishable.

10. In the said case the Supreme Court was concerned with the proceedings instituted under the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 and particularly under Section 14 (1) (e) of the said Act. In the case before the Supreme Court a landlord had filed an application against a tenant seeking possession of certain premises on the ground of personal requirements and during the course of the said proceeding the landlord died and in that context the Supreme Court observed that legal representatives of landlord (since deceased) have no right to continue the proceeding as initiated by the landlord for ejectment of the tenant under Section 14 (1) (e) of Delhi Rent Control Act. The provisions of the Delhi Rent Control Act and the Rent Control Order are not pari materia, nor they are identical. In the case before us the proceedings under the Rent Control Order had come to an end when the permission was granted by the Rent Controller and was confirmed by the Appellate Court on 27-8-1970, that is, long before the death of the original landlord Ravindra Puri. In the case before the Supreme Court the matter was still pending before the Tribunal constituted under the Delhi Rent Control Act. As the matter was pending before the Tribunal constituted under the said Act, the order passed had not achieved finality. In para. 9 of the said judgment the Supreme Court, therefore, observed that "though the plaintiff died during the pendency of the appeal, it is as if he died during the pendency of the suit because the suit was dismissed on a preliminary issue concerning the validity of the notices to quit, was remanded in appeal for trial on the merits". As those proceedings were pending in a suit, the provision of Order 22, Rule 1, Code of Civil Procedure, applied to the proceedings and in that context ultimately the Supreme Court observed that "legal representatives of a landlord (since deceased) have no right to continue the proceeding as initiated by the landlord for ejectment of the tenant under Section 14 (1) (e) of Delhi Rent Control Act because the bona fide requirement of the premises for the residence of himself (landlord) and his family members (together) is his personal requirement". In this context reference could usefully be made to the following observations of the Supreme Court in paras. 13, 14, 17, 19 (Partly) and 20:

"13. Several decisions were cited before us but those falling within the following categories are to be distinguished:

(i) cases in which the death of the plaintiff occurred after a decree for possession was passed in his favour; say, during the pendency of an appeal filed by the unsuccessful tenant;

(ii) cases in which the death of the decree-holder landlord was pleaded as defence in execution proceedings; and

(iii) cases in which, not the plaintiff but the defendant-tenant died during the pendency of the proceedings and the tenant's heirs took the plea that the ejectment proceedings cannot be continued against them.

14. Cases of the first category are distinguishable because the decisions therein are explicable on the basis, though not always so expressed, that the estate is entitled to the benefit which, under a decree, has accrued in favour of the plaintiff and therefore, the legal representatives are entitled to defend further proceedings, like an appeal, which constitute a challenge to that benefit.

17. Cases of the second category are distinguishable because the decisions therein are, by and large, based on the principle that an executing court has no jurisdiction to go behind the decree. It must execute the decree as it finds it, save in exceptional cases as, for example where the decree on the face of it is without jurisdiction.

19. Cases of the third category are governed by totally different considerations. The landlord's right to evict the tenant on the grounds available under the Rent Act does not come to an end with the death of the tenant. That right is enforceable against those in whom the tenant's interest resides for the time being.

20. We have referred to some of the decisions in three categories not with a view to determining their correctness but only in order to show that they rest on different principles or could be explained in reference to such principles. We are concerned with a matter not involving the application of any of those principles. For reasons already stated, we are of the view that considering the nature of the claim made in the instant case and the bundle of facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, his right to sue will not survive to his legal representatives."

As already observed, in the case before us the proceedings instituted under the Rent Control Order were already decided and the orders passed therein had become final. The orders passed by the authorities under the Rent Control Order were binding on the parties. In pursuance of the permission granted by the Rent Controller, the original landlord had also issued a quit notice under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act to the tenant. Before the death of the original landlord Ravindra Puri, the tenancy of the defendant-tenant also stood terminated. These were the accomplished facts which had achieved finality and thereafter the legal representatives filed a suit for ejectment against the tenant. It is not disputed before us, nor it could be disputed, that after the death of Ravindra Puri, the plaintiffs became the owners of the house. They also became the landlords of the suit property and were entitled to receive the rent of the house. A notice to quit under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act is to be given by the lessor to lessee. The lessor will obviously include the successor-in-title, that is, heirs. Therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to serve such a notice upon the defendant. If the notice was already given, then it enures for the benefit of successors-in-title of the original lessor.

11. It is also pertinent to note in the present case that the permission was sought by the original landlord from the Rent Controller on the ground that he wanted the premises for his bona fide residence of his family, as they have no other house of their own in the city. Obviously exclusive jurisdiction is vested upon the Rent Control Authorities to decide the rights of the parties arising out of the Rent Control Order. A decision of the Rent Controller in this behalf is binding upon a Civil Court and it is not open for Civil Court to go behind the said order. In this context a reference could be usefully made to a decision of the Supreme Court in Ramji Das v. Trilok Chand, (AIR 1971 SC 2361). After making a detailed reference to the provisions of U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947, the Supreme Court observed as under:

"3. The proceeding before the District Magistrate under Section 3 (2) and before the Commissioner under Section 3 (3) of the U. P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act are quasi-judicial in character. By Section 3 (4) of the Act the decision of the Commissioner under sub-section (3) of Section 3, subject to any order passed by the State Government under Section 7-F of the Act, is declared final. The respondent did not prefer any petition before the State Government under Section 7-F of the Act and on that account the order passed by the Additional Commissioner, exercising powers of the Commissioner under Section 3 (3), became final. Section 16 of the Act provides that no order made under the Act by State Government or the District Magistrate shall be called in question in any court. It is true that the finality of the order declared by Section 3 (4) and Section 16 will not exclude the jurisdiction of the High Court in exercise of the jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution to issue an appropriate writ quashing the order. But subject to interference by the High Court, the decision must be deemed final and is not liable to be challenged in any collateral proceeding.

4. In our view, the High Court was in error in holding that the decision of the Rent Control and Eviction Officer was, in the suits filed by the appellant, open to the objection that the officer did not consider the needs of the tenant". The Rent Control and Eviction Officer had jurisdiction to hear and decide the matter. Even if we assume that he committed an error in the exercise of his jurisdiction, the error could be corrected only in a proceeding under Section 7-F of the Act by approaching the State Government and by way of a writ petition to the High Court, but the order made by the Rent Control and Eviction Officer and confirmed by the Additional Commissioner could not be challenged in suit." Similar view was taken by this Court in Mohd. Usman v. Bhalida Abdul Karim, (1960 Nag LJ (Note) 109).

12. Once it is held that the decision of the Rent Controller so far it relates to the matter within his exclusive jurisdiction is concerned, is final and could not be challenged in a suit or in any collateral proceedings then, in our opinion, the same matter cannot be reopened in a Civil Suit instituted by the landlord after obtaining a permission from the Rent Controller. So far as a suit for ejectment is concerned, the cause of action is not the ground on which the permission is granted by the Rent Controller, but the termination of tenancy of the tenant under the provisions of Transfer of Property Act. The same gives an occasion for and forms the foundation of suit. So far as the ejectment suit is concerned, the grounds of ejectment are irrelevant. To such a suit the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and Transfer of Property Act will apply and not the provisions of the Rent Control Order. If this is so, then, in our opinion, the death of the landlord after valid termination of the tenancy of the tenant will not perish the cause of action itself. Once it is held that the reasons for grant of permission are not relevant while deciding an ejectment suit, then, in our opinion, to such a case the law laid down by the Supreme Court in Smt. Phool Rani's case (AIR 1973 SC 2110) will not apply. Obviously the matter might stand on somewhat different footing if the landlord seeks permission to serve a notice upon the tenant to determine his lease under Cl. 13 (3) (vi) of the Rent Control Order for his bona fide personal occupation and during the pendency of the said proceedings before the authorities constituted under the Rent Control Order the landlord dies. Of course in that case also much will depend upon the pleadings of parties, the evidence on record and the stage of proceedings etc. In this context reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the non-applicants upon the decisions of Madras and Rajasthan High Courts in Vijayaraghavan v. Mohamed Yakub, (AIR 1976 Mad 205) and Ramsharan v. Ramavtar (AIR 1976 Raj 32). However, we are not called upon to decide such a question in this revision application and therefore we need not express any opinion in this behalf. In the case before us that stage was over and permission was already granted to deceased Ravindra Puri and the same had also become final.

13. Such a view seems to have been taken by Allahabad High Court in Syed Mohd. Ibne Ali v. Smt. Zanaab Begum, (AIR 1974 All 195). After making a reference to the decision of the Supreme Court in Smt. Phool Rani v. Naubat Rai Ahluwalia, (AIR 1973 SC 2110) (cit. supra) the learned Judge in para. 5 of the judgment observed as under:

"Coming to the last point I find that this ground was not taken in the grounds of appeal. However, Sri S. Rahman urged that since it was a legal ground he may be allowed to argue. He relied upon the case of Smt. Phool Rani v. Naubat Rai Ahluwalia, AIR 1973 SC 2110. In my view this ruling does not apply to the facts of the case. In that case the plaintiff had moved an application under the Delhi Rent Control Act seeking permission against the tenant for ejectment of certain premises on the ground of personal requirement. The plaintiff died during the pendency of the application. The question involved was whether the cause of action would survive to the legal representatives or whether the application abated. Their Lordships observed at page 2114 that "we have referred to some of the decisions in three categories, not with a view to determining their correctness but only in order to show that they rest on different principles or could be explained in reference to such principles. We are concerned with a matter not involving the application of any of those principles. For reasons already stated, we are of the view that considering the nature of the claim made in the instant case and the bundle of facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, his right to sue will not survive to his legal representatives. "In the case before me permission to sue had already been obtained by the deceased plaintiff and after obtaining such permission he had filed a suit for ejectment. He died during the pendency of the suit. Here the two proceedings are entirely different, namely, there was one stage when permission proceedings were pending before the Rent Control and Eviction Officer. That stage had passed and permission had been granted to the landlord. Without obtaining that permission suit at that time could not have been filed for ejectment. Having obtained that permission the suit was filed and in this second stage, namely, when suit for ejectment was pending the plaintiff died. Obviously in such a case right to sue survived to the heirs of the landlord."

14. In the case before us also the permission was already granted by the Rent Controller and in pursuance of that permission the deceased landlord had also terminated the tenancy of the defendant tenant and, therefore, in our opinion, the legal representatives of deceased landlord Ravindra Puri were entitled to file a suit for ejectment of the defendant-tenant.

15. In the view which we have taken, therefore, there is no substance in this revision application. The revision application fails and is dismissed with costs.

Revision application dismissed.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 137 of 1976, D/- 8-10-1976.*

Partnership Act (1932), Chap. VI, Section 44 — Suit for dissolution of registered partnership consisting of more than 7 partners but below 20 — Jurisdiction of Civil Court to entertain the suit — Suit if barred by part X of Companies Act. (Companies Act (1956), Part X, Sections 583, 590 and 11 (2)) — (Civil P. C. (1908), Section 9).

A suit seeking reliefs of dissolution of registered partnership consisting of eight partners and a declaration that the firm stood dissolved as and from a particular date is not within the prohibition of Section 11 of the Companies Act. The partnership can be dissolved by recourse to Chapter VI of the Partnership Act. There is no bar whatsoever of such dissolution enacted either expressly or impliedly by the provisions of Part X of the Companies Act. Unlike the Companies Act, there is no specified Court contemplated by the Partnership Act and it is to the Court under Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the party will have to approach to have relief under Section 44 or under any of the provisions of Chapter VI of the Partnership Act.

If there be a legal relationship of partners called "a firm" either registered or unregistered, such a relationship can be brought to an end by the process of dissolution contemplated by Chapter VI of the Partnership Act and nothing in Part X of the Companies Act affects that position. Section 583 of the Companies Act by itself operates on a circumscribed sphere and contingencies. It is not a provision of universal application. Being a provision enacting specified remedy, it will have to be strictly construed and only applied to the matters expressly governed. Moreover, there is a provision of Section 590 which clarifies by enacting a saving that the provisions with regard to dissolutions or winding up of Partnership made by any other Act is not affected by anything enacted by Part X of the Companies Act. (Para 11)

The winding up under Section 583 of unregistered companies which may include a partnership of more than seven members can only be subject to the provisions of sub-section (3) and sub-section (4) of Section 583 of the Companies Act. Thus there is a limited remedy and relief provided by the provisions of Section 583 and the provisions are not applicable to all sorts of cases. The whole scheme of Part X, firstly, operates on the restricted class of cases of unregistered companies and by express provisions of Section 590 saves the enactments which provide for the machinery to wind up partnership, association or company. The provisions of Part X of the Companies Act do not ipso facto affect the operation of the provisions of the Act like the Partnership Act. (Para 5)

V. R. Manohar and D. M. Lapalikar, for Applicants; S. G. Ghate, for Opponents Nos. 1 to 6; R. K. Thakur, for the Receiver.

ORDER:— Ex facie an interesting but on closer scrutiny an infirm question of law is raised by the present revision. The entire controversy submitted has something to do with the application of provisions of Part X of the Indian Companies Act, 1956 (hereinafter called the Companies Act), as urged, excluding the operation per force the statute of Chapter VI of Indian Partnership Act, 1932 (hereinafter called the Partnership Act). Indeed, the main plank of submission is that in a suit purporting to have been filed under Chapter VI of the Partnership Act, if the partnership in issue consists of more than seven partners, but below twenty, on the date of the suit for dissolution of such partnership, per force the provisions of Part X of the Companies Act are attracted and by virtue of the provisions of Section 582 read with Section 583, the ordinary civil court would have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and the only relief can be provided by the competent Company Court with regard to winding up or dissolution.

2. Few facts need be stated to appreciate the submission. The present applicants instituted in fact the present Civil Suit No. 9 of 1974 in the Court of Civil Judge, Senior Division, seeking relief, inter alia, of dissolution of partnership and seeking further a declaration that the firm "Shivraj Fine Art Litho Works" Nagpur stood dissolved as and from the midnight of January 9, 1974. The plaint filed by these applicants then alleged that the said partnership firm was a registered firm known as "Shivraj Fine Art Litho Works" and carried on business in lithographic and art printing business at Nagpur and Bombay. Thereafter the original plaintiffs — the present applicants — moved an application purporting to be under Order 23, Rule 1, of Code of Civil Procedure, seeking to withdraw this suit. Before the order could be made, defendants to the original suit applied for transposition as plaintiffs in that suit. The Court appears to have accepted the prayer of the plaintiff with regard to their withdrawal and the prayer of the defendants with regard to their transposition in the suit. The matter came to this Court and eventually the orders of the trial Court in that regard were affirmed in Civil Revision Application No. 501 of 1974 decided on 22-1-1975 = 1975 Mah LJ 337. After the transposition so ordered and without filing any written statement the present applicants, who are now defendants in that suit, appear to have moved an application at Exh. 163, questioning that in view of the provisions of Part X of Companies Act, the suit was unentertainable by the Court. It is rather strange that the Court purported to decide that application without insisting upon the applicants-defendants to file their written statement. Normal course of procedure is that the defendants once properly arrayed should be directed to file written statement and even by written statement such a defendant is entitled to raise the question of jurisdiction. Whatever may be the position it appears that by order below Exh. 163, the learned Judge negatived the contention. That order is questioned by this revision.

3. As stated above, the only question is whether the suit is entertainable. For the purpose of deciding this revision, it is assumed that on the date of the filing of the suit the partnership firm was registered and further it had eight members as partners.

4. The answer to the question depends on properly appreciating the two enactments and the provisions of those two chapters mentioned above.

5. Indeed a little closer reading of the provisions and contemplation of Part X of the Companies Act would indicate that under the facts and circumstances the objection has absolutely no force. Part X of the Companies Act deals with winding up of unregistered companies. For the purpose of that part, Section 582 defines what are deemed to be "unregistered companies". Clause (b) thereof gives an inclusive definition of that term and states the unregistered company includes any partnership, association or company consisting of more than seven members at the time when the petition for winding up the partnership, association or company is presented before the Court. Provisions of Section 583 deal with the winding up of such unregistered companies. It does not permit unregistered companies to be wound up under the provisions of the Act, except the winding up contemplated by the Court within the contemplation of Section 425 (1) (a) of the Act. In other words, the winding up under Section 583 of unregistered companies which may include a partnership of more than seven members can only be subject to the provisions of sub-section (3) and sub-section (4) of Section 583 of the Companies Act. Those sub-sections indicate that unregistered companies cannot be wound up under the provisions of the Act voluntarily or subject to the supervision of the Court. Both these phrases have reference to Section 425 (1) (b) and (c) of the Act. Sub-section (4) of Section 583 shows that unregistered companies can be wound up only on the stated grounds contained in clauses (a) to (c) of that sub-section. Clauses (a), (b) and (c) which are enumerative indicate the circumstances on the proof of which alone the process of winding up can at all be taken before the Company Court. Thus it would appear that there is a limited remedy and relief provided by the provisions of Section 583 and the provisions are not applicable to all sorts of cases. It is amply made clear that even these restrictive provisions applicable under specified circumstances and upon specified conditions will not affect the operation of any other enactment that would provide for any partnership, association or company being wound up by virtue of the provisions of Section 590 of the Companies Act. Indeed the provisions of Section 590 which are also the part enacted would save the enactments with regard to partnerships conferring authority or jurisdiction in the matter of winding up. The whole scheme of Part X, firstly, operates on the restricted class of cases of unregistered companies and by express provisions of Section 590 saves the enactments which provide for the machinery to wind up partnership, association or company. Thus it would be ample to observe that the provisions of Part X of the Companies Act do not ipso facto affect the operation of the provisions of the Act like the Partnership Act.

6. There are good reasons to construe the provisions of both these Acts together to find out the principle with regard to provisions of such a saving enacted by Section 590 of Companies Act.

7. As far as the law of commerce, economic gains etc., is concerned, it is clear that joint commercial or economic activity for the purpose of gain can be carried on by more than one individual. When such joint activity ensues with a view to earn gain, law contemplates so as to avoid the public mischief involving uncertainty and obvious dangers to the innocent third parties in transacting business that such joint ventures should have a legal personality. With that view in object and in contemplation, so as to subserve the public purpose of avoiding possible economic and commercial mischief, provisions of Section 11 of the Companies Act enact statutory prohibition with regard to associations and partnerships of persons exceeding certain number of persons to carry on by sub-section (1) the business of banking, and by sub-section (2) to carry on any other business for the purpose of acquisition of gain. Nay the provisions of sub-sections (4) and (5) indicate culpability and provide a penalty against the individuals who act in contravention of the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2). Sub-section (2) of Section 11 inhibits association or partnership of more than 20 persons to carry on business other than the business of banking, having its object for acquisition of gain, unless such association or partnership is registered as a company under Act or it is formed in pursuance of some other Indian Law. It is not necessary for the purpose of the present revision to consider the scope and amplitude of the words "formed in pursuance of some other Indian Law"; suffice it to say that presumably and ex facie these words indicate the formation of the companies or associations or partnerships by the law. Now "company" which is a juridical person is required to be formed and registered to be the company as such because of Section 3 of the Act. The term "company" which is now the part of the definition in that provision indicates a company formed and registered under this Act and also an existing company as defined by sub-clause (ii). That clause deals with the companies which are formed and registered under the acts mentioned in sub-clause (ii). Thus to be a company proper, two requirements are indicated. Firstly it should be formed or constituted in the manner provided by the Act and secondly it must be registered. Unless both these statutory conditions are fulfilled, for the purpose of the Act, there is no company. The Act thus primarily contemplates companies which are registered companies. Provisions of Section 11 are enacted to further this intention that under the provisions of the Act the juridical entity, called the "company" must necessarily exist for the purpose of legal control, as is envisaged by other parts of act, the basic object being to safeguard the public interest to which a reference has already been made.

8. Logically it follows that below the number of persons stated in sub-sec. (2) of S. 11, there can be a company, association or partnership consisting of more than one person carrying on the business having its object to acquire the gain. Such a joint commercial activity of persons for the purposes of gain would not be an illegal company, association or partnership. These entities, loosely so called, or joint ventures can be eventually subjected to the process of winding up by recourse to the provisions of Part X of the Companies Act and for the purpose of that part, those are treated as unregistered companies. If it is a case of partnership which can legally exist, it follows that by virtue of Section 590, if there be a law providing for machinery for its legal dissolution, the operation of that laws is not in any manner affected. That would also apply with regard to any other association of persons which can legally be wound up.

9. Turning to the provisions of the Partnership Act, this position is further reinforced. The provisions of that Act are enacted for the purpose of, as is stated in the preamble "to define and amend the law relating to partnership". The concept of partnership in law and by the statute, is nothing but a relation of persons which arises upon an agreement to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them acting for all. That Act enacts Chapter VI and provides for dissolution of a firm. Under the Act there are registered firms and the provision is made by Chapter VII with regard to such registration. The effect of non-registration of firm is indicated by Section 69 and by sub-section (3) of that section it is made clear that a firm though unregistered, can be brought to dissolution and for such dissolution non-registration is no bar. Thus under the provisions of Chapter VI of the Partnership Act, a non-registered firm or a partnership can be dissolved.

10. As argument was advanced, it may be indicated that the process of winding up is really in law a step towards dissolution though under the company jurisprudence it is possible that the process of winding up may result in reconstruction of the companies and not reach the stage of dissolution proper. As far as the provision of Chapter VI of the Partnership Act is concerned, the effects indicated by Section 46 which deals with the right of the persons to have business wound up after dissolution can only be said to be declaratory in this regard. For the purpose of partnership law, as stated above, which is nothing but a relation of parties flowing from the agreement to share profits of the commercial activity, the winding up of the business of the partnership is treated part and parcel of the dissolution itself. (See Santdas v. Sheodayal, AIR 1971 Bom 237 at p. 240). The Partnership Act thus provides not only for the registration of the firms but also provides for dissolution of the firms whether registered or unregistered. There can be dissolution by an agreement (Section 40) or by law (Section 41) called "compulsory dissolution" or upon happening of certain events (Sections 42 and 43); or dissolution can be effected by Court (Section 44) on the stated contingencies mentioned in clauses (a) to (g) of Section 44. Unlike the Companies Act, there is no specified Court contemplated by the Partnership Act and it is to the Court under Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the party will have to approach to have relief under Section 44 or under any of the provisions of Chapter VI of the Partnership Act.

11. This brief review of the provisions of the Partnership Act along with the provisions of the Companies Act relevant for the purpose indicates that if there be a legal relationship of partners called "a firm" either registered or unregistered, such a relationship can be brought to an end by the process of dissolution contemplated by Chapter VI of the Partnership Act and nothing in Part X of the Companies Act affects that position. I have already indicated how Section 583 of the Companies Act by itself operates on a circumscribed sphere and contingencies. It is not a provision of universal application. Being a provision enacting specified remedy, it will have to be strictly construed and only applied to the matters expressly governed. Moreover, there is a provision of Section 590 which clarifies by enacting a saving that the provisions with regard to dissolutions or winding up of partnership made by any other Act is not affected by anything enacted by Part X of the Companies Act.

12. Now that being the position and there being a suit seeking reliefs under Chapter VI of the Partnership Act, even assuming that there were eight partners on the date of the suit, that is not within the prohibition of Section 11, Companies Act and it can be dissolved by recourse to Chapter VI of the Partnership Act and there is no bar whatsoever of such dissolution enacted either expressly or impliedly by the provisions of Part X of the Companies Act.

13. In this view of the matter, there is no merit in the present revision and the same is dismissed with costs.

Revision dismissed.

Hanmanta Laxman Thorat and others, Appellants v. Dhondavvabai Hanmanta Thorat and others, Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 434 of 1975, D/-30-9-1976.*

Hindu Marriage Act (1955), Section 16 — Parents' property — Child of a void marriage is not entitled to a share in property of which father is a coparcener.

*(Against order of B. D. Borude, Extra Asst. J., Sholapur in C. A. No. 139 of 1972.)

BU/BU/A588/77/RSK

JUDGMENT:— This is defendants' appeal against an appellate decree of the Extra Assistant Judge, Sholapur, dismissing their appeal against the decree passed by the Civil Judge, Junior Division, Akkalkot, declaring that the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 and the appellant No. 1 have 1/3rd share each in the suit land and the sale effected by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 5 in respect of Survey No. 36/1 was not binding on the plaintiffs.

2. The respondent No. 2—original plaintiff No. 2 is a son of respondent No. 1 — original plaintiff No. 1 and the appellant No. 1 Hanmanta. It is the case of the plaintiffs that this Hanmanta married appellant No. 2 — original defendant No. 2 Nagavva while the marriage between him and respondent No. 1 Dhondavvabai was subsisting. The appellants Nos. 3 and 4 are the sons of appellants Nos. 1 and 2. Original defendant No. 5 was the purchaser of Survey No. 36/1. It is not disputed and both the Courts below have found that Survey No. 36/1 and Survey No. 145/1 of village Malkavathe, Taluka Sholapur, District Sholapur were ancestral property of the appellant No. 1's family. It was also found as a fact by both the Court below and it is not disputed in the Second Appeal that this property was obtained by the appellant No. 1 in partition with his father and brothers in 1958. It was also not disputed that just prior to the filing of the suit, the appellant No. 1 and the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 formed a joint family. It appears that the appellant No. 1 took appellant No. 2 as a wife while the marriage between appellant No. 1 and respondent No. 1 was subsisting and that led to the disputes between the appellant No. 1 and respondent No. 1. She, therefore, instituted a suit on behalf of her minor son and herself claiming 1/3rd share each in the two fields mentioned above. She has also stated in the plaint that Survey No. 36/1 was sold by appellant No. 1 to respondent No. 3 — original defendant No. 5 without any legal necessity and that sale was not binding on their shares. The suit was resisted by the defendants on numerous grounds which it is not necessary to enumerate.

3. The learned trial Judge, on consideration of the evidence led by the parties, held that the property was ancestral property and that the appellant No. 1 had got this property in partition with his father and brothers. The trial Judge also held that the plaintiffs and appellant No. 1 were entitled to 1/3rd share each in the property. He also held that the sale effected by the appellant No. 1 in favour of the defendant No. 5 was effected without any legal necessity and was not binding on the plaintiffs. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiffs' suit. Aggrieved by that decree, the defendants filed an appeal which was heard by the Extra Assistant Judge, Sholapur. He affirmed the finding recorded by the trial Court and dismissed the appeal. It is against this judgment and decree that the present appeal has been filed by the appellants.

4. Mr. Patankar, the learned counsel for the appellants, urged that both the Courts below have committed an error in granting decree for partition without being satisfied that it was necessary in the interest of the minor coparcener and that it was for his benefit that the partition should be effected. It is true that the plaintiff No. 2 was and is a minor and, therefore, the Courts below ought to have made enquiries into the matter. The appellant No. 1 has taken appellant No. 2 as a wife while his marriage with the respondent No. 1 was subsisting. It does appear that he was more devoted to appellant No. 2 than to respondent No. 1 and her child. The satisfaction of the Courts was eloquent from the facts of this case and the manner in which they have dealt with this case. It was not necessary to record any finding, in terms, that it was for the benefit of the minor. The Courts below have, therefore, not committed any error in ordering the partition.

5. Mr. Patankar, the learned counsel for the appellants, then invited my attention to Section 16 of the Hindu Marriage Act which reads:

6. "Where a decree of nullity is granted in respect of any marriage under Section 11 or Section 12, any child begotten or conceived before the decree is made who would have been the legitimate child of the parties to the marriage if it had been dissolved instead of having been declared null and void or annulled by a decree of nullity shall be deemed to be their legitimate child — notwithstanding the decree of nullity:

Provided that nothing contained in this section shall be construed as conferring upon any child of a marriage which is declared null and void or annulled by a decree of nullity any rights in or to the property of any person other than the parents in any case where, but for the passing of this Act, such child would have been incapable of possessing or acquiring any such rights by reason of his not being the legitimate child of his parents." He submitted that even if the second marriage of the appellant is void, his children born out of that marriage will be deemed to be legitimate children as provided by the section. Therefore, appellants Nos. 3 and 4 will be entitled to shares equal to that of respondent No. 2 who is a legitimate child of appellant No. 1. It is not possible to accept this contention. He has not shown how circumstances under which the children begotten of the marriage which was null and void and which was declared to have been void and which entitled them equal shares in the parents' property exist in the case. Then again in the present case, it is not the property of the father of the children, viz., appellants Nos. 3 and 4 and respondent No. 2 but it is a coparcenary property of appellant No. 1 and respondents Nos. 1 and 2. That being so, it is not correct for the appellants to say that the appellants Nos. 3 and 4 are also entitled for a share in the property. These are the only points which were urged by the learned counsel for the appellants.

6. In the result, the appeal is dismissed and the decree passed by the Appellate Court is affirmed. Under the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

KANTAWALA, C. J., TULZAPURKAR AND KANIA, JJ.

Chandrakant Sakharan Karkhanis and others, Petitioners v. State of Maharashtra and others, Opponents.

Special Civil Appns. Nos. 201 and 687 of 1971. D/- 14-4-1976.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 309 — Circulars, orders or resolutions laying down rules about recruitment or fixation of seniority — Duly authenticated but not expressly stating that they are made under Proviso to Art. 309 — Also not published in Government Gazette — Whether can be treated as rules framed under Proviso to Art. 309.

Circulars, Orders or Resolutions or parts thereof laying down the rules or principles of general application, which have to be observed in the recruitment or fixation of seniority of Government servants generally or a particular class of them, and which have been duly authenticated by a signature under the endorsement "By order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra" and intended to be applicable straightway can amount to rules framed in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309, although the said Circulars, Orders or Resolutions do not expressly state that the same are made or issued in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309 and are not published in the Government Gazette. Spl. C. A. No. 815 of 1972, D/- 15-1-1974 (Bom) and (1969) 3 SCC 134, Explained. (Para 32)

Whether Circulars, Resolutions and Orders are really in the nature of executive instructions or directions issued by the State Government in exercise of executive power or amount to statutory rules framed by the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309, will have to be resolved by taking into account four aspects, namely (a) subject-matter, (b) general applicability, (c) form and formalities, if any, and (d) publication. The question is which of these aspects will have to be regarded as essential or decisive and which are relevant but not decisive. (Para 17)

Before any Circular, Order or Resolution could be said to contain rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309, it would be absolutely essential to find out whether the contents of such Circular, Order or Resolution mainly or substantially deal with the topic of recruitment rules and/or service conditions of Government employees. Secondly, it will have to be considered whether such Circular, Order or Resolution contains rules or principles of general applicability or not, for, ordinarily unless the rules or principles comprised in such Circular, Order or Resolution partake of the character of general applicability such instrument would not be regarded as containing rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309. 1972 Lab IC 618 (SC) and AIR 1966 SC 1942, Rel. on. (Para 19)

There is no particular charm in the expression 'By order and in the name of the Governor' and its absence in any particular Circular, Order or Resolution would not be conclusive one way or the other, for, even if such expression is absent it is well settled that the fact that the instrument has been issued under the authority of the Governor can be proved by other evidence if necessary and if it is so proved, there would be no question of the relevant Circular, Order or Resolution getting vitiated by reason of its absence. Its presence also cannot be regarded as decisive on the point as to whether the contents of the instrument should be regarded as amounting to Rules under Art. 309 or as containing executive instructions and the same will have to be regarded as of no consequence.

(Para 20)

No particular form is necessary in which a rule under the proviso to Article 309 should be framed and the rules governing recruitment and service conditions framed under the proviso to Article 309 can take any form of either a letter or a Memorandum or a Circular or an Order or a Resolution and it is not necessary that these should be styled as Rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution.

(Para 21)

The aspect whether the source of power viz. proviso to Art. 309 has been specifically referred to in the instrument in question though a relevant factor would not be a decisive factor to decide the question whether the contents of the instrument could be regarded as rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309. 1973 Lab IC 427 (SC), Rel. on; AIR 1966 SC 602 and 1972 Lab IC 618 (SC), Referred.

(Para 25)

The power which is conferred upon the President or the Governor under Art. 309 being legislative in character and the rules that are to be framed thereunder being tantamount to laws regulating recruitment and other service conditions of the Government employees in public services or posts which will have general applicability, the publication of such rules is absolutely essential, but it will be too narrow a view to take that such publication must necessarily be in the official gazette.

(Para 26)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 166 — Maharashtra Government Rules of Business (Framed on 26-6-1975), R. 9 — Rule is only directory.

The Maharashtra Government Rules of Business framed on 26-6-1975 are only directory. In fact the provisions of Article 166 of the Constitution themselves are directory in nature and the rules framed by the Governor under cl. 3 of

Art. 166 must be regarded as rules having been framed for more convenient transaction of business of the Government and as such directory and not mandatory in character. Any non-compliance thereof would be a mere procedural defect but would not confer any right upon any citizen to approach the Court under Article 226 of the Constitution. TULZAPURKAR, J.:— The three questions referred to our Full Bench by the Division Bench are these:

(1) Whether the Circulars, Orders or Resolutions or parts thereof laying down rules or principles of general application, which have to be observed in the recruitment or fixation of seniority of Government servants generally or a particular class of them, and which have been duly authenticated by a signature under the endorsement "By order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra" and intended to be applicable straightway are or amount to the rules framed in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution of India, although the said Circulars, Orders or Resolutions do not expressly state that the same are made or issued in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution of India and are not published in the Government Gazette?

(2) Whether the said Circulars, Orders or Resolutions or parts of them as set out in Question No. 1 above must be deemed to be rules made in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution of India?

(3) Whether the said Circulars, Orders or Resolutions or parts thereof as set out in Question No. 1 above have the same force or effect in law as a rule or rules made in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution of India?

2. Though three questions as set out above have been referred to this Bench, in our view, the substantial question that needs an answer is the first one, the other two being of ancillary character.

3. At the outset it may be observed that these questions arise out of more or less a perpetual dispute going on between direct recruits and promotees in the Secretariat departments of the Government of Maharashtra. The dispute to some extent is aggravated by apparently inconsistent or conflicting circulars, orders or resolutions issued from time to time. In order to appreciate how these questions have arisen for determination it would be sufficient if the facts pertaining to Spl. Civil Appln. No. 201 of 1971 are briefly stated: The petitioners in this Special Civil Application are Lower Division Clerks in the Education and Social Welfare Department of the State of Maharashtra (respondent No. 1) and who have been promoted as Junior Assistants. Petitioner No. 2 amongst them was the first to be so promoted on 3rd November 1961 while petitioners Nos. 1 and 5 were the last to be so promoted on 6th January 1964. It also appears that petitioners Nos. 2, 3 and 6 have been provisionally confirmed as Junior Assistants from 2nd August 1968. Respondent Nos. 2 to 5 are the direct recruits having been directly recruited in employment as Junior Assistants on selection by the Maharashtra Public Service Commission. Of these the first to be appointed was respondent No. 3 who was appointed on 19-3-1962 and the last to be appointed was respondent No. 2 who was appointed on 19-4-1966. The petition deals with the question of seniority in the posts of Junior Assistants between the petitioners on the one hand and the respondents on the other i.e. between promotees and direct recruits. According to the petitioners, as a result of the policy and the circulars, orders and resolutions issued by the 1st respondent from time to time, some of them, like petitioners Nos. 2, 3 and 6 for example, who have already been confirmed in the posts as Junior Assistants, are liable to be deconfirmed after long and meritorious service in the said posts on account of allegedly arbitrary and invalid rules and resolutions passed by the 1st respondent and some of the petitioners are even in the danger of being reverted on account of such arbitrary and unjust rules and resolutions, which are the subject-matter of the petition and such result is likely to arise in the following facts and circumstances:

4. It is common ground that prior to 23rd April 1921 the Lower Division Clerks were not promoted to the posts of Junior Assistant, which belonged to the Upper Division. By an order dated 23rd April 1921 issued by the Finance Department it was, inter alia, stated thus:

"4. The Government desires that clerks in the Lower Division should, if they prove their fitness, have an opportunity of promotion to the Upper Division.

They are accordingly pleased to direct that in all Departments of the Secretariat (except the Separate Department) every fourth appointment of the Upper Division should be filled by promotion of a clerk from the Lower Division, provided there is a clerk really fit for such promotion. This provision should be strictly observed and no clerk should be selected about whose complete fitness for the Upper Division there is any doubt."

It is not necessary to refer to the rest of the order as it is not material for our purpose. It may however be stated that this order dated 23-4-1921 has been authenticated under the signature of the Under-Secretary to Government, Finance Department, who has put his signature under the endorsement "By order of the Governor of Bombay."

5. On 5th August 1939 the then Government of Bombay published in the Official Gazette certain rules called the Bombay Civil Service Classification and Recruitment Rules, 1939. These Rules were framed in exercise of the powers conferred by cl. (b) of sub-sec. (1) and cl. (b) of sub-sec. (2) of Sec. 241 and Section 255 of the Government of India Act, 1935 and in supersession of the Bombay Civil Services Classification and Recruitment Rules issued in 1929. These Rules came into force with effect from 1st September 1939. Rule 138 of these Rules provided that the Secretariat Ministerial Staff could be divided into two divisions — Upper and Lower — and further provided that as far as Upper Division was concerned, recruitment was to be made by promotion from persons in the Lower Division or by nomination from candidates selected by the Commission. It also stated that the candidates must be University Graduates in Arts, Law, Science or Commerce.

6. On 21st November 1941 a resolution was issued by the Political and Services Department of the then Government of Bombay directing that the principles stated therein should be observed in determining the seniority of direct recruits and promoted officers in the Provincial Services except the Bombay Service of Engineers. The said principles were as follows:

"(1) In the case of direct recruits appointed substantively on probation, the seniority should be determined with reference to the date of their appointment on probation.

(2) In the case of officers promoted to substantive vacancies, the seniority should be determined with reference to the date of their promotion to the substantive vacancies provided there has been no break in service prior to their confirmation in those vacancies." It may be stated that this resolution has been signed by the then Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay under the endorsement "By order of the Governor of Bombay."

7. It appears that on 22nd May 1957 the then Government of Bombay in exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution of India amended the Rules of 1939 and by this amendment the new Rule 138 came to be framed in place of old original Rule 138. The material portion of the said amended Rule 138 provides as follows:

The Ministerial staff in the Secretariat and attached offices is divided into two Divisions—

(A) Upper and (B) Lower.

(A) (1) Upper Division—

(i) Superintendents — Appointments shall be made by promotion from among Senior Assistants.

(ii) Senior Assistants—Appointments shall be made by promotion from among Junior Assistants.

(iii) Junior Assistants—Appointments shall be made either:—

(a) by nomination on the results of a competitive examination held by the Bombay Public Service Commission, or

(b) by promotion from among members of the Lower Division:

Provided that not more than one out of every four vacancies in the posts of Junior Assistants shall ordinarily be filled by promotion.

We are not concerned with the rest of the contents of the said substituted Rule 138. This notification by which 1939 Rules were amended has been duly authenticated by the then Chief Secretary to the Government under the endorsement "by order and in the name of the Governor of Bombay."

8. According to the petitioners, the 1921 order was substantially incorporated in the aforesaid notification dated 21-5-1957 issued under Art. 309 of the Constitution and even after the issuance of this notification dated 21-5-1957 the self-same principle determining the seniority of direct recruits vis-a-vis the promoted officers enunciated in the Government Resolution dated 21-11-1941 was followed by the 1st respondent, namely that seniority was fixed on the principle of length of service from the date of appointment in the case of direct recruits and from the date of continued officiation in the case of promotees and even the ratio of 3:1 was ordinarily followed while making appointments in the cadre of junior Assistants, though the ratio was not intended to be rigidly or mandatorily followed.

9. It appears that on 11-3-1958 a Circular was issued by the then Government of Bombay, Political and Services Department, which stated that in order to facilitate the absorption in Upper Division of Upper Division Clerks/Assistants allocated from the former States of Madhya Pradesh, Hyderabad, Saurashtra and Kutch, Government was pleased to direct that till the end of August 1958 no direct recruit should be appointed to the cadre of Junior Assistants in the Departments of the Secretariat and allied Offices and that all vacancies occurring in that cadre should be filled by promotion from among Lower Division Clerks in each Department or office on the basis of seniority fixed under the Allocated Government Servants' (Absorption, Seniority, Pay and Allowances) Rules, 1957 and such other factors as were normally taken into consideration in making these appointments. Para 2 of this Circular sets out that for want of candidates selected by the Public Service Commission for a long time past, a number of non-Public Service Commission candidates might have been appointed in the various Departments and Offices in the Upper Division direct and the Government was pleased to direct that all these persons should be discharged forthwith and that the vacancies released by them should be filled in the manner set out earlier. This Circular was also authenticated by the signature of the then Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay under the endorsement "By Order and in the name of the Governor of Bombay". By another Circular issued by the Political and Services Department of the then Government of Bombay on 13-5-1958 it was stated that candidates recommended by the Bombay Public Service Commission on the basis of the Competitive Examination held in December 1957 for the posts of Junior Assistants in the Upper Division of the Subordinate Secretariat Service were available for allotment. Paragraph 2 of this Circular recorded that prior to the reorganisation of the States the Departments of the Secretariat had to promote Lower Division Clerks to the posts of Junior Assistants in excess of the ratio of 3:1 prescribed for their promotion to the Upper Division of the Subordinate Secretariat Service, because of the urgency of the work and the non-availability of selected candidates and that such persons had still been continued in their posts. The said Circular further recorded in the same paragraph that it had been decided that the position regarding the out-of-turn promotions given to the Lower Division Clerks in the old Bombay State since 1st January 1956 should be revised so as to restore the ratio of 3:1 prescribed for promotion of Lower Division Clerks to the Upper Division of the Subordinate Secretariat Service. This Circular was authenticated by the signature of the Assistant Secretary to the Government under the endorsement "By order and in the name of the Governor of Bombay."

10. It may be stated that on 14th August 1959 by a Resolution passed in the Political and Services Department of the then Government of Bombay, the ratio of 3:1 was altered. The said Resolution, inter alia, provided as follows:

"..... According to the existing rules, recruitment to the posts of Junior Assistants in the Secretariat Department is made either by nomination on the basis of the results of the "Competitive Examination held by the Public Service Commission or by promotion from among members of the Lower Division, the ratio of direct recruits to promotees being 3:1. It is observed by Government that according to the present ratio of promotion, the members of the Lower Division have not been able to secure promotions to the Upper Division to an appreciable extent although they have put in a fairly long service, resulting in stagnation in the Lower Division to some extent." Paragraph 2 of the said Resolution runs as follows:

"The question has been very carefully examined by Government and with a view to reducing the stagnation in the Lower Division, it has been decided to hold a special Competitive Examination on departmental basis for the members in the Lower Division for their promotion to the posts of Junior Assistants in Secretariat Departments. After the results of this departmental examination are known, recruitment to Upper Division will be made for a period of one year by the direct method (through the Public Service Commission), promotion according to the present rule of seniority-cum-merit and the departmental competitive examination, in the ratio of 2:1:1. In following this ratio, the intention is that vacancies of Junior Assistants in Secretariat Departments should be filled for one year on the basis of one by direct recruit, one by promotion according to seniority-cum-merit, one again by direct recruit and one through the departmental competitive examination. The present 3:1 ratio will not operate during this period."

It may be stated that this Resolution dated 14-8-1959 bears the signature of the Assistant Secretary to Government under the endorsement "By Order and in the name of the Governor of Bombay."

11. The petitioners have then referred to yet another Circular dated 25th September 1961 that was issued by the General Administration Department, whereby it was stated that "Recruitment to the posts of Junior Assistants in Secretariat Departments must be made either by nomination through Public Service Commission or by promotion from among members of the Lower Division, the ratio of direct recruits to promotees being 3:1 i.e. 25% of the vacancies (both permanent and temporary) occurring in the Upper Division being available for promotion to the members of the Lower Division". But since it was noticed that no uniform method was followed by the various Secretariat Department in regard to the fixation of inter se seniority in the cadre of Junior Assistants between direct recruits and such promotees, a clarification was sought to be given. It was clarified that the ratio of promotion prescribed by Government was only for regulating promotion of members of the lower division to the upper division and it was not intended that the ratio should be used for fixing the seniority of promotees vis-a-vis direct recruits in the upper division. Seniority of persons promoted to the upper division had to be fixed with reference to the date of continuous officiation and in the case of those appointed by direct recruitment from the date of appointment. If any members of the lower division were promoted in excess of the prescribed ratio on account of non-availability of direct recruits they were liable to be replaced by the Public Service Commission selectees, and when direct recruitment through the Public Service Commission was made next and candidates became available, the department should maintain the proportion by replacing all those who had been promoted in excess of the prescribed proportion by direct recruits. However, it was pointed out that the promotees who remained in the upper division would count for seniority purposes their continuous service from the date of promotion to the upper division. It was directed that the above procedure should be followed by all departments in fixing the seniority inter se of direct recruits and promotees. It may be stated that this Circular bears the signature of the Assistant Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, General Administration Department, under the endorsement "by order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra". According to the petitioners, the practice that was indicated in this circular was not supported either by the language of the 1921 Rules or the 1957 Rules nor was it based on any principle and according to them, directions in the said circular to the effect that if any members of the lower division were promoted in excess of the prescribed ratio on account of non-availability of direct recruits they were liable to be replaced by the Public Service Commission selectees and accordingly if a Public Service Commission candidate became available he should replace a person promoted are erroneous, illegal and void. The petitioners have however asserted that they have no dispute with the said resolution in so far as it relates to the fixation of inter se seniority between direct recruits and promotees. So far as directions contained therein with respect to the reversion of promotees whenever direct recruits became available in order to maintain the said ratio of 3:1 are concerned these are not only contrary to the language of the Resolutions of 1921 or 1957 but also to the actual practice that was being followed by the Government. In other words, according to the petitioners, this Resolution or Circular of 1961 goes beyond the scope of 1921 and 1957 Resolution and makes mandatory what was contemplated only to be directory and thus introduced arbitrariness and unreasonableness involving consequences of great injustice to the petitioners.

12. According to the petitioners, there is yet one more Circular bearing No. SSS.1267-J dated 27th March 1969 which has been issued by Government in General Administration Department, dealing with the topic of fixation of seniority of direct recruits and promotees inter se, which prejudicially affects them. According to the petitioners, by this Circular the General Administration Department purported to remove the alleged considerable misunderstanding of principal object of the orders issued in the earlier Government Circular dated 25th September 1961. By this circular dated 27-3-1969 the Government was pleased to clarify that the basic intention underlying the circular was to emphasise that the length of continuous officiating service shall be the criterion for determining the inter se seniority in respect of only those promotees who fall within the accepted ratio of 3:1 vis-a-vis direct recruits (one promotee as against three direct recruits in total vacancies of 4 at a time). It further stated that the procedure laid down in that circular had already envisaged that all promotees, in excess of the accepted ratio, shall be liable to be replaced by the next batch of direct recruits selected by the Public Service Commission, so that the fortuitous promotions given to the excess promotees shall be corrected and these excess promotees shall not get a further fortuitous advantage of inter se seniority vis-a-vis direct recruits by virtue of the length of their officiating service as Assistant, on an ad hoc basis, due to non-availability of the necessary number of direct recruits to fill up the available vacancies in accordance with the accepted ratio of 3:1. Para 2 of this Circular stated thus:

"Government is accordingly pleased to direct that all Departments of the Secretariat should review the current seniority lists and revise them, with effect from the date of the Circular, viz. 25th September, 1961, in accordance with the accepted ratio and the principle of the replacement of excess promotees by Public Service Commission recruits as and when available. This will require (a) an assessment of the vacancies which were available and were filled (i) on and after September 25, 1961 to December 31, 1961 and (ii) each Calendar year thereafter from 1962 to 1968 and (b) the re-fixation of seniority on the principle that against available vacancies in each of the periods, one promotee and three direct recruits shall be assigned their due seniority according to their respective entitlement in the accepted ratio of 3:1 and the excess promotees who were appointed, on an ad hoc basis to fill up the vacancies, will be given a seniority of the year when their turn comes in their entitlement of 1 out of 4 vacancies. All Departments of the Secretariat are, therefore, requested to review and revise the current seniority lists in accordance with the principle and the procedure, in pursuance of this clarification of the Circular No. SSS-1061-J of 25th September, 1961, and finalise the revised seniority lists by April 31, 1969, at the latest."

Pursuant to this Circular the consequential seniority list dated 30th March 1970 came to be issued. The petitioners having felt aggrieved by Circular dated 27th March 1969 and the consequential seniority list dated 30th March 1970 as well as by Circular dated 25th September 1961 approached this Court for getting the said impugned Circulars and the Seniority List quashed after examining the legality, validity and/or propriety thereof and out of the several grounds on which these circulars or Resolutions or Orders that were challenged the principal ground was these impugned Circulars, Resolutions or Orders were in the nature of executive instructions or administrative instructions and as such could not override the statutory 1957 Rules which had been framed in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution; in other words, several Circulars, Resolutions and Orders issued by the Government from time to time which operated to the prejudice of the rights of the petitioners either in the matter of their promotional chances to the Junior Assistant cadre or in the matter of their seniority have been challenged by the petitioners on the ground that these did not have any force of law and at any rate being inconsistent with the statutory rules framed in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution cannot affect their rights.

13. It may be stated that in the other Special Civil Application No. 687 of 1971 filed by the employees, who are all Junior Assistants having been recruited directly pursuant to their selection by the Public Service Commission, they have referred to a number of Circulars, Orders and Resolutions and have, on the other hand, challenged such of the Circulars, Orders and Resolutions which have been operating to the prejudice of their rights as direct recruits vis-a-vis promotees and the challenge inter alia is on the same ground that such Circulars, Orders and Resolutions are in the nature of executive instructions or administrative instructions and these could not have the effect of overriding statutory rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution.

14. Since on this principal ground of challenge which was put forward by the petitioners in both the petitions conflicting views have been expressed by sets of Division Benches of this Court, this reference to Full Bench has become necessary. As has been pointed out in the referring judgment, at least in regard to rules framed under Government Resolution dated 29-7-1963, conveniently called 'the 1963 Rules', one Division Bench (Kantawala and Kania, JJ.) in Misc. Petn. No. 549 of 1969 (Bom) has held these Rules to be Rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution while another Division Bench (Deshpande and Joshi, JJ.) in Spl. C. A. No. 815 of 1972 (Bom) has taken the view that these very Rules are in the nature of executive instructions and that is how the three questions reproduced at the commencement of this judgment have come to be referred to this Bench. It may be stated that on a perusal of the principal question that has been referred to us certain aspects have been accepted or admitted about which presumably there was no dispute between the parties when the matter was argued before the Division Bench. In the first place, there was no dispute between the parties that all these impugned Circulars, Orders or Resolutions or parts thereof deal with the subject of 'Recruitment Rules and Conditions of Service' of persons appointed to public services and posts in connection with the affairs of the State and it was also not disputed that these contain or lay down rules or principles of general applicability. It was also not disputed that these Circulars, Orders or Resolutions have been duly authenticated by signature of an authorised officer under the endorsement "By order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra" and that these were intended to be applicable straightway. The rival contentions, however, that were urged before the Division Bench pertained only two aspects of these Circulars, Orders and Resolutions, the aspects being that these Circulars, Orders or Resolutions did not expressly state that these had been issued in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and that these had not been published in the Government Gazette. It may be stated that on behalf of the petitioners in both the matters a two-fold contention was urged: (a) that in order that these Circulars, Orders or Resolutions should have the force of rules made under the proviso to Art. 309 a statement ought to have been expressly made therein to the effect that these had been so made under the said provision and (b) that these (Circulars, Orders or Resolutions) ought to have been published in the Government Gazette and that since no such express statement was found in these Circulars, Orders or Resolutions and since these had not been published in the Government Gazette, all these Circulars, Resolutions or Orders were really by way of executive instructions or administrative instructions issued by the Government on the topic of 'Recruitment Rules and Conditions of Service' and did not amount to any rules framed in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309. In support of this contention certain observations made by the Division Bench of this Court consisting of Deshpande and Joshi JJ. in their judgment delivered in Spl. Civil Appln. No. 815 of 1972 (Bom) were relied upon. Apart from the aforesaid Division Bench judgment, reliance was also placed upon certain decisions of the Supreme Court as well as a decision of Andhra Pradesh High Court. On the other hand, on behalf of the State of Maharashtra, it was urged that these several Circulars, Orders and Resolutions or parts thereof, since these contained rules or principles of general applicability and contents thereof touched the subject-matter of recruitment and service conditions of Government servants in employment of State of Maharashtra generally or particular class thereof, and since these had been duly authenticated by a duly authorised officer by order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra, will have to be regarded as rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and it was urged that it was immaterial whether any express statement was or was not made in these very circulars, orders or resolutions stating that these had been made or issued in exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and it was pointed out that making of such a statement could never be regarded as sine qua non before these could be regarded as rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. As regards the non-publication in the gazette, it was conceded that due publication of these instruments containing rules was necessary but it was not essential that these ought to be published in the Government Gazette which was merely one of the modes of publication. In support of this rival view, reliance was placed upon three Division Bench judgments and two single Judges' judgments of this Court, and few decisions of the Supreme Court.

15. In order to decide the principal question which has been referred to us, certain relevant provisions of the Constitution will have to be noted. The most important provision touching the issue is the provision contained in Article 309 and the proviso thereto, which run thus:

"309. Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, Acts of the appropriate Legislature may regulate the recruitment, and conditions of service of persons appointed, to public services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Union or of any State:

Provided that it shall be competent for the President or such person as he may direct in the case of services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Union, and for the Governor of a State or such person as he may direct in the case of services and posts in connection with the affairs of the State, to make rules regulating the recruitment, and the conditions of service of persons appointed, to such services and posts until provision in that behalf is made by or under an Act of the appropriate Legislature under this article, and any rules so made shall have effect subject to the provisions of any such Act."

It will appear clear that Art. 309 in terms deals with the topic of 'Recruitment and conditions of service of persons serving the Union or a State' and the main provision confers power upon the appropriate Legislature, subject to the provisions of the Constitution, to enact legislative measures for the purpose of regulating the recruitment and conditions of service of persons appointed to public services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Union or the State. Secondly it is the proviso to Art. 309 which confers power either on the President or on the Governor to make rules regulating the recruitment and conditions of service of persons appointed to such services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Union or in connection with the affairs of the State respectively until the appropriate Legislature has enacted a legislation covering the subject. Thirdly the proviso indicates that the rules that may be framed either by the President or the Governor, as the case may be, have been given full effect but that would be subject to the provisions of any such legislative enactment that may be passed by the appropriate Legislature. On the aspect as to what is the nature and scope of the power conferred either upon the President or the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309 there are two decisions of the Supreme Court to which it would be profitable to make a reference immediately. In the case of B. S. Vadera v. Union of India, reported in AIR 1969 SC 118 = (1969 Lab IC 100), the Supreme Court in para 24 of its judgment has clarified the nature, extent and scope of rule-making power to be exercised under the proviso to Art. 309 in the following words:

"It is also significant to note that the proviso to Article 309, clearly lays down that 'any rules so made shall have effect, subject to the provisions of any such Act'. The clear and unambiguous expressions, used in the Constitution, must be given their full and unrestricted meaning unless hedged-in by any limitations. The rules, which have to be 'subject to the provisions of the Constitution', shall have effect, 'subject to the provisions of any such Act'. That is, if the appropriate Legislature has passed an Act, under Article 309, the rules, framed under the Proviso, will have effect, subject to that Act; but, in the absence of any Act, of the appropriate Legislature, on the matter, in our opinion, the rules, made by the President, or by such person as he may direct, are to have full effect, both prospectively and retrospectively. Apart from the limitations, pointed out above, there is none other, imposed by the proviso to Article 309, regarding the ambit of the operation of such rules. In other words, the rules, unless they can be impeached on grounds such as breach of Part III, or any other constitutional provision, must be enforced, if made by the appropriate authority."

Legislative character of rules which either the President or the Governor has been empowered to make under the proviso to Art. 309 has been reiterated by the Supreme Court in one of its latest decisions in the case of Raj Kumar v. Union of India reported in AIR 1975 SC 1116 = (1975 Lab IC 669). In that case the appellant who was appointed as Airport Ticket Clerk in the Civil Aviation Department, Government of India, on 14-8-1967, was served with a notice terminating his services 'forthwith' on 15-6-1971 and it was directed that he shall be paid a sum equivalent to the amount of pay and allowances for a period of one month (in lieu of the period of notice) calculated at the same rate at which he was drawing them immediately before the date on which the order was served on or, as the case may be, tendered to him. But the pay and allowances were not paid to him at the same time as the service of the order of termination of his services. His appeal against the termination as well as representations having failed he filed a writ petition which was dismissed by the High Court in limine and in the appeal before the Supreme Court the question that arose for determination was whether the proviso to sub-rule (1) of Rule 5 of the Central Civil Services (Temporary Service) Rules 1965, which had been amended with retrospective effect from 1st May 1965 was a valid one or not. The effect of amendment was that on 1st May 1965 as also on 15th June 1971 the date on which the appellant's services were terminated forthwith it was not obligatory to pay to him a sum equivalent to the amount of his pay and allowances for the period of the notice at the rate of which he was drawing them immediately before the termination of the services or as the case may be for the period by which such notice falls short and on the question of validity of amended rule which was given retrospective effect this is what the Supreme Court has observed:

"There is no doubt that this rule is a valid rule because it is now well established that rules made under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution are legislative in character and therefore can be given effect to retrospectively." These two decisions clearly bring out the legislative character of rules which either the President or the Governor as the case may be has been empowered to frame under the proviso to Art. 309 and the latter case also makes it clear that even such a rule so framed under the proviso to Art. 309 could be given retrospective effect; in other words, the rule-making power conferred upon the President or the Governor as the case may be under Art. 309 partakes of the nature of plenary legislative power conferred upon the authority concerned.

16. Having broadly indicated the nature and scope of the power conferred upon the President or the Governor as the case may be under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution in the matter of framing rules regulating the recruitment and conditions of service of persons appointed to public services and posts in connection with the affairs of the State, it will be proper to refer to certain other relevant articles of the Constitution which pertain to the scope and extent of the executive power of a State and these provisions would become material, inasmuch as, the rival contention on behalf of the petitioners in the two petitions has been that several Circulars, Orders and Resolutions are executive instructions issued in exercise of the executive powers of the State. The relevant Articles are Articles 162 and 166 of the Constitution. Art. 162 which deals with the extent of executive power of State runs thus:

"162. Subject to the provisions of this Constitution, the executive power of a State shall extend to the matters with respect to which the Legislature of the State has power to make laws:

Provided that in any matter with respect to which the Legislature of a State and Parliament have power to make laws, the executive power of the State shall be subject to, and limited by, the executive power expressly conferred by this Constitution or by any law made by Parliament upon the Union or authorities thereof."

Under the aforesaid article it has been declared in unequivocal terms that the executive power of a State shall extend to the matters with respect to which the Legislature of the State has power to make laws and it cannot be disputed that having regard to item 41 (State Public Services, State Public Service Commission) occurring in List II of Seventh Schedule the State Legislature has power to make laws touching the subject of State public services and consequently under Art. 162 the executive power of a State does extend to topic of State public services in respect of which the State Executive can issue executive instructions or directions. The manner in which such executive instructions or directions could be issued pertaining to a matter covered by item like 41 occurring in List II of Seventh Schedule has been clearly indicated under Art. 166 of the Constitution. Art. 166 deals with the conduct of business of the Government of State and it runs thus:

"166. (1) All executive action of the Government of a State shall be expressed to be taken in the name of the Governor.

(2) Orders and other instruments made and executed in the name of the Governor shall be authenticated in such manner as may be specified in rules to be made by the Governor, and the validity of an order or instrument which is so authenticated shall not be called in question on the ground that it is not an order or instrument made or executed by the Governor.

(3) The Governor shall make rules for the more convenient transaction of the business of the Government of the State, and for the allocation among Ministers of the said business in so far as it is not business with respect to which the Governor is by or under this Constitution required to act in his discretion."

Relying on sub-cl. (2) of Art. 166 of the Constitution it was pointed out by counsel for the petitioners that several Circulars, Orders or Resolutions in the instant case would fall within the expression 'orders and other instruments' occurring in sub-cl. (2) of Art. 166 and there was no dispute before us that all these Circulars, Orders and Resolutions in the instant case have been made and executed in the name of the Governor and have also been authenticated in the prescribed manner by a duly authorised officer in that behalf.

17. In order to bring out the distinction between legislative character of rules that could be framed by the President or the Governor as the case may be under the proviso to Art. 309 and executive instructions or directions which could be issued in the name of the Governor by a properly authenticated instrument under Art. 166, counsel referred us to Business Rules of the State of Maharashtra framed in exercise of powers conferred by clauses (2) and (3) of Article 166 of the Constitution and the latest set of business rules of the Government of Maharashtra which have been framed on 26th June 1975 were produced before us for the purpose of bringing out this distinction. These Maharashtra Government Rules of Business framed on 26-6-1975 are expressly stated to have been made in exercise of power conferred by clauses (2) and (3) of Art. 166 of the Constitution. In particular, reliance was placed upon Rule 9 read with the Second Schedule to the Rules and Rule 14. Rule 9 of these Business Rules runs thus:

"9. All cases referred to in the Second Schedule shall be brought before the Council—

(i) by the direction of the Governor under clause (c) of Article 167

(ii) by the direction of—

(a) the Chief Minister; or

(b) the Minister-in-charge of the case with the consent of the Chief Minister;

Provided that, no case in regard to which the Finance Department is required to be consulted under Rule 11 shall, save in exceptional circumstances under the directions of the Chief Minister, be discussed by the Council unless the Finance Minister has had opportunity for its consideration."

Item 3 in the Second Schedule being material was referred to and that item runs as follows:

"Proposals for the making or amending the rules regulating the recruitment and the conditions of service of—

(a) persons appointed to the Secretariat Staff of the Assembly or the Council (Article 187 (3));

(b) officers and servants of the High Court under Article 229, provisos to clauses (1) and (2);

(c) persons appointed to the Public Service and posts in connection with the State (proviso to Article 309)."

Item 12 in the Second Schedule may also be referred to and it runs thus:

"Proposals for Legislation including the issue of an Ordinance under Article 213 of the Constitution."

Rule 14 of the Rules of Business runs thus:

"The Secretary of the Department concerned is in each case responsible for the careful observance of these rules and when he considers that there has been any material departure from them, he shall personally bring the matter to the notice of the Minister-in-charge and the Chief Secretary."

Relying on Rule 9 read with Item 3 of the second Schedule quoted above, Counsel for the petitioners pointed out that certain formality has been prescribed by these Rules for the purpose of initiating the proposals for making or amending the rules regulating the recruitment and the conditions of service of persons appointed to public services and posts in connection with the State (Rules under the proviso to Art. 309) and according to Rule 9 such proposals have to be brought before Council of Ministers. Having regard to the aforesaid material provisions of the Constitution, namely provisions contained in Art. 309 together with the proviso thereunder as well as the provisions contained in Art. 166 and the relevant provisions contained in the Maharashtra Government Rules of Business, it will appear clear that the rule-making power conferred upon the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309 which is legislative in character and the power to issue Circulars, Resolutions or Orders containing executive instructions in exercise of the executive power conferred upon the State under Art. 166 do overlap so far as the subject-matter of Rules of recruitment and conditions of public services of State Government employees are concerned, but at the same time it cannot be disputed that all executive instructions or directions issued by the State Government in exercise of its executive power conferred under Art. 166 touching this subject-matter or topic must yield to rules that may be framed by the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. In their turn, the rules framed by the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309 would be subject to any enactment made by appropriate legislature under substantive provision contained in Art. 309 of the Constitution itself. In other words, to the extent to which and in so far as executive instructions or directions issued by the State Government in exercise of its power under Art. 166 would be inconsistent with Rules that may be framed by the Governor under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution, such instructions will have to be disregarded and similarly to the extent to which and in so far as the Rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 would be inconsistent with the provisions of enactment of appropriate legislature the Rules will have to be disregarded and it is because of this position which emerges clearly on record that the petitioners sought to urge before the Division Bench that several of the Circulars, Orders and Resolutions issued by the State Government that operated to their prejudice being executive instructions or directions could not prevail over the statutory rules that have been framed by the Governor in exercise of the rule-making power conferred under the proviso to Art. 309 and that is why the question has assumed considerable importance as to whether the several Circulars, Resolutions and Orders in question are really in the nature of executive instructions or directions issued by the State Government in exercise of executive power or amount to statutory rules framed by the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and this basic question, in our view, will have to be resolved by taking into account three or four aspects, namely (a) subject-matter, (b) general applicability, (c) form and formalities, if any and (d) publication. The question is which of these aspects will have to be regarded as essential or decisive and which are relevant but not decisive.

18. We shall consider the first two aspects together. The first question will be whether the Circulars, Orders or Resolutions in question deal with the topic or subject-matter of recruitment rules and service conditions of Government employees, for, unless any such instrument mainly or substantially deals with such topic it can never be regarded as any rule framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. In our view, even if any such instrument were to state expressly that it has been issued in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309, the same would not amount to framing of rules under the said provision if the same did not deal with the subject of recruitment and service conditions of Government employees. A reference in this behalf could be made to a decision of the Supreme Court, in the case of R. N. Nanjundappa v. T. Thimmaiah reported in AIR 1972 SC 1767 = (1972 Lab IC 618), where the question that arose for consideration was whether the purported rule that dealt with regularization of a particular appointment by stating that 'notwithstanding any rules the appointment was regularised' could be regarded as a rule framed under the proviso to Art. 309 or not. The Rules in question were framed by the Governor of Mysore expressly stating that these had been framed 'in exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution of India and all other powers enabling him in this behalf'. The title of the Rules read "These rules may be called The Mysore Education Department Services (Technical Education Department) (Special Recruitment) Rules, 1967" and the material Rule, being Rule 2, ran thus:

"2. Provisions relating to regularization of appointment of Principal, School of Mines, Oorgaum Kolar Gold Fields.

Notwithstanding any rule made under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution of India, or any other rules or Order in force at any time, Dr. T. Thimmiah, B. Sc. (Hons.) Ph. D. (Lond.) F.G.S. shall be deemed to have been regularly appointed as Principal, School of Mines, Oorgaum, Kolar Gold Fields, with effect from 15-2-1958.

By order and in the name of the Governor of Mysore.

Sd. S. N. Sreenath,
Under Secretary to Government, Education Department."

19. An attempt was made on behalf of the State to sustain the validity of the aforesaid Rules, both under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution as also under the executive power conferred upon the State under Art. 162 read with Art. 166 of the Constitution, but the Supreme Court negatived the State's contention on both the aspects of the matter. In para 23 of the judgment this is what the Supreme Court has stated:

"It was contended on behalf of the State that under Article 309 of the Constitution the State has power to make a rule regularising the appointment. Shelter was taken behind Art. 162 of the Constitution and the power of the Government to appoint. No one can deny the power of the Government to appoint. If it were a case of appointment of a candidate by competitive examination or if it were a case of appointment by selection recourse to rule under Article 309 for regularisation would not be necessary. Assume that Rules under Article 309 could be made in respect of appointment of one man but there are two limitations, Art. 309 speaks of rules for appointment and general conditions of service. Regularisation of appointment by stating that notwithstanding any rules the appointment is regularised strikes at the foot of the rules and if the effect of the regularisation is to nullify the operation and effectiveness of the rules, the rule itself is open to criticism on the ground that it is in violation of current rules. Therefore, the relevant rules at the material time as to promotion and appointment are infringed and the impeached rule cannot be permitted to stand to operate as a regularisation of appointment of one person in utter defiance of rules requiring consideration of seniority and merit in the case of promotion and consideration of appointment by selection or by competitive examination."

Again in para 26 the Court observed thus:

"The contention on behalf of the State that a rule under Article 309 for regularisation of the appointment of a person would be a form of recruitment read with reference to power under Article 162 is unsound and unacceptable. The executive has the power to appoint. That power may have its source in Article 162. In the present case the rule which regularised the appointment of the respondent with effect from 15th February, 1958 notwithstanding any rules cannot be said to be in exercise of power under Article 162. First, Article 162 does not speak of rules whereas Article 309 speaks of rules. Therefore, the present case touches the power of the State to make rules under Article 309 of the nature impeached here. Secondly, when the Government acted under Article 309 the Government cannot be said to have acted also under Article 162 in the same breath. The two Articles operate in different areas. Regularisation cannot be said to be a form of appointment. Counsel on behalf of the respondent contended that regularisation would mean conferring the quality of permanence on the appointment whereas counsel on behalf of the State contended that regularisation did not mean permanence but that it was a case of regularisation of the rules under Article 309. Both the contentions are fallacious. If the appointment itself is in infraction of the rules or if it is in violation of the provisions of the Constitution illegality cannot be regularised. Ratification or regularisation is possible of an act which is within the power and province of the authority but there has been some non-compliance with procedure or manner which does not go to the root of the appointment. Regularisation cannot be said to be a mode of recruitment. To accede to such a proposition would be to introduce a new head of appointment in defiance of rules or it may have the effect of setting at naught the rules."

It would thus appear clear from the aforesaid decision that the Supreme Court has clearly taken the view that regularisation of an appointment by stating 'notwithstanding any rules the appointment is regularised' cannot be regarded as any item covered by the topic of recruitment rules or conditions of service, a subject-matter spoken of by Article 309. In other words, unless the subject-matter or topic dealt with in any

Circular, Order or Resolution is in essence the recruitment rules or service conditions of Government employees, no Circular, Order or Resolution can ever be regarded as any rule framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. Reference may be made to another earlier decision of the Supreme Court in the case of B. N. Nagarajan v. State of Mysore, reported in AIR 1966 SC 1942, where the question whether Mysore Public Service Commission (Functions) Rules, 1957, particularly Rule 4 (1) thereof, were rules made under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution or not was answered in the negative and one of the grounds on which the Court came to the conclusion that they were not rules made under Art. 309 was that those rules really dealt with the functions of the Commission rather than laying down any rules regarding recruitment to services or posts. The High Court had taken the view that to the extent to which the rules dealt with the topic of regulating recruitment to Civil Services under the State, the source of the power could only be the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution, but this view of the High Court was overruled by the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court on a proper construction of the relevant rules came to the conclusion that substantially the rules dealt with the functions of the Commission rather than laying down the rules regarding recruitment to services or posts and therefore the said rules were not rules made under Art. 309 of the Constitution. From these two decisions it would appear clear that before any Circular, Order or Resolution could be said to contain rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309, it would be absolutely essential to find out whether the contents of such Circular, Order or Resolution mainly or substantially deal with the topic of recruitment rules and/or service conditions of Government employees. Secondly, it will have to be considered whether such Circular, Order or Resolution contains rules or principles of general applicability or not, for, ordinarily unless the rules or principles comprised in such Circular, Order or Resolution partake of the character of general applicability such instrument would not be regarded as containing rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309. The first mentioned decision undoubtedly suggests that rules under Art. 309 could be made in respect of recruitment of one man or prescribe service conditions for one man but even so the rules must be general in operation, though they might apply to a class comprising a single Government servant and that is why we are of the view that the instrument must contain rules which have general applicability. The character of general applicability would, therefore, be an essential feature to be considered while deciding whether the contents of the instrument amount to rules framed under Art. 309 or not.

20. The next aspect deals with form and formalities, if any, that are required to be followed or gone through while framing rules under the proviso to Art. 309. Several things will have to be considered under this topic. The first thing that need be considered is whether the instrument must be issued 'By Order and in the name of the Governor' or not. While considering this aspect it must be stated at once that the position in law is well established that there is no particular charm in the expression 'By order and in the name of the Governor' and its absence in any particular Circular, Order or Resolution would not be conclusive one way or the other, for, even if such expression is absent it is well settled that the fact that the instrument has been issued under the authority of the Governor can be proved by other evidence if necessary and if it is so proved, there would be no question of the relevant Circular, Order or Resolution getting vitiated by reason of its absence. But the more important question which we have to consider is whether the presence of such endorsement at the foot of the instrument will necessarily mean that the instrument contains rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. In this behalf our attention was invited by counsel for the petitioners to the fact that the 1939 Rules that were issued by means of a notification as well as the amendments that were effected to the said Rules by another notification dated 27-5-1957, were expressly stated to have been framed and issued under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and both the notifications contained the requisite endorsement at the foot of the said notification and it was pointed out that the contents of these amounted to Rules because these had been issued in exercise of the power under Art. 309 and dealt with the topic of recruitment and conditions of service of Government employees and not because these contained the endorsement 'By order and in the name of the Governor, and the signature of the duly authorised officer, for, according to counsel for the petitioners, even Circulars, Orders or Resolutions containing executive instructions issued in exercise of the executive power under Art. 166 (2) of the Constitution are also required to be issued in the name of the Governor and are further required to be authenticated in the prescribed manner by a duly authorised officer in that behalf. It was, therefore, urged by counsel on behalf of the promotees that some of the Circulars, Orders and Resolutions which varied the ratio or altered the seniority to their prejudice, though issued in the name of the Governor and authenticated by a duly authorised officer in that behalf, should be regarded as containing merely executive instructions not amounting to any rules framed under Art. 309; similar argument was advanced by counsel for the direct recruits qua some other Circulars, Orders or Resolutions that are operating to their prejudice which contain the requisite endorsement and authentication. On behalf of the State it was fairly conceded that the presence of the endorsement 'By order and in the name of the Governor' and authentication by a duly authorised officer at the foot of the instrument would be equivocal and not decisive of the question whether the instrument contains Rules under Art. 309 or mere executive instructions issued in exercise of the executive power under Art. 162. Since the manner of authenticating any rule framed by the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309 happens to be the same as the manner of authenticating the issuance of executive instructions in exercise of executive power of the State, in our view, the presence of the aforesaid type of endorsement and authentication at the foot of any instrument cannot be regarded as decisive on the point as to whether the contents of the instrument should be regarded as amounting to Rules under Art. 309 or as containing executive instructions and the same will have to be regarded as of no consequence.

21. Another important thing required to be considered by us under this topic is whether any particular form or any particular formality has been prescribed as being required to be used or gone through for framing rules or laying down general principles touching the subject-matter of recruitment and service conditions of Government employees under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. On this aspect of the matter it will have to be observed that the proviso to Art. 309 nowhere prescribes nor indicates any particular form in which such a rule should be framed nor does it prescribe any particular procedure or formality which is required to be gone through before rule thereunder could be framed. However, a two-fold contention was sought to be urged by counsel for the petitioners before us in this behalf. In the first place, it was urged that almost all the decisions of the Supreme Court on the subject have dealt with the cases where letters, memoranda or resolutions had been issued by the State Government dealing with the topic of recruitment rules and conditions of service and all these instruments have invariably been regarded as containing executive instructions or directions and not amounting to any rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. Secondly it was urged that even if the proviso to Art. 309 does not indicate any procedure or formality as being required to be gone through, the Maharashtra Government Rules of Business, particularly Rule 9 read with Second Schedule thereto, clearly prescribes some sort of formality which is required to be gone through before rules could be properly framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and relying on these two aspects it was urged by counsel for the petitioners before us that if rules or general principles governing recruitment and service conditions of Government employees took the form of letters, memoranda, Circulars or Resolutions, it would be proper to regard these instruments as containing executive instructions issued by the State Government under Art. 162 and it was further urged that having regard to Rule 9 read with Second Schedule to the Maharashtra Government Rules of Business it should be held that unless the procedure or formality indicated therein was gone through, such rules or general principles so enunciated or issued should not be regarded as rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309. In our view, it is not possible to accept either of these submissions. In the first place, though by and large it has so happened that the majority of the cases which were decided by the Supreme Court were those which were concerned with letters, memoranda, Circulars or Resolutions and in many of these cases the instruments were held to contain executive instructions in the matter of service conditions but in our view, that is neither here nor there and the particular form cannot be regarded as decisive of the matter. In fact it would be apposite to refer to one decision of the Supreme Court which was concerned with a memorandum which has been held to incorporate a rule having been framed under the proviso to Art. 309. In the case of E. Venkateswararao Naidu v. Union of India reported in AIR 1973 SC 698 the question that arose for consideration was whether a certain office memorandum issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs, Government of India, raising age of compulsory retirement of Central Government servants from 55 to 58 with certain restrictions or limitations and subject to certain conditions could be regarded as a rule having the force of a rule made under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution or not. Originally under Rule 56 of the Fundamental Rules it was provided that except as otherwise provided in the other clauses of that Rule that date of compulsory retirement of a Government servant, other than a ministerial servant, was the date on which he attained the age of 55 years. On November 30, 1962 the Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs, issued an office Memorandum under which the age of compulsory retirement of Central Government servants was raised from 55 to 58 years, subject to the three exceptions mentioned in paragraph 2 thereof. Paragraph 6 of the Memorandum provided:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing paragraphs, the appointing authority may require a Government servant to retire after he attains the age of 55 years on three months' notice without assigning any reason. This will be in addition to the provisions already contained in R. 2 (2) of the Liberalized Pension Rules 1950 to retire an officer who has completed 30 years' qualifying service and will normally be exercised to weed out unsuitable employees after they have attained the age of 55 years. The Government servant also may, after attaining the age of 55 years, voluntarily retire after giving three months' notice to the appointing authority."

It was further specifically provided in the memorandum that the same would take effect from December 1, 1962. On July 21, 1965 Fundamental Rule 56 was amended by the Sixth Amendment so as to incorporate, with modifications, the provisions of the aforesaid Office Memorandum. The appellant who was born on 15th July 1910 attained the age of 55 on the corresponding date in 1965 and he hoped to continue in the service of the respondent until attaining the age of 58, but on 22nd July 1965 while he was holding the post of Assistant Inspecting Commissioner, Income-tax he received a notice dated 15th July 1965 compulsorily retiring him from service with effect from 21st October 1965. He challenged the notice by filing a writ petition in Orissa High Court where he failed. In the appeal which was carried to the Supreme Court one of the contentions urged was that the notice retiring him compulsorily was invalid as the office memorandum on the strength of which it was issued did not have the force of a rule made under Art. 309 of the Constitution. This contention was based on para 8 of the memorandum which provided that "The amendment of the relevant rules covering the All India Services so as to make these orders applicable to the members of those services is being undertaken in consultation with the State Governments". This contention though expressly raised was negatived by the Supreme Court. After referring to the provisions contained in the main part of Art. 309 as well as the proviso thereto the Supreme Court observed thus:

"The rules so made by the President are effective subject to the provisions of any such Act. Paragraph 2 of the Office Memorandum in terms recites that "the President is pleased to direct that the age of compulsory retirement of Central servants should be 58 years," subject to certain exceptions. Paragraph 8 of the Memorandum merely re-states with particularity the true legal position which obtains under the proviso to Article 309. Nothing stated in that paragraph is capable of the construction that the Office Memorandum was not to be effective until Fundamental Rules were consequently amended. In fact, by Paragraph 7 the provisions of the Memorandum were given express effect from December 1, 1962."

It will thus appear clear from this decision of the Supreme Court that the age for compulsory retirement had been raised to 58 years subject to certain exceptions by means of office memorandum, which merely contained the President's directions that the age of compulsory retirement of Central Government servants should be 58 years subject to certain exceptions. It will also become clear that notwithstanding the fact that paragraph 8 of the Memorandum contemplated the necessary amendment of the relevant rules covering the All India Services so as to make these orders applicable to the members of those services being separately undertaken in consultation with the State Government, the operative part of the memorandum which was to be found in para 2 was regarded by the Supreme Court as having the force of rule made under Art. 309 of the Constitution, principally on the basis that para 2 which was operative contained specific direction of the President about raising of the retirement age and para 7 gave effect to that provision from 1st December, 1962. It would thus appear clear that the rule in this particular case which was regarded as a rule under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution had taken the form of office memorandum. Apart from this decision of the Supreme Court there are three Division Bench decisions of this Court in which though the rules or general principles governing the recruitment and service conditions of Government employees had taken the form of either a circular or a resolution, the instruments have been held as incorporating rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. Appeal No. 23 of 1960 (arising out of Suit No. 387 of 1953) which was decided on 10-8-1961 (Bom) by a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Chinnani, C. J. and Mody, J., dealt with a case of circular which was issued under the signature of the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay, on 9th December 1938 which contained provisions for transferring or suspending a Government servant during the pendency of a departmental enquiry of a serious charge against him. Similarly Spl. C. A. No. 845 of 1967 (Bom) (Guru Prasad Kapoor v. Commr. (Revenue), Aurangabad) which was decided on 23-3-1968 by a Division Bench consisting of Tarkunde and Nathwani, JJ. dealt with a case of resolution dated 30th July 1959 to which recruitment rules for the posts of Deputy Collectors were appended, while Misc. Petn. No. 549 of 1969 decided on 31-7-1972 (Bom) by Kantawala, J. (as he then was) and Kania, J. dealt with a case concerning recruitment rules and seniority, principles which had been issued in the form of two resolutions dated 28-7-1954 and 29-7-1963 respectively. In all these three cases though the rules or general principles touching recruitment or service conditions of Government employees had taken the form of a Circular or Resolution, these have been regarded and have been held to amount to rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309. In our view, therefore, the aforesaid decisions make the position quite clear that no particular form is necessary in which a rule under the proviso to Art. 309 should be framed and the rules governing recruitment and service conditions framed under the proviso to Art. 309 can take any form of either a letter or a Memorandum or a Circular or an Order or a Resolution and it is not necessary that these should be styled as Rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution.

22. As regards formality or procedure indicated in Rule 9 of the Maharashtra Government Rules of Business read with second schedule thereto, compliance whereof was urged as a necessity the question will have to be considered whether the Business Rules framed by the Government of Maharashtra under clauses 2 and 3 of Art. 166 of the Constitution are mandatory or directory and how far compliance of the relevant rule on which reliance has been placed by counsel for the petitioners could be regarded as mandatory having regard to the fact that no particular procedure as such has been prescribed by the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution itself. We have already indicated above that so far as Art. 309 is concerned, the proviso thereunder does not prescribe or indicate any particular procedure that is required to be gone through before any rule could be framed thereunder. It is true that under Rule 9 of the Maharashtra Government Rules of Business it has been provided that all cases referred to in the Second Schedule shall be brought before the Council of Ministers in one or the other manner indicated in that rule and item (3) of the Second Schedule in terms refers to proposal for making or amending the rules regulating the recruitment and the conditions of service of persons appointed to the Public Service and posts in connection with the State (Proviso to Art. 309). In other words, ordinarily having regard to this provision, any proposal for making or amending the rules regulating the recruitment and service conditions of persons appointed to the public service and posts in connection with the State is required to be made and brought before the Council of Ministers. If regard be had to item No. 12 in the Second Schedule also it will appear clear that ordinarily even the proposals for legislation including the issuance of an Ordinance under Art. 213 of the Constitution—which item pertains to the domain of legislative field of the Governor—the same is required to be brought before the Council of Ministers under Rule 9. The question is what is the true legal effect of these Business Rules which have been framed by the State Government in exercise of the powers conferred by clauses 2 and 3 of Art. 166 of the Constitution? In our view, these Business Rules will have to be regarded as directory. At the outset it could be stated that cl. 3 of Art. 166 of the Constitution in terms provides that the Business Rules which are to be made by the Governor for regulating the conduct of business of the Government of a State are intended for “the more convenient transaction of the business of the Government of the State” and these Rules also provide for the “allocation among Ministers of the said business in so far as it is not business with respect to which the Governor is by or under this Constitution required to act in his discretion”. It will thus appear clear that these Business Rules are intended for the more convenient transaction of the business of the Government and therefore ordinarily it will be difficult to take the view that these Business Rules framed under clauses (2) and (3) of Art. 166 of the Constitution are of a mandatory nature. The question as to whether the provisions of Art. 166 itself are mandatory or directory in character and the further question as to whether the rules framed thereunder can be regarded as mandatory or directory have come up for consideration before the Courts on more than one occasion and the tenor of the judicial decisions appears to be that the provisions of Art. 166 of the Constitution are themselves directory in nature and so are the rules framed thereunder. Three or four decisions may be referred to in this connection; one of the Federal Court, two of the Supreme Court and the fourth one of the Calcutta High Court. In the case of J. K. Gas Plant Manufacturing Co. (Rampur) Ltd. v. Emperor reported in AIR 1947 FC 38 the Federal Court was concerned with similar Rules of Business that were made under Section 40 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935 read with Schedule 9 thereto. Head-note (b), which deals with Sch. 9 and Sec. 40 (1) of the Government of India Act, of the report runs as follows:

“Schedule 9, S. 40 (1) is not mandatory. It does not prescribe the manner and form in which orders of the Governor-General must be made in order to be valid. Hence an order of the Governor-General cannot be invalid merely because it is not expressed to be made by the Governor-General.”

One of the questions that was raised before the Federal Court was whether the Distribution Order that was made and approved by one member of the Council only and not by the Governor-General in Council at all will have to be regarded as invalid for non-compliance with the relevant Business Rules and this is what the Federal Court has observed in regard to this question:

“Some attempt was then made on behalf of the appellants to suggest that on some evidence tendered to the Tribunal by the Crown before the charges were framed, it might be deduced that the Distribution Order was made and approved by one Member of the Council only, and not by the Governor-General in Council at all and might therefore be invalid. In this connection reference was made to the Rules of Business made under the powers conferred on the Governor-General by sub-section (2) of Section 40 which purported to authorise such action by one Member of the Council, and, it was suggested that any such delegation of authority to one Member only was ultra vires. It was submitted that the only Rules of Business which were authorised by the sub-section were rules in respect of business actually transacted by Members of the Council when in Council assembled, emphasis being laid on the expression “business in his Executive Council”, and it was contended that no order could be made except at a meeting of the Council. In our judgment there is no substance in this point. We are of opinion that in sub-section (2) the phrase “business in his Executive Council” really means business of the Governor-General in Council, and that the sub-section gives authority for rules of business to be made for the more convenient transaction of such business. In the circumstances it is unnecessary for the Court to consider the alleged evidence on the point.”

In the case of State of U. P. v. Om Prakash Gupta reported in AIR 1970 SC 679 = (1970 Lab IC 568) the Supreme Court has observed that that Court had repeatedly held that the provisions of Article 166 (1) (2) (similar to sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 59 of the Government of India Act, 1935), are directory and substantial compliance with these provisions was sufficient. So far as sub-cl. (3) of Art. 166 of the Constitution is concerned, in the case of A. Sanjeevi Naidu v. State of Madras reported in AIR 1970 SC 1102 the Court has made the following observations:

"Under the Constitution, the Governor is essentially a constitutional head and the administration of State is run by the Council of Ministers. The Constitution has authorised the Governor under Article 166 (3) to make rules for the more convenient transaction of business of the Government of the State and for the allocation amongst its Ministers, the business of the Government. All matters excepting those in which Governor is required to act in his discretion have to be allocated to one or the other of the Ministers on the advice of the Chief Minister. Apart from allocating business among the Ministers, the Governor can also make rules on the advice of his Council of Ministers for more convenient transaction of business. He cannot only allocate the various subjects amongst the Ministers but may go further and designate a particular official to discharge any particular function."

The Court has also expressed the view that the cabinet is responsible to the Legislature for every action taken in any of the ministries and that is the essence of joint responsibility; that does not mean that each and every decision must be taken by the cabinet. Neither the Council of Ministers nor an individual Minister can attend to the numerous matters that come up before the Government. Those matters have to be attended to and decisions taken by various officials at various levels. When those officials discharge the functions allotted to them, they are doing so as limbs of the Government and not as persons to whom the power of the Government had been delegated. In the case of Arun Kumar Bhattacharjee v. State of West Bengal reported in AIR 1968 Cal 35 the statement of law with regard to Rules of Business has been enunciated by the Calcutta High Court thus:

"The rules of business have been made for the convenience of public business. The opening words of clause (3) of Article 166 make it clear that the rules of business are framed by the Governor for more convenient transaction of business of the Government of the State. These rules have not been framed, and indeed were not intended, to create or confer a right upon a public servant to come and apply for a writ under Article 226 of the Constitution for violation of these rules."

The aforesaid decisions make the position quite clear that the provisions of Art. 166 of the Constitution themselves are directory in nature and further that the rules framed by the Governor under cl. (3) of Art. 166 must be regarded as rules having been framed for more convenient transaction of business of the Government and are directory in character and not mandatory and any non-compliance thereof would be a mere procedural defect but would not confer any right upon any citizen to approach the Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution. We are not really concerned in this case with the question as to whether for any breach of the Business Rules any citizen can approach this Court by means of a writ or not, but we are merely concerned with the true nature or character of the Business Rules framed by the Governor under clauses (2) and (3) of Art. 166 and the aforesaid decisions clearly show that they are directory in nature or character. Since these Business Rules cannot be regarded as mandatory, it would not be possible to take the view that if any rules were framed by the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309 without strictly following the procedure prescribed by such Business Rules, the same will not be effective or not have the force of law or that any rule framed in violation of strict compliance with the formality prescribed by such Business Rules will not amount to a rule framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution; a substantial compliance therewith would be enough. It may be stated that the Division Bench of this Court consisting of Chainani, C. J. and Mody, J. in Appeal No. 23 of 1960 decided on 10-8-1961 (Bom) has in terms taken the view that no particular form nor any particular formality has been prescribed which is required to be gone through for the purpose of making a rule under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and the same view has been reiterated by a single Judge while disposing of Misc. Petn. No. 308 of 1967 decided on 19-9-1967 (Bom). In this last mentioned case (Misc. Petn. No. 308 of 1967 (Bom)) a specific contention was raised by the learned Advocate-General who appeared for the State of Maharashtra in that matter that no particular form for framing rules under Art. 309 of the Constitution had been prescribed by the Constitution or by any other law nor any formalities have been prescribed as being required to be gone through before any Rule framed by the Governor acting under that power becomes effective, which contention was accepted by the Court. Having regard to the aforesaid discussion, therefore, it is not possible to accept the contention urged by counsel for the petitioners before us that Rules or general principles embodying the recruitment rules or rules pertaining to service conditions of Government employees if they are to be regarded as rules under the proviso to Art. 309 they should always be in the form of Rules or be styled as 'Rules under Art. 309' or that any particular formality or procedure must be gone through before these could have the force of rules under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. We would, however, like to clarify here that neither before the Division Bench nor before us was any contention raised that any of the Circulars, Orders or Resolutions concerned in the case had been issued without following the procedure laid down by the Business Rules framed by the Governor under Art. 166 (3) of the Constitution and no one has gone into the question whether while issuing such Circulars, Orders or Resolutions there was or has been a substantial compliance with such procedure or not.

23. The last two aspects which have to be considered in the context of the principal question referred to us by the Division Bench are whether there should be express reference or statement in the Circular or Order or Resolution issued by the duly authorised officer that the instrument has been issued under the proviso to Art. 309 or that the rules or general principles contained therein have been framed in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309 and whether publication of such Circular, Order or Resolution in the Government Gazette is absolutely essential before the rules or general principles contained therein could have the force of rules framed under Art. 309 of the Constitution. Since some of the decided cases on which reliance was placed during the course of argument before us deal with both these aspects together we might also deal with and dispose of these aspects together.

24. On behalf of the petitioners it was specifically contended that one of the essential characteristics of a valid rule under the proviso to Art. 309 would be that not merely the rule must be made under or in exercise of the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution but the rule or the instrument containing the rule must expressly state that the same has been issued under or in exercise of the power conferred by the proviso to Art. 309. It was also contended by counsel for the petitioners that any such rule or the instrument containing rules must be published in the official gazette and unless both these requirements were satisfied the rule or instrument containing the rules could not be regarded as a valid rule or rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309. As a corollary to this contention it was further urged that any amendment to the rules which have been expressly made under the proviso to Art. 309 and have been published in the Gazette must also be made by another instrument which must follow the same procedure viz. that it must be expressly made under the proviso to Art. 309 and should be so published in the gazette. On the other hand, Mr. Gurusahani appearing for the State contended that so long as the letter, memorandum, Circular, Order or Government Resolution, whatever be the nature of the instrument, substantially deals with the subject-matter of recruitment and service conditions concerning Government employees and so long as such instrument is duly authenticated and signed by an authorised officer in the name of the Governor it would amount to making valid rules under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and that it is not necessary to mention or specify the source of the power therein, that is to say, it is not necessary to mention in the instrument itself that the same has been issued under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. On the question of publication it was fairly conceded by Mr. Gurusahani that unquestionably the rules or the instrument containing the rules must of necessity be published but it was not necessary that publication must be in the Official Gazette.

25. On behalf of the petitioners on the aspect of mentioning the source of power counsel placed strong reliance upon two decisions of the Supreme Court and on the aspect of publication reliance was placed upon one decision of Supreme Court, one of Andhra Pradesh High Court and the decision of the Division Bench of this Court consisting of Deshpande and Joshi, JJ. rendered in Spl. C. A. No. 815 of 1972 (Bom). In the case of B. N. Nagarajan v. State of Mysore reported in AIR 1966 SC 1942 the Supreme Court was dealing with Mysore Public Service Commission (Functions) Rules, 1957, particularly Rule 4 (1) thereof and the question was whether these particular rules were rules regarding recruitment to services under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. We have already referred to this case in another context and have pointed out that having regard to the subject-matter dealt with by those rules in question, the Supreme Court came to the conclusion that those rules really dealt with the functions of the Commission rather than laying down the rules regarding recruitment of service or posts and as such could not be regarded as rules having been framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. But counsel for the petitioners pointed out that there was yet another ground on which those rules were held as not being rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution and that ground was that those rules did not expressly say so. Dealing with that aspect raised before it this is what the Supreme Court has observed:

"The High Court held that there can be little doubt that to the extent the Rules deal with the topic of regulating recruitment to Civil Services under the State, the source of the power could only be the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. In our opinion, these rules are not rules made under Art. 309. First, the rules do not expressly say so, and secondly, the rules are dealing with the functions of the Commission rather than with laying down the rules regarding recruitment to services or posts."

Reference was also made to the decision of the Supreme Court in Prabhakar Yeshwant Joshi v. The State of Maharashtra, reported in 1969 (3) SCC 134 where in connection with a Government Resolution dated 29-4-1960 which set down the principles for recruitment to the Bombay Service of Engineers Class I and Class II the Court has made certain observations in para 12 of its judgment on which considerable emphasis was laid. Relying on these decisions counsel for the petitioners urged that a specific reference in the body of the instrument to the effect that the contents thereof have been issued under the proviso to Art. 309 would seem necessary before the rules or general principles contained in such instrument can amount to a rule under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. It is not possible to accept this submission for the simple reason that there is nothing indicated in the proviso to Art. 309 that while framing the rules thereunder any express reference must be made that these rules have been so framed under the said power. In our view, the fact that a specific or express reference has been made to the source of the power or absence thereof in the instrument containing the rules would undoubtedly be a relevant factor but that same cannot be regarded as decisive of the matter; the question would turn really upon whether the instrument substantially deals with the recruitment and other service conditions of Government employee and has been duly authenticated and promulgated and if that is so then the instrument will have to be regarded as containing rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution even in the absence of any express reference to the source of the power under which these have been framed and conversely even if there be an express reference to the source of power, such as the proviso to Art. 309, if the instrument in fact does not deal with the topic of recruitment and service conditions of Government employee, the instrument would not be regarded as containing rules under the proviso to Art. 309. In this context we may point out that in the case of State of Mysore v. Padmanabhacharya reported in AIR 1966 SC 602 though the particular notification dated 25-3-1959 with which the Court was concerned in that case expressly made a reference to the source of power under which the same had been issued, namely "In exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution of India....." even then, the Supreme Court took the view that the contents of that notification did not amount to any rule framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. What was purported to be done by the notification dated 25-3-1959 in that case was that certain persons who had been wrongly retired were treated to have been rightly retired and the Supreme Court took the view that this power of validating an order which was invalid when it was made did not flow from the power conferred on the Governor to make rules regulating recruitment and conditions of service of persons appointed to services and posts in connection with the affairs of the State. The Court went on to observe thus:

"It is certainly not a rule regulating recruitment of such persons; nor can it be said to be a rule regulating conditions of services of such persons. The rules relating to recruitment and conditions of service contemplated by the proviso to Art. 309 are general in operation, though they may be applied to a particular class of Government servants. But what this notification or rule does is to select certain Government servants who had been illegally required to retire and to say that even if the retirement had been illegal, that retirement should be deemed to have been properly and lawfully made. We are of opinion that such a declaration made by the Governor—and that is all that the notification or the rule does—cannot in any sense be regarded as a rule made under the proviso to Art. 309 governing the conditions of service of persons appointed to services and posts in connection with the affairs of the State. In this view of the matter it is not necessary to decide whether a rule of this kind which is purely retrospective could be made as a rule governing conditions of service of persons appointed in connection with the affairs of the State."

It will thus appear clear that in this decision though expressly and in terms the notification in question was said to have been issued "In exercise of the powers conferred by the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution", having regard to the contents of the notification the Court took the view that it was not a rule framed under the proviso to Art. 309. To the same effect is the decision of the Supreme Court in Dr. Thimmiah's case in AIR 1972 SC 1767 = (1972 Lab IC 618). The converse case is the one to which we have already made a reference earlier being E. Venkateswararao Naidu v. Union of India reported in AIR 1973 SC 698 = (1973 Lab IC 427), where, as we have already pointed out, the office memorandum which had been issued by the President was regarded as having the force of a rule framed under the proviso to Art. 309, notwithstanding the fact that there was no reference to the source of power, namely that the same has been issued under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. It seems to us clear, therefore, that the aspect whether the source of power viz. proviso to Art. 309 has been specifically referred to in the instrument in question though a relevant factor would not be a decisive factor to decide the question whether the contents of the instrument could be regarded as rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309.

26. Dealing next with the aspect of publication, counsel for the petitioners invited our attention to a decision of the Supreme Court in I. N. Saksena v. State of Madhya Pradesh reported in AIR 1967 SC 1264 and a decision of Andhra Pradesh High Court reported in AIR 1968 Andh Pra 350 = (1968 Lab IC 1393) (P. Radhakrishna v. State of Andhra Pradesh). In the former case the Court was concerned with a memorandum which had been issued by the Government of Madhya Pradesh addressed to all the Collectors and different departments which contained a decision of the Government raising the age of compulsory retirement to 58 years and on the question as to whether the memorandum itself amounted to a rule under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution, one of the grounds on which the Supreme Court took the view that the said memorandum could not amount to a rule under Art. 309 of the Constitution was that this memorandum had never been published in the gazette. It must however be mentioned that that was not the principal reason why the memorandum was not regarded as amounting to a rule framed under the proviso to Article 309. From the phraseology employed in the memorandum and the contents thereof the Court came to the conclusion that the phraseology and the contents thereof clearly indicated that the memorandum contained a decision of the Government, intimation of which was given to all the Collectors and different departments and what is more, it was stated in the memorandum that necessary amendments to the State Civil Service Regulations will be issued in due course. It was relying upon these factors taken cumulatively that the Court took the view that the memorandum did not amount to a rule framed under the proviso to Article 309. The other decision on which reliance was placed by counsel for the petitioners is a decision of Andhra Pradesh High Court in P. Radhakrishna v. State of Andhra Pradesh reported in AIR 1968 Andh Pra 350 = (1968 Lab IC 1393), where the Court has observed thus:

"In order to have a validly made rule under Article 309, the Governor and not the Government must first of all exercise the powers vested in him under Article 309 and make a rule regulating the recruitment etc. to the services and then publish the same in the official gazette or in any other prescribed manner for the purpose of informing the public."

There can be no doubt that since rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 touch the recruitment and service conditions of Government employees generally and since the power exercised by the President or the Governor as the case may be under the said provision is legislative in character, it is essential that there must be publication of the rules so framed under that power. But the question is whether it is absolutely essential that such rules must be published in the official gazette. Even the aforesaid decision of Andhra Pradesh High Court, on which reliance was placed by counsel for the petitioners, makes it clear that in order to have a validly made rule under Art. 309, the Governor must first of all exercise the powers vested in him under Art. 309 and made a rule regulating the recruitment, etc. to the services and then published the same in the official gazette or in other manner that may be prescribed for the purpose of informing the public. It is thus clear that publication could either be in the official gazette or in any other manner that may be prescribed. As we have stated above, the power which is conferred upon the President or the Governor under Art. 309 of the Constitution being legislative in character and the rules that are to be framed thereunder being tantamount to laws regulating recruitment and other service conditions of the Government employees in public services or posts which will have general applicability, the publication of such rules is absolutely essential, but, in our view, it will be too narrow a view to take that such publication must necessarily be in the official gazette. We may point out that there is nothing in the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution which prescribes this particular mode of publication in the official gazette nor has the counsel been able to draw our attention to any other provision of law which prescribes this particular mode of publication before the rules framed in exercise of that power become effective. That there should be publication of every act which is of legislative character cannot be gainsaid and this position in law has been clearly laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of Harla v. The State of Rajasthan reported in AIR 1951 SC 467. In that case the Court was concerned with a Resolution that was passed by Council of Ministers on 11-12-1923, whereby the Council purported to enact the Jaipur Opium Act and the question was whether the mere passing of the Resolution without due promulgation or publication of the measure was sufficient to make it law. In the context of that question the Supreme Court has made the following observations in para 8 of its judgment:

"We do not know what laws were operative in Jaipur regarding the coming into force of an enactment in that State. We were not shown any, nor was our attention drawn to any custom which could be said to govern the matter. In the absence of any special law or custom, we are of opinion that it would be against the principles of natural justice to permit the subjects of a State to be punished or penalised by laws of which they had no knowledge and of which they could not even with the exercise of reasonable diligence have acquired any knowledge. Natural justice requires that before a law can become operative it must be promulgated or published. It must be broadcast in some recognisable way so that all men may know what it is; or, at the very least, there must be some special rule or regulation or customary channel by or through which such knowledge can be acquired with the exercise of due and reasonable diligence. The thought that a decision reached in the secret recesses of a chamber to which the public have no access and to which even their accredited representatives have no access and of which they can normally know nothing, can nevertheless affect their lives, liberty and property by the mere passing of a Resolution without anything more is abhorrent to civilised man. It shocks his conscience. In the absence therefore of any law, rule, regulation or custom, we hold that a law cannot come into being in this way. Promulgation or publication of some reasonable sort is essential."

In view of the above observation there could be no doubt that even for the rules that are framed by the President or the Governor as the case may be under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution since the power is of legislative character and since the rules that are so framed are to affect Government employees in public services, it is absolutely essential that promulgation or publication of some reasonable sort of these rules would be essential. But as we have said above, there is no particular mode of publication prescribed either by the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution or by any other law on the subject. It is unquestionably necessary that there should be some publication in the sense that the rules so framed, whatever form they take, say a letter, memorandum, Circular, Order or Resolution, must be made known to all the persons who are likely to be affected thereby and such persons must have access to these rules or to these instruments; in that sense promulgation or publication of rules is undoubtedly essential. But there is no requirement that publication should be in a particular manner viz. by publication in the official gazette.

27. A brief reference may now be made to the three Division Bench decisions of this Court, where both these aspects were canvassed and the Division Benches have taken the view that specific reference to the source of power was not essential and that publication in the official gazette was also not regarded as an essential aspect. The first of the decisions in which the question arose was Appeal No. 23 of 1960 which was decided by Chief Justice Chainani and Mody, J. on 10-8-1961 (Bom). As stated earlier, that was a case which dealt with the question as to whether Circular dated 9-12-1938 which provided for transfer of a Government servant and his suspension during departmental enquiry on a serious charge could be regarded as a rule framed under the relevant provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935 and continued under Art. 313 of the Constitution or not. A specific contention was raised on behalf of the plaintiff that this particular Circular contained executive instructions issued by the Government, that it did not have the force of a rule and that consequently it did not continue in force after the coming into force of the Constitution under Art. 313 of the Constitution. Repelling that contention the Division Bench observed thus:

"The circular affects conditions of service. It contains general directions which all Government servants under the control of the Government of Bombay had to follow. It was also issued by order of the Governor of Bombay, who was the authority competent to make rules in this behalf. No other formality was required for making a rule on this subject. Although, therefore, the circular is not issued in the form of a rule, as it affects conditions of service of all persons serving in connection with the affairs of the Bombay Province and as it was issued by the authority competent to make rules in this behalf, it can, in our opinion, be regarded as rule. If it is so regarded, as we think it should be, it continued to remain in force under Article 313 of the Constitution."

28. In Spl. C. A. No. 845 of 1967 which was decided on 23-3-1968 (Bom) by Tarkunde and Nathwani, JJ, the Court was concerned with a Resolution dated 30th July 1959 to which recruitment rules to the posts of Deputy Collectors were appended and the said Resolution was issued by order and in the name of the Governor of Bombay and the same could have been issued only under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution which was the only provision under which the Governor of Bombay could have issued the rules appended to the Resolution. A specific contention was raised before the Division Bench that there was no reference to Art. 309 of the Constitution either in the Resolution or the rules and that neither the Resolution nor the rules were published in the Government gazette, and, therefore, the Resolution together with its annexure did not amount to any rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309. Reliance was placed in support of the contention upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Saksena's case (AIR 1967 SC 1264). The Division Bench distinguished the Supreme Court decision in Saksena's case on two or three grounds. It was pointed out that in Saksena's case the Court was concerned with the Memorandum which was issued by the Government of Madhya Pradesh to all the Collectors in the State and which raised the age of compulsory retirement of Government servants to 58 years, that is to say, the memorandum had been issued in the form of a letter and not in the form of rules, whereas in the case before the Division Bench they were concerned with a Resolution to which were appended the regular rules which were designed to regulate recruitment to the posts of Deputy Collectors. Secondly it was pointed out that before the Supreme Court Memorandum itself announced that necessary amendments to the State Civil Services Regulations would be 'issued in due course' and the memorandum was subsequently followed by a Notification issued expressly in exercise of the power conferred by the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution, which notification did not contain one of the clauses included in the Memorandum while in the case before it there was no subsequent Notification under Art. 309 of the Constitution but the Resolution dated 30-7-1959 itself directed that the Political and Services Department should 'issue necessary correction slips to the Bombay Civil Services Classification and Recruitment Rules'. After pointing out these features of distinction the Division Bench proceeded to observe thus:

"Since the Political and Services Department was competent to make any rule under Article 309 of the Constitution, this provision in the Resolution clearly meant that the Resolution by itself had brought about the necessary amendments in the Bombay Civil Services Classification and Recruitment Rules."

In another part of the judgment after referring to the Division Bench judgment in Appeal No. 23 of 1960 (Bom) the Court observed as under:

"For similar reasons we are of the view that the Resolution and Recruitment Rules of 30th July 1959 were statutory rules under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution, although no express reference to Article 309 has been made therein." The Court went on to observe further thus:

"Although, in our view, the said Resolution and recruitment rules do not cease to have statutory force on the grounds urged by Mr. Singhavi, it appears to us desirable to emphasise that such rules should normally be issued expressly under the proviso to Article 309 and should also be published in the Government Gazette. Mention of the proviso to Article 309 would make it easy to distinguish such rules from administrative instructions. Moreover, these rules have the force of law, and it is obviously necessary that those who are governed by the law should have the means of knowing what the law is. In the present case the petitioner and his legal advisers, for no fault of theirs, were unaware of many of the Government Resolutions which regulated the petitioner's conditions of service, including his right to promotion to the post of Deputy Collector. The first affidavit filed on behalf of the State Government did not also refer to some of the Resolutions which had a direct bearing on the issues arising in this case. We shall have to take these facts into consideration in deciding what order should be made as to the costs of this petition."

It would thus appear from what has been quoted above, that the Division Bench was clearly of the view that neither a specific reference to source of power was regarded as absolutely essential nor was a publication thereof in the official gazette absolutely essential but it was highly desirable that normally such rules should be issued expressly under the proviso to Art. 309 and should also be published in the Government Gazette. In other words, these aspects were regarded by the Division Bench as highly desirable but they did not affect the question of validity of the rules or the fact that the rules had been framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. The third decision of the Division Bench in Misc. Petn. No. 549 of 1969 rendered by Kantawala, J. (as he then was) and Kania, J. on 31-7-1972 (Bom) dealt with a case of recruitment rules and seniority principles which were contained in two Resolutions, one dated 28-7-1954 and the other dated 29-7-1963 respectively and a specific contention was raised that these recruitment rules and seniority principles which had been issued in the form of two Government Resolutions were not statutory rules at all but were mere administrative instructions and the same could not be treated as binding as the same were in conflict with Bombay Civil Services Rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. A two-fold contention was specifically urged that both in the case of recruitment rules and seniority principles there was no statement made in the Resolutions dated 28-7-1954 and 29-7-1963 respectively to the effect that these rules or principles had been framed in exercise of the power conferred on the Governor under Art. 309 of the Constitution and further these rules and principles had not been published in the official gazette. Relying upon the relevant portions of the judgments in the two cases (Appeal No. 23 of 1960 (Bom) and Spl. C. A. No. 845 of 1967 (Bom)) the Division Bench negated the contention and concluded thus:

"In view of these decisions and the reasons given by us above, we are of the view that both the Recruitment Rules and the Seniority Principles in paragraph A referred to above are statutory rules framed in exercise of the power conferred under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution, notwithstanding the fact that there is no express statement in the respective resolutions that these were framed in exercise of the powers conferred under Article 309 or the proviso thereto and notwithstanding the fact the same have not been published in the official gazette."

To the similar effect are the two judgments of single Judges, one in Misc. Petn. No. 308 of 1967 decided on 19-9-1967 (Bom) and the other in Misc. Petn. No. 672 of 1968 which was decided on 13-11-1973 (Bom). It is not necessary for us to refer to these two decisions of the single Judges in great detail as it would suffice to say that in both these matters each learned single Judge has followed the view taken in the judgment delivered by the Division Bench in Appeal No. 23 of 1960 (Bom).

29. Reference may now be made to the decision of the Division Bench, which, as said above, has taken a contrary view, namely that delivered by Deshpande and Joshi JJ. in Spl. C. A. No. 815 of 1972 decided on 15-1-1974 (Bom). The Court in that case was concerned with rules that were framed under Government Resolution dated 21-11-1941 which were referred to in the judgment as the 1941 Rules, under Government Resolution dated 29-4-1960 which were referred to in the judgment as the 1960 Rules and under Government Resolution dated 29-7-1963 which were referred to in the judgment as the 1963 Rules and the contention was that these Rules — the 1941 Rules, the 1960 Rules and the 1963 Rules—were in the nature of executive instructions and not statutory rules framed by the Governor in exercise of the power conferred under Art. 309 of the Constitution. It does appear that that contention was accepted and since even the 1963 Rules were held to be executive instructions, the decision comes in apparent conflict with the view taken by the Division Bench consisting of Kantawala, J. (as he then was) and Kania, J. in Misc. Petn. No. 549 of 1969 (Bom), where the very 1963 Rules had been held to be statutory rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution. The finding that the 1963 Rules which were issued in the form of Government Resolution dated 29-7-1963 amount to pure executive instructions is to be found in the following observations made by Deshpande and Joshi, JJ.:

"..... Unlike the temporary incumbents of the posts in the cadre of Deputy Engineers, direct recruits get vested right not only to the posts with reference to which the appointments were made but also to the place in seniority list prepared in terms of Rule 8 (iii) (of 1960 Rules). This process thus involves even affecting the vested rights of the direct recruits appointed before 29-7-1963. Such divesting could not be done by such executive Fiat (viz. Resolution of 29th July 1963). This obviously leads to an inference that 1963 Rules were never intended to be applied to the Engineering Services and provision in clause (B) was made in the opening paragraph of the said 1963 Rules to make this clear."

It does appear that by adopting the aforesaid process of reasoning the Division Bench consisting of Deshpande and Joshi, JJ. could be said to have taken the view that so far as the 1963 Rules which were issued under the Government Resolution of 29th July 1963 amounted to mere executive instructions and the very Rules have been held to amount to Rules framed under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution by the Division Bench consisting of Kantawala and Kania, JJ. in Misc. Petn. No. 549 of 1969 (Bom) and it was precisely because of this conflict that the matter was referred to the Full Bench by the Division Bench. However, if regard is had to certain other passages which occur in that judgment it would appear clear that the particular view was taken on the basis of certain concession made by counsel appearing for both the parties before that Bench and the point also does not seem to have been argued seriously by counsel for respondents Nos. 2 and 3. These aspects would become clear if paragraph 5 of the judgment is carefully analysed. The material portion of paragraph 5 of the judgment runs as follows:

"Before we proceed to examine the contentions of the learned advocates advanced before us, it will be convenient to mention that it was not disputed by the learned advocates before us that 1941 Rules, 1960 Rules, 1963 Rules or for that matter 1970 Rules are in the nature of executive instructions and not the statutory rules or rules framed by the Governor in exercise of the powers under Article 309 of the Constitution. A faint attempt was made by Mr. Paranjpe, learned advocate for respondents Nos. 2 and 3 to suggest that 1960 Rules and 1970 Rules can be said to have been framed by the Governor under Article 309 of the Constitution. He relied on the recitals in both the rules at the fag-end of the text, indicating that the same have been issued by the order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra. The contention on the face of it is devoid of any substance inasmuch as all executive orders are required to be issued in that form in compliance with the Article 166 of the Constitution. We shall, therefore, have to proceed on the basis that all these rules are in the nature of mere executive instructions. It was also not disputed that while the conditions of service of the Government employees can be altered unilaterally retrospectively by competent legislative measures, the above Government Resolutions under consideration being merely executive instructions cannot have any retrospective effect whatsoever."

The aforesaid passage which occurs in para 5 of the judgment really brings out two or three aspects very clearly. In the first place, it will appear clear that before the Division Bench no serious dispute was raised by learned advocates who appeared before them that the 1941 Rules, the 1960 Rules, the 1963 Rules and for that matter the 1970 Rules should not be regarded as executive instructions but statutory rules framed by the Governor in exercise of the power conferred by Art. 309 of the Constitution and the Division Bench proceeded to consider the matter before it on the assumption that all these Rules were in the nature of mere executive instructions. Secondly there was a faint attempt made by Mr. Paranjpe, learned advocate who appeared for respondents Nos. 2 and 3 to suggest that 1960 Rules and 1970 Rules could be said to have been framed by the Governor under Art. 309 of the Constitution, but the point does not seem to have been pressed before the Bench. Thirdly even this faint argument was sought to be canvassed on the mere aspect that these Resolutions contained statutory rules under Art. 309 because of the endorsements found at the foot of each of the Government Resolutions to the effect that each had been issued 'by order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra'. In our view, the argument was rightly rejected by the Division Bench, inasmuch as, the mere presence of such endorsement, as pointed out by us earlier, would be equivocal and of no consequence. It will thus appear clear that no other aspect was pressed into service and the question whether the several Rules viz. the 1940 Rules, the 1960 Rules, the 1963 Rules or the 1970 Rules had been really framed by the Governor under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution or not was concluded by concession made by counsel for the parties and the entire matter was dealt with on the assumption that these were in the nature of executive instructions. Moreover, it is also clear from the entire judgment that none of the earlier Division Bench judgments was cited before that Bench. In any case so far as the 1963 Rules are concerned, which were issued under the Government Resolution dated 29-7-1963, we agree with the finding recorded by the Division Bench which disposed of Misc. Petn. No. 549 of 1969 (Bom) that these are the Rules framed under the proviso to Art. 309.

30. The only thing that remains is to deal with the observations of the Supreme Court in P. Y. Joshi's case. Strong reliance was placed by counsel for the petitioners on the observations made by the Court in para 12 of the judgment at page 144 of the report (1969 (3) SCC 134) which run as follows:

"We cannot, therefore, accept the contention of Shri Gupte that a promotee officiating Deputy Engineer Class II is not entitled to be considered for promotion under Rule 7 to the post of an officiating Executive Engineer unless he has put in 7 years of service from the date of confirmation. On the other hand, the subsequent resolution of the Government of 1963 makes it abundantly clear that the seniority of promotees should be considered as from the date of promotion to officiate continuously irrespective of whether the appointments are made in temporary or permanent vacancies. It is no doubt submitted that this does not have the force of rules and cannot therefore have the effect of amending the Rules of 1960. As we have already held on an interpretation of the Rules of 1960 that they do not support the contention of the petitioners, the question whether the resolution has the force of rules may not be relevant in this context, but nonetheless in our view, there is force in the contention of Shri Kumaramangalam, learned Advocate for the respondents, that even the 1960 Rules have no statutory force and are no better than the executive instructions issued from time to time by means of resolutions. It may be observed that the rules referred to are part of the resolution of 1960. The resolution itself lays down the principles and in the end formulates those principles in terms of rules, which however are not purported to be made under any provision of law or even under Article 309. There also is nothing to indicate that the procedure and formalities required for making rules have been gone through."

We may point out that the aforesaid decision has been referred to by the Division Bench of this Court while disposing of Misc. Petn. No. 549 of 1969 (Bom) and with regard to those observations it has been pointed out by that Bench that "All that has been observed by their Lordships of the Supreme Court is that there is force in the contention that even the 1960 Rules have no statutory force and are no better than the executive instructions. This cannot be looked upon as a decision of the Supreme Court or even as obiter dicta of the Supreme Court" and that the same was regarded as merely a passing observation made in the context of contention that was urged by Shri Kumaramangalam, learned advocate for the respondents before the Supreme Court. The observations themselves clearly indicate that the Court had already held on an interpretation of the rules of 1960 that they did not support the contention of the petitioners and therefore the question whether the resolution had the force of rules was not relevant in that context. In that situation the observations will have to be regarded as casual or passing observations made by the Supreme Court.

31-32. Having regard to the above discussion, our answer to the first question referred to us would be as follows:

Circulars, Orders or Resolutions or parts thereof laying down the rules or principles of general application, which have to be observed in the recruitment or fixation of seniority of Government servants generally or a particular class of them, and which have been duly authenticated by a signature under the endorsement "By order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra" and intended to be applicable straightway can amount to rules framed in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Art. 309 of the Constitution, although the said Circulars, Orders or Resolutions do not expressly state that the same are made or issued in exercise of the powers conferred under the proviso to Article 309 of the Constitution of India and are not published in the Government Gazette.

33. In view of the aforesaid answer to Question No. 1, in our view, questions Nos. 2 and 3 do not arise and accordingly they are not answered.

34. Costs to be costs in the petitions and would be dealt with by the Division Bench, Order accordingly.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 220

DESHPANDE AND JOSHI, JJ.

S. R. B. Gaikwad, Petitioner v. The Union of India and others, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 218 of 1976, D/- 23-7-1976.*

Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act (1971), S. 2 (e) — 'Public premises' — Lease in favour of Central Government determined and Central Government becoming statutory tenant under Bombay Rent Act, 1947 — Premises do not cease to be 'public premises'. (Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 12).

Even where the lease in favour of the Central Government is determined and the Central Government becomes a statutory tenant under the Bombay Rent Act, 1947 the premises do not cease to be public premises within the meaning of S. 2 (e). The Act is not so much concerned with the title as with the possessory rights vested in the Central Government, and S. 2 (e) only indicates the sources by which such right to possession can be acquired, one such being, the taking of the premises on lease from its owner. The definition thus is descriptive of the source or origin of the possessory rights acquired by the Central Government. It is the continuance of the vesting of this possessory right in Government and not so much the origin thereof, that makes any premises, a public premises under the Act. The contract of lease, no doubt, gives rise to the estate and interest of the lessee in the property, bare right to possession being only a part of such estate and interest. The determination of the lease, no doubt, puts an end to the contract and such interest and the estate. However, provisions of the Bombay Rent Act afford some protection to the tenants against eviction and prevents such determination of lease from having its full effect. In spite of the determination of the lease and incapacity of the tenant and the landlord to enforce the terms of the contract, the ex-tenant actually happens to enjoy still, what once was the fruit and the product of the same contractual lease. In other words, the entire interest covered by the possessory right created by the contract does not come to an end with the determination of the lease but part of it, at any rate, i.e., the bare right to remain in possession still survives and is protected by the Rent Act. The right to possession acquired by the Central Government under the lease on taking the same on lease, thus continues to exist and is protected, though the lease interest and the estate comes to an end. The premises do not cease to have been "taken on lease" as the phraseology is merely descriptive of how the possessory right originated. The loss of contractual security, and the substitution thereof by the cover of the protection under the Rent Act does not affect, at any rate, the kernel, i.e. the possessory right which also was the creature of the contractual lease. It is difficult to see how the premises cease to be public premises when in spite of the determination of the lease, possessory right created thereunder continues to be vested in the Government. S. C. Chagla with M. N. Kothari, M. J. Bhatia and P. K. Pandit, for Petitioner; M. V. Paranjpe with L. J. Manjrekar and J. H. Parekh, for Opponents Nos. 1 & 2.

DESHPANDE, J.:— The building in which flat No. 8 is located and several other buildings once belonged to Messrs. Colaba Land and Mill Company Ltd. This flat and several other flats were obtained on lease by the Governor General in Council under a written agreement dated 21st June, 1944. The Garrison Engineer of the Defence Department is treated as the tenant on behalf of the Governor General. The Colaba Land and Mill Company Limited went into liquidation and the buildings were purchased in or about 1966 by a Housing Co-operative Society formed by the tenants of the flats therein under the name and style of Colaba Land Co-operative Housing Society Ltd., hereinafter referred to as 'the Society', from the Official Liquidator with the sanction of this Court. The Society had offered for sale all the flats to the Central Government held by it as tenant, in the same manner as were purchased by the other tenants by becoming a member of the Society and purchasing such shares as would justify member's occupation of the flats as such members. The Government, however, declined the offer, making it clear that sale of the building to the Society would be subject to the tenancy rights held by it. While sanctioning the sale, the High Court also confirmed the tenancy rights of the Government in all these flats.

2. The petitioner was serving in the Army and as such public servant, the flat No. 8 in dispute was allotted to him on 8-8-1966. The petitioner was due to retire on 17-4-1967. He was, however, re-employed on 18-4-1967 for a further period of three years. In the meanwhile, the petitioner and his wife made an application for membership of the Society by reference to this very flat of which he was in possession as the allottee from the Government, on 16-9-1966. Their membership was accepted on 1-7-1967 and this very flat was allotted by the Society to the petitioner and his wife on 21-7-1967 notwithstanding the purchase of the buildings by it being subject to the tenancy rights of the Government in the flats held by it and the said flat was neither surrendered by the petitioner to the Government nor could it be surrendered by the Government to the Society. It is not in dispute that the rent of this flat along with the rent of several other flats continued to be sent by the Garrison Engineer to the Society every month and the Society is receiving the same subject to its objections made clear in the correspondence.

3. On 20-10-1967 the petitioner applied to the Army Head Quarters for de-hiring the flat, i.e. giving up its tenancy rights therein. On 12-7-1968 the petitioner was called upon in this connection to give a certificate that he would not ask for re-employment. This requisition seems to have been made in accordance with the then policy to consider de-hiring the flats, in cases of those who had retired and were not to be re-employed again. The petitioner furnished the said certificate on 17-7-1968. He also seems to have resigned earlier, which resignation became effective from 24-7-1968. It would have been necessary for him to vacate the flat on his resignation becoming so effective. The Army Head Quarters on 9-10-1968, however, directed staying of eviction proceedings pending disposal of his de-hiring application.

4. In the meanwhile, a policy decision seems to have been taken by the Army Head Quarters not to de-hire such flats in view of the deficiency in the accommodation for the service personnel. This policy decision was communicated to all employees concerned and given wide publicity by a Circular letter dated 31st October, 1969. By letter dated 14th January, 1970, allotment of the flat to the petitioner was cancelled with effect from 1st November, 1968, making specific reference to this Circular. The petitioner was called upon to vacate the accommodation forthwith. Presumably apprehending all this, a few days earlier, on 16-3-1970, the Society, as the owner of buildings and the petitioner and his wife issued a notice terminating the tenancy of respondent No. 1 in regard to the flat in dispute.

5. The Estate Officer seems to have been moved to issue a show cause notice dated 20th January, 1970 calling upon the petitioner why order of eviction should not be passed against him under the provisions of the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act of 1958, as it then stood. The petitioner seems to have appeared before the Estate Officer on 10th June, 1970. According to him, the proceedings were adjourned sine die because of the pendency of his application for de-hiring.

6. In the meanwhile, the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act of 1971, hereinafter referred to as 'the Act', was enforced repealing the 1958 Act and another Estate Officer was appointed. On 2-1-1971, a fresh show cause notice was issued by the Estate Officer under the provisions of the Act. The petitioner appeared before him and showed the cause. The Estate Officer then passed an order of eviction on 1-3-1972. His appeal to the principal Judge of the City Civil Court was dismissed on 21-11-1975. The validity and legality of this order is assailed in this application under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

7. Mr. Chagla, the learned advocate appearing for the petitioner, contends that the eviction order is without any jurisdiction inasmuch as the premises in dispute ceased to be "public premises" since determination of the lease by notice dated 16th March, 1970. It was not disputed before us that on that date the Society, the petitioner and his wife, did terminate the lease of respondent No. 1 and the contents of the said notice did comply with the provisions of S. 106 of the T. P. Act. Even if the competency of the petitioner and his wife to terminate the lease is disputed, the competency of the Society to terminate the lease is beyond controversy inasmuch as the Society admittedly had purchased the property from the Official Liquidator after the original owner Company went into liquidation.

8. Mr. Paranjape, the learned advocate appearing for respondent No. 1, however, contended that under the terms of the lease dated 21st June, 1944, the landlord did not have any right to terminate the lease at all and in terms of Cl. 5 thereof the tenant alone is competent to so terminate the lease. It was not disputed before us that the said lease deed dated 21st June, 1944, is not a registered document. If the lease deed is construed as disabling the landlord and enabling the tenant alone to terminate the lease, the lease would turn out to be a lease for indefinite period. Such a lease deed is liable to be registered under S. 17 of the Registration Act. The lease deed then shall have to be adjudged as being inadmissible in evidence on this ground.

Once the lease deed is excluded from consideration, the tenancy shall be deemed to have been a month to month tenancy, liable to be determined by a notice as contemplated under S. 106 of the T. P. Act. That the Government was the tenant of the premises and was paying rent as such tenant till the tenancy was determined by the notice dated 16-3-1970 is not disputed before us. In view of this, Mr. Paranjape's contention is liable to be rejected. We shall, therefore, have to proceed on the basis that the tenancy of the Government has been validly terminated by the notice dated 16-3-1970. Even so, the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, hereinafter referred to as 'the Rent Act,' protects the tenancy of the Government, as the application of this Act to the premises in dispute is not disputed before us.

9. Mr. Chagla, however, contends that the premises in dispute having been taken on lease by the Government, the premises cease to be such public premises with the determination of the contractual lease, within the meaning of S. 2 (e) of the Act. According to Mr. Chagla, if the premises cease to be public premises as defined under the Act, the Estate Officer can claim no authority to issue the show cause notice dated 2-1-1971 or pass the order dated 1-3-1972. The contention, no doubt, is attractive and apparently plausible.

10. Section 2 (e) of the Act, stripped of the unnecessary details is as follows:

" 'Public Premises' means any premises belonging to or taken on lease or requisitioned by, or on behalf of, the Central Government,

xx xx xx"

The enactment, as indicated in the preamble, is intended to provide for the eviction of unauthorised occupants from public premises and for certain incidental matters. The enactment is not so much concerned with the title as with the possessory rights vested in the Central Government, and S. 2 (e) only indicates the sources by which such right to possession can be acquired, one such being, the taking of the premises on lease from its owner. The definition thus is descriptive of the source or origin of the possessory rights acquired by the Central Government. It is the continuance of the vesting of this possessory right in Government and not so much more the origin thereof, that makes any premises, a public premises under the Act. The Act provides for a summary remedy against the unauthorised occupants, to ensure unobstructed and undisturbed possession of the premises by the Government, for the purposes for which the possessory rights are acquired and through such persons whose possession is conducive to and in keeping with the object of such acquisition. The special summary procedure is justified by the 'public interest' involved therein. This summary remedy is integrally connected with the mode of enjoyment of such possessory rights by the Government and is indispensable part thereof. The enactment is thus aimed at ensuring the continuance of the possessory rights acquired through the modes indicated in the definition clause.

11. The contract of lease, no doubt, gives rise to the estate and interest of the lessee in the property, bare right to possession being only a part of such estate and interest. The determination of the lease, no doubt, puts an end to the contract and such interest and the estate. That must be the necessary consequence and effect of such notice under S. 106 read with S. 111 of the T. P. Act. However, provisions of the Rent Act afford some protection to the tenants against eviction and prevents such determination of lease from having its full effect. Reference in this context can conveniently be made to sub-s. (1) of S. 12 of the Rent Act.

"A landlord shall not be entitled to the recovery of possession of any premises so long as the tenant pays, or is ready and willing to pay, the amount of the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and observes and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of this Act."

12. Now, it is well settled that the provisions of this section come into operation as soon as the notice determining the contractual tenancy becomes effective and not till then. Even the liability of the tenant to eviction under the Act does not arise till such lease is terminated first and the statutory tenant does or omits to do something justifying eviction under the Rent Act. This is the ratio of the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of Punjalal v. Bhagwatprasad, AIR 1963 SC 120 on which reliance was placed by Mr. Chagla. The section introduces certain fetters on the right of the landlord to recover possession and affords an immunity from eviction, to which the landlord otherwise gets entitled on determination of the contractual lease. This immunity, however, is dependant (1) on the tenant being ready and willing to pay standard rent and permitted increases, and (2) on observance and performance of conditions of the tenancy, in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of the said Act. There cannot be any quarrel with the contention of Mr. Chagla that, with the determination of the original contractual lease, the status of irremovability of the tenant as also his obligation to comply with the terms of the lease is entirely the creature of the statute; and contract ceases to have any operation thereafter. It is in this sense that the tenant ceases to be a contractual tenant and assumes the character of what is in common parlance described as a statutory tenant.

13. Notwithstanding all this, what requires to be noticed is that, the protected possessory right or interest, was once the creature of the contractual lease. In spite of the determination of such lease and incapacity of the tenant and the landlord to enforce the terms of the contract, the ex-tenant actually happens to enjoy still, what once was the fruit and the product of the same contractual lease. In other words, the entire interest covered by the possessory right created by the contract does not come to an end with the determination of the lease but part of it, at any rate, i.e. the bare right to remain in possession still survives and is protected by the statute. The right to possession acquired by the Central Government under the lease on taking the same on lease, thus continues to exist and is protected, though his lease interest and the estate comes to an end. The premises do not cease to have been "taken on lease" as the phraseology is merely descriptive of how the possessory right originated. The loss of contractual security, and the substitution thereof by the cover of the statutory protection, does not affect, at any rate, the kernel, i.e. the possessory right which also was the creature of the contractual lease. It is difficult to see how the premises cease to be public premises when in spite of the determination of the lease, possessory right created thereunder continues to be vested in the Government. As discussed earlier, the Act deals with possessory rights of the Government. The Rent Act prevents divesting the Government of these rights even after the end of the contract. In essence and even in a literal sense the premises still continue to be 'public premises'. Determination of contractual lease is one thing. Destruction of the entire interest created thereby is quite another thing. The determination of the lease ordinarily results in the end of all the interest and rights created by the lease. But continuance of the same or part thereof can be ensured by other modes also. In the present case, continuance of the possessory rights created by contract is ensured by the statute. This statutory protection may not cover the estate and entire extent of interest covered by the contractual lease. Surviving possessory rights, however, still happen to be the part and residue of the same interests. Notwithstanding the determination of the lease, possessory rights therein continue to be held by the tenant and protected by the statute. Holding of this possessory rights even in their limited extent by the Government, in our opinion, is enough to ensure the continuance of the premises as "public premises" within the meaning of S. 2 (e) of the Act.

14. Mr. Chagla strongly relied on the judgment of the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas (P.) Ltd. v. Anandji, AIR 1965 SC 414. Sometime after the expiration of the lease period of five years, the landlord instituted proceedings for possession under the Rent Act against the tenant Maneklal who had by that time become a statutory tenant, on expiry of the lease. A decree for possession was passed against him. During the pendency of the eviction proceedings Maneklal induced the appellant, Anand Nivas (Private) Limited, in a portion of the premises as his sub-tenant. The decree was executed against the portion occupied by the tenant. The appellant, however, resisted the execution of the decree in regard to the portion in its occupation by instituting a suit, claiming to be original sub-tenant and having become tenant on the determination of the tenancy of Maneklal. The controversy reached the Supreme Court at the interlocutory stage of interim relief for injunction. All the courts declined to grant injunction. The Supreme Court held (1) that even though the lease authorised the tenant Maneklal to sub-lease, the tenant ceased to have any such power to sub-let, after the contractual lease had expired, and (2) the Supreme Court also further held that even the amended S. 15 of the Rent Act cannot clothe such statutory tenant with right to sub-let as the word "tenant" in Ss. 14 and 15 is intended to cover contractual tenant as against its connotation in S. 12 dealing with statutory tenants and S. 13 (e) cannot have the effect of altering the import of the said word in S. 14 or 15. The two English cases and one Calcutta case, on which reliance was placed, were distinguished on the basis of the wording of the concerned provisions which enabled even the statutory tenant to sub-lease.

15. We are not concerned in the present case with any such point and the case is clearly distinguishable. Strong reliance, however, was placed on the following extracts from para. 27 of the judgment in reference to S. 12 of the Rent Act:

(1) "A person remaining in occupation of the premises let to him after the determination of or expiry of the period of the tenancy is commonly though in law not accurately, called a statutory tenant. Such a person is not a tenant at all."

(2) "His right to remain in possession after the determination of the contractual tenancy is personal."

(3) "With the determination of the lease, unless the tenant acquires the right of a tenant holding over, by acceptance of rent or by assent to his continuing in possession by the landlord, the terms and conditions of the lease are extinguished, and the rights of such a person remaining in possession are governed by the statute alone."

(4) "Section 12 (1) of the Act 57 of 1947 merely recognises his right to remain in possession so long as he pays or is ready and willing to pay the standard rent and permitted increases and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, but not the right to enforce the terms and conditions of the original tenancy after it is determined."

16. Mr. Chagla also relied on the identical observations in Punjalal's case (AIR 1963 SC 120) (supra) and the judgment in the case of Calcutta Credit Corporation Ltd. v. Happy Homes (Pvt.) Ltd., AIR 1968 SC 471 in which the ratio of its judgment in Anand Nivas (P.) Ltd. case (AIR 1965 SC 414) was affirmed.

17. Mr. Chagla then relied on the judgment in the case of Ganga Dutt Murarka v. Kartik Chandra Das, AIR 1961 SC 1067 and of this Court reported in the case of Shrinivas Subyya Alwa v. Krishnavani Vasudeo Mudliyar, (1974) 76 Bom LR 218, in which the ratio of Ganga Dutt's case is followed. In both the cases, tenant challenged the eviction decrees passed under the respective Rent Acts on the ground that the landlord accepted rents after the expiry of the lease, making him a 'tenant holding over' and eviction proceedings, without determination of such fresh lease created under S. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act, by notice, were not maintainable. It was held that in cases where, possession of the tenant is protected by the Rent Act, the landlord cannot be said to have created new lease or attracted the provisions of S. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act merely by acceptance of rent from the tenant after the expiry or determination of the lease. This ratio has no relevance, but following observations from the Supreme Court judgment at p. 1070 were relied on by Mr. Chagla:

(1) "Occupation of premises by a tenant whose tenancy is determined is by virtue of the protection granted by the statute and not because of any right arising from the contract which is determined. The statute protects his possession so long as the conditions which justify a lessor in obtaining an order of eviction against him do not exist."

The Court then observed:

(2) "Once the prohibition against the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court is removed, the right to obtain possession by the lessor under the ordinary law springs into action and the exercise of the lessor's right to evict the tenant will not, unless the statute provides otherwise, be conditioned."

18. In our opinion, neither the ratio of these cases, nor the observations relied on therefrom and extracted above, in any way run counter to our above view, even if the observations are read without reference to the context and the point arising therein. The observations that, on the determination of the contractual lease, ex-tenant ceases to be the tenant, or that right of possession thereafter becomes personal, or that acceptance of rent thereafter does not create fresh tenancy, go only to emphasise how contractual rights and obligations cease to be operative. The observations do not, expressly or impliedly suggest that surviving possessory rights cease to be the creature of the same contractual lease, as these once were, or any new rights come into existence on getting the support of the statute which were not in existence till then. The second passage from Ganga Dutt's case (AIR 1961 SC 1067) rather than militate, actually fortifies our view that even after the tenancy becoming statutory, contractual rights created do not come to an end. How else the ordinary right to possession of the landlord could 'spring' on the removal of the statutory bar, as indicated therein?

19. The premises, in our opinion, do not go out of the purview of S. 2 (e) of the Act as long as, the interest, created by the contractual lease on taking the same on lease from its owner, continues to vest in the Central Government. That such interest stands reduced to the bare personal right of possession or that its continuance is propped up by the statute and not by the contract, are all besides the point. Personal right of possession in cases where tenancies are held by the corporate or inanimate bodies, such as the Government would be governed by the Constitution of which they are the creatures and the regulations which go to determine their mode of operation. Such possessory right is the residue of the estate and the interest which was created by the contract of the lease. This limited interest, which also was protected by the contract till the subsistence of the contractual lease is continued to be protected now by the statute. In spite of the respondent, ceasing to have an estate and interest of a lessee in the premises, after the determination of the lease, the bare possessory rights, as distinguished from other larger rights acquired under the descriptive definition of S. 2 (e) of the Act do not, in our opinion, undergo any material change whatsoever for the purposes of the Act.

20. It now remains to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in yet another case of Hiralal v. Kasturbhai, AIR 1967 SC 1853, striking slightly a discordant note, to which our attention was drawn very fairly by Mr. Chagla himself. The suit of the landlord for eviction against his three tenants, partners in a firm, and fourth defendant alleging him to be an unlawful sub-tenant, was decreed by the High Court in revision, only against the fourth defendant on the basis that defendants 1 to 3 ceased to have any interest after the termination of the contractual tenancy and the fourth defendant actually in possession was liable to be evicted as a trespasser, on his failure to prove assignment of tenancy to him as claimed by him. Tenants were also found to have been in arrears of rent. On appeal by the fourth defendant, the Supreme Court found it difficult to support such a decree against a trespasser alone in a suit under the Rent Act. The respondent-landlord tried, however, to support the decree saying that defendant No. 4 was a sub-tenant and had become a tenant under S. 14 of the Act on the 'determination' of the tenancy of defendants 1 to 3. Reliance was placed on a passage from Anand Niwas case (AIR 1965 SC 414) (supra). The Supreme Court rejected this contention even on the assumption that defendant No. 4 was a sub-tenant. The passage in Anand Niwas case was explained by reference to another passage therein and it was further observed that the interest of the contractual tenant does not come to an end till he gives up possession or decree for eviction is passed against him and a sub-tenant cannot claim to have become the tenant under S. 14 of the Rent Act merely on the termination of the contractual lease of the head-tenant. Mr. Chagla appears to be right in contending that, observations should be confined to the effect of S. 14 only. Mr. Chagla also is right in saying that interest of the contractual tenant on the determination of contractual lease, being protected by S. 12, the sub-tenant cannot claim direct tenancy till such 'interest' of the head-tenant also comes to an end. This only demonstrates how it is necessary not to read any observations in isolation.

21. Mr. Chagla then contends that the occupation of the petitioner under no circumstances can be said to be 'unauthorised' within the meaning of S. 2 (g) of the Act. Mr. Chagla relies on the membership of the Society and allotment of the flat to him by the Society. He contends that the petitioner is in possession of the flat, not so much as the allottee of the Central Government, but as a member and allottee of the said Society. We are unable to accept this contention. After the determination of the contractual tenancy, the statutory tenancy of the flat still vests in the Garrison Engineer. The petitioner entered the flat as his allottee and has not surrendered possession even after cancellation of the allotment. The Society may accept the petitioner as its member and also may allot the shares to him and even may allot the flat to the petitioner legally. As far as the possession is concerned, the Society is incompetent to deliver possession thereof to the petitioner in disregard of the statutory tenancy of respondent No. 1 and the right to possession vested in it thereby. Interference with the possession of the statutory tenant even by the landlord is unlawful. Respondent No. 1 must be deemed to be in possession through its allottee the petitioner. The Society cannot claim to have delivered such possession to the petitioner nor recognised his possession otherwise in disregard of the statutory tenancy of respondent No. 1. The occupation of the petitioner after cancellation of allotment cannot but be unauthorised.

22. Mr. Chagla then contends that the conduct of the respondent operates as an estoppel. Now, what is relied on is the letter dated 12-7-1968 calling upon the petitioner to give a certificate that he would not seek any re-employment. The case of the petitioner is that such a certificate was given by him on 17-7-1968 in compliance with this letter. According to him, he had already resigned on account of this prematurely so as to make the resignation effective from 24-7-1968, though he could have remained in service for full three years from 18-4-1967 onwards. According to the petitioner, by calling upon the petitioner to undertake not to seek re-employment, respondent No. 1 represented to him that his application for de-hiring will be granted. We do not see any merit in this contention. Neither asking for such certificate can be treated as promise or representation, nor giving such certificate can be said to be acting to one's detriment. The petitioner has not stated on what date he actually submitted his resignation. On our query, Mr. Kothari, the learned advocate appearing for the petitioner today, informed us that the resignation application was made in the month of May, 1968, though the resignation was made effective from 24-7-1968. Apart from the fact that the letter dated 12-7-1968 does not constitute any representation or promise, application for resignation made in the month of May, 1968, cannot be said to have been made relying on any such representation. Secondly, all that the letter dated 12-7-1968 required of the petitioner is to furnish certificate. The affidavit sworn on behalf of respondent No. 1 indicates that, according to then instructions in force, applications for de-hiring could be considered only from those who had retired and were not going to be re-employed. There is no element of promise in the letter nor any representation. The certificate seems to have been demanded to facilitate the consideration of the application. In the meanwhile, the Army authorities appear to have decided not to consider such applications at all. By a circular dated 21-10-1969, this decision of the Army Headquarters was conveyed to every one, including the petitioner. There is thus no promise, no representation, and no relying and acting by the petitioner to his detriment. He cannot be said to have resigned relying on any such promise or representation.

23. Mr. Kothari then contends that the disposal of the eviction proceedings by the Estate Officer without waiting for the result of his de-hiring application is not in accordance with law. The contention appears to us to be devoid of any substance. The proceedings were initiated when the show cause notice was given on 20-1-1970. This was after the allotment was cancelled by the letter dated 14-1-1970. This letter refers to the circular letters of the Army Headquarters dated 31-10-1969 indicating that de-hiring applications were not liable to be considered. It is true that on the earlier occasion on 9-10-1968 the Army Headquarters had directed the stay of eviction proceedings. But then the effect of that letter must be deemed to have been wiped out by the circular letter dated 31-10-1969, a copy of which is shown to have been sent to the petitioner along with the letter dated 14-1-1970 cancelling the allotment. In his petition the petitioner says that the Estate Officer had stayed the proceedings sine die till disposal of de-hiring application, when he appeared before him on 10-6-1970 in response to the notice dated 20-1-1970. This is denied by the deponent in the affidavit sworn on behalf of the respondent. No attempt is made to enforce the production of any such order. Mr. Paranjape, however, made it clear that the said proceedings were never revived as in the meanwhile the judgment of the Supreme Court had made the validity of the Act itself doubtful and proceedings were started afresh by a notice dated 2-1-1971, after the present enactment was enforced. It is clear to us that there is no room for assuming that any de-hiring application of the petitioner was pending consideration, after the decision of the Army Headquarters was made known to every one, including the petitioner, under its circular dated 31-10-1969. Instances of de-hiring cited in rejoinder by the petitioner do not indicate the dates thereof and cannot be relied on to suggest that such policy was liable to be relaxed. This apart, it is very difficult to hold that eviction proceedings would become infructuous because the application for de-hiring was under consideration. It was the duty of the petitioner to move the authorities concerned to stay the proceedings, if at all the authorities were found responsive to his application. Mere pendency of any such application is irrelevant unless proceedings are shown to have been initiated or disposed of by any incompetent officer. We have no reason to assume any such incompetency. If the authority was competent to initiate the proceedings, his competency to so initiate or the jurisdiction of the Estate Officer to so adjudicate, cannot be affected merely because the application of the petitioner was pending at some quarters.

24. Mr. Kothari then contends that the notice dated 2-7-1970 is bad because it relies on the letter cancelling the allotment dated 14-1-1970, in which the allotment is sought to be retrospectively cancelled with effect from 1-11-1968. We do not think it desirable to decide in this case whether the allotment can be so retrospectively cancelled or made effective, or not. Even if it is held that the allotment cannot be so cancelled retrospectively, we are unable to see why the cancellation of allotment cannot be effective, at any rate, from the date when the cancellation was communicated to the petitioner. We are also unable to see why the notice dated 2-7-1970 becomes bad merely because it refers to the cancellation of allotment having become ineffective from 1-11-1968. The Estate Officer is competent to proceed with the eviction proceedings on his satisfaction that the petitioner's occupation of the premises in dispute was unauthorised. The possession becomes unauthorised as soon as the petitioner ceases to be in service or, at any rate, when the possession is demanded from him and consent is withheld by the competent authority to continue the allotment. These bare features are sufficient to make the cancellation of the allotment effective from the date it was communicated to the petitioner as also the notice dated 2-1-1971 initiating proceedings against the petitioner.

25. It was also faintly suggested that the eviction order is bad because it also relies on the ground of non-payment of rent which is not the ground mentioned in the show cause notice. There is hardly any substance in this contention. If the order is read as a whole, it cannot be said that eviction order is passed due to failure of the petitioner to pay rent. Merely because reference is made to such failure, the order cannot be said to have been based on such failure.

26. There is thus no merit in the petition.

27. Rule is accordingly discharged.

28. There will be no order as to costs.

29. The order not to be given effect to up to 17th September, 1976, in view of the undertaking given by the petitioner to this Court.

30. Mr. Chagla applies for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court under Article 133 of the Constitution.

31. Leave refused.

Rule discharged.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 228*

VAIDYA AND SHIMPI, JJ.

Kamarbai and others, Appellants v. Badrinarayan and another, Respondents.

First Appeal No. 478 of 1968, D/- 27-7-1976.

T. P. Act (1882), S. 6 (h) (2) — Transfer for immoral purposes — Setting aside — Applicability of principles of pari delicto and particeps criminis — Transferor seeking to set aside transfer made to his mistress on ground that it was for future cohabitation — Whether entitled to relief. (Contract Act (1872), S. 23) — (Specific Relief Act (1963), Ss. 27, 28, 31, 34) — (Trusts Act (1882), S. 84).

When transfers are tainted by immorality, the Court has a discretion which must be exercised judiciously, having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, to decide whether the plaintiff is entitled to the relief by way of restitution of the proper transfer, even though such transfers may be void on the ground that its object or consideration is immoral or opposed to public policy. The Court should not readily infer the object as future illicit cohabitation easily alleged by one party and denied by the other without any regard for truth. (Para 99)

*(Only portions approved for reporting by High Court are reported here.)

 (Against order of M. S. Ajmere, Civil J. Sr. Divn., Aurangabad in Spl. Civil Suit No. 14 of 1966.)

Thus where a mature 40 year old, worldly wise, experienced married man with children, a Municipal Councillor and a local rich politician hired a woman whom he claimed to have treated as his mistress and was having sexual relations with her for about five years prior to the agreement and the sale deed and when soon thereafter the quarrels started between them he asked the court for the recovery of the property by falsely alleging that the sale deed was executed for unlawful and illegal object of future cohabitation and as such was unsustainable in law the only just and fair thing for the Court to tell him was "let the property lie where your sexual dalliance and immoral pleasures placed it. The Court will not assist you now to deprive further a fallen woman after you, perhaps with others like you, have robbed her of her youth, charms, all social virtues, her life, her light and her love. The Court will say: Let her enjoy in her old age darkness the fruits of her sins as you have enjoyed at least equally her sins." Case law discussed. (Para 118)

When a suit is filed, either for rescinding of a contract on the ground that it is void or cancellation of an instrument or for a declaration that the transfer is void, the Court should be guided in this country now by the provisions of the Chapters IV to VI of the Specific Relief Act, 1963. The provision of S. 27 is more or less statutory recognition of the well known equitable doctrine of in pari delicto. Section 28 lays down that equities should be done by the court between the parties where a decree for specific performance is to be set aside. Section 31 by which the present case is governed gives discretion to the Court. It is not as if in every case where the agreement is void, the Court is bound to set it aside. That discretion of the Court is not arbitrary but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of appeal. It is in the exercise of the discretion that the Court may be asked to apply the well known equitable doctrine of in pari delicto. Again S. 34, in terms, lays down that the Court has a discretion in making the declaration. (Paras 93 to 96)

The statutory recognition of the principle in the maxim 'in pari delicto' is also to be found in S. 84 of the Trusts Act, 1882. (Para 96)

that the Court would not assist him to benefit from his own immorality or fraud or illegality, either on the basis of the maxim 'he who seeks equity must do equity' or 'he who comes into equity must come with clean hands'; or on the basis of such doctrines like: (1) Courts do not aid a party to an illegal undertaking; or (2) that the law does not permit a party deliberately to put his property out of his control for an immoral purpose and then seek intervention of the Court to regain the same after the immoral purpose is executed or accomplished; or (3) where both parties are equally guilty law leaves the parties where it finds them and keeps itself comfortably aloof from the obligation to determine the rights as between the guilty parties; or (4) that a party who claims an equitable relief must come into court with clean hands; or (5) that the party could not be allowed to blow hot and cold; or (6) to let the mischief lie where it exists.

M. G. Karmali, for Appellants; M. P. Kanade, for Respondent No. 1.

1 to 63. x x x x x

VAIDYA, J.:— 64. The important question to be decided in this appeal is whether the plaintiff could take an advantage of the immoral relations which he claimed to have established between himself and defendant No. 1, even according to his own story. Mr. Karmali, the learned counsel for the appellants, submitted that the learned Civil Judge has not applied his mind to the three decisions which are referred to by him or to the law regarding the effect of immorality vitiating the agreements and transactions under S. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, read with S. 6, Cl. (h) of the Transfer of Property Act.

65. He argued that, instead of supporting the conclusions of the learned Judge, the decision of the Division Bench of this Court in Sabava Yellappa v. Yamanappa Sabu, 35 Bom LR 345: (AIR 1933 Bom 209), lays down that a suit for the recovery of possession of property transferred under a sale deed, the consideration or object of which was immoral, i.e. past or future cohabitation, though void under S. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, and S. 6 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act, the principle of equity contained in the maxim 'in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis' i.e. where each party is in fault law favours him who is actually in possession must apply.

66. Mr. Karmali submitted that in that case it was laid down, categorically relying on the decision in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1873) 16 Eq Cas 275, that the Court in such a case was prevented from aiding a person who was guilty of immoral conduct, to recover property on the ground of public policy. In other words, Mr. Karmali submitted that as the plaintiff in this case sought to succeed only on the basis of the proof of the immoral relations between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 prior to and subsequent to the sale-deed, his suit should be dismissed applying the said maxim of 'in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis.'

67. Mr. Kanade, the learned counsel appearing for the plaintiff, tried to repel these arguments relying on the decision of another Division Bench of this Court in Istak Kamu Musalman v. Ranchod Zipru Bhate, AIR 1947 Bom 198, where it was laid down that where, a transaction though completed is intended to be for consideration, it can be impeached if the consideration is immoral, and it makes no difference whether the transaction is executory or executed.

68. He relied upon the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Pranballay Saha v. Sm. Tulsi-bala Dassi, AIR 1958 Cal 713, where a distinction was made between the English and the Indian Law which made an agreement or transfer whose consideration or object was unlawful, void; and it was held that in a suit where the owner of a house lets out the property to the defendant for the immoral purpose of running a brothel, the executors and trustees of the will of the owner, who were not in pari delicto or in particeps criminis can sue to eject the defendant on the basis that the transfer is void and the court will accord relief to the claimants.

69. Mr. Kanade also referred to the decision of the Supreme Court in Firm Srinivas Ram Kumar v. Mahabir Prasad, AIR 1951 SC 177, and submitted that although the plaintiff had originally pleaded that the sale-deed was liable to be set aside on account of undue influence practised by defendant No. 1, it was open to the plaintiff to rely upon the finding of the lower Court that the object of the agreement of sale or of the sale-deed was future immoral cohabitation between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1.

70. He also relied on the decision in Dwaramoudi Nagaratnamb v. Kunuku Ramayya, AIR 1968 SC 253 and contended that only in certain cases where past consideration was the motive and not the consideration for the transfer, transfers were held to be by way of gift which were valid, and where, as in the present case, the object or consideration was for future cohabitation, original title of transferor remained unaffected by a sale-deed tainted with such immorality.

71. A discussion of these rival contentions must begin with the leading English case on the point in Ayerst v. Jenkins, (1873) 16 Eq Cas 275. In that case Mr. William Hardinge, a widower of mature age, having agreed with Isabella Buckton, the sister of his deceased wife, to cohabit with her under colour of a fictitious marriage (both parties must be taken to have known that a real marriage was impossible, under the English law at that time and there is no suggestion of fraud, deceit or mistake, on either side), transferred on the 16th of September, 1861, into the names of trustees named Buckton and Downes, certain shares belonging to him in the Alliance Marine Assurance Company and the London Chartered Bank of Australia, upon trusts declared by a contemporaneous deed, to which the settlor, the trustees, and the lady, were parties.

72. These trusts were in effect for the immediate, absolute, and unconditional benefit of the lady, without any power of revocation; the income being secured to her for her separate use, in the event of any future coverture; and no provision being made, in that or any other event, for children. Two days after the date of the deed Mr. Hardinge and his sister-in-law went through the form of a marriage ceremony; and they lived together till his death, which happened four months afterwards. The lady has ever since enjoyed the full benefit of these trusts; and in April, 1870, she married a Mr. Jenkins without any settlement, doubtless relying on the provision so made for her. The plaintiff in that case had become the legal personal representative of Mr. Hardinge in 1886; and in January, 1872, he filed this bill in that character seeking to set aside the deed, as founded on an illegal consideration, and therefore, void, and asking for a re-transfer, 'if necessary', of the shares from the surviving trustee, Mr. Downes.

73. The question before the Court of Equity was whether the plaintiff was entitled to the relief, Lord Selborne, L. Ch. considered the older authorities and summarised at page 282 as follows:—

"Their results may be thus stated: 1. Bonds or covenants founded on past cohabitation, whether adulterous, incestuous, or simply immoral, are valid in law, and not liable (unless there are other elements in the case) to be set aside in equity. 2. Such bonds or covenants, if given in consideration of future cohabitation, are void in law, and therefore, of course, also void in equity. 3. Relief cannot be given against any such bonds or covenants in equity if the illegal consideration appears on the face of the instrument. 4. If an illegal consideration does not appear on the face of the instrument, the objection of particeps criminis will not prevail against a bill of discovery in equity in aid of the defence to an action at law. 5. Under some (but not under all) circumstances, when the consideration is unlawful, and does not appear on the face of the instrument, relief may be given to a particeps criminis in equity."

74. So far as the said case before him was concerned, the plaintiff was refused relief on equitable grounds observing as follows at page 283:

"In the present case relief is sought by the representative, not merely of a particeps criminis, but of a voluntary and sole donor, on the naked ground of the illegality of his 'intention and purposes; and that, not against a bond or covenant or other obligation resting in fieri, but against a completed transfer of specific chattels, by which the legal estate in those chattels was absolutely vested in trustees, ten years before the bill was filed, for the sole benefit of the defendant. I know no doctrine of public policy which requires or authorises, a Court of Equity to give assistance to such a plaintiff under such circumstances. When the immediate and direct effect of an estoppel in equity against relief to a particular plaintiff might be to effectuate an unlawful object, or to defeat a legal prohibition, or to protect a fraud, such an estoppel may well be regarded as against public policy. But the voluntary gift of part of his own property by one particeps criminis to another, is in itself neither fraudulent nor prohibited by law; and the present is not the case of a man repenting of an immoral purpose before it is too late, and seeking to recall, while the object is yet unaccomplished, a gift intended as a bribe to inequity. If public policy is opposed (as it is) to vice and immorality, it is no less true, as was said by Lord Truro in Benyon v. Nettlefold in (1850) 3 Mac & G 94 (102) that the law, in sanctioning the defence of 'particeps criminis', does so 'on the grounds of public policy, namely, that those who violate the law must not apply to the law for protection'. It is a maxim of law not opposed to any equity, that 'in pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis'; and it is a principle of equity, that long delay in seeking to rescind a transaction originally voidable, on the faith of which other persons have irrevocably made their arrangements in life, may operate as a bar to relief."

Further an argument that even in respect of a completed transfer of property, where transfer was void, the property was to be retransferred, was rejected in that case after a full discussion of the cases cited in support of that proposition.

75. The law in England is succinctly stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Fourth Edition, Volume 9, at page 300 as follows in paragraph 433:

"433. Introduction. One party to an illegal contract may have transferred property or paid money to the other in pursuance of the contract. The question then arises whether the money or property may be recovered. Generally, the position is governed by the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis, so that where the parties are on an equal footing as regards the illegal contract neither can recover any property or money transferred to the other in pursuance of the contract."

Again in paragraph on p. 301, it is stated:

"434. Transfer of ownership of goods or land. It now appears to be settled that where property has been transferred absolutely under an illegal contract such transfer is effective to pass title in the property to the transferee....."

2. The conclusion from these cases seems to be that, in relation to transfers of property, an illegal contract is not void, but merely unenforceable, for none of these cases could have been decided in the same way simply by reference to the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis.....

3. Some cases assert a general principle that a party to an illegal contract may recover property which has been transferred under an illegal contract if he does not rely upon the illegal transaction; but this view is to some extent inconsistent with the doctrine that an illegal contract is not necessarily void and it is doubtful how far it is generally applicable. It may be that the principle is relevant only where the contract remains executory on the part of the transferee and the transferor seeks to rescind."

76. Again in Anson's Law of Contract, Twenty-third Edition, (1969), at page 329, the English law is stated as follows:—

"Although it has sometimes been said that contracts contra bonos mores are void, the only aspect of immorality with which Courts of Law have actually dealt is sexual immorality; and the law on this subject may be shortly stated.

A promise made in consideration of future illicit cohabitation is given upon an immoral consideration, and is unlawful whether made by parol or under seal. But a promise made in consideration of past illicit cohabitation is not made on an illegal consideration, but is a mere gratuitous promise, binding if made under seal, unenforceable if by parol."

77. In P. S. Atiyah's Law of Contract, at page 219, we find the following observations:—

"It must not be thought that illegality in the law of contract is coterminous with illegality in the criminal law, for a contract may be illegal without involving any breach of the criminal law at all. The most obvious illustration of this possibility is a contract involving sexual immorality. For instance, although prostitution is not, as such, criminal, a prostitute cannot sue her clients in a Court of Law for remuneration for her professional services. Nor, indeed, can she be sued by a person who has supplied her with goods or premises which he knows are to be used by her for her professional purposes. In fact if he takes an inflated price, for example, by way of rent, he may even be prosecuted for living on the earnings of a prostitute.

Few people would quarrel with the law thus far. But changes in the moral values of our society make some older decisions look very unreasonable today. For example, in one case in 1911 it was held that a landlord who let a flat to a woman whom he knew to be the mistress of a certain man, from whom it was expected that the money for the rent would be forthcoming, could not sue the woman for the rent. The policy behind this decision seems highly questionable. Equally questionable seems the decisions holding that a promise by a married man to marry a woman after the death or divorce of his first wife was illegal because it might 'tend' to induce immoral relations between the parties. It seems too obvious for words that such a promise must be the result, and not the cause of the break down of a marriage. Since 1 January 1971 actions for breach of promise of marriage have anyhow been abolished; but the case law in this field is still of interest for the light it throws on the whole approach of the courts to questions of illegality. In this particular situation the use of the law of contract even as a deterrent was not likely to be of much value because it seems unlikely that the law was sufficiently well known to deter anyone. The rule might have had some social value if it discouraged third parties from acting in such a way as to lead to the breakdown of a marriage, but it seems very doubtful that it can have had any such effect.

In a more modern decision in 1937, the House of Lords showed a much greater appreciation of the problem by holding that a promise by a married man to remarry was not illegal or invalid, if given after a decree nisi had been obtained from or by his first wife. The argument that such a promise might tend to cause immoral relations between the parties was scouted by a majority of their Lordships, who pointed out that "to attack a contract" because of its evil tendencies was to get on very treacherous ground. Tendencies of this kind rest on speculation rather than proof, and there are few contracts which do not provide motives or temptations for improper or illegal actions. As Lord Atkin said in this case, 'the doctrine (of public policy) should only be invoked in clear cases in which the harm to the public is substantially incontestable, and does not depend on the idiosyncratic inferences of a few judicial minds..... The contract should be given the benefit of the doubt'. This being the position in English law, we now turn to the Indian Law on the point.

78. There is no doubt that under Section 23 of the Indian Contract Act, every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void, and an agreement, consideration or object of which is immoral can be regarded by the Court as immoral and unlawful or opposed to public policy.

79. What applies to an agreement is also applied by S. 6 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act, to every transfer which includes the sale; and therefore, if the sale-deed is for an unlawful object or consideration within the meaning of S. 23 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, the sale would be void.

80. The effect of these sections on transfers tainted by sexual immorality was considered by Patkar and Barlee JJ. in Sabava Vellappa v. Yamanappa Sabu, 35 Bom LR 345: (AIR 1933 Bom 209). That was the case where the plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain lands conveyed to defendant No. 1 by Sabu, the adoptive father of the plaintiff under a sale-deed dated September 21, 1903, and the other lands in suit conveyed by Sabu and his wife, defendant No. 6, the widow of Sabu who died in September 1917, by a gift-deed dated June 26, 1917. Out of the lands which were given in gift, one land was alienated by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 5, her Mukhtyar, in 1918, who in his turn sold it to defendant No. 2 in May 1921. Another land was sold by defendant No. 1 to defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in Sept. 1918.

81. The case of the plaintiff was that the sale transaction of 1903 was illegal and void, because defendant No. 1 was the mistress of Sabu, and though the ostensible consideration was cash, the real consideration was illegal, that is, past and future cohabitation. As regards the deed of gift, it was alleged by the plaintiff that defendant No. 1 was in a position to dominate the will of Sabu and that it was for the same unlawful object and consideration. The trial Court held that the sale-deed was passed not for cash as stated in the deed, but for past and future cohabitation, but held that the suit in respect of the property comprised in the sale-deed was barred by limitation as defendant No. 1 was in adverse possession for more than twelve years.

82. With regard to the deed of gift the learned Judges came to the conclusion that it was for past and future cohabitation and the deed of gift was void and the suit was within time; and, therefore, awarded the plaintiff possession of the lands comprised in the deed of gift, and ordered him to pay compensation to defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 for the improvements made by them in survey Nos. 181 and 336 comprised in the deed of gift.

83. This Court in the First Appeal from that judgment dismissed the appeal. With regard to the sale-deed, the learned Judges came to the conclusion that the ratio in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1873-16 Eq Cas 275) (supra) applied, observing as follows:—

"In the case of the sale-deed in the present case, which was for past and future cohabitation, Sabu could not have maintained a suit to recover back the property, as after the date of the sale-deed, there was illicit connection between Sabu and defendant No. 1 and the immoral object having been carried out, he would have been prevented from recovering back the property, and according to the decision in the case of Ayerst v. Jenkins his legal representatives would also be barred. It is somewhat difficult to hold that the plaintiff, the adopted son, is in pari delicto with defendant No. 1, the mistress of Sabu."

84. But this Court, as stated above, expressed a difficulty to hold that the plaintiff, the adopted son, was in pari delicto with defendant No. 1, the mistress of Sabu. The decision also rested on the finding that the sale-deed had become unimpeachable because of adverse possession.

85. So far as the gifts were concerned, this Court agreed with the view of the learned trial Judge. According to Patkar J. the plaintiff could have maintained a suit to recover property. Patkar J. gave the following reasons for his conclusions at page 355 (of Bom LR) : (at pp. 214, 215 of AIR):

"Past cohabitation would be consideration for an agreement under S. 2 (d) of the Indian Contract Act but is not good consideration for a transfer of property. A gift does not require consideration. It is difficult to hold that past cohabitation can be an object of a gift. Future cohabitation can be considered to be an object of gift. So far as the object as regards the maintenance of future immoral relations was concerned, I think in the present case Sabu did not carry out the immoral object as "he was incapable of carrying it out owing to his illness and died soon afterwards. Sabu, therefore, could have maintained a suit to recover the properties comprised in the deed of gift. The deed of gift was invalid under S. 6 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act, and the principle of equity enunciated in the decision in the case of Ayerst v. Jenkins (1873-16 Eq Cas 275) would not have come in his way as the immoral object was not carried out. He could, therefore, have maintained a suit for recovery of the properties comprised in the deed of gift. If this view is correct, the plaintiff, as his adopted son, is entitled to recover the properties."

86. According to Barlee J., however, the parties were not contemplating future illicit intercourse when the gifts were made. Since Sabu was old or elderly and was ill, and Sabava was forty-seven years of age, the learned Judge observed:—

"I think they were making arrangements for the time when she would be left alone. That was not an unlawful object. I am, therefore, compelled to examine the evidence with a view to determine whether, as alleged by the plaintiff, past intercourse was the consideration of the agreement or merely the motive."

Then he considered the facts of the case and on the basis of the evidence he came to the conclusion that Sabu gave her a promise of the land, because she was his mistress and this promise being unenforceable conveyance in discharge of that agreement was void.

87. It may be noted that in that case despite the differences of opinion, the decision was based on the adverse possession by defendant No. 1 Sabava for more than 12 years of five properties comprised in the sale-deed. With respect, the discussion about Ayerst v. Jenkins

(1873-16 Eq Cas 275) is also inconclusive because after the doubt expressed in Sidlingappa v. Hiras, (1907) 9 Bom LR 542, the Court applied to the doctrine of in pari delicto for its alternative finding denying assistance to the plaintiff in respect of the five properties.

88. Mr. Karmali strongly relied on Sabava v. Yamanappa (AIR 1933 Bom 209) and contended that the facts of the present case are similar to the facts in that case, and the doctrine of in pari delicto, must apply. In Istak Kamu Musalman v. Ranchod Zipru, 48 Bom LR 775 : (AIR 1947 Bom 198) the heirs of the transferor had challenged the transfer as tainted by immorality, and therefore, void. With respect, after summarising the Indian and English law on the point, and pointing out that the ratio in Ayerst's case (1873-16 Eq Cas 275) will apply to a transfer void under S. 6 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act and also pointing out that the decision in Sabava v. Yamanappa (supra), Divatia and Lokur JJ. found that it was not necessary in that case to consider the contention that the Court of equity would not help the transferor to recover the property transferred on the ground that the transfer was void.

89. There again the judgment was based on adverse possession for more than twelve years in respect of certain transfers. Nevertheless, Mr. Kanade relied strongly on the judgment and contended that the decision helps him to argue that the principle laid down in Ayerst v. Jenkins (1873-16 Eq Cas 275), (supra) could not apply to avoid the agreement. They are transfers like the one in the present case for future cohabitation.

90. Mr. Kanade also strongly relied on the decision of P. B. Mukherji and R. S. Bachawat JJ. in Pranballab Saha v. Sm. Tulsibala Dassi (AIR 1958 Cal 713) (supra) where the learned Judges have delivered separate judgments discussing at length the English and the Indian Law and arrived at the conclusion that the executors and trustees in that case could maintain a suit for the recovery of possession of property let out by the testator for prostitution.

91. Bachawat J., as he then was, has discussed in detail all the relevant case law, the Specific Relief Act, and the Indian Trusts Act, holding that it was in the interest of justice or public interest and public welfare the premises should cease to be a brothel; and the maxim salus populi est suprema lex should prevail over all other maxims of law. It is only necessary to refer to the 12 propositions of law which he has, with respect, very precisely stated in paragraph 114 of his judgment on pages 729 and 730, and in particular the (12th) proposition which is as follows:

"In general a plaintiff claiming title through a particeps criminis is denied relief if his case is such that the particeps criminis would not have got relief had he come to the Court as plaintiff with the same case."

92. Mr. Kanade, relied on the decision of P. B. Mukherji and Bachawat JJ. for the proposition that where the transaction is void, Ayerst's case (1873-16 Eq Cas 275) has no application. As already stated above, the question there was whether the executors and trustees were entitled to the relief and they appear to have dissented from the view taken in Sabava's case (AIR 1933 Bom 209) which, however, is binding on us.

93. Unfortunately, the attention of the Court was not drawn to the relevant provisions of the Specific Relief Act and the Indian Trusts Act in Sabava's case (AIR 1933 Bom 209) and Istak Kamu's case (AIR 1947 Bom 198). The real position appears to be that when a suit is filed, either for rescinding of a contract on the ground that it is void or cancellation of an instrument or for a declaration that the transfer is void, the Court should be guided in this country now by the provisions of the Chapters IV to VI of the Specific Relief Act, 1963.

94. Section 27 of that Act, lays down that any person interested in a contract may sue to have it rescinded, and such rescission may be adjudged by the court where the contract is unlawful for causes not apparent on its face and the defendant is more to blame than the plaintiff. It is patent that this provision is more or less statutory recognition of the well known equitable doctrine of in pari delicto. This is further reinforced by what is contained in sub-s. (2) of S. 27, which lays down that notwithstanding anything contained in sub-s. (1), the Court may refuse to rescind the contract— (a) where the plaintiff has expressly or impliedly ratified the contract; or (b) where, owing to the change of circumstances which has taken place since the making of the contract (not being due to any act of the defendant himself), the parties cannot be substantially restored to the position in which they stood when the contract was made; or (c) where third parties have, during the subsistence of the contract acquired rights in good faith without notice and for value; or (d) where only a part of the contract is sought to be rescinded and such part is not severable from the rest of the contract. Section 28 lays down that equities should be done by the Court between the parties where a decree for specific performance is to be set aside.

95. In our opinion, the present suit is governed by S. 31 as the plaintiff seeks to set aside the registered sale-deed. That section again lays down that that any person against whom a written instrument is void or voidable, and who has reasonable apprehension that such instrument, if left outstanding may cause him serious injury, may sue to have it adjudged void or voidable; and the court may, in its discretion, so adjudge it and order it to be delivered up and cancelled. It is not as if in every case where the agreement is void, the Court is bound to set it aside. It gives a discretion to the Court. That discretion of the Court is not arbitrary but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of appeal. It is in the exercise of the discretion that the Court may be asked to apply the well-known equitable doctrine of 'in pari delicto'.

96. Further S. 34, which is also a section applicable to the present case as declarations are sought again, in terms, lays down that the Court has a discretion in making the declaration. The Court must also bear in mind the principle laid down in S. 84 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, which runs as follows:—

"84. Where the owner of property transfers it to another for an illegal purpose and such purpose is not carried into execution, or the transferor is not as guilty as the transferee, or the effect of permitting the transferee to retain the property might be to defeat the provisions of any law, the transferee must hold the property for the benefit of the transferor."

This again is a statutory recognition of the principle in the maxim 'in pari delicto'.

97. Apart from these statutory provisions, for more than two hundred years in this country the English equitable principles have been followed in cases like the present one. The plaintiff is denied assistance of the Court on the ground that the Court would not assist the plaintiff to benefit from his own immorality or fraud or illegality, either on the basis of the maxim 'he who seeks equity must do equity' or 'he who comes into equity must come with clean hands; or on the basis of such doctrines like: (1) Courts do not aid a party to an illegal undertaking; or (2) that the law does not permit a party deliberately to put his property out of his control for an immoral purpose and then seek intervention of the Court to regain the same after the immoral purpose is executed or accomplished; or (3) where both parties are equally guilty law leaves the parties where it finds them and keeps itself comfortably aloof from the obligation to determine the rights as between the guilty parties; or (4) that a party who claims an equitable relief must come into court with clean hands; or (5) that the party could not be allowed to blow hot and cold; or (6) to let the mischief lie where it exists. Sometimes reference is also made to the legal maxim such as:— (1) Ex dolo malo non oritur actio; (2) Ex turpis causa potior est conditio defendantis; (3) Nullus commodum capere potest de injuria sua propria; and (4) Allegans contraria non est audiendus.

98. Shell's Principles of Equity, 26th Edition, page 34, when discussing the maxim "He who seeks equity must do equity," observed:

"To obtain equitable relief the plaintiff must be prepared to do 'equity', in its popular sense of what is right and fair to the defendant. This is a rule of 'unquestionable justice' which, however, decides nothing in itself; for you must first inquire what are the equities which the defendant must do, and what the plaintiff ought to have."

Again when discussing the maxim "he who comes into equity must come with clean hands" Shell states:

"This maxim, which seems not unrelated to the ex turpi causa non oritur actio of the common law, is very similar to the previous one; but it differs from it in looking to the past rather than the future. The plaintiff not only must be prepared now to do what is right and fair, but also must show that his past record in the transaction is clean; for 'he who has committed inequity.....shall not have Equity'."

At the same time, a caution is given at page 36 as follows:

"Maxim must not be taken too widely; Equity does not demand that its suitors shall have led blameless lives. What bars the claim is not a general depravity but one which has an immediate and necessary relation to the equity sued for."

99. We are, therefore, of the view that when transfers are tainted by immorality, the Court has a discretion which must be exercised judiciously, having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, to decide whether the plaintiff is entitled to the relief by way of restitution of the proper transfer, even though such transfers may be void on the ground that its object or consideration is immoral or opposed to public policy. The Court should not readily infer the object as future illicit cohabitation easily alleged by one party and denied by the other without any regard for truth as in the present case.

100. The position appears to have been considered and affirmed in several decisions of this Court. In Ningaraddi v. Lakshmawa, (1901) 3 Bom LR 647, where in joint Hindu family, the father alienates any portion of the family property by way of maintenance for his concubine in consideration of past cohabitation the liability which he legally incurs by virtue of such alienation does not create a debt which his son is bound to pay. Chandavarkar J. observed at p. 652 as follows:

"The debt, from that point of view, has its origin in an immoral purpose. But even if it is a debt contracted in the fulfilment of a moral obligation, and that as such not immoral, it is, at any rate, a debt in the nature of compensation made to the woman by way of maintenance for the injury done to her by the past illicit cohabitation. That is the real nature of the liability, according to Gibson v. Dickie, (1815) 3 M & S 463. If, then, it is a compensation for injury done to the woman, it is a debt which sounding in damages is in the nature of a fine or penalty, which according to the texts bearing on the subject, a Hindu son is not bound to pay."

101. In spite of this, however, he too agreed, having regard to the finding of the District Court that after the execution of the deed the defendant continued to be in the keeping of the plaintiff's father until his death and that as the connection then became permanent, it must be held that the defendant became entitled to maintenance after the death of the plaintiff's father and she cannot be deprived of the property in dispute unless provision is made for her maintenance by the plaintiff.

102. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. in Shidlingappa Ganeshappa v. Hirasa Tukasa, (1907) 9 Bom LR 542, dealing with a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of a house and land on the ground of his title and he and the defendant defrauding the creditors by the transactions in suit observed as follows on page 546:—

"It is well settled that when a fraud of this class has been carried into effect, a party to it cannot, as plaintiff, plead the fraud to vitiate the transaction."

At page 547, it is observed as follows:—

"Though we have dealt with the case as if both parties to this litigation had been equally culpable, it is to be noticed that it was the plaintiff's father and not the plaintiff, who joined the defendant in the fraud, and it is a question whether it can be said that the plaintiff and the defendant are in pari delicto."

He even went to the extent of holding that the defendant also could not plead fraud.

103. This view of his was overruled by the Full Bench of this Court in Guddappa Chikkappa Kurbar v. Balaji Ramji Dange, 43 Bom LR 681: (AIR 1941 Bom 274) (FB). It was also a case of fraud by benami transaction. After remarking that Beaumont C. J. would never differ from any decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins without very great diffidence Beaumont C. J. stated that, in his opinion, his (Jenkins C. J.) decision in that case cannot be supported, and reiterated the principle that the Court "must never allow itself to be used to assist in the perpetration of fraud."

104. The doctrine 'in pari delicto' is also affirmed in several decisions of the Supreme Court. In Immani Appa Rao v. Gollapalli Ramalingamurthi, (1962) 3 SCR 739: (AIR 1962 SC 370) the conveyance in suit was the result of a collusive plan between respondent No. 1 and respondent No. 2 to defraud the latter's creditors. The agreement was that respondent 1 was to act as the benamidar for respondent 2 and his sons, the appellants. The fraud succeeded and the creditors of respondent 2 were in fact defrauded. Thereafter respondent No. 1 brought the suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession against respondent No. 2 and the appellants on the basis of the conveyance. The latter resisted the suit on the ground that the conveyance was fraudulent, unsupported by consideration and passed no title.

105. The High Court in second appeal held that the appellants and respondent No. 2 were estopped from pleading fraud in the suit and decreed the same. The question was whether the view taken by the High Court was correct and the ostensible owner was entitled to a decree. It was held by the Supreme Court that there could be no question of estoppel in a case where both the parties were guilty of fraud.

106. Gajendragadkar J. speaking for the Court observed at p. 748 (of Bom LR): (at p. 375 of AIR):

"Reported decisions bearing on this question show that consideration of this problem often gives rise to what may be described as a battle of legal maxims. The appellants emphasised that the doctrine which is pre-eminently applicable to the present case is ex dolo malo non oritur actio or ex turpi causa non oritur actio. In other words, they contended that the right of action cannot arise out of fraud or out of transgression of law; and according to them it is necessary in such a case that possession should rest where it lies in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis; where each party is equally in fraud the law favours him who is actually in possession or where both parties are equally guilty the estate will lie where it falls. On the other hand, respondent 1 argues that the proper maxim to apply is nemo allegans suam turpitudinem audiendus est, whoever has first to plead turpitudinem should fail; that party fails who first has to allege fraud in which he participated. In other words, the principles invoked by respondent 1 is that a man cannot plead his own fraud. In deciding the question as to which maxim should govern the present case it is necessary to recall what Lord Wright, M. R. observed about these maxims in Berg v. Sadler and Moore (1937) 2 KB 158, 162. Referring to the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio Lord Wright observed that "this maxim, though veiled in the dignity of learned language, is a statement of a principle of great importance; but like most maxims it is much too vague and much too general to admit of application without a careful consideration of the circumstances and of the various definite rules which have been laid down by the authorities". Therefore, in deciding the question raised in the present appeal, "it would be necessary for us to consider carefully the true scope and effect of the maxims pressed into service by the rival parties and to enquire which of the maxims would be relevant and applicable in the circumstances of the case. It is common-ground that the approach of the Court in determining the present dispute must be conditioned solely by considerations of public policy. Which principle would be more conducive to, and more consistent with, public interest, that is the crux of the matter. To put it differently having regard to the fact that both the parties before the Court are confederates in the fraud, which approach would be less injurious to public interest. Whichever approach is adopted one party would succeed and the other would fail, and so it is necessary to enquire as to which party's success would be less injurious to public interest."

The Court then considered the facts and circumstances of the case in the context of the provisions of S. 84 of the Indian Trusts Act and set aside the decision of the High Court on the ground that the High Court was in error in not giving effect to the finding recorded by the trial Court that the fraud mutually agreed upon and contemplated by respondents 1 and 2 had been effectively carried out; and that in the carrying out of the fraud both the parties were equally guilty.

107. The position in law is discussed in Dwarampudi Nagaratnamba v. Kunuku Ramayya, AIR 1968 SC 253. In that case by two registered sale-deeds, Venkatacharyulu who was the Karta of his joint family consisting of himself and his four sons, transferred some family property under two purported sale-deeds dated April 15, 1946 to his permanent concubine Dwarampudi Nagaratnamba. In 1947, there was a disruption of the joint family and a severance of the joint status between Venkatacharyulu and his sons. In 1954, his widow and sons instituted a suit against the appellant Dwarampudi Nagaratnamba for recovery of possession of the properties alleging that the documents dated April 15, 1946, were executed without consideration or for immoral purposes, and were void. The appellant also filed a suit for damages and mesne profits for wrongful trespass on the properties.

108. The matter went to the High Court of Andhra Pradesh. The High Court found that the transfer under Ex. A-1 and Ex. A-2 were not supported by any consideration by way of cash or delivery of jewels, though they were described as sale-deed. The High Court further held that the transfers were made by Venkatacharyulu in favour of the appellant in view of past illicit cohabitation with her, such past cohabitation was the motive and not the consideration for the transfers and the two deeds though ostensibly sale-deeds, were in reality gift-deeds. It held that Venkatacharyulu had no power to make a gift of the joint family properties, the two deeds were invalid and the subsequent severance of joint status in 1947 could not validate them.

109. Before the Supreme Court it was common case that future illicit cohabitation was not the object or the consideration for the transfer under Ex. A-1 and Ex. A-2. The appellant Dwarampudi contended that Venkatacharyulu agreed to make the transfer in consideration of past cohabitation having regard to S. 2 (d) of the Indian Contract Act, 1872 her past service was a valuable consideration and Venkatacharyulu was competent to alienate for value his undivided interest in the coparcenary properties. On behalf of the respondent it was contended that the transfers were by way of gifts and not in consideration of the past cohabitation and Venkatacharyulu was not competent to make a gift of the coparcenary properties. In the alternative, they contended that assuming that the transfers were made in consideration of past cohabitation, they were hit by S. 6 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

110. The Supreme Court held that the transfers were without consideration and were by way of gifts. The gifts were not hit by S. 6 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act, by reason of the fact that they were motivated by a desire to compensate the concubine for her past services.

111. Bachawat J. speaking for the Court observed (at p. 254):—

"In Balo v. Parbati, ILR (1940) All 371: (AIR 1940 All 385) the Court held that the assignment of mortgagee's rights to a woman in consideration of past cohabitation was not hit by S. 6 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act and was valid. Properly speaking, the past cohabitation was the motive and not the consideration for the assignment. The assignment was without consideration by way of gift and as such was not hit by S. 6 (h). In Istak Kamu v. Ranchhod Zipru, ILR (1947) Bom 206 at p. 217 : (AIR 1947 Bom 198 at p. 202) the Court rightly held that past cohabitation was the motive for the gift under Exhibit 186, and the gift was valid but in holding that the promises to make the gifts under other exhibits were made in consideration of past illicit cohabitation and consequently those gifts were invalid, the Court seems to have too readily assumed that past cohabitation was the consideration for the subsequent promises."

"Venkatacharyulu was free to make a gift of his own property to his concubine. The gifts under Exs. A-1 and A-2 were not hit by S. 6 (h) of the Transfer of Property Act. But the properties gifted under Exs. A-1 and A-2 were coparcenary properties. Under the Madras School of Mitakshara law by which Venkatacharyulu was governed, he had no power to make a gift of even his undivided interest in the coparcenary properties to his concubine. The gifts were therefore, invalid."

112. The Supreme Court, therefore, refused to interfere with the decision of the High Court in the circumstances of the case, though it pointed out that past illicit cohabitation could be a motive for gift-deed which was called to be a sale-deed.

113. Mr. Kanade, the learned counsel for the plaintiff contended that the said decision of the Supreme Court supports his argument that where the sale-deed is invalid, the property sold is liable to be restored. However, the facts of that case are distinguishable, firstly, because the suit there was by the widow and sons and not by the transferor himself, and secondly, the property which was gifted was the coparcenary property, and that is not the case here. The case only illustrates how the doctrine in pari delicto though not specifically referred to in the judgment guides the Court when a transfer is tainted with immorality.

114. In view of these principles we have no hesitation in setting aside the decree passed by the lower Court as the plaintiff was as much responsible for the immorality which tainted the suit sale-deed as the defendant. As already stated his case of undue influence having been given up in the lower Court at the hearing, was not and could not be pressed before us. In paragraph 8 of the plaint, it is alleged that the sale-deed was executed for unlawful and illegal object for future cohabitation, and as such it was against public policy and unsustainable in law, the consideration being immoral. There is nothing on the record except the interested and unreliable testimony of the plaintiff to show that the object of/or consideration for the agreement was future cohabitation. The case of the plaintiff himself in the witness-box was that he was having sexual relations with the defendant from 1959, i.e. for above five years prior to the agreement and the sale-deed.

115. It is his case that seen after the sale-deed, quarrels started between them though he had romantic interludes during which he posed with her before the camera like a couple in different costumes and at different places, including Jinna cap and Arab dress for the plaintiff. That by itself is not enough to show that the agreement and the sale-deed were executed for future cohabitation or that the object and consideration for the agreement and the sale-deed were future cohabitation.

116. It may be that future cohabitation was incidental and consequential to the intimate relations which were established between the plaintiff and the defendants which may be described as past love and affection on account of the memories of pleasures which they must have had between them since 1959 as stated by the plaintiff. On his own story, therefore, it is difficult to hold that the agreement and the sale-deed have as their object or consideration future cohabitation. Even assuming that what he says is true and they were executed for future cohabitation, he was as much a party to the immoral considerations and object as the defendant.

117. The Court will not promote immorality by enforcing or nullifying such immoral agreements, except under special circumstances where it would be unconscionable to refuse the relief for instance where inexperienced and sexually infatuated Romeos and Juliets in teenage or weak minds are involved. The Court is bound to hold the transfer for immoral purposes void, where the object or consideration is void on account of immorality. This Court will not, however, assist a person responsible for the immorality to get back what he or she has done in practising and enjoying that immorality. If the Court acts otherwise, it will be heaping inequity on the immoralities indulged in by the parties for their pleasures and profits.

118. If a mature 40 year old, worldly wise, experienced married man with children, a Municipal Councillor and a local rich politician, like the plaintiff hires a woman whom he claimed to have treated as his mistress (whom he now calls a prostitute) by transferring his property as in the present case, enjoys her company for some years, as can be seen from his aforesaid admissions, the romantic letters, which the plaintiff himself has produced, as having been written to him, and the photographs produced by him; and thereafter quarrels with her and asks the Court for the recovery of the property, the only just and fair thing for the Court to tell him, ordinarily, would be. "Let the property lie where your sexual dalliance and immoral pleasures placed it. The Court will not assist you now to deprive further a fallen woman after you, perhaps with others like you, have robbed her of her youth, charms, all social virtues, her life, her light and her love. The Court will say: Let her enjoy in her old age darkness the fruits of her sins as you have enjoyed at least equally her sins."

119. This must be the practical result of the application of the doctrine 'in pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis' to the facts of the present case. We, therefore hold in the exercise of the discretion which is vested in the Court, in all the facts and circumstances of the case, that the plaintiff is not entitled to any assistance to recover the property which he had conveyed to the defendants and hence the suit is liable to be dismissed.

120. However, having regard to the previous intimate relations which appeared to have existed between the parties for some years, before the suit and all other facts and circumstances of the case, the proper order regarding costs of this case will be to order both parties to bear their own costs throughout.

121. In the result, the appeal is allowed. The judgment and decree passed by the learned Civil Judge (Senior Division) Aurangabad, on April 24, 1968, are set aside; and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed.

122. Parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 240
(AT NAGPUR)

DESHPANDE AND GINWALA, JJ.

Kaniram Jagannath Lokhande and another, Petitioners v. The State of Maharashtra and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 287 of 1976, D/- 28-9-1976.

(A) Maharashtra Restoration of Lands to Scheduled Tribes Act (1974) (14 of 1975), Ss. 3 and 10 — Act is not incomplete or defective piece of legislation — Amount payable to non-tribal transferee under S. 3 (1) (ii) read with S. 3 (4) (b) is also covered by S. 3 (4) (g).

The Act is not an incomplete and defective piece of Legislation. It is not correct to contend that, though the restoration of land to the tribal is intended to be accompanied by refund of the purchase price and value of the improvements made, by him to the non-tribal, the Act not only does not provide any machinery for the enforcement of the recovery thereof, but on the contrary precludes even the Civil Court from doing it. (Para 3)

The amount made recoverable by collector as arrears of land revenue under S. 3 (4) (g) covers the amount payable under S. 3 (1) (i) read with sub-s. (4) (a) (c) (d) as well as under S. 3 (1) (ii) read with S. 3 (4) (b) of the Act. There is absolutely no warrant to restrict the connotation of the words "in lump sum" only to the dues made payable so expressly in lump sum and assume legislative intent not to include amounts payable so in lump sum impliedly. Thus by implication the amount payable under S. 3 (1) (ii) or S. 3 (4) (b) must be deemed to have been payable in lump sum and it must be deemed to have been covered under S. 3 (4) (g) of the Act. (Para 11)

The amount payable to the non-tribal-transferee under S. 3 (1) (ii) read with S. 3 (4) (b) is clearly covered by S. 3 (4) (g) of the Act without regard to whether the amount is refundable towards the consideration paid or towards value of improvements or encumbrances by such tribal-transferor to the non-tribal-transferee, and question of considering the effect of S. 10 does not arise. (Para 12)

(B) Maharashtra Restoration of Lands to Scheduled Tribes Act (1974) (14 of 1975), Ss. 3 and 4 — Scope of the Act — Drastic power conferred on Collector — Duty of Collector to scrupulously follow the procedure.

The enactment confers drastic power on the Collector. Citizens are contemplated to be deprived of their right in, and possession of, the lands purchased by them bona fide by this summary procedure. The only safeguard against such drastic action lies in ensuring scrupulous adherence to the procedure required to be followed by the Collector so that the affected citizens get enough opportunity, to have their say in the matter and, defence properly adjudicated, before their title to the property is destroyed and they are finally deprived of the possession of the same. (Para 13)

A. P. Deshpande, for Petitioners; R. W. Adik, Advocate General, M. M. Qazi, Addl. Govt. Pleader and V. V. Naik, Hon. Asstt. to A.G.P., for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

DESHPANDE, J.:— The petitioners purchased the lands in dispute from respondent No. 3 for a sum of Rs. 1,800 on 17-4-1963. A few days before they filed an application in this Court under Articles 226 and 227 of Constitution on 5-1-1976, they received a notice from the Sub-Divisional Officer, Umrer calling upon them to appear before him on 28th of August 1975 to show cause why the lands Khasra Nos. 7 and 8 should not be restored to the tribal, respondent No. 3, under the provisions of the Maharashtra Restoration of Lands to Scheduled Tribes Act, 1974 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act'). Subsequent to the service of the first notice, the Government of Maharashtra framed rules on 1st of November 1975 under the Act prescribing the forms in which the notices were to be served for initiating the proceedings for restoration of lands to the tribals. Another notice, therefore, was also served in form No. II requiring the petitioner to appear on 28th of December 1975. The petitioners challenge the validity of the Act as also the legality of these notices in this Special Civil Application.

2. Rule and interim stay was granted by this Court on 7th of January 1976 as in many other cases challenging the validity of the Act. After this rule was granted, the Act itself has now been included in the Ninth Schedule under the 40th Constitution Amendment Act of 1976. The effect of the inclusion of this enactment in the Ninth Schedule is to immunise it from any attack on its validity by reference to any provision in Part III of the Constitution, including Arts. 14, 15, 19 and 31.

3. Mr. A. P. Deshpande, learned Advocate appearing for the petitioners, therefore, could not press his contention based on these constitutional provisions. He, however, raised two points for our consideration. He firstly contends that the Act is an incomplete and defective piece of legislation in that, though the restoration of land to the tribal is intended to be accompanied by refund of the purchase price and value of the improvements made, by him to the non-tribal, the Act not only does not provide any machinery for the enforcement of the recovery thereof but on the contrary precludes even the Civil Court from doing it. He secondly challenges the legality of the notices as being not in conformity with requirement of the Act.

4. Now, as indicated in the preamble itself, the Act is intended to restore the lands to the persons belonging to the Scheduled Tribes referred to in the Act as 'tribals' which were duly transferred by them to other persons. This Act has been enacted on the recommendations of a Committee appointed to find out how far the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code of 1966 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Code'), and the relevant Tenancy Laws have been effective in extending the intended protection to the tribals. Lands, sold by the tribals during the period from 1-4-1957, i.e. Tillers day, so notified under the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act of 1948 to 6-7-74 when Ordinance No. 13 of 1974 amending the Code was enforced to non-tribals alone are covered by the definition of 'transfer' which includes all transfers by act of parties including exchange made inter vivos, or made under the order or decree of the Court and also statutory sales but excludes transfers covered by S. 36 (1) and (3) of the Code. Section 3 of the Act deals with the restoration of lands transferred inter vivos by the act of the parties while S. 4 deals with statutory sales. Lands put to non-agricultural use before 6-7-1974 are excluded and restoration of the land is made conditional on tribal's undertaking to cultivate the land personally and refund of such amount to the non-tribal as the Collector would determine under sub-s. (4) of S. 3. The relevant portion of S. 3 (1) authorises the Collector to restore the land free from encumbrances from the non-tribal to the tribal, notwithstanding any law or decree, etc. to the contrary, sold by the tribal to the non-tribal. It is as follows:

"3. (1) Where due to transfer—

(a) the land of a Tribal-transferor is held by a non-Tribal-transferee, or

.....

(ii) the land transferred otherwise than by exchange be taken from the possession of the non-Tribal-transferee, and restored to the Tribal-transferor, free from all encumbrances, and the Tribal-transferor shall pay such transferee and other persons claiming encumbrances the amount determined under Cl. (b) of sub-s. (4)."

5. It is unnecessary to dilate in details, as to how Collector includes some other officers under S. 2 (b) or on sub-s. (2) and (3) of this Section for disposal of the point raised.

6. Sub-section (4) of S. 3 deals with the determination of the amounts payable by the tribal or the non-tribal, for the value of improvements and encumbrances and consequential refund of consideration. This sub-s. (4) consist of Cls. (a) to (g). Clause (a) of sub-s. (4) authorises the Collector to determine the value of improvements made by the tribal or the non-tribal on the exchanged lands during the period of their occupation. Clause (d) enables the Collector to determine the amount of encumbrances created on the exchanged lands and Cls. (c) and (d) leave it to the discretion of the Collector to require such payments towards the value of improvements and encumbrances either in lump sum or in annual instalment of not exceeding 12, with 4½% interest thereon. In cases of other transfers by the tribal-transferor to the non-tribal transferee, the Collector has to determine the amount of the refundable consideration not exceeding 48 times of the Land Revenue, as also the value of improvements made on the land by the non-tribal during the period of his occupation of the land. The Cl. (b) deals with this power of the Collector. But Cl. (b) does not invest the Collector with any discretion to permit payment in instalments, as under Cls. (c) and (d) for the amount determined under S. 3 (4) (a) and (d). Implicit in this absence of any such discretion is the liability to pay in lump sum. Clause (e) deals with the apportionment of the encumbrances between the transferee and other charge holders while Cl. (f) deals with suspension of rent, with which we are not concerned in this case. Then follows Cl. (g) on the language of which the contention of Mr. Deshpande is founded.

7. Clause (g) is to the following effect:

"If the Tribal-transferor or as the case may be, non-tribal-transferee fails to pay the amount in lump sum or remains in arrears of two or more instalments, the amount so remaining unpaid (with interest thereon at 4½ per cent. per annum) shall be recoverable by the Collector as an arrear of land revenue. The amount so recovered shall be paid by the Collector to the non-tribal-transferee and persons claiming encumbrances, if any, or as the case may be, the tribal-transferor."

8. Mr. Deshpande contends that under S. 3 (4) (g) only the value of improvements made and the value of encumbrances created on the exchanged land during the period when the tribal or non-tribal-transferee happens to be in possession, is made recoverable as arrears of land revenue by the Collector. This Cl. (g) of sub-s. (4), contends Mr. Deshpande, does not cover the liability of the payment created by S. 3 (1) (ii) and determinable by the Collector under sub-s. (4) (b). This contention, no doubt, is rendered attractively plausible because of the preceding expressions "fails to pay the amount in lump sum" or "remains in arrears of two or more instalments" before the enforceability portion in the above Cl. (g), making it appear as if the amount made expressly so payable under Cls. (c) and (d) alone is enforceable as arrear of land revenue under the clause.

9. The learned Advocate General appearing for the State on the other hand contends that every amount made payable under the Act, as under any other enactment, is ordinarily payable in lump sum unless it is expressly made payable in instalments. The expression "fails to pay the amount in lump sum" covers every amount so payable without regard whether it is made expressly payable in lump sum or is payable in lump sum impliedly. He also further contends that, even if such amount is found not to be recoverable under S. 3 (4) (g), that itself will be the good reason why S. 10 of the Act ousting the jurisdiction of the Civil Court should not be attracted.

10. It is true that the phraseology quoted above from CL. (g) only occurs in Cls. (c) and (d) of sub-s. (4) and is not to be found either in CL. (b) of sub-s. (4) or S. 3 (1) (ii) of the Act which gives rise to the liability of the tribal-transferor to pay. In other words, S. 3 (4) (g) gives an impression as though what can be recovered as arrears of land revenue by the Collector under this Clause is the amount determinable under S. 3 (4) (a) and made expressly payable in lump sum under Cls. (c) and (d) alone and not the one made payable under CL. (b) of sub-s. (4). This contention, however, assumes that no amount becomes payable in lump sum unless the law expressly says so. Any such contention, in our opinion, is wholly misconceived. Close examination of sub-cl. (c) and (d) of sub-s. (4) of S. 3 would show that use of the expression 'lump sum' was necessitated by the contemplated concession of instalments to be extended in the discretion of the Collector, for payment of value of improvements and encumbrances in regard to the exchanged lands. The Legislature in its wisdom has thought it necessary to treat the dues under exchange transactions on different footing from the dues arising out of other transfers. Discretion vested in the Collector to permit payment in instalment in contradistinction of payment in lump sum, could hardly have been emphasized otherwise. The use of expression 'in lump sum' would have been otherwise wholly unnecessary. The sub-cl. (g) had to import the phraseology of the cls. (c) and (d) by way of abundant precaution to ensure the recoverability as arrear of land revenue of such dues also.

11. The liability to pay, whether under exchange or other transfer, is the creature of Ss. 3 (1) (i) and 3 (1) (ii). Clauses (a) and (b) of sub-s. (4) deal with the mode of determination of such dues. Clauses (c) and (d) of sub-s. (4) deal with the mode of payment of the dues determinable under CL. (a) of sub-s. (4). It is the liability that is created under S. 3 (1) (i), (ii) and determined under Cls. (a) and (b) of sub-s. (4) against tribal-transferor and non-tribal transferee, that is made enforceable under CL. (g). Mere absence of the words 'in lump sum' in S. 3 (1) (ii) or 3 (4) (b) cannot make the payment in any manner but in lump sum. There is nothing to in-dicade that CL. (g) is restricted to the dues shown to be payable under CL. (a) read with Cls. (c) and (d) of S. 3 (4) only which only determines the mode of discharging liability created under S. 3 (1) and determined under S. 3 (4). In the absence of any indication of concession of payment by instalment payment in lump sum is implicit in the very scheme of these two provisions. The amount made recoverable by Collector as arrear of land revenue under S. 3 (4) (g) thus covers the amount payable under S. 3 (1) (i) read with sub-s. (4) (a) (c) (d) as well as under S. 3 (1) (ii) read with S. 3 (4) (b) of the Act. There is absolutely no warrant to restrict the connotation of the words 'in lump sum' only to the dues made payable so expressly in lump sum and assume legislative intent not to include amounts payable so in lump sum impliedly. Thus by implication the amount payable under S. 3 (1) (ii) or Section 3 (4) (b) must be deemed to have been payable in lump sum and it must be deemed to have been covered under S. 3 (4) (g) of the Act.

12. There is not much substance in the contention of Mr. Deshpande that S. 10 of the Act ousts the Civil Court's jurisdiction for enforcement of the recovery of such amount even when recovery thereof is not covered by S. 3 (4) (g). In the event of the amount payable under S. 3 (1) (ii) read with S. 3 (4) (b) being excluded from the purview of Section 3 (4) (g), there would be no reason why the bar of jurisdiction of the Civil Court created under S. 10 of the Act should operate. What is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Court under S. 10 is only that which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with under the provisions of this Act. If the amount due under S. 3 (1) (ii) read with S. 3 (4) (b) is excluded from the purview of S. 3 (4) (g), the amount cannot be said to have been liable to be settled, decided or dealt with under any of the provisions of the Act and the exclusion contemplated under S. 10 of the Act cannot cover such contingency. We are, however, firmly of the opinion, that the amount payable to the non-tribal-transferee under S. 3 (1) (ii) read with S. 3 (4) (b) is clearly covered by S. 3 (4) (g) of the Act without regard to whether the amount is refundable towards the consideration paid or towards the value of improvements or encumbrances by such tribal-transferor to the non-tribal-transferee, and question of considering the effect of S. 10 does not arise.

The first contention of Mr. Deshpande is liable to be rejected.

13. The second contention of Mr. Deshpande is not without some force. The enactment confers drastic power on the Collector. Citizens are contemplated to be deprived of their right in, and possession of, the lands purchased by them bona fide by this summary procedure. The only safeguard against such drastic action lies in ensuring scrupulous adherence to the procedure required to be followed by the Collector so that the affected citizens get enough opportunity, to have their say in the matter and, defence properly adjudicated, before their title to the property is destroyed and they are finally deprived of the possession of the same. The first notice appears to have been issued long before the Rules were framed in this behalf. The notice speaks of the petitioner having 'violated the provisions of Restoration of Lands to Scheduled Tribes Act of 1974', without indicating in which manner the provisions have been so violated. Even the name of the enactment under which the proceedings were initiated is not correctly given in the notice. Though the section speaks of the day of appearance being required to be mentioned in the notice, the notice does not so mention it. The second notice betrays the total lack of application of mind by the officer who has issued the same. The officer has not taken care even to strike off the passages which were irrelevant. The notice does not indicate the time at which the petitioner was required to appear in his Court. It is true that the addressee could have with a little more enquiry found out from the office as to what precisely was intended in the said notice and what the officer was intending to do against him. But then when the enactment itself requires some notice to be issued in the prescribed form and intimation of certain facts to be given to the addressee in advance by way of safeguard against the danger implicit in such summary procedure, there is no reason why the same should not have been complied with and scrupulously followed by the officers who are charged with the duty of enforcing the same. We were informed at the Bar that in all these cases very little time is given to the notices and requests for adjournment are not entertained with any favour. This may be in an anxiety to give effect to the enactment to promote the cause of those for whose benefit the legislature has enacted the law. But then the responsibility of those who are charged with administering the law in regard to scrupulously following the legislative dictates, is all the more greater, so that the aggrieved parties' grievances do not remain unheard. It is impossible to proceed on the hypothesis that what is assured by the officer or alleged by the tribal is all true and there could be no defences and no serious enquiry is required in such cases. Any such approach would make mockery of the intended 'summary enquiry'. It is, however, not necessary for the purpose of this case to consider the nature of irregularities and if these in fact vitiate the proceedings or not. Proceedings in either case shall have to be revived. In view of the same having been stayed issuing of fresh notices is indispensable.

14. We accordingly quash the two notices and make the rule absolute. It will be open for the officer concerned to initiate the proceedings afresh after serving the notice in accordance with the Act and the rules. Rule is made absolute. There will be no order as to costs.

Rule made absolute.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 244

(AT NAGPUR)

DHARMADHIKARI AND GINWALA, JJ.

The Municipal Council, Malkapur and another, Petitioners v. The State of Maharashtra and another, Respondents.

Special Civil Appns. Nos. 610 of 1972 and 1691 of 1973, D/- 9/10-9-1976.

(A) Maharashtra Municipalities Act (1965), S. 313 — Action of appointment of administrator — Observance of principles of natural justice — Necessity of.

Section 313 contemplates passing of a speaking order by the State Government. From the bare reading of these provisions it is further clear that an opinion cannot be formed by the State Government unless there is material before it. Reasons for making an order cannot be recorded in the order itself unless those reasons exist. Further the section contemplates publication of the order in the official Gazette. Unless these formalities are followed, the order passed under S. 313 cannot be said to be valid and a legal order nor it can come into operation. Administrator can be appointed only by an order which is published in the Official

FU/FU/B944/77/CWM

Having regard to the scheme of S. 313 and the consequences of the action which are drastic even if there is no express provision in S. 313 that an opportunity should be given to the Municipal Council to show cause against the proposed action, the principles of natural justice require that a reasonable opportunity should be given to the council to explain the charges and to put forward its case before an action is taken against it under S. 313. (Para 5)

Though from the prima facie reading of the section it does appear that it contemplates an administrative action, in so far as the actual order of appointment of Administrator is concerned, it is quite obvious that the said order must be founded on a judicial appraisal of the facts and circumstances on the basis of which Government comes to the conclusion that a given Municipal Council is incompetent to perform or has persistently made defaults in performance of duties imposed on it by law etc. The section casts a duty on the State Government to act in accordance with the principles of natural justice while coming to an objective finding on the basis of relevant material placed before it. Therefore, in any case the action which could be taken by the State Government in pursuance of the power conferred under Section 313 is quasi-judicial in character, which requires observance of the rules of natural justice. Case law discussed.

(Para 5)

The principles of natural justice require that if any additional material or charge is intended to be used against the Municipal Council, they should be given a reasonable opportunity to submit their explanation or to put forward their case in reply to the same. (Para 12)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 166 — Mah. Govt. Rules of Business framed under, R. 14 — Observance of Rules — Duty of the Secretary of the concerned Dept.

Rule 14 of the Rules makes the Secretary of the department concerned responsible for the careful observance of the rules and when he considers that there has been any material departure from them, it is his duty to personally bring the matter to the notice of the minister-in-charge and the Chief Secretary. (Para 6)

(C) Mah. Municipalities Act (1965), S. 313 — Action under — Considerations — Acts, defaults etc. of the authority other than Municipal Council — If relevant.

The acts, defaults, competency or incompetency, excess or abuses etc. which can be taken into consideration by the Government while taking action under S. 313 of the Act should be the defaults, excess, etc. of the Council and not merely of the President or the Chief Executive Officer or the Standing Committee itself, who, for certain purposes, can exercise their powers within the framework of this Act independently. In a given case it could be shown that though the action is that of an individual authority, namely, the President or the Standing Committee, etc., the Council as a whole is responsible for the said act or omission. (Para 7)

(D) Mah. Municipalities Act (1965), S. 313 (1) (b) — Scope — Singular default — If sufficient.

The words used in Cl. (b) sub-s. (1) of S. 313 are 'persistently makes default in the performance of such duties, or in complying with the lawful directions and orders issued by the authorities'. It does not deal with mere defaults, but the expression used is persistent defaults. Therefore, prima facie it implies the conduct of the Municipal Council to continue firmly some state of affair or course of action which they have adopted in spite of the warning, notice or protest, etc. In a given case a singular default which is of a serious nature might indicate persistent attitude of the Municipal Council. The very words contemplate the default which is persistent one and that too in the performance of duties or in complying with the lawful directions of the authorities. (Para 7)

Where in its wisdom as elected representative of the people with an intention to avoid the monopoly in the trade, rightly or wrongly, decision was taken by the Municipal Council which was not found to be correct by the Collector and, therefore, he suspended the resolution and it was not shown that this resolution was passed by the Municipal Council mala fide or the decision in that behalf was not honestly taken, it was held that only because the said resolution was suspended and for the reasons disclosed in the explanation ultimately the auction was to be held through a revenue officer, it could not be said that there was a persistent default on the part of the Municipal Council or they had disobeyed to carry out the directions or orders issued by higher authorities.

(Para 7)

(E) Mah. Municipalities Act (1965), S. 313 — Explanation in reply to show cause notice — Consideration of.

If an authority is called upon to submit explanation in reply to a show-cause notice issued to it, it is normally expected that the said explanation will be duly considered by the competent authority and at least the files will disclose as to why the said explanation is not accepted or is not acceptable.

(F) Mah. Municipalities Act (1965), S. 313 — Action under — Exclusion of additional or non-existing ground — Effect — Order of supersession, held not sustainable.

Where from the tenor of the order passed by the Minister for State it was not possible to separate one charge from another nor it was possible to speculate that the Government was satisfied that any one of the charges levelled against the Municipal Council was serious enough to warrant action under Section it was held, in view of the various circumstances, that the authority concerned would not have passed the order on the basis of the other relevant or existing grounds alone. It could not be said that the exclusion of additional or non-existing grounds would not have affected the ultimate opinion or decision. The order of supersession was not sustainable in the circumstances. AIR 1967 SC 1353, Distinguished.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 610 of 1972:—

C. G. Madkholkar, for Petitioner; V. P. Salve, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for Respondents.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1691 of 1973:—

C. G. Madkholkar, for Petitioner; V. P. Salve, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

DHARMADHIKARI, J.:— General elections for electing the Councillors to the Municipal Council, Malkapur were held in June 1967. Thereafter, the first meeting of the Municipal Council for electing the President was held in July 1967 and it appears that one Shri J. N. Jadhao, who is respondent No. 4 before us, was elected as the President of the Municipal Council. The term of the elected Councillors in the normal course would have expired in July 1972. But it appears that it was extended from time to time. Initially as there was an acute scarcity in the majority of the districts of Maharashtra in the year 1972, the State Government decided to extend the term of the Municipal Council upto 31st of December 1972. Then came the Maharashtra Municipal Council (Postponement of Elections due to Scarcity Conditions in the State) Act, 1972. By virtue of this enactment the elections were postponed. It appears from the record that in the meantime on 22nd May 1972 Shri Vallabhdas Jagannath Purohit was elected as the President of the Municipal Council. It is the case of the petitioners that after this election of Shri Purohit as a President, the opposite group in the Municipal Council started making false complaints against him and the Municipal Council as a result of which initially a notice under S. 42 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 (hereinafter referred to as 'the Act') was issued to Shri Purohit who was then the President of the Municipal Council, asking him to show cause as to why he should not be removed from the Municipal Council itself. An explanation to this show-cause notice was given by him. He had also raised an objection that an action proposed to be taken under S. 42 was wholly uncalled for. Thereafter, according to the petitioners, the Director of Municipal Administration ordered an inquiry against the President Shri Purohit under S. 311 of the Act. Shri Purohit and the Municipal Council challenged the said order before this Court by filing a writ petition being Special Civil Appln. No. 610 of 1972 and it appears from the record that the said writ petition was duly admitted by this Court and an interim stay of further enquiry was also granted. From the record of the Special Civil Application No. 610 of 1972 it also appears that the State Government then filed an application for vacation of stay. After hearing the parties this Court modified the stay order in the following term on 15th of January 1973:

"The interim stay granted on 4-5-1972 is modified in that the enquiry will proceed and the enquiry report will also be submitted but further action on the report be stayed."

2. In spite of this order it appears that instead of proceeding further with the enquiry the State Government cancelled the whole proceeding by order dated 22nd of March 1973 and instead passed an order issuing a show-cause notice dated 19-4-1973. By this order the Municipal Council was directed to show cause within 20 days from the date of its receipt as to why action under S. 313 of the Act should not be taken by the Government. The grounds on which the said action was proposed to be taken read as under:

"It has been reported to Government that Malkapur Municipal Council in Buldana District,

(1) is not competent to perform duties imposed upon it by or under the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965, or any other law for the time being in force, as mentioned in Annexure I.

(2) persistently makes default in the performance of such duties or in complying with the lawful directions and orders issued by the authorities empowered under the law to issue such directions or orders to the Council as mentioned in Annexure II.

(3) has exceeded and abused the powers as mentioned in Annexure III and that

(4) the financial position and the credit of the Municipal Council is seriously threatened as mentioned in Annexure IV."

To this show-cause notice in all four schedules were attached, giving various instances. We will refer to these schedules and instances enumerated therein in detail in due course. However, from these schedules it appears that in all 22 charges were levelled against the Municipal Council. After receipt of this show-cause notice a detailed explanation was submitted by the Municipal Council with necessary annexures incorporating the information relevant for deciding the controversy involved in the said show-cause notice. It seems that the matter was also heard by the Minister for State on various dates. Ultimately by an order dated 1st of December 1973, which is incorporated in Annexure 'F' to the petition, the Government of Maharashtra directed the appointment of one, Shri V. W. Deshmukh, Tahsildar, Malkapur as an Administrator of the Municipal Council in addition to his own duties for a period till new body after general elections takes over. The said final order reads as under:

"MAHARASHTRA GOVERNMENT
GAZETTE, Extraordinary

Saturday, December 1st, 1973/Agrahayan 10, Saka 1895. Part I-A-Nagpur Division Supplement. Urban Development, Public Health & Housing Department, Sachivalaya, Bombay-32 BR, dated 1st Dec. 1973.

O R D E R

No. MUV-1372/24940/N. whereas it has been reported to Government that the Malkapur Municipal Council in Buldhana district hereinafter referred to as "the said Municipal Council" constituted under the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 (Maharashtra Act No. XL of 1965) (hereinafter referred to as 'the said Act.')

(a) is not competent to perform duties imposed upon it by or under the said Act or any other law for the time being in force as mentioned in Annexure I.

(b) persistently makes default in the performance of such duties, or in complying with the lawful direction and orders issued by the Collector, the Director, the State Government or any other authority empowered under law to issue such directions or orders to the Council as mentioned in Annexure II.

(c) has exceeded and abused the power as mentioned in Annexure III.

(d) The financial position and the credit of the Municipal Council is seriously threatened as mentioned in Annexure IV. And whereas, the allegations aforesaid on verification have been found to be true and severally and jointly appear serious enough to warrant action against the said Municipal Council, under S. 313 of the said Act. Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers vested in it under Section 313 (1) of the said Act and of all other power enabling it in this behalf the Government of Maharashtra for the reasons specified aforesaid is hereby pleased to appoint Shri V. W. Deshmukh, Tahsildar, Malkapur, as the administrator of the Malkapur Municipal Council in addition to his own duties for a period till a new body after general elections takes over with immediate effect.

ANNEXURE I.

The instances showing that the Council is incompetent to perform duties imposed upon it by or under the Maharashtra Municipalities Act or any other law for the time being in force:—

(1) Ordinary meetings are not held according to the provisions of S. 81 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act.

(2) Quarterly accounts are not prepared and note to that effect is not published according to provisions of S. 103 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act.

(3) The Salary Reserve Fund is not constituted as provided by S. 91. Further the amount withdrawn from the said fund has not been recouped.

(4) The Council failed to pay loan instalment and interest thereon payable to L.I.C. which were due on 29th March, 1972. The Collector Buldhana had, therefore to recover the same by making necessary adjustment while releasing D. A. grant in June, 1972.

(5) Abnormal deduction is made in the assessment list without recording reasons. Some properties have not been assessed for years together.

(6) Education Cess recovered is not credited into Government Treasury in time.

(7) Building permissions are not given within the prescribed time and the permissions were not made available for inspections.

(8) 60 Audit paras are still outstanding, oldest being for the year 1957-58.

ANNEXURE II.

The instances of making persistent default in performance of duties or in complying with the lawful directions and orders issued by the Collector, the Director and the State Government:—

(1) Arrears of Badkas Commission pay scales to the tune of Rs. 4,00,000 have not been paid.

(2) Auction sale of beef market stalls were not held in spite of instructions from the Collector and the Director of Municipal Administration, Bombay.

(3) Arrears of Property Tax of Rupees 3,234 and other were outstanding against the father of the President Shri V. J.

Purohit. The said taxes have been paid by him on 3rd November, 1972.

ANNEXURE III.

The instances in which the Municipal Council has exceeded and abused its powers:—

(1) The percentage of expenditure over all Municipal staff is 77 per cent. There is surplus staff, particularly in Octroi Department.

(2) There are 12 posts created without obtaining prior sanction from the competent authority. The posts of court clerk and the number taker in dispensary are continued, even though the Director of Municipal Administrations has rejected the proposals.

(3) Illegal termination of service of Sarvashri Paranjape, Typist and Satpute Naka Mohrir.

ANNEXURE IV.

The instances showing that the financial position and the credit of the Council is seriously threatened:—

(1) The Liabilities (Rs. 12,17,946-54) exceeded the assets (Rs. 8,86,103) on 5th November, 1973.

(2) The percentage of recovery of consolidated property tax, namely, 51 per cent is not satisfactory. There are heavy arrears amounting to Rs. 1,42,190 on 31st December, 1972 as against normal yearly demand of Rs. 1,32,000. The arrears of all taxes as on 31st December, 1972 were Rs. 4,14,000 as against the demand of Rs. 6,93,842. This has been reduced to Rs. 3,13,936 on 27th March, 1973.

(3) The special sanitary service and the water supply scheme are not self-supporting.

(4) The income from Octroi has shown a reduction from Rs. 6,86,000 to Rupees 3,86,560 within a period of two years ending March, 1972. The percentage of expenditure on Octroi staff is high, namely, 44 per cent as against the prescribed percentage of 20.

By order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra, Sd/- A. R. Shaikh,

Deputy Secretary to Government."

A dispute is raised in the petition that in fact such an order was not passed by the State Government on 1-12-1973 nor was it published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette on the same day. In this behalf specific allegations have been made by the petitioner in paragraphs 27, 28, 29, 30 and 31-A of the petition. According to the petitioner, the order passed by the State of Maharashtra under S. 313 of the Act is wholly illegal as it is in contravention of the well established principles of natural justice. It is further contended on behalf of the petitioners that there was no material before the State Government on the basis of which an opinion could have been formed by the State Government that the Municipal Council was not competent to perform the duties or has persistently made defaults in performance of the duties or either had exceeded or abused its power or its financial position and the credit was seriously threatened. It is also contended by the petitioners that an Administrator could be appointed by the State Government only by publishing an order in official gazette. In the present case, the publication in the gazette is not only tainted but is also a manipulated one and; therefore, there is no publication of the order in official gazette as contemplated by S. 313 of the Act. A contention is also raised in the petition that these proceedings have been instituted against the Municipal Council in colourable exercise of the power and respondent No. 2, Deputy Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, Shri A. R. Shaikh, had taken a special interest in the whole affair and had gone out of his way in preparing the order and serving it on the Municipal Council. According to the respondent State itself, Shri Shaikh has acted as per the directions of the State Government. Therefore, according to the petitioners, the conduct of the State in this behalf is not above-board. In support of this contention the learned counsel for the petitioners has relied upon the additional return filed on behalf of the respondent-State and particularly on paragraph 5 thereof. According to the learned counsel for the petitioners, if Shri Shaikh had acted as per directions of the Government, then obviously the exercise of power by the State which is reflected in the order and the official gazette is nothing but a fraud on the statute. It is further contended on behalf of the petitioners that some of the grounds on which the order of appointment of an Administrator is based are irrelevant and non-existent. Some more grounds were added at the time of passing the final order regarding which the Municipal Council was not given any opportunity of being heard or to put forward its case. So far as the other grounds referred to in the supersession order are concerned, they are also non-existent and are irrelevant to the inquiry under S. 313 of the Act. The learned counsel for the petitioners, Shri Madkholkar, further contended before us that the order passed by the State Government superseding the Municipal Council and appointing the Administrator is based on the cumulative effect of totality of the grounds stated in the order as published in the official gazette and as some of them were vague, non-existent or newly added, regarding which the Municipal Council had no opportunity to show cause or put forward its case, the whole order is vitiated as it is not possible to speculate as to which of the grounds or reasons stated therein had weighed with the State Government while forming its opinion, which has resulted in the appointment of the Administrator. He further contended that all the grounds in show cause notice were duly explained by the Municipal Council but said explanation was not considered at all by the State Government.

In reply to the various contentions raised in the petition in the return it is contended on behalf of the respondents that after giving an opportunity to show cause and after giving personal hearing to the petitioner Council the State Government had come to the conclusion that it is necessary to appoint the Administrator under S. 313 (1) read with sub-cl. (a), (b), (c) and (e) of the Act. So far as the grounds which were newly added in the final order and were not the subject-matter of the show-cause notice are concerned, in the return it was contended on behalf of the State that the provisions of S. 313 of the Act do not contemplate that a show-cause notice must be given before taking action under that section. According to the respondents, it is the discretion of the Government either to give a show-cause notice or not to give it. An additional return on behalf of respondent No. 1 was also filed duly supported by a solemn affirmation. The said additional return, which is dated 13th of August 1975, was solemnly affirmed by Shri A. R. Shaikh, Deputy Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, Urban Development Department. In this additional return the respondents have denied the allegations made in paragraphs 28, 29, 30 and 31-A of the petition so far as respondent No. 2, A. R. Shaikh, was concerned. Thereafter on 17th of July 1976, an additional affidavit was also filed on behalf of the respondents duly sworn in by the officiating administrator of the Municipal Council. By this affidavit it was contended on behalf of the respondents that initially the Administrator was appointed on 13-12-1973 and thereafter by virtue of Ordinance No. 14 of 1973 promulgated on 16th October 1973 general elections to the Municipal Council were postponed upto 31st of March 1974 or such other earlier date to be notified by the State Government. The term of the existing Administrator was thereafter extended from time to time, initially up to 31st of March 1974 and thereafter also. According to the respondents, under sub-s. (1) of S. 315 of the Act, quarterly report was submitted by the Administrator to the Director of Municipal Administration, Bombay and in view of this report, under sub-s. (2) of S. 315 of the Act the term of the Administrator was continued up to 31st of March 1976. In the meantime came the Ordinance postponing the general elections during the Emergency. This ordinance was later converted into an Act known as the Maharashtra Municipal Councils and Municipal Corporations (Postponement of Elections During the Emergency) Act, 1976 and this Act is to remain in force during the period of Emergency and 6 months thereafter if no earlier date is notified by the Government. Therefore, according to the respondents, in view of the provisions of S. 3 (1) (c) of this Postponement Act, the term of the Administrator stands extended during the aforesaid period. A contention was also raised on behalf of the respondents before us that in view of these subsequent enactments the petition does not survive and is liable to be dismissed with costs. Therefore, in substance it is the contention of the respondents that the formation of the opinion by the State Government under S. 313 of the Act is based on the subjective satisfaction of the State Government and, therefore, it cannot be objectively tested.

It is also their contention that in fact it is neither necessary nor is it obligatory on the part of the State Government to give any show-cause notice to the Municipal Council before an action under S. 313 is taken. According to Shri Salve, learned Assistant Government pleader appearing on behalf of the respondents 1 to 3, in view of the fact that normally in such matters principles of natural justice should be followed, the State Government had given a show-cause notice by way of abundant caution to the Municipal Council. Their reply to the said show-cause notice was duly considered. Even a personal hearing was given to the Municipal Council through their counsel and after considering the explanation given by the Municipal Council and taking into consideration the material placed on record the State Government came to the conclusion that it was necessary to appoint the Administrator under S. 313 (1) of the Act. Thus in substance it is contended by Shri Salve that the order passed by the Government appointing the Administrator is perfectly legal and valid and is not liable to be interfered with in the extraordinary jurisdiction of this Court under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India.

3. For properly understanding the controversy raised before us, it will be necessary to refer to certain important provisions of the Act. Chap. II of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act deals with the Municipal Councils, their area and classification. It further deals with composition of Municipal Councils and elections of the councillors. Section 40, then lays down that the Councillors elected at the general election shall hold office for a term of five years which may be extended by the State Government. Then it deals with the elections of the office-bearers including the President and the Vice-President. Chapter III of the Act deals with the duties and functions of the Municipal Council and Municipal Executive including the obligatory duties and discretionary functions of the Municipal Council. Chapter VII then deals with Municipal Property, Funds, Contracts and Liabilities etc. Chapter XXIII, in which S. 313 appears, then deals with Control over the Municipal Council constitution under the Act. Section 306 of the Act empowers the Director or the Collector or any officer of the Government authorised by the State Government in that behalf to inspect and supervise the affairs of the Municipal Council. Director or Collector has power to call for a return or reports. Power is also conferred upon the Collector to suspend execution of the orders and resolutions of the Council on certain grounds. Extraordinary powers also are given to the Collector in the matter of execution of certain works in case of emergency. The Director is also empowered to prevent extravagance in the employment of establishment. Under S. 311 of the Act, the State Government has a power to order an inquiry to be held by any officer appointed by it in this behalf into any matters concerning the municipal administration of any Council or the matters connected therewith. Under S. 312 of the Act, power has been conferred upon the Director to issue directions in the matter to enforce performance of the duties, and then comes S. 313 of the Act, with which we are concerned in the present writ petition. Section 313 reads as under:—

"313. (1) If, in the opinion of the State Government—

(a) a Council is not competent to perform duties imposed upon it by or under this Act or any other law for the time being in force, or

(b) persistently makes default in the performance of such duties, or in complying with the lawful directions and orders issued by the Collector, the Director, the State Government or any other authority empowered under law to issue such directions or orders to a Council, or

(c) exceeds or abuses its powers, or

(d) a situation has arisen in which the administration of the Council cannot be carried out in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or

(e) the financial position and the credit of the Council is seriously threatened, the State Government may, by an order published in the Official Gazette, appoint a Government Officer as the Administrator of the Council for a period not exceeding three years. The order shall state the reasons for making the order.

(2) If the term of office of an Administrator so appointed is less than three years, the State Government may extend it from time to time, subject to the limitation of the total period of three years." Then S. 314 of the Act deals with the powers of Administrator. It also deals with the consequences of appointment of an Administrator under S. 313 of the Act. As soon as the Administrator is appointed, all the powers and functions, vesting in or exercisable by the Council, the President, the Vice-President, the various committees, the Councillors and the Chief Officer under the Act or any other law for the time being in force vest in and are exercisable by the Administrator, to the exclusion of their exercise and performance by the authorities referred to above. Under S. 315 of the Act review of the Administrative work is contemplated. Under sub-s. (3) of S. 315, if, in the opinion of the State Government, even after the period of three years of administration by the Administrator the grounds on which the Administrator was appointed still exist, the State Government may by an order published in the Official Gazette dissolve the Council. If such a Council is dissolved, then the subsequent provisions prescribe the procedure for re-establishment of the Council, after such a dissolution. From the bare reading of these relevant provisions of the Act it is quite obvious that once the power is exercised by the State Government under S. 313 of the Act, practically the local government elected by the electorate ceases to function. Though under S. 40 of the Act the Councillors have a right to continue in office for a term of five years, they cease to function as such as soon as Administrator is appointed under S. 313 of the Act. To some extent if an order is passed under S. 313 (1) of the Act, it results in casting a stigma upon the Municipal Council and the elected Councillors.

This whole thing is popularly known as supersession of Municipal Council. Therefore, the nature of the inquiry and the procedure which the State Government should follow before passing an order under S. 313 (1) of the Act will have to be viewed and understood having regard to serious consequences. It is no doubt true that in terms S. 313 does not lay down that before an action is taken against the Municipal Council under S. 313 of the Act, a show-cause notice should be issued. But S. 313 contemplates formation of an opinion by the State Government regarding the grounds and the matters enumerated in Cls. (a) to (e). Then obligation is cast upon the State Government to pass an order in that behalf which should be published in the Official Gazette. It further enjoins a duty upon the State Government to state the reasons for making the order. Therefore obviously S. 313 contemplates passing of a speaking order by the State Government. From the bare reading of these provisions it is further clear that an opinion cannot be formed by the State Government unless there is material before it. Reasons for making an order cannot be recorded in the order itself unless those reasons exist. Further the section contemplates publication of the order in the Official Gazette. Unless these formalities are followed, the order passed under S. 313 of the Act cannot be said to be a valid and legal order nor it can come into operation. Administrator can be appointed only by an order which is published in the Official Gazette. This in itself is one of the ingredients of the principles of natural justice. The Supreme Court had an occasion to consider this aspect of the matter in Harla v. The State of Rajasthan (AIR 1951 SC 467). In the said case the Supreme Court observed as under:—

"We are of opinion that it would be against the principles of natural justice to permit the subjects of a State to be punished or penalised by laws of which they had no knowledge and of which they could not even with the exercise of reasonable diligence have acquired any knowledge. Natural justice requires that before a law can become operative it must be promulgated or published. It must be broadcast in some recognisable way so that all men may know what it is; or, at the very least, there must be some special rule or regulation or customary channel by or through which such knowledge can be acquired with the exercise of due and reasonable diligence. The thought that a decision reached in the secret recesses of a chamber to which the public have no access and to which even their accredited representatives have no access and of which they can normally know nothing, can nevertheless affect their lives, liberty and property by the mere passing of a resolution without anything more is abhorrent to civilised man. It shocks his conscience. In the absence therefore of any law, rule, regulation or custom, we hold that a law cannot come into being in this way. Promulgation or publication of some reasonable sort is essential."

It appears that the publication of an order or law in the Official Gazette is treated to be sufficient notice to everybody. The publication of the order in Official Gazette passed under S. 313 (1) of the Act is not only meant for the Municipal Council or its Councillors alone but the citizens as well as the electorate are also entitled to know the reasons for which they are deprived of their elected local self-government. This aspect of the matter came for consideration before the Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in State of Uttar Pradesh v. K. C. Gupta (1974 All LJ 58). That was also a case of supersession of a Municipal Council. In this context the Division Bench made a reference to the earlier decision of a Single Judge in I. P. Kapoor v. State of U. P. (1967 All LJ 1043) and particularly to the following observations therein:

"It is apparent that the requirement that reasons for the order shall be published in the Official Gazette is to provide a safeguard against arbitrary action on the one hand and to convince the citizen and the members of the Board, of the ground on which the State Government reached the requisite satisfaction to deprive them of their right to local self-government. The purpose of the requirement that reasons shall be stated is to ensure that the reasons which have impelled the action are germane and relevant to the content and scope of the power vested in the State Government."

The provision for stating the reasons for making the order has been made for obvious reasons. The giving of reasons in support of their conclusions is essential for various purposes. First, it is calculated to prevent unconscious unfairness or arbitrariness in reaching the conclusions. The very search for reasons will put the authority on the alert and minimise the chances of unconscious infiltration of personal bias or unfairness in the conclusion. The authority will adduce reasons which will be regarded as fair and legitimate by a reasonable man and will discard irrelevant or extraneous considerations. Second, it is a well-known principle that justice should not only be done but should also appear to be done. Unreasoned conclusions may be just but they may not appear to be just to those who read them. Reasoned conclusions, on the other hand, will have also the appearance of justice. Third, it should be remembered that sometimes these orders of the Government are challenged before this Court under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India and in case no reasons are given, the Court will have to wade through the entire record and find for itself whether the decision is right or wrong. In many cases this investment of time and industry will be saved if reasons are given in support of the conclusion (see M/s. Woolcombers of India Ltd. v. Woolcombers Workers' Union, AIR 1973 SC 2758).

4. In this context reference could usefully be made to a decision of the Punjab High Court in the Municipal Committee Kharar, District Ambala v. The State of Punjab (AIR 1967 Punj 430). While dealing with the aspect of the matter Narula J. in paragraph 41 observed as under:—

"In the instant case the State Government, which is entrusted with vast power and extensive authority to supersede a

"The reasons required as a condition precedent by S. 238 to be stated in a valid notification superseding a Committee, in my view, are those necessary facts which may have weighed with the State Government in arriving at the conclusion that the Committee is incompetent to perform and has persistently made defaults in the performance of statutory duties. The notification in order to be valid must accordingly set out all the necessary facts precisely so that all those who read the notification may be able to know what those facts are on which the above conclusion has been founded. The object and purpose of this requirement appears to me to be traceable to a desire on the part of the Legislature to guarantee that the State Government does not act arbitrarily and does not abuse or misuse the drastic power conferred on it by the Statute. This desire has apparently roots in the conscious realisation that the exercise of power, if it is to be something better than infliction of wanton injustice, must be

For my part, I consider this right to be basic in a set-up like ours where a citizen has been assured equal justice according to law and where the courts are not ordinarily deprived of their jurisdiction to adjudicate on citizens' rights even against the State. In any event, the right to know the reasons indisputably tends to promote in the minds of the citizens a feeling of democratic satisfaction with the legal character of our State: a satisfaction on which alone can be founded a stable and healthy democratic set-up. If I may so put it, it is because of this law that a citizen primarily feels content with a truly democratic State and it is this contentment alone which basically sustains such a State. The impugned notification is accordingly invalid as it does not contain reasons for the super-session.

It is true that the statute does not in terms provide that the State Government has to perform a duty of a judicial character while dealing with the question of supersession, but that alone cannot be conclusive, because the judicial character of a duty may be inferred from the nature of the statutory duty itself, examined in the light of the character of the right affected and the consequences that flow from the exercise of such duty. Where power is conferred on an authority to determine questions prejudicially affecting rights of citizens, in view of what I have said above, a duty may, justifiably be implied that such powers would be exercised in conformity with the principles of natural justice applicable to a judicial approach. These limits seem to inhere in the very nature of the power. The omission of the Legislature to insert positive words imposing an obligation of a judicial approach appears to be supplied by the plainest principles of justice on which our Constitution is founded. The duty imposed on the State Government, when exercising the power conferred by S. 238, requires the determination of the question whether the Committee concerned is incompetent to perform or persistently makes default in the performance of the duties imposed on it. This duty necessarily involves consideration of factual material and formation of opinion on its evaluation leading to the final conclusion. This seems to me to require an objective approach closely resembling that of a judicial mind adjudicating upon a controversy, and is not a mere matter of administrative or executive policy, expediency or discretion. And if I am right in taking this view then this duty may well be considered to partake of a quasi-judicial character attracting the observance of the rules of natural justice.

The order of supersession, it may be remembered, very seriously affects the members of the Committee concerned and incidentally also the electorates who have duly elected the municipal Councillors. I am not unmindful of the fact that the Punjab Municipal Act was enacted apparently in pursuance of the policy of developing local self governing institutions as a part of the larger policy of establishing in this country democratic Government by elected representatives and training the people in the art of local self-Government. An effective and close supervision and control over the working of local bodies like the Municipal Committee was thus considered necessary to a considerable extent. But this aspect induces me further to hold that the power conferred by S. 238 which entails drastic consequences of superseding a self-governing elected body calls, in its exercise, proper observance of the rules of natural justice so that the other side of the picture is adequately presented before the State Government by the party affected. This seems to me to be essential if local self-Government is to develop on healthy lines and our democratic set-up is to have strong and deep roots in the community at large."

The law laid down in this decision was subsequently approved by the Full Bench of Delhi High Court in Suraj Prakash v. State of Punjab (AIR 1968 Delhi 30). Therefore, the scope of S. 313 of the Act will have to be understood in this context.

5. From the bare reading of the provisions of S. 313 of the Act it is quite obvious that formation of an opinion is condition precedent for taking an action under S. 313 of the Act. Before the power can be exercised under this section, there must exist the circumstances on the basis of which an opinion could be reasonably formed or from which an inference could be reasonably drawn regarding the factors enumerated in Cls. (a) to (e) of sub-s. (1) of S. 313 of the Act. The power to appoint Administrator is conferred on the State Government and that too in certain circumstances only. It is not an unbridled or arbitrary power. Further the order appointing an Administrator is to be passed on certain grounds or reasons and those should be specifically stated in the order. The order must be made public by publishing in the Official Gazette. The recording of the reasons ensure that opinion is formed according to law and is not a result of caprice and whim or fancy and is not reached on the grounds of policy or expediency. Further the Municipal Council, Councillors and the citizens are entitled to know the reasons or grounds for taking action. Therefore, having regard to the scheme of S. 313 and the consequences of the action which are drastic, in our opinion, even if there is no express provision in S. 313 of the Act that an opportunity should be given to the Municipal Council to show cause against the proposed action, the principles of natural justice require that a reasonable opportunity should be given to the council to explain the charges and to put forward its case before an action is taken against it under S. 313 of the Act. It is not necessary for us to go into the question as to whether the power given under S. 313 is a quasi-judicial power or an administrative power. As observed by the Supreme Court in A. K. Kraipak v. Union of India (AIR 1970 SC 150), the dividing line between an administrative power and a quasi-judicial power is quite thin and is being gradually obliterated. It is further laid down therein that the principles of natural justice and fair play apply to the exercise of administrative power also. It is equally well settled that these principles are not embodied rules nor they can be imprisoned within a strait-jacket or rigid formula. As to whether in a given case these principles of natural justice are followed or not must obviously depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. To us it appears that this position is by now well settled. A reference in this behalf could usefully be made to the following decisions: Municipal Committee, Kareli v. State of Madhya Pradesh (AIR 1958 Madh Pra 323) (FB), Maurinha v. State of Madhya Pradesh (AIR 1958 Madh Pra 397), Suresh Seth v. The State (AIR 1970 Madh Pra 154), Municipal Committee Kharar v. The State of Punjab (AIR 1967 Punj 430), Suraj Prakash v. State of Punjab (AIR 1968 Delhi 30) (FB) and State of U. P. v. Krishna Chandra Gupta (1974 All LJ 58). Further it is not now necessary for us to deal with this aspect of the matter any further as Shri Salve, learned Assistant Government Pleader, has conceded this position and, in our opinion, rightly. Even according to Shri Salve, as S. 313 of the Act confers a power upon the State Government to take action, which has drastic effect or consequences, the power which is conferred upon it, though prima facie appears to be an administrative one, is in substance a quasi-judicial. In our opinion, by now this position appears to be well settled. Though from the prima facie reading of the section it does appear that it contemplates an administrative action, in so far as the actual order of appointment of Administrator is concerned, it is quite obvious that the said order must be founded on a judicial appraisal of the facts and circumstances on the basis of which Government comes to the conclusion that a given Municipal Council is incompetent to perform or has persistently made defaults in performance of duties imposed on it by law etc. The section casts a duty on the State Government to act in accordance with the principles of natural justice while coming to an objective finding on the basis of relevant material placed before it. Therefore, in our opinion, in any case the action which could be taken by the State Government in pursuance of the power conferred under S. 313 of the Act is quasi-judicial in character, which requires observance of the rules of natural justice. Therefore, the action taken by the Government in the instant case superseding the petitioner Municipal Council will have to be tested in this background.

6. Initially a complaint is made by Shri Madkholkar before us that the order of supersession passed by the State Government is wholly illegal as it was not published in the Official Gazette as contemplated by S. 313 of the Act. In paragraphs 27 to 30 the petitioners have made specific allegations that the document, namely, the gazette produced before the Court is a fabricated document and cannot be equated with an order passed by the State Government and published in the Official Gazette as contemplated by S. 313 of Act. In these paragraphs of the petition the petitioners had made a specific allegation that respondent No. 2 Shri A. R. Shaikh, who is Deputy Secretary of the Urban Development Department to the Government of Maharashtra, had acted high-handedly with gross illegality on his part. It is further stated in the petition that Shri Shaikh had made reservation on 29th of November 1973 itself for going to Malkapur. This reservation was cancelled and on 30-11-1973 he made another First Class reservation from Bombay to Malkapur by 29 Down Bombay-Howrah Express. According to the petitioners, he travelled in a First Class coach and the petitioners have given the ticket number as well as the reservation ticket number also. He did not get down at Malkapur. on 1-12-1973 but extended his ticket up to Shegaon. According to the petitioners, this 29 Down Bombay-Howrah Express reaches Malkapur at 7-30 a.m. and at Shegaon at 8-20 a.m. After getting down at Shegaon Shri Shaikh proceeded to Buldana and contacted the Collector. He secured a jeep of Zilla Parishad at about 11 a.m. Then he started with one Kharche, resident Deputy Collector at Buldana for Malkapur and then with the aid of the Sub-Divisional Officer he forcibly took charge of the office of the Municipal Council, Malkapur and handed it over to Shri Deshmukh Tahsildar, who was appointed as an Administrator. These facts are not disputed by the respondents. On the basis of these admitted facts a further contention is raised by the petitioners that a gazette notification purporting to be published on 1-12-73 was available to Shri Shaikh in the published form on 30th of November 1973 itself, even before he left Bombay on that date. Therefore, according to the petitioners, the gazette which is purported to be published on 1-12-1973 or the Government resolution which is purported to be signed on 1-12-1973 was already prepared and got printed on 30th November 1973 itself and was deliberately post-dated. The petitioners further contended that in this case an extraordinary method was followed for serving the order on the Municipal Council. The petitioners further contend in the petition that this undue enthusiasm was shown by Shri Shaikh as per directions of the Government for the obvious reasons. One of such reasons, according to the petitioners, is that this ingenuous method was followed by respondent No. 2 in this behalf with the sole intention that the petitioners should not get any time to approach any higher authorities or even the Court of law for getting redress. Another reason is given by the petitioners in their reply to the show-cause notice itself. According to them, this order of supersession was politically motivated as Shri Jadhao, who was Vice-President of the District Congress Committee, was defeated in the Presidential election. Therefore, in substance it is the contention of the petitioners that the whole conduct of respondent No. 2 and the Government is mala fide or at least the order as well as the gazette notification was issued in a colourable exercise of power. When the matter was heard last time, i.e., on 2nd of September 1976 by this Bench, the Assistant Government Pleader took time to produce the whole record before us as it was noticed that the return filed was a cryptic one and did not deal with all the allegations made in the petition. The whole record of the case is now, made available to us. As a matter of fact, during the course of arguments Shri Salve, learned Assistant Government Pleader relied upon this record and files in support of his contentions. With the help of the learned Assistant Government Pleader we have gone through the whole record and file which is produced before us and to say the least, in our opinion, so far as the question of publication of the gazette is concerned, it discloses a very sorry state of affairs. Obviously our observations in this behalf are based on prima facie perusal of the record. It appears from the file produced before us that after the matter was heard by the Minister for State, a decision regarding the supersession of the Municipal Council was taken on 26th November 1973 itself. From the record produced before us and particularly from the letter dated 28th November 1973 addressed to the Collector, Buldana and signed by Shri A. R. Shaikh, respondent No. 2, and a letter addressed to the Manager of Government Central Press, Bombay, dated 29-11-1973 which is also signed by respondent No. 2 Shri Shaikh, it appears that the Government Central Press was directed to print copies of Extraordinary Gazette to be dated 15th December 1973 and supply in all 30 copies of it to respondent No. 2 by 12 noon on 30th November 1973 itself. Therefore, it is quite obvious that even before the Government Resolution was prepared, signed and dated, the gazette notification was got printed on 30th November 1973 itself by putting up the date as 1st December 1973. In the file we find that there is a Government Resolution bearing No. MUV-1372/24940/N 6 dated 1st December 1973 and is signed by Shri A. R. Shaikh, respondent No. 2, the Deputy Secretary to the Government. From the endorsement on the file as well as the date put on the Government Resolution it is quite obvious that Government Resolution was issued on 1st of December 1973 and not earlier. That is the date we find even in the Extraordinary Gazette. If this is so, one fails to understand how the Government Resolution which is issued on 1st of December 1973 and was also to be published on the 1st of December 1973 in the Extraordinary Gazette, could have been printed on 30th of November 1973. It is also difficult to understand how respondent No. 2 Shri A. R. Shaikh could have obtained the copies of this Extraordinary Gazette, which is dated 1st of December 1973, even before he left Bombay for Malkapur on 30th November. If, therefore, the endorsements on the file are read with the allegations made in the petition, prima facie it appears that there is much substance in the contention raised on behalf of the petitioners in this behalf. The record produced before us discloses various circumstances which raise a doubt about the whole affair and, therefore, calls for an inquiry. It is well settled that a condition is implied in all instruments which creates power, that power shall be used bona fide and for the purposes for which it is conferred. In the present petition a contention is raised by the petitioners that the order issued by the government as well as published in the Official Gazette is nothing but a fraud on the statute. The petitioners have adversely commented upon the whole conduct of respondent No. 2 Shri A. R. Shaikh. In the return itself a statement is made on behalf of the State that Shri Shaikh has acted according to the directions of the Government. However, it is not necessary for us to probe into this question any further in this writ petition. However we want to draw the attention of respondent No. 1 towards the Maharashtra Government Rules of Business framed under Art. 166 of the Constitution of India and particularly towards R. 14 of the said Rules. It is pertinent to note that the State of Maharashtra is joined as respondent No. 1 to this petition through the Secretary of Urban Development Department of the Government of Maharashtra. Rule 14 of the said Rules makes the Secretary of the department concerned responsible for the careful observance of the rules and when he considers that there has been any material departure from them, it is his duty to personally bring the matter to the notice of the Minister-in-charge and the Chief Secretary. Therefore, having regard to the material placed before us and the allegations made in the petition we find that there is material departure from the procedure normally followed in this behalf and, therefore, we hereby direct the Secretary of the department concerned to bring this matter to the notice of the Minister-in-charge as well as the Chief Secretary. Under Art. 166 of the Constitution of India, the executive action of the Government of a State is required to be expressed in the name of the Governor. Orders and other instruments made and executed in the name of the Governor or to be authenticated in such manner as may be specified in the business rules. Article 166 (2) further lays down that the validity of an order or instrument which is so authenticated shall not be called in question on the ground that it is not an order or instrument made or executed by the Governor. Therefore, it is obvious that a sanctity and authenticity is attached to such an order or instrument which is issued in the name of the Governor. If the allegation made in the petition in this behalf are true which in our opinion, have much substance, then the very purpose of Article 166 will be frustrated. The very authenticity or sanctity to be attached to such documents will lose its force. This is likely to affect the confidence the public has in such instruments or orders. Therefore, in our opinion this is a fit case where this matter should be brought to the notice of the Head of the State, viz., the Governor also in whose name and order is issued and published in the Official Gazette. We, therefore, direct respondent No. 1 the State of Maharashtra, to place this matter also before the Governor of Maharashtra.

7. So far as the contentions raised on the merits of the matter are concerned, they will have to be decided having regard to the provisions of S. 313 of the Act and the material and circumstances placed on record. As already observed, initially certain action was proposed to be taken against the President of the Municipal Council. Thereafter an inquiry was instituted under S. 311 of the Act. The institution of that inquiry was challenged before this court by the petitioners by filing a writ petition bearing Special Civil Application No. 610 of 1972. As already observed, this petition was admitted by this Court and initially an interim stay of inquiry was also granted. On an application being made by the State the said interim stay was modified and permission was granted to the State Government to proceed with the inquiry up to the stage of submission of report. However, further action on the basis of the report was stayed. In spite of this modification of the order, which was at the instance of the State Government, it appears that the State Government did not proceed with the inquiry but cancelled its earlier order of instituting the inquiry itself. The fact of cancellation of the inquiry was not brought to the notice of this Court. The said petition is still pending and is being disposed of today as it has become infructuous. According to the petitioners, when the respondent State found that even if inquiry is held and report is submitted as in view of the stay order granted by this Court further action cannot be taken the inquiry was dropped and then recourse was taken to the provisions of S. 313 of the Act in colourable exercise of the power. Under S. 313, an action to appoint an Administrator could be taken if in the opinion of the State Government,

(a) the Council is not competent to perform duties imposed upon it by or under this Act or any other law for the time being in force, or

(b) it persistently makes default in the performance of such duties, or in complying with the lawful directions and orders issued by the Collector, the Director, the State Govt. or any other authority empowered under law to issue such direction or orders to a Council, or

(c) exceeds or abuses its power, or

(d) a situation has arisen in which the administration of the Council cannot be carried out in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or

(e) the financial position and the credit of the Council is seriously threatened. In the case before us, show cause notice was founded on the ground connected with Cls. (a), (b), (c) and (e) of this section. Section 7 of the Act indicates the Municipal Authorities charged with carrying out the provisions of the Act, namely,

- (a) the Council;
- (b) the President;
- (c) the Standing Committee;
- (d) the Subjects Committees, if any; and
- (e) the Chief Officer.

Then by S. 8, incorporation of the Council is provided which further lays down that it will have a perpetual succession. Therefore, obviously the Act creates specific municipal authorities which are charged with the execution of the provisions of the Act. As already observed, Chapter XXIII provides for the control over the administration and working of the Municipal Council, S. 313 deals with the competency or incompetency acts or omission of the Municipal Council as such. It, therefore, appears from the scheme of the Act that the acts, defaults, competency or incompetency, excess or abuses etc. which can be taken into consideration by the Government while taking action under S. 313 of the Act should be the defaults, excess etc. of the Council and not merely of the President or the Chief Executive Officer or the Standing Committee itself, who, for certain purposes, can exercise their powers within the frame work of this Act independently. In a given case it could be shown that though the action is that of an individual authority, namely, the President or the Standing Committee, etc., the Council as a whole is responsible for the said act or omission. Therefore, in the present case it will have to be seen as to whether there was a material before the Government on the basis of which reasonably an opinion could have been formed that council was either incompetent to perform its duties or has made persistent defaults in performance of its duties, or had exceeded or abused its power or the financial position and the credit of the Council was seriously threatened. The words used in Cl. (b) sub-s. (1) of the S. 313 are "persistently makes default in the performance of such duties, or in complying with the lawful directions and orders issued by the authorities." It does not deal with mere defaults, but the expression used is persistent defaults. Therefore, prima facie it implies the conduct of the Municipal Council to continue firmly some state of affair or course of action which they have adopted in spite of the warning, notice or protest, etc. In a given case a singular default which is of a serious nature might indicate persistent attitude of the Municipal Council. The very words contemplate the default which is persistent one and that too in the performance of duties or in complying with the lawful directions of the authorities.

The duty imposed upon the Municipal Council could be an expressed duty as imposed by the provisions of the Act or any other law for the time being in force or could be an implied one. Having regard to the position the Council occupies in the democratic set up and the obligations and duties imposed upon it by the Act or any other law for the time being in force, an obligation is cast upon them to do something which they should do as a public body or as a result of an obligation it owes to the citizens in general. So far as abuse or excess of power is concerned, abuse of power could be inferred from want of good faith or bona fides or if the action is arbitrary, fanciful or unreasonable. However, no general rule or principle can be laid down in this behalf and ordinarily it must depend on the facts and circumstance of each case. In the present case, so far as the competency of the Council is concerned, in the show cause notice the sub-cl. (a) of S. 313 is reproduced. Then in Schedule 'I' the instances are given which, according to the State Government, show that the Council is incompetent to perform its duties imposed upon it by or under the Maharashtra Municipalities Act or any other law for the time being in force. The instances given are as under:

"(1) Ordinary meetings are not held according to the provisions of S. 81 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act.

(2) Quarterly accounts are not prepared and note to that effect is not published according to provisions of S. 103 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act.

(4) The Salary Reserve Fund is not constituted provided by S. 91. Further the amount withdrawn from the said fund has not been recouped.

(4) The Council failed to pay loan instalment and interest thereon payable to Life Insurance Corporation which were due on 29-3-72. The Collector, Buldana had, therefore, to recover the same by making necessary adjustment while releasing D. A. grant in June 1972.

(5) Abnormal deduction is made in the assessment list without recording reasons. Some properties have not been assessed for years together.

(6) Education cess recovered is not credited into Government Treasury in time.

(7) Building permissions are not given within the prescribed time and the permissions were not made available for inspection.

(8) The work of removing encroachments is neglected.

(9) Basic amenities such as public latrines, Urinals, dust-bins have not been adequately provided.

(10) The Council has carried out public works costing Rs. 1,56,293 but the stock account of building road materials are not maintained properly.

(11) Tenders at higher rate have been accepted after negotiations. Only certain contractors being called for negotiations therefor and not all who tendered.

(12) No technical sanctions are obtained from competent authority in case of works costing Rs. 10,000 and above, as required by S. 72 of the Act."

It is an admitted position that so far as the instances given in items Nos. 8 and 12 are concerned, they were not relieved upon by the State Government while passing the final order. Therefore, these instances do not find place in the final order passed on 1-12-1973. So far as the failure of holding ordinary meetings is concerned, the Municipal Council had given a detailed explanation. As to during what period ordinary meetings were not held is not enumerated in the show cause notice. But it appears from the material placed on record that in all seven ordinary meetings were held during the period from 11th June 1971 to 7th May 1973 and about 18 special meetings were taken during that period. Under S. 81 of the Act a duty is cast upon the Chairman to convene meetings. Sub-section (1) of S. 81 then lays down that there shall be held six ordinary meetings in each year for the disposal of general business, in every alternate month commencing from the month in which the first meeting of the Council under S. 51 is held, and such other ordinary meetings as the President may find necessary. The said provision lays down a duty upon the President to fix the dates for all ordinary meetings and to call such meetings. The whole period from the commencement of the month in which the first meeting of the Council was held under

S. 51 of the Act upto the date of issuing of the show cause notice has not been taken into consideration by the State. Further it appears that in the special meetings the business of the Council was transacted. It is not the case of the State Government at any stage that because these general meetings were not held as per schedule, business of the Council has been prejudicially affected. An action initially was taken against the President and inquiry was also instituted in this behalf under S. 311 of the Act but the State Government has chosen not to proceed with it. Therefore, from the material placed on record it appears that there is technical breach in this behalf which has been explained by the Municipal Council. Unfortunately even from the final order, which is incorporated in the Government Resolution, we do not find any reference to the explanation given by the Council at all. We do not find any recital in the final order which could indicate that the explanation given by the Council to the show cause notices was considered by the State Government. The phraseology used in the final order only indicates that the facts stated in the show cause notice were only verified. We still assume for a moment that the President was not justified in not calling the meetings as per provisions of the Act and has committed a technical breach of Section 81 of the Act. But then what will justify an action under S. 313 of the Act is the incompetency of the Municipal Council and not wrongful act of the President. It has not been alleged that the Municipal Council as a whole was a party to this alleged wrongful Act of the President. Therefore, in our opinion, the State was in error in relying upon this instance. So far as preparation and publication of quarterly accounts are concerned, it appears from the record that such accounts were prepared but were not published according to the provisions of S. 103 of the Act. Section 103 of the Act requires the Municipal Council to publish a statement in this behalf in the local newspapers. However, in the explanation given by the Municipal Council it was clarified that in the town of Malkapur there is no daily newspaper and there is only one weekly paper which has insignificant circulation. Therefore, the Council thought that by publishing this notice in the weekly newspaper no tangible result would be assumed and, therefore, a statement in that behalf was put on the notice-board of the Municipal Council. It is an admitted position before us that in the Municipal town of Malkapur there are no daily newspapers. As per provisions of S. 58 of the Act it is the duty of the President to perform the executive functions and exercise supervision and control over the acts and proceeding of the officers etc. The duty to publish the matter in the local newspaper could be termed to be an executive function. It should have been done by the President or the Chief Officer. Here again we will assume for a moment that they were not justified in not publishing quarterly or annual accounts in the weekly newspaper. But as already observed, we are not concerned with the wrongful acts of the President or other servants of the Municipal Council. Here also it is not shown that the Municipal Council as a whole was a party to this wrongful act. So far as the Salary Reserve Fund is concerned, it appears that this is partly done by the Municipal Council and so far as question of recoupment is concerned, the Municipal Council had explained the whole position by stating, that because of the obstacles created in releasing the grant in time it was not possible for them to recoup the funds within time, which was ultimately done by the Collector himself from the grants which are payable to the Municipal Council. Similar, is the position with payment of loan instalments. This amount was also recoverable by the Collector from the grants payable to the Municipal Council. So far as the allegation regarding the abnormal deduction made in the assessment list is concerned, it is obvious from the bare reading of this charge that it is too vague. It was pointed out by the Municipal Council in its explanation that the charge does not disclose the details of entries in the assessment list nor it discloses the property to which it relates. So far as the charge regarding credit of education cess in Government Treasury in time is concerned, in the charge it is not stated as to what was the time specified for payment of this Education Cess. Similar is the position with the charge No. 7 in Annexure I, which relates to building permission. This charge is also vague. A specific complaint in this behalf was made by the Municipal Council in its explanation and in spite of this, no further details or particulars were ever given by the State Government. From the copy of the Inspection note which was given to the Municipal Council also these details are not available. In this behalf it is pertinent to note that granting of building permission is not the function of the Municipal Council as a whole. Under S. 190 of the Act, it is the power of the Chief Officer. In this case also it is neither alleged nor shown that the Municipal Council as a whole was a party to this inaction on the part of the Chief Officer. In this behalf reference could usefully be made to S. 77 of the Act which deals with the powers and duties of the Chief Officer. In these circumstances, it cannot be said that there was no substance in the grievance made and explanation given to the individual charges by the Municipal Council in its explanation. As already observed, charges Nos. 8 to 12 were already deleted and were not relied upon when the final order was passed. Instead, one more charge was added to this Annexure 'I' in the final order, which reads as under:

"60 Audit paras are still outstanding, oldest being for the year 1957-58." It is an admitted position that this charge was not the subject-matter of the show cause notice nor was it ever brought to the notice of the Municipal Council at any time. It is not necessary to deal with this additional charge in detail as a statement has been made before us by Shri Salve, learned Assistant Government Pleader, that he is not relying upon any of the newly added charges for supporting the order passed by the State Government. Schedule II deals with the instances of making persistent defaults in performance of the duties or in compliance with the lawful direction or orders issued by the Collector or the Director and of the State Government. Though this is, in our opinion, a verbatim reproduction of Cl. (b) of sub-s. (1) of S. 313 of the Act, no details have been given as to what were the direction or orders issued by the Collector, the Director or the State Government, which were not carried out by the Municipal Council. It is also not specified as to what was the duty of the Municipal Council to which the defaults relate. Charge No. 1 deals with payment of arrears of Badkas Commission pay-scales which is to the tune of four lakhs, in reply to this allegation it was clarified by the Municipal Council that Badkas Award was made applicable with retrospective effect from 1966 and by issuing a circular by the State Government. It is no doubt true that an option in this behalf was given to the Municipal Council. Initially the Muni-pal Council decided to make the said Award applicable from 1-3-1970. But then there was an agitation by the employees and, therefore, the decision taken by the Municipal Council could not be transacted into practice and ultimately it was forced to accept the recommendation of the Badkas Commission and make the Award applicable with effect from 1-4-1966. According to the Municipal Council having regard to the obligatory duties it was not possible for them to arrange for making of payment of these four lakhs of rupees in a lump sum. Such a plea has also been taken by them in paragraph 14 of the petition. Therefore, obviously it could be said that the Municipal Council has not paid these arrears till the show cause notice was issued. But it is difficult to hold that this amounted to a persistent default for performance of duties. No specific order or direction has been placed on record to indicate that the Municipal Council was directed to pay this amount by a specific date. It is no doubt true that it could be assumed that once by a resolution the responsibility regarding payment of arrears of Badkas Award is accepted by the Municipal Council, it is duty-bound to pay it. But if the Award is made applicable retrospectively from the year 1966, then it can very well be visualised that it may not be possible for a local body to pay the whole amount in a lump sum in one year. The Budget estimates and recovery were already completed and even the accounts for the said period were duly audited and closed. Payments of arrears could be made only from the prospective recoveries. It is obviously not an obligatory duty. If, therefore, in this background incapacity to pay the whole amount in lump sum is duly explained by the Municipal Council and that too reasonably, in our opinion, it cannot be said that they had committed any persistent default in this behalf. So far as the charge No. 2 regarding beef-market stalls is concerned, it appears that there was difference of opinion between the authorities concerned and Municipal Council. It involves a question of policy and principles. It appears that there was a difference of opinion regarding the policy to be adopted in this behalf. According to the Municipal Council initially the Municipal Council had issued notice of auction sale on 6-2-1970 intimating that the auction sale will be held on 23rd of November 1970. However, that was postponed. Then only one person came forward and filled the tender. According to the Municipal Council there were complaints against him and it was alleged by others that he wants to create a monopoly. Therefore, in its wisdom the Council resolved to give these shops on fixed annual rent. This resolution was then suspended by the Collector. In the meantime the President and the Vice-President were ousted by passing a vote of no-confidence and ultimately the Collector's nominees held the auction. If the explanation given by the Municipal Council is true, then it cannot be said that here also there was any persistent default in performance of duties. In its wisdom as elected representative of the people with an intention to avoid the monopoly in the trade, rightly or wrongly, decision was taken by the Municipal Council which was not found to be correct by the Collector and, therefore, he suspended the resolution. It is not shown that this resolution was passed by the Municipal Council mala fide or the decision in that behalf was not honestly taken. Therefore, only because the said resolution was suspended and for the reasons disclosed in the explanation ultimately the auction was to be held through a revenue officer, it cannot be said that there was a persistent default on the part of the Municipal Council or they had disobeyed to carry out the directions or orders issued by higher authorities. From the final order it appears that to this Annexure also a charge was added which reads as under:

"Arrears of property tax of Rs. 3,234 and other were outstanding against the father of the President Shri V. J. Purohit. The said taxes have been paid by him on 3rd November, 1972."

It is an admitted position that this was also not the subject-matter of the show cause notice. It is not necessary to deal with this additional charge also in view of the statement made by the learned Assistant Govt. Pleader before us that he is not relying upon it for supporting the order passed by the Government. Annexure III then deals with instances in which the Municipal Council had exceeded and abused its powers. Out of three charges enumerated therein, charge No. 3 relating to water connection does not find place in the final order. Charge No. 1 deals with percentage of expenditure over the Municipal staff which, according to the State, was 77 per cent and this was particularly so in the Octroi department. According to Municipal Council, it had submitted statement showing the Schedule of expenditure and according to it, it came to 42 per cent only. In paragraph 17 of the petition a specific averment is made that this statement was admitted at the time of hearing on 23rd August 1973. So far as surplus staff in the Octroi department is concerned the Municipal Council has clarified the position that Octroi department is governed by the Industrial Law and the department is required to work for 24 hours. As a result of this the staff which is required to be engaged is practically three-fold in number and this fact was also brought to the notice of the Minister for State at the time of hearing. The reply given by the Government in the return to this allegation is most cryptic. It is not denied in specific words that these facts were brought to the notice of the Minister for State and the statements made in this behalf were admitted at the time of hearing. Even in the additional affidavit we do not find anything regarding these allegations. So far as the charge regarding creation of 12 posts is concerned according to the Municipal Council, they were required to appoint 10 teachers in view of the ratio fixed by the Director of Education under the provisions of the School Code. The ratio fixed by the Director of Education is that there should be one teacher for every 40 students. In view of this direction issued by the Director of Education, teachers were appointed. According to the Municipal Council, this position was also explained to the Minister at the time of hearing and the Minister also accepted the same. It was also pointed out that so far as the other two posts are concerned, one was a part-time employee and the other post was abolished. In reply to these averments made in the petition in the Return it was not disputed by the State Government that in view of the norms prescribed by the Deputy Director of Education 10 teachers were required to be appointed. However, according to the State Government, the prior sanction of the Director of Municipal Administration was necessary for this. So far as the averments made in the petition that these facts were admitted by the Minister at the time of hearing are concerned nothing has been stated in the return. It further appears to us that if the averment made in the explanation to show cause notice and the petition are correct that in view of the norms prescribed by the Director of Education the Municipal Council was required to appoint the teachers, then it can hardly be said that the Municipal Council had either exceeded or abused its powers. The ten posts out of 12 referred to in this charge related to the posts of teachers. So far as prior sanction for creation of the posts from competent authority is concerned, it is quite obvious that under S. 337 of the Act it is open for the authority to accord ex-post facto sanction if it is satisfied that such action was bona fide and has not caused or it not likely to cause injury to any person or that the action taken was in the public interest. Under S. 49 of the Act it is one of the obligatory duties of the Municipal Council to establish and maintain primary schools. Out of these 12 posts, some posts were of primary teachers and were created to meet educational needs in the primary schools due to increase of students and this was done with the sanction of Deputy Director of Education, Amraoti. Further it appears that the Mpl. Council was getting a matching grant from the Education Department in this behalf. So far as other posts of teachers are concerned, they were created for the Higher Secondary School maintained by the Municipal Council to meet the educational needs in the town. The grant on the salary expenditure of these teachers was also sanctioned by the Government through Educational Officer, Zilla Parishad, Buldana. So far as appointments of two other posts are concerned, the explanation in that behalf was also given by the Municipal Council. To this schedule also in the final order we find that an additional charge is added, which is:

"Illegal termination of services of Sarvashri Paranjape, Typist and Satpute, Naka Mohrir". It is an admitted position that this charge was also not the subject-matter of the show cause notice. It is also not necessary for us to deal with this charge any further in view of the statement made by the learned Asstt. Govt. Pleader.

8. In Annexure IV, four instances showing that the financial position and the credit of the Council is seriously threatened, are given. Before dealing with this schedule, it will be worthwhile to refer to the actual order passed in this behalf by the State Government. It appears from the record that so far as the State Government is concerned, the matter in this behalf was heard by the Minister for the State and it is he who has taken the final decision. After hearing the Municipal Council as well as the complainants viz., Sarvashri J. N. Jadhao, Sk. Mohammad Jamadar, who are also respondents before us, the Minister passed the following order on 26-11-1973:

"The case of the Municipal Council, Malkapur, was heard by me on the 15th and 23rd October, 1973. The Council was represented by Advocate Mr. C. G. Madkholkar. The Chief Officer Shri M. S. Dawale, Shri M. Z. Aziz, Municipal Councillor were present on 15th instant. On the same day, complainants Sarvashri J. M. Jadav and Shri Shaikh Mohamad Jamadar were also present. On the second day of it i.e. 23rd October, 1973 besides the Advocate and the Chief Officer and Councillor Shri Aziz, the President of the Municipal Council Shri V. J. Purohit were present for the Municipal Council; complainants as stated above were also present. Out of 22 charges levelled against the Municipal Council, 17 charges have been proved against the Municipal Council. Besides following additional charges were made by the complainants during the hearing.

(i) Illegal termination of services of Sarvashri Paranjape. Typist and Satpute, Naka Moharir.

(ii) 60 Audit Paras. are still outstanding, oldest being for the year 1957.58.

(iii) Arrears of property tax of Rupees 3,234 and other taxes are still outstanding against the father of the President Shri V. J. Purohit.

All the above charges stand proved. In fact the arrears of taxes have been recovered from Shri J. B. Purohit, the father of the President of the Municipal Council on 3rd November, 1973 i.e. after I had directed the President to do so at the time of hearing on 23rd October, 1973. The Municipal Council has also admitted all the above 3 charges.

In view of the above position I am convinced that the affairs of the Municipal Council are not carried out according to the provisions of the law and that this is a fit case for appointing an Administrator under S. 313 of Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. I, therefore, order that Administrator be appointed over the Municipal Council under S. 313 (1) (a) (b) (c) and (d) of the Act."

9. In the return filed before us it is admitted that the decision to supersede the Municipal Council was taken by the Government on 26-11-1973, obviously in view of this order passed by the Minister for State. Shri Salve Assistant Government Pleader is strongly relying upon this order. On the other hand, it is contended by the learned counsel for the petitioners, Shri Madkholkar, that he was present at the time of hearing even before the Minister for State and the statement made in the order that Municipal Council had admitted these additional charges is wholly incorrect. According to him, as the petitioners were not aware of this order passed by the Minister for State, they could not make any statement in that behalf in the petition. He further stated that they are coming to know about this order passed by the Minister for State for the first time. It is not necessary to deal with this aspect of the matter in detail because of the statement already made by the Assistant Government Pleader before us that he is not relying upon any of these additional charges for supporting the order passed by the Government superseding the Municipal Council.

10. From the bare reading of this order it is quite clear that the Minister found that out of 22 charges levelled against the Municipal Council, 17 charges have been proved. It was fairly conceded by Shri Salve before us that this figure given in this order is arithmetically wrong. Out of 22 charges initially levelled against the Council, it is admitted position that some of them were deleted and were not relied upon when the final order was passed. At the most even after including the charges which were vague in nature it could be said that 15 charges could be found to be proved by the Government, because excluding the newly added charges only 15 of them find place in the final order. Further it is clear from this order that some additional charges were made by the so-called complainants during the hearing and those charges were also found to be proved and were relied upon by the Minister for passing the order. After taking into consideration those charges the Minister formed an opinion and came to the conclusion that,

"affairs of the Municipal Council are not carried out according to the provisions of law and, therefore, this is a fit case for appointing an Administrator under S. 313 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965."

This part of his reasoning or order is covered by sub-cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) of S. 313 of the Act. Therefore, ultimately the Minister for State directed that Administrator should be appointed over the Municipal Council under S. 313 (1) (a), (b), (c) and (d) of the Act. So far as sub-cl. (e) of sub-s. (1) of S. 313 of the Act is concerned, in this final order passed by the Minister for State no reference is made to it. On the contrary, the Minister has only relied upon sub-cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) of S. 313 of the Act which was never the subject-matter of the show cause notice. Though the Minister directed appointment of an Administrator under sub-cl. (a), (b), (c) and (d) of the Act, in the final order we find that cl. (d) sub-s. (1) of S. 313 of the Act is not relied upon neither referred to. Further in this order we do not find anywhere that the Minister, who formed the opinion on behalf of the State, ever thought that any of the grounds or charges levelled against the Council were severally or jointly serious enough to warrant action against the Municipal Council. On the contrary, it is quite obvious from the bare reading of this order that after taking into consideration the cumulative effect of all these 17 charges which, according to the Minister, were found to be proved, plus three more newly added charges, he came to the conclusion that situation has arisen in which administration of the Council cannot be carried out in accordance with the provision of the Act. What does it mean is difficult to understand. Therefore, it is obvious that the opinion was formed by the Minister for State on the basis of cumulative effect of all the charges, which according to him, were proved. Therefore, this is not a case where an opinion has been formed by the competent authority that the charges which were levelled against the Council were severally serious enough to warrant action under S. 313 of the Act. The recitals to that effect in the Government Resolution have no effect because it is not in conformity with the decision taken by the Minister for State. It is an admitted position even from the return that the decision to supersede the Municipal Council was taken on 26-11-1973. Before us Shri Salve has relied upon this decision dated 26-11-1973 which was taken by the Minister for State on behalf of the State Government. From the files produced before us it appears that the decision in this behalf was taken by the Minister for State.

Therefore, it is obvious from the order of the Minister for the State that he has not formed an opinion that financial position and the credit of the Council was seriously threatened. To us it appears that it is the order passed by the Minister for State which is decisive of the matter because it was he who heard and decided the matter as a representative of the State Government. Therefore, in our opinion, strictly speaking the charges made in Annexure IV are not germane for deciding the question involved in this writ petition. Even otherwise, if the said charges levelled against the Municipal Council are read in its context as referred to in Annexure IV, they are as under:

"(1) The liabilities (Rs. 13,28,508) exceed the asset (Rs. 8,86,103) on 31-12-1972. (2) The average deficit of the Municipal Council was Rs. 4,640. There was always minus real cash balance with the Municipal Council (3) Percentage of recovery of Consolidated Property Tax, namely, 51 per cent is not satisfactory. There are heavy arrears amounting to Rs. 1,42,190 on 31-12-1972 as against, normal yearly demand of Rs. 1,32,000. The arrears of all taxes as on 31-12-1972 were Rs. 4,14,000 as against the demand of Rs. 6,93,842. This has been reduced to Rs. 3,12,936 on 26-3-73. (4) The special sanitary service and the Water Supply Scheme are not self supporting. (5) The income from Octroi has shown a reduction from Rs. 6,86,000 to Rs. 3,86,560 within a period of two years ending March 1972. The percentage of expenditure on Octroi staff is high, namely 44% as against the prescribed percentage of 20."

So far as charge No. 2 is concerned, it is an admitted position that it was not relied upon when the final order was passed. So far as charge No. 1 is concerned, in the show cause notice the liabilities referred were up to 31-12-72 whereas in the final order the liabilities were taken into consideration as on 5th November 1973. Obviously, therefore, the Municipal Council had no notice that their financial position relating to the liabilities and assets up to 5th of November 1973 will be taken into consideration or will form part and parcel of the charge. So far as charge No. 3 relating to the percentage of recovery of Consolidated Property Tax is concerned; we find on page 91 of the petition that a statement showing the position of recovery and arrears of various municipal taxes from

1-4-1972 to 31st March 1973 was produced before the State Government. From this statement it appears that recovery was 67 per cent and not 51 per cent, as shown in the show-cause notice or in the final order. About this charge in paragraph 21 of the petition explanation has been given by the Municipal Council. The said explanation was also given before the Minister for State. A positive statement is made in the petition that this position was explained in detail and was admitted to be correct by the Minister for State on 23-10-1973. It is no doubt true that this statement is disputed in the return. However, it is quite obvious that in spite of the schedule submitted by the Municipal Council explaining the whole position which is at page 91 of the petition, mechanically the whole thing is reproduced from the original charge-sheet even in the final order without considering the explanation or the schedule of recovery submitted by the Municipal Council. This clearly indicates non-application of mind. So far as charge No. 4 relating to Special Sanitary Service and the Water Supply Scheme being not self-supporting are concerned, the Municipal Council had given a cogent and convincing explanation in that behalf also. According to the Municipal Council, the proposal for additional water pipe line was submitted to the Urban Development Department which was promptly rejected by it. Therefore, there are a very few water lines in the town and revenue from this water connection cannot be sufficient to make the scheme self-supporting. It was further clarified that so far as this position is concerned, similar is the position in other Municipal Councils in the whole of the State of Maharashtra whether it is being run by the elected Councillors or by the Administrator appointed by the Government. So far as the charge relating to the income from octroi tax and the expenditure on the staff is concerned, the Municipal Council in its explanation had contended that in view of the fact that more than 8 hours duty cannot be assigned to any employee, they were required to engage more staff. It was also explained that Buldana district was declared a scarcity district in the years 1970-71, 1971-72 and 1972-73 and, therefore, trade was seriously affected. The Cotton Procurement Scheme was also introduced by the Government. It has also adversely affected the trade of the town. A further Scheme of Procurement of Jowar and Wheat was also introduced by the Government and this has affected the revenue on that count. Therefore, according to the Municipal Council because of the acute scarcity conditions and introduction of this monopoly scheme the trade of the town had suffered and hence there was a reduction in the revenue. However, they further explained that this was beyond their control and they were taking necessary steps in that behalf. In paragraph 23 of the petition it was stated on behalf of the petitioners that this position was also discussed at length with the Minister for State at the time of hearing. In the petition it was also contended on behalf of the petitioners that the position or circumstances on the basis of which various charges were framed by the State Government for superseding the petitioner Municipal Councils were practically prevalent in all the Municipal Councils throughout the State of Maharashtra. Therefore, it was contended on behalf of the petitioners before us that only the petitioner-Council is chosen for such an action and that too for extraneous reasons. The contentions raised in the petition that similar position is prevalent in other Municipal Councils in the State of Maharashtra is not specifically denied in the return. No doubt, it is true that only because such a situation is existing in other Councils, it is not open for the petitioners to contend that they have a right to continue such circumstances or commit such defaults. However, when allegations of mala fides and discriminations are made in the petition, it was expected of the respondents that they would clarify the whole position in the return. Unfortunately this has not been done.

11. Further it is an admitted position that initially a show-cause notice was given to the Municipal Council. The Municipal Council had given a detailed explanation relating to each and every charge. In spite of this fact in the final Government Resolution issued on 1st December 1973 superseding the Municipal Council and appointing the Administrator, no reference is made to the show cause notice. Even in the speaking order passed by the Minister for State we do not find any consideration of this explanation submitted by the Municipal Council. If an authority is called upon to submit explanation in reply to a show-cause notice issued to it, it is nor-inally expected that the said explanation will be duly considered by the competent authority and at least the files will disclose as to why the said explanation is not accepted or is not acceptable. In this context a reference could be made to a decision of Allahabad High Court in State of Uttar Pradesh v. K. C. Gupta (1974 All LJ 58) as well as to a decision of Madhya Pradesh High Court in Suresh v. State referred to hereinbefore. While considering the similar position under S. 422 of the Madhya Pradesh Municipal Corporation Act the Madhya Pradesh High Court observed:

"In this context, the further requirement that the reasons for making the order shall be stated, must be understood to mean that reason for rejection of the explanation of the Corporation must also be stated. The statutory requirement of stating the reasons is not satisfied simply by narrating the charges and the opinion of the Government that the explanation of the Corporation has failed to meet the charges; in our view it is also necessary that reasons for that opinion should be stated."

In the present case apart from the fact that it is not stated in the order passed by the Minister for State as to the explanation given by the Municipal Council is not acceptable; we do not find even a bare reference to the said explanation in the order. As already observed, even the factual position stated in the order is incorrect. During the course of hearing certain grave and serious new charges have been added and from the tenor of the order passed by the Minister for State it appears that it is these charges which have weighed with him for forming the opinion.

12. This is not all. From the file produced before us an impression is created that even before the matter was heard, a decision was already taken for superseding the Municipal Council. In the reply to the show-cause notice the Municipal Council had stated that there is an opposition group in the Municipal Council which is headed by Shri J. N. Jadhao. It was also stated that Shri J. N. Jadhao was President of the Municipal Council for last 12 years and that it was for the first time that he was defeated. A further allegation was also made that as Shri Jadhao was defeated, he got frustrated and, therefore, with a mala fide intention and jealousy he started making complaints against the Municipal Council. A specific allegation was made that he was creating troubles and impediments with the sole motive of getting the Municipal Council superseded because he was defeated in the presidential election. A further allegation was also made that he held an influential office in the political party in the district. He was Vice-President of the District Congress Committee and by utilizing his position in the party he was making false complaints against the Municipal Council with an intention to achieve his political end. From the files produced before us we find that there are several letters written by Shri Jadhao to the Chief Minister as well as Minister for State. On one such letter he had made a reference to the visit of the Minister for State to Malkapur and it is further stated therein that in visit the Minister had told them that show-cause notice was already issued to the Municipal Council and as soon as reply was received orders regarding supersession of the Municipal Council would be passed. This position may be true or may not be true. It may be that he carried such an impression. But from the final order passed by the Minister for State it is quite obvious that it was on the complaint by these persons that the action was taken. They were also present at the time of hearing. In the order passed by the Minister they are described as complaints. From the letter-head on which such letter is written it appears that Shri Jadhao was member of Maharashtra Pradesh Congress Committee and was also a President of the Nagar Congress Committee. If this is so, then it cannot be said that the apprehension in the mind of the petitioners in this behalf was wholly unwarranted. However, a contention was raised before us by the learned Assistant Government Pleader that no specific allegations in this behalf have been made in the petition and, therefore, the State Government was not bound to give any answer in this respect. In our opinion, the State Government is not justified in taking shelter behind this technical objection. In the petition a specific reference is made to the explanation given by the Municipal Council in reply to the show-cause notice. The same is appended to the petition as annexure. Summary of the explanation has been given in the petition and we think rightly. Otherwise the petition would have become cumbersome if each and every thing from the explanation was produced in the petition itself. Sufficient reference has been made to the annexures in the petition itself and a summary thereof is given. Further so-called complainant, including Shri Jadhao were joined as parties to the petition. In spite of notice they have chosen to remain ex parte. Therefore in a cumulative effect of all the circumstances disclosed on record is taken i.e. starting from the institution of the action against the President, then institution of an inquiry under S. 311 of the Act and its dropping down in view of the stay order issued by this court, coupled with the circumstances in which gazette was got printed, order was prepared, dated and served, we are satisfied that the whole inquiry in this behalf has not been conducted fairly and properly or in any case in consonance with the principle of natural justice. The principle of natural justice is minimum required that if any additional material or charge was intended to be used against the Municipal Council, they should have been given a reasonable opportunity to submit their explanation or to put forward their case in reply to the same. That too was not given. It is no doubt true that from the material placed on record it could be said that some of the charges levelled against the Municipal Council were either admitted or were proved, though they were explained by the Municipal Council. But as already observed the order passed by the Minister for State is based on the cumulative effect of all the charges and we are satisfied that but for the charges which were newly added or were either vague or non-existent, the present order would not have been passed by the State Government.

13. However, an argument was advanced by Shri Salve that in the present case even if the newly added charges or the charges which are either non-existent or vague are excluded, from the consideration, still there are some charges which are proved and they are of serious nature for which the State Government could have legally taken the same action. In support of this contention Mr. Salve has relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in the State of Maharashtra v. B. K. Takkamore 1967 Mah LJ 317: (AIR 1967 SC 1353) and particularly upon the following observations on page 325:

"The principle underlying these decisions appears to be this. An administrative or quasi-judicial order based on several grounds, all taken together, cannot be sustained if it be found that some of the grounds are non-existent or irrelevant and there is nothing to show that the authority would have passed the order on the basis of the other relevant and existing grounds. On the other hand, an order based on several grounds some of which are found to be non-existent or irrelevant, can be sustained if the Court is satisfied that the authority would have passed the order on the basis of the other relevant and existing grounds, and the exclusion of the irrelevant or non-existent grounds could not have affected the ultimate opinion or decision."

In our opinion, the law laid down by the Supreme Court in State of Maharashtra v. B. K. Takkamore's case has no application to the facts and circumstances of the present case. In that case in the show-cause notice itself a specific reference was made by the State Government that in its opinion the second ground alone was serious enough to warrant an action of supersession. We do not find such an averment in the show-cause notice issued in the present case, or in the speaking order passed by the Minister for State. For the first time in the Government Resolution which is purported to be published in the Extraordinary Gazette on 1st December 1973 a reference is made that the allegations made on verification have been found to be true and severally and jointly appear serious enough to warrant action against the Municipal Council under Section 313 of the Act. As already observed by us, this is not the opinion of the State Government. In this case the decision in this behalf was taken by the Minister for State. It is the Minister for State who had formed an opinion on behalf of the State Government and his opinion or decision is not reflected in this Government Resolution and that too for the obvious reasons to which we have already made a reference. Further the said Government Resolution as well as the publication of the Official Gazette is itself clouded by various circumstances referred to hereinbefore. Further this is a case where certain other grounds were added to the charges already levelled in the show-cause notice. The order passed by the Government superseding the Municipal Council is based on a cumulative effect of all the charges levelled against the Municipal Council which are referred to in the final order. From the tenor of the order passed by the Minister for State it is not possible to separate one charge from another nor it is possible to speculate that the Government was satisfied that any one of the charges levelled against the Municipal Council were serious enough to warrant action under S. 313 of the Act. In view of the various circumstances referred to hereinbefore, we are satisfied that in the present case the authority concerned would not have passed the order on the basis of the other relevant or existing grounds alone nor we are satisfied that the exclusion of additional or non-existing grounds would not have affected the ultimate opinion or decision. In the present case the Minister for State had expressly recorded his opinion. From the words used in his order there is no doubt in our mind that it was the cumulative effect of all the charges and the grounds referred to therein that has resulted in passing the present order. It appears that the Minister for State has attached more weight and importance to the newly added grounds. The charges, cumulative effect of which was the opinion formed by the Minister for State, included the charges which were non-existent as well as newly added charges. The numerical mistake in the order clearly indicates non-application of mind. Further the Minister for State has not made any reference to Cl. (e) of S. 313 but has relied upon Cl. (d) of the said sub-section. Further we do not find that the explanation given by the Municipal Council was ever considered by the Minister for State on its own merits. On the contrary, the initial charges levelled in the show-cause notice were mechanically reproduced in the Government Resolution without even taking into consideration the relevant date placed before the Minister for State by the Municipal Council. This also indicates non-application of mind. Further the extraordinary way and method in which the Government Resolution was issued and published it in the Official Gazette has not been duly explained by the State Government. It is not clear from the return as to why Government thought it necessary to follow such an extraordinary method in this case alone. In a democratic society it is of the essence that democratic institutions which are part and parcel of the scheme of decentralisation of power are allowed to function and not superseded on charges inadequately brought home or unreasonably accepted. In this view of the matter, it is not possible for us to sustain the order of supersession passed by the State Government.

14. Before we part with the judgment, we must take a note of an objection raised on behalf of the State that the petition itself has become infructuous in view of the subsequent enactments and events referred to in the additional affidavit filed by Shri Waghmare, officiating Administrator of the Municipal Council, Malkapur. In this additional affidavit filed on behalf of the State it was contended that the term of the present Municipal Council had already come to an end and was merely extended because of the postponement of general elections. Further the term of the existing Administrator was also extended in view of the subsequent enactments. Reliance was also placed on the latest Ordinance and the Act known as the Maharashtra Municipal Councils and Municipal Corporations (Postponement of Elections During the Emergency) Act 1975. According to the learned Assistant Government Pleader, the term of the Administrator of the Municipal Council stands extended during the aforesaid period in view of S. 3 (1) (c) of the said Act. It is not possible for us to accept the contention that in view of the subsequent enactment the petition has become infructuous. In the present case the action was taken under S. 313 of the Act for appointment of an Administrator. It is an admitted position that no order has been passed by the State Government under S. 315 (3) of the Act dissolving the Council. This is not a case where a Council is dissolved. In view of the provisions of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, the Council has a perpetual succession and it is still subsisting. Only in place of elected Councillors the powers of the Municipal Council and other authorities are being exercised by the Administrator. It is also not disputed before us that if Administrator was not appointed and the elected Councillors had continued in office and for one reason or other elections were not held then the old body would have continued. If this is so, in our opinion only because the elections are being postponed or fresh elections could not be held in view of the postponement enactment, it cannot be said that the petition itself has become infructuous. The order of supersession of the Council and appointment of an Administrator to some extent is penal in nature and casts a stigma on the Councillors as well as the Municipal Council. In these circumstances, it is difficult to say that only because general elections are postponed the petitioners have no right to challenge the order of supersession itself at this stage. The grievance made in the petition still survives. It is not controverted before us that normal term of the Councillors under S. 40 of the Act is five years, which may be extended by the State Government under exceptional circumstances. The term of the office of the Councillor commences on the date of meeting held after the general election to elect President. Under sub-s. (3) of S. 40, notwithstanding the provisions of sub-ss. (1) and (2) of the said section, the term of office of the outgoing Councillor is deemed to be extended to and expired with the day immediately preceding the date of such meeting. Apparently, therefore, existing Councillors are entitled to continue in office under Statute till the new Councillors are elected. Though, therefore, the initial term of the Councillors had expired, they are entitled to continue in office. Further having found that the impugned order is tainted with vice and violation of rules of natural justice and was issued in colourable exercise of power and under the existing law the Councillors of the Committee are entitled to retain their office till fresh elections are held, it seems to us that in the facts and circumstances of the case it will be a sound exercise of judicial power to set aside and quash the impugned illegal order rather than to allow it to stand. If the said order is permitted to stand it would only mean replacement of a popularly elected Municipal Council by an official Administrator and that too when his appointment is held to be illegal. Therefore, considering the entire case in the light of the peculiar facts and circumstances placed before us, we are constrained to allow the writ petition and to quash the impugned order.

15. In the view, therefore, we have taken, the petition is allowed. The order passed by the State Government dated 1-12-1973 under S. 313 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965 and published in Extraordinary Gazette dated 1st of December 1973 and incorporated in Annexure F to the petition is, therefore, quashed and set aside. The petitioners will be entitled to their costs from respondent No. 1.

16. At this stage the oral request for leave to file an appeal to the Supreme Court of India is made by the Assistant Government Pleader on behalf of respondent No. 1. In the present case we have only applied the well-established principles of law as laid down by the Supreme Court to the facts and circumstances of the present case. In this view of the matter, we do not feel that this is a fit case where such a leave should be granted. The prayer made in this behalf is, therefore, rejected.

Petition allowed.

DESHMUKH AND AGGARWAL, JJ.

Ganesh Shankar Kulkarni, Appellant v. Janakibai Krishnaji Kulkarni and others, Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 954 of 1967 with Civil Appeal No. 3140 of 1975, D/- 1-9-1976.*

Limitation Act (1908), S. 4 — Exclusion of vacation period — It is only when plaintiff initially brings suit in proper court that he can take benefit of S. 4.

If a suit is brought in a proper court which has pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit, then the advantage offered by S. 4 can be availed of.

In the present case, the suit was originally filed in the Court of the Civil Judge, Senior Division on 4-6-1958 i.e. on the reopening of the Court. The period prescribed for institution of the suit was over on 3-5-1958. The Court was closed for the summer vacation from 3-5-1958 to 4-6-1958. The suit originally valued at Rs. 15,000 for the purpose of jurisdiction was revalued at Rs. 1,875. The plaint was ordered to be returned for presentation to the proper court and it was filed in the court of the Civil Judge, Junior Division on 17-8-1959. In the circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to claim the exclusion of the vacation period from 3-5-1958 to 4-6-1958 as he had approached the wrong court. K. J. Abhyankar with N. D. Hombalkar, for Appellant; V. V. Albal; M. L. Pendse, H. D. Gole, for Respondents.

AGGARWAL, J.:— This second appeal against the decision of the learned District Judge, Kolhapur, has been referred to Division Bench by a learned Single Judge as, in his opinion, it involves important questions, particularly as regards the joinder of proper parties and limitation under Ss. 4 and 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908. Principally, this appeal involves the point of limitation and in order to appreciate the same, it is necessary to trace the history of the litigation.

2. It is common ground that the land in suit bearing Regular Survey No. 386 admeasuring 22 acres and 39 gunthas originally belonged to Shri Swami Jagatguru Matha Karvir and Sankeshwar. By a Sanad of Margashirsha Vad 3, Shake 1756, His Holiness granted it in Inam to Hari Ballal. Hari Ballal had two sons named Bhavanrao and Antaji. Bhavanrao died before 1892 leaving behind his widow Ramabai. Antaji had two sons named Hari and Krishnaji. Hari had a son named Shankar and wife named Radha. Hari died in 1927. In 1892 Shankar was taken in adoption by Ramabai widow of Bhavanrao. Antaji's other son named Krishnaji died in 1955 leaving behind Jankibai, original defendant No. 1, who died in 1961. The said land which was originally Inam land was converted into Rayatava in Fasli 1356.

3. On 3rd May, 1888, Bhavanrao created a mortgage in respect of the said Survey No. 386 by a registered deed, Ex. 95. The entire property was mortgaged to Shivram Pujari for Rs. 750. The period stipulated was 10 years. The mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee was to pay Rs. 156 per annum out of the usufruct to the mortgagor and to appropriate the balance towards the claim of interest on the mortgage amount of Rs. 750. The mortgagee was to redeem the property at any time after 10 years by paying Rs. 750/-. The mortgagee was put in possession immediately. The mortgagee Shivaram Pujari, however, assigned his right, title and interest to Krishnaji Tankasale and his son Vasudeo by two different deeds dated 8th June 1894 and 7th September 1898, being Exs. 96 and 97 respectively, for a consideration of Rs. 500 and Rs. 250 respectively. Shivaram Pujari parted with possession and Krishnaji Tankasale and his son Vasudeo entered into possession and undertook to abide by the old terms and in particular to pay Rs. 156 to Bhavanrao, the mortgagor.

4. Thereafter, Krishnaji Antaji filed Civil Suit No. 402 of 1939 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Shirol against Shivaram Pujari and Krishnaji Tankasale and his son Vasudeo for redemption and possession of the said property. On 25th February 1943, he obtained a decree and the mortgagees were directed to pay Rs. 101 and to surrender possession. The mortgagees preferred an appeal to the District Court, Kolhapur, and that Court confirmed the said decree on 31st January 1945. Against that decree, the mortgagees preferred Second Appeal No. 27 of 1946 in the Joint High Court for Kolhapur and Deccan States. The High Court modified the decree by relieving the mortgagees of their liability to pay Rs. 101 to the mortgagors. Krishnaji Antaji thereafter executed the decree by filing a Darkhast and obtained possession on 22nd April 1946.

5. Krishnaji Antaji, however, proceeded to alienate the said property. He sold half of the property to defendant No. 2 and his brothers under a registered sale-deed dated 18th September 1946 (vide Ex. 122). Defendant No. 2 sold 3 acres out of their portion to Nayaku Gavade on 16th March 1955 under a registered sale-deed, Ex. 160. There were further alienations in favour of defendants Nos. 5 to 8 (vide Exs. 140 to 144) during the period 1949 to 1952.

6. The original plaintiff Shankar claiming to be an adopted son of Bhavanrao, the original mortgagor, instituted the present suit on 4th June 1958 for redemption, partition and possession of his half share. This suit was originally instituted in the Court of the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Kolhapur, being Special Suit No. 38 of 1958, on the re-opening of the Courts, although the period prescribed for institution of such a suit was over on 3rd May²³ 1958. The suit was valued at Rs. 15,000 for the purpose of jurisdiction on the basis of the market value of the property at Rupees 12,000. However, on 10th August 1959, the original plaintiff Shankar applied for amendment of the plaint reducing the value of the suit to Rs. 1,875. This application was allowed on 14th August 1959 and the plaint was ordered to be returned for presentation to the proper Court. According to the plaintiff, the plaint was handed over at 6 p.m. on 14th August 1959. 15th and 16th August 1959 were holidays. On 17th August 1959, Shankar presented the plaint to the Court of the learned Civil Judge, Junior Division, Jayasingpur, and the suit was numbered as Regular Civil Suit No. 126 of 1959. Original defendant No. 1 Janakibai wife of Krishnaji had died in 1961 and, therefore, her heirs were brought on record as defendants Nos. 1-a to 1-c. Defendants Nos. 2 to 8 are the various purchasers and defendant No. 9 is one of the tenants on the suit property.

7. Defendants Nos. 2 to 8 and the legal representatives of defendant No. 1 resisted the claim mainly on the grounds that the plaintiff had no right to sue, his adoption was not admitted by them and even otherwise, in the family partition, the suit land was allotted to the share of the other branch of Bhavanrao's brother Antaji. These defendants also set up the plea of adverse possession. Defendants Nos. 2 to 8 claimed protection of S. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act on the ground that they were bona fide purchasers for value without notice. They pleaded that the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

8. The learned Civil Judge, Junior Division, Jayasingpur, by his judgment and order dated 30th April 1965, dismissed the suit with costs, holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the suit property was kept joint at the time of the partition between Bhavanrao and Antaji and that the defendants proved that they had become owners of the suit land by adverse possession and that they were bona fide transferees for value without notice.

9. It may be noted that during the pendency of the said suit, the suit came to be dismissed for default on 7th June 1961. The original plaintiff Shankar made an application on 5th July 1961 for restoration. Shankar, however, died on 22nd August 1961. On 1st September 1961, his son Ganesh and his mother Parvatibai made an application for bringing their names on record as the heirs of Shankar. On 6th June 1963, they made an application, whereby they wanted to bring the names of the other two heirs Sitaram and Narsinha, the sons of the daughter of Shankar, on record. This application was granted on 3rd June 1964.

10. Being aggrieved of the said judgment and decree, Ganesh filed Civil Appeal No. 254 of 1965 in the Court of the learned District Judge, Kolhapur, and in the memo of appeal he stated that the heirs Nos. 1 (b), 1 (c) and 1 (d) of the deceased plaintiff Shankar had not been impleaded as their names had already been deleted in the trial Court. 1 (b) was Parvatibai, 1 (c) is Sitaram and 1 (d) is Narsinha. The learned District Judge, by his judgment dated 15th December 1966, dismissed the appeal with costs, holding that the plaintiff proved his right to redeem the suit property and that the defendants failed to prove that they had become owners by adverse possession and that defendants Nos. 2 to 8 were bona fide purchasers for value without notice. The learned District Judge also held that the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

11. In the present appeal, Mr. Pendse, the learned counsel appearing for defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (a) to 3 (d), has raised two preliminary objections. Firstly, Shankar having died on 22nd August 1961, all the four legal representatives made an application for being brought on record and that application was granted on 3rd June 1964, and they went for a trial of the suit and the suit is now dismissed against all the four. The three legal representatives, namely, Parvatibai, Sitaram and Narsinha, not having filed the appeal, the decree has become final against them. They were not joined as respondents in the District Appellate Court and the same position has continued in the present second appeal. According to Mr. Pendse, having regard to the provisions of O. 34, R. 1, C.P.C., all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption are required to be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage, and since this rule is not complied, the suit must fail. Mr. Pendse further pointed out that the present Civil Application No. 3140 of 1975 filed by the present appellant for bringing the names of Sitaram and Narsinha on record cannot be allowed as they were not parties before the District Appellate Court. The appellant has deliberately made an incorrect statement in the memo of appeal that their names had been deleted in the trial Court, as there is nothing on record to support that statement. Secondly, respondent No. 5-E Sidubai wife of Sidu Dhangar had been brought on record along with respondents Nos. 5-A to 5-D by order dated 7th April 1975 passed in Civil Application No. 2748 of 1974. As against her, the appeal stands dismissed for want of prosecution pursuant to the order of the learned Registrar dated 25th February 1975 and, therefore, there is a decree in favour of respondent No. 5-E. In these circumstances, having regard to the provisions of O. 34, R. 4, C.P.C. there would be a conflicting decree if the appellant's case is accepted.

12. On the other hand, Mr. Abhyankar, learned counsel for the appellant, sought to repel these preliminary objections on the ground that by virtue of a registered deed of partition dated 16th November 1961, the suit land had fallen to the share of the appellant along with other land, and in these circumstances, Parvatibai, Sitaram and Narsinha were not interested in the present litigation. Thereafter, an application for deleting their names on the ground that they had no interest in the property was prepared and as far as the appellant recollected, it was presented to the Court, and subsequently the names of Parvatibai, Sitaram and Narsinha were deleted. But unfortunately the order is not traceable on the record. Mr. Abhyankar submitted that Parvatibai died in the meantime and Sitaram and Narsinha had no interest in the property under redemption and, therefore, O. 34, R. 1, C.P.C. is not attracted. As regards the second objection, he submitted that the estate would be represented by the remaining respondents Nos. 5-A, 5-B, 5-C and 5-D, even though the appeal as against respondent No. 5-E is dismissed for want of prosecution. The learned counsel pointed out that respondent No. 5-E could not be served as the report of the Bailiff dated 22nd November 1974 showed that respondent No. 5-E had died 3 to 4 months prior to 22nd November 1974. The application for bringing the heirs of respondent No. 5 was decided on 7th April 1975 and, therefore, respondent No. 5-E had died prior to the said application.

13. In our opinion, it is not necessary to decide these preliminary objections in view of the fact that the appeal can be disposed of on the pure question of law — whether the suit is barred by law of limitation or not. We have noticed that the date of the mortgage is 3rd May 1888. The period stipulated in the mortgage-deed was 10 years and, therefore, the last date for redemption was 3rd May 1958. On 3rd May 1958, the summer vacation had commenced and the Court reopened on 4th June 1958. The original plaintiff filed the plaint on 4th June 1958. The plaint was ordered to be returned on 14th August 1959 for presentation to the proper Court. 15th and 16th August 1959 were holidays and, therefore, the plaint was presented in the proper Court on 17th August 1959. The question, therefore, is whether the appellant could be entitled to the benefit of S. 4 of the Limitation Act, 1908, as well as to the benefit of S. 14. The legal position is well settled in view of the decision of the Privy Council reported in Maqbul Ahmad v. Onkar Pratap Narain Singh, 37 Bom LR 533: (AIR 1935 PC 85), and a decision of this Court reported in Karim Ismail v. Abdul Rehiman, 55 Bom LR 119: (AIR 1953 Bom 353). This view has also been confirmed by the Supreme Court in Amar Chand v. Union of India, AIR 1973 SC 313.

14. Counsel for the appellant contends that in the first place, the period during which the suit was pending in the Court of the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Kolhapur, should be excluded. Secondly, the vacation period from 3rd May 1958 to 4th June 1958 should be excluded, and thirdly, the two holidays falling on 15th and 16th August 1959 are to be excluded. According to the appellant's counsel, the relevant sections permitting the exclusion of these periods are S. 4 and S. 14 (2) of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. Section 4 provides: —

"Where the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, preferred or made on the day that the Court reopens."

Section 14 (2) provides:—

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application, the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the same party for the same relief shall be excluded, where such proceeding is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

Section 2 (7) defines 'good faith' as under:—

"Nothing shall be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention."

15. In order to succeed, the appellant has to cross both the rivers. The one under S. 4 is more formidable than the one under S. 14. The lower Appellate Court has examined this issue at length and observed that the very definition of the expression 'good faith' postulates that the plaintiff has to convince the Court that he has exercised due care and attention, but the plaintiff has not alleged any ground nor led evidence. The burden of bringing the case within the four corners of S. 14 is on the plaintiff and he has to discharge the same. It is further observed that the argument that the point involved was of law and the change in the claim for the purposes of jurisdiction was made on legal advice cannot be taken to establish good faith and due diligence. The circumstances pleaded before us for claiming exclusion of the period between 4th June 1958 and 14th August 1959 were the same as urged before the lower Appellate Court. In our opinion, both the lower Courts have taken the correct view. The appellant has failed to show that he had been prosecuting the suit in the Court of the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Kolhapur, with due diligence and prosecuted the suit in good faith in that Court, in the sense in which the expression 'good faith' is defined. The appellant is not entitled to the exclusion of the period from 4th June 1958 to 14th August 1959.

16. The next period for exclusion is the summer vacation from 3rd May 1958 to 4th June 1958. This period is governed by S. 4. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maqbul Ahmad v. Onkar Pratap Narain Singh, 37 Bom LR 533: (AIR 1935 PC 85) have stated that there is a marked distinction in the scope and purpose of Ss. 4 and 14. The language employed in S. 4 indicates that it has nothing to do with computing the prescribed period. In interpreting S. 4, it is observed:—

"What it provides is that, where the period of limitation prescribed expires on a day when the Court is closed, the application may be made on the day when the Court reopens. In their Lordships' view that means the proper Court in which the application ought to have been made....."

1977 Bom./18 VIII G—21

17. In Karim Ismail v. Abdul Rahman, 55 Bom LR 119: (AIR 1953 Bom 353), the same view has been adopted consistent with the view taken by Madras, Lahore, Calcutta and Nagpur High Courts since 1916. In that case, Abdul (plaintiff-respondent) filed a suit against Karim in the Court of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, at Alibag, to recover a sum of Rs. 6,900 alleged to be due as a balance of a loan of Rs. 10,000 made on 23rd May 1944. The suit, which should have been instituted on 23rd May 1947, came to be instituted on 9th June 1947 as the Court was closed for summer vacation till 8th June 1947 and reopened on 9th June 1947 when the plaint was presented. The learned trial Judge on 11th July 1947 held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and he returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. On 12th July 1947, the plaintiff accordingly filed the plaint in the Court of the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Thana. On these facts, following the Privy Council ruling referred to above, this Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff cannot claim the exclusion of the vacation period from 23rd May 1947 to 8th June 1947, as he had approached the wrong forum or Court. However, he was entitled to the exclusion of the period taken in litigating the matter in the Court of the Civil Judge, Junior Division, at Alibag, till the plaint was returned to him for presentation to the proper Court under S. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. The facts of our case are almost similar to that case.

18. The same view has been confirmed by the Supreme Court in the case of Amar Chand v. Union of India, AIR 1973 SC 313. In that case, the plaintiff sustained serious injuries in a train accident while travelling by 2 Down Passenger train from Ambala Cantt. to Delhi on the night between 31st December 1957 and 1st January 1958. The suit was filed in the Court of the Senior Sub-Judge of Karnal on 2nd March 1959 (after giving notice under S. 80, C.P.C.) as on 1st March 1959 the Court was not open. For ministerial purposes, the suit was transferred to the Court of the Sub-Judge, Panipat. The Panipat Court, by an order dated 28th October 1959, returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court as, according to the Panipat Court, the injury was committed at Mohri Railway Station outside the territorial jurisdiction of the Panipat

Court. Thereafter, the plaintiff presented the plaint on 29th October 1959 in the Court of Senior Sub-Judge, Ambala (referred to as the 'trial Court' in the judgment) together with an application under S. 14 of the Limitation Act for exclusion of the period during which the suit was prosecuted in Karnal and Panipat Courts. Their Lordships of the Supreme Court declined to give the benefit of S. 4 for the reason that Karnal Court was not the proper Court in which the suit should have been filed. After referring to the decision of the Privy Council in Maqbul Ahmad's case (AIR 1935 PC 85), Their Lordships made the following observations at page 315:—

"If the plaintiff had filed the suit in the trial Court on March 2, 1959, then, certainly the suit would have been within time under S. 4, as that was the proper Court in which the suit should have been filed. As the Karnal Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the plaint, it was not the proper Court....."

19. Bearing the above legal position in mind, it is clear that the appellant before us cannot take the benefit of S. 4, for he had first gone to a wrong forum. It is only when a plaintiff initially brings the suit in a proper Court that he can take benefit of S. 4. If a suit is brought in a proper Court which has pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit, then the advantage offered by S. 4 can be availed of. In the case before the Supreme Court, the plaint was returned by the Panipat Court as it did not have the territorial jurisdiction to try the suit. In our case and in the case reported in 55 Bom LR 119: (AIR 1953 Bom 353), the question was one of pecuniary jurisdiction. In the present case, the pecuniary jurisdiction was that of Jayasingpur Court in view of the new valuation given by the appellant by amending the plaint and reducing the value of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction from Rs. 15,000 (Rs. 12,000 market value of the property and Rs. 3,000 mesne profits) to Rs. 1,875 on the basis that the appellant was entitled to redeem half of the property (Rs. 375 half of the mortgage security of Rs. 750) and Rs. 1,500 for past mesne profits. It is unfortunate that in the beginning the appellant wrongly valued his claim for the purposes of jurisdiction and thus chose a wrong forum. His attempt to set his house in order could not bear fruit for him. It is a case of "from the frying pan into the fire". Therefore, once he cannot exclude the period of the summer vacation under S. 4, the suit clearly becomes barred by limitation. Both the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court were right in their findings that the suit is barred by limitation. In these circumstances, it is not necessary to consider whether the appellant was entitled to exclude the two holidays, namely, 15th and 16th August 1959. The present suit is, therefore, hit by limitation and was rightly dismissed by both the lower Courts.

20. Before concluding, we may state that apart from the preliminary objections raised by Mr. Pendse, he also wanted to urge that the learned District Judge was not right in holding that the plaintiff proved his right to redeem the suit property. He also wanted to support the decree of the trial Court on the grounds that the defendants succeeded in establishing adverse possession and that defendants Nos. 2 to 8 were the bona fide purchasers for value without notice. However, we do not consider it necessary to go into these contentions, as the appeal can be disposed of on the question of law, as indicated above.

21. In the result, the appeal is dismissed with one set of costs in favour of respondents Nos. 2 and 5-A to 5-D.

22. In view of the above judgment, no order is necessary on Civil Application No. 3140 of 1975. Rule discharged. No order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BU/BU/A586/77/MBR/RSK

AIR 1961 Mad 129 Held no longer good law in view of AIR 1965 SC 1623.

The right of personal hearing or the right of representation through a lawyer is not a sine qua non of natural justice. It cannot be asserted that the moment a general or a bald plea is taken claiming that the action in obtaining the passport was not voluntary, that the party raising the plea must be called for a personal hearing. (Para 17)

The question whether the party has had a proper opportunity or has been denied the opportunity would depend upon the contents of the show cause notice. the reply of the party and, to a limited extent, the impact of denial of the opportunity might be required to be considered with reference to the final order determining the issue. Indeed, much depends upon the type of representation made by the aggrieved party. The determining authority will have to apply its mind to the nature of the pleas contained in that representation and decide whether the pleas afford any sort of defence, what is the nature of the evidence indicated in those pleas and whether the party has had the opportunity of bringing such evidence and all other material to substantiate the pleas. If the party has received that opportunity or wilfully chosen not to avail of it, then the determining authority may go ahead and decide on whatever material has been placed before it. If that decision is honestly arrived at, then the procedure adopted cannot be violative of any requirement of natural justice merely on the ground that no personal hearing was afforded to the party or the opportunity to lead oral evidence was denied to that party.

(Para 17)

Now, the question is what are the permissible pleas available to a party who has received a notice threatening deportation because of his obtaining a passport of other country. If a passport has been obtained by force or fraud or misrepresentation, then the person raising such plea and justifying it would be required to be exonerated without there being any further plea or without consideration of his intention of renouncing his Indian citizenship; and the question of intention of renouncement of his Indian citizenship is a factor, which is to be required to be considered apart from the case of fraud or force or misrepresentation resulting in the receipt or acquiring of the passport. If a passport has been taken as a result of force or fraud or misrepresentation, it is not 'obtained' within the meaning of Para 3 of Sch. III. Similarly, if a person applies for and receives a passport without any intention of renouncing his Indian citizenship or without understanding the nature of what he was doing, it would be an aspect, a factor to be considered by the determining authority. The submission to restrict the available pleas to a case of coercion, compulsion, undue influence, fraud or fear is to be repelled. (Para 24)

The representation submitted by the petitioner to the determining authority in reply to the show cause notice was as follows:— The petitioner who desired to see his ailing father in Pakistan obtained Pakistani passport on the advice of his maternal-uncle without applying his mind and understanding its implications. He had no intention to leave India or to acquire Pakistani citizenship. He however, did not go to Pakistan and did not use the passport as his ailing father had expired. He had married an Indian citizen and all his children were born, brought up and educated in India. Since his arrival in Bombay in 1944 after selling his land in Pakistan and since the partition of the country he had not visited Pakistan, nor had he any relations in Pakistan.

Held the pleas made by the petitioner in his representation could not be said to be irrelevant or useless for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion whether or not he had lost his citizenship. The determining authority was of the opinion that the petitioner's intention and the so-called compelling circumstances were totally immaterial provided his act in applying for a Pakistani passport was voluntary. This opinion was based on a clear misapprehension of the true legal position and the authority would have been apprised of the same had he granted to the petitioner a further opportunity either of making a detailed submission and preferring evidence substantiating the plea or given him a personal hearing. In the circumstances, the denial of opportunity to the petitioner had resulted in prejudice to him. A. G. Noorani, i/by M/s. Gagrat & Co.; Attorneys, for Petitioner; L. J. Manjrekar for J. H. Parekh (for No. 1), Raja S. Bhonsale, Govt. Pleader with N. S. Devnani, Asst. Govt. Pleader (for No. 2), for Opponents.

DESAI, J.:— In this Special Civil Application the petitioner has impugned the order dated 31st December 1970 passed by the Joint Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs, New Delhi, determining the status of the petitioner under S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act, 1955. In order to appreciate the grounds of challenge a few facts may be stated:

2. The petitioner was served with a notice dated 5th November 1966 threatening that he will be deported out of the territory of India. Thereupon he filed a suit in the Bombay City Civil Court at Bombay, being Suit No. 98 of 1967, seeking a declaration that he was a citizen of India; he also sought a permanent injunction against the State of Maharashtra and the Union of India restraining them from taking any action against him in the nature of deportation as threatened. In the said suit the following four issues were framed by the trial Court:

"1. Whether the suit is barred by limitation?

2. Whether the plaintiff is a citizen of India under Art. 5 and/or under Art. 6 of the Constitution?

3. If Issue No. 2 is answered in the affirmative, whether the plaintiff's claim to citizenship stands terminated in view of the provisions of S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act, read with R. 30 and R. 3 of Sch. III to the Citizenship Rules, 1956?

4. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to any relief; and if so, what?"

As far as the issue as to limitation was concerned, the defendants did not press the same at the hearing and the said issue was answered in favour of the petitioner/plaintiff. As far as Issue No. 2 was concerned, after considering the evidence led before him the learned trial Judge held that the petitioner (the plaintiff before him) had satisfied the requirements of Arts. 5 and 6 of the Constitution of India. However, as far as Issue No. 3 was concerned, the same was referred to the Central Government for determination in view of the clear legal position that this aspect was required to be decided by the Central Government. The further hearing of the suit was stayed till the decision of the Central Government was received. This was on 17th December 1969. The decision of the learned trial Judge on the question whether the petitioner satisfied the requirements of Arts. 5 and 6 of the Constitution is annexed as Ex. 'A' to the petition. Thereafter a notice dated 26th August 1970 was served on the petitioner; a copy of the said notice is to be found annexed as part of Ex. 'B' (Collectively) to the petition. The operative portion of the said notice (after recital of the circumstances) may be fully set out and the same reads as follows:—

"..... Now, therefore, the said Shri Abdul Rahim is required to prove within a period of three months that he has not voluntarily acquired the citizenship of Pakistan after the 26th January 1950 and before the 25th May 1953 in the manner aforesaid.

And for this purpose the said Shri Abdul Rahim is required to submit within three months from the date of service of this notice on him to the Government of Maharashtra for onward transmission to and consideration of the Central Government, any representation that he may wish to make in the matter and any other material that he may wish to rely upon to prove that he has not voluntarily acquired the citizenship of Pakistan."

In reply to the said notice the petitioner filed a detailed representation dated 27th November 1970 which inter alia contained various factual statements and a submission that the passport had been obtained by him under misapprehension and/or on wrong advice, without knowing the nature and its implications and, therefore, the petitioner had not voluntarily acquired the citizenship of Pakistan. It is thereafter and without any further inquiry or hearing or material that the impugned order dated 31st December 1970 was passed. It may be mentioned that on 13th July 1971 the Bombay City Civil Court dismissed the plain-tiff's suit with costs and that was on the basis of the decision of the Central Government on Issue No. 3 in the suit, which decision is contained in the said impugned order. A copy of the impugned order of the Central Government is annexed to the petition as Ex. 'C' and a copy of the consequential order of the City Civil Court is annexed as Ex. 'D'.

3. The grounds of challenge to the said decision of the Central Government and the consequential order of the trial Court are summarized in paragraph 11 of the petition, and are as follows (1) It is alleged in the first place that R. 30 of the Citizenship Rules is void and ultra vires the provisions contained in Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. (2) Secondly, it is submitted that R. 30 of the Citizenship Rules and para. 3 of Sch. III thereto are bad and ultra vires the Citizenship Act, 1955. (3) The said Para 3 of Sch. III has been attacked as constituting an unreasonable restriction on the petitioner's fundamental rights under Art. 19 (1) (d) and (e) of the Constitution and consequently claimed to be void and ultra vires. (4) The impugned decision of the Central Government has been attacked as betraying total and complete non-application of mind, and this plea has been sought to be substantiated in a nine-fold manner in paragraph 11 (d) of the petition. (5) Finally, it has been submitted that the impugned decision has been arrived at by contravening the principles of natural justice. It is submitted that no proper or sufficient particulars were given in the show cause notice to the petitioner and accordingly it is submitted that the petitioner did not have a proper opportunity to meet the case against him. It is further submitted that it was incumbent upon the Central Government to give a personal hearing to the petitioner as also a right to have a legal practitioner in the inquiry before it. The petitioner has also claimed an opportunity to confront the evidence against him as also to cross-examine the witnesses and refute the evidence against him. It has also been submitted that the impugned order has been passed in a routine and a pre-determined manner without taking into account the circumstances since urged by the petitioner in the representation made by him to the show cause notice.

4. At the hearing of this Special Civil Application we restricted counsel for the petitioner to the pleas to be found in sub-paragraphs (d) and (e) of paragraph 11 of the petition as were developed during the course of arguments and inasmuch as we were of opinion that the petition could be disposed of on these pleas, we prevented him from developing the other branches of the argument indicated above. Even as regards the pleas to be found in these two sub-paragraphs, greater emphasis was placed by the learned counsel for the petitioner on the denial of proper opportunity to his client to substantiate his plea, and it was submitted that the rather cursory and unsatisfactory order containing the decision arose because of this denial of opportunity to the petitioner as also as a result of misapprehension on the part of the deciding officer of the true legal position as has been determined by the Supreme Court and the High Courts. In order to appreciate this contention, reference may now be made to the relevant provisions in the statute and in the Rules.

5. Section 9 of the Citizenship Act, 1955 (57 of 1955) provides for termination of citizenship and reads as follows:

"9. Termination of citizenship.—

(1) Any citizen of India who by naturalisation, registration or otherwise voluntarily acquires, or has at any time between the 26th January 1950 and the commencement of this Act voluntarily acquired, the citizenship of another country shall, upon such acquisition or, as the case may be, such commencement, cease to be a citizen of India:

Provided that nothing in the subsection shall apply to a citizen of India who, during any war in which India may be engaged, voluntarily acquires the citizenship of another country, until the Central Government otherwise directs.

(2) If any question arises as to whether; when or how any person has acquired the citizenship of another country, if shall be determined by such authority, in such manner, and having regard to such rules of evidence, as may be prescribed in this behalf."

6. The rule-making power under the said Act is to be found in S. 18 thereof and it is provided that the Central Government may, by notification, make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act; and in particular under S. 18 (2) (h) may make provision in such rules for the authority to determine the question of acquisition of citizenship of another country, the procedure to be followed by such authority and rules of evidence relating to such cases. The necessary rules in exercise of the power conferred by S. 18 of the said Act were framed in 1956, being designated as the Citizenship Rules, 1956, and we are concerned in particular with R. 30 and Sch. III to the said Rules. Rule 30 provides as follows:—

“Rule 30— Authority to determine acquisition of citizenship of another country.—

(1) If any question arises as to whether, when or how any person has acquired the citizenship of another country, the authority to determine such question shall for the purposes of S. 9 (2) be the Central Government.

(2) The Central Government shall in determining any such question have due regard to the rules of evidence specified in Sch. III.”

7. Paras 1 and 3 of Schedule III may also be set out and they make the following provision:—

“1. Where it appears to the Central Government that a citizen of India has voluntarily acquired the citizenship of any other country, it may require him to prove within such period as may be fixed by it in this behalf, that he has not voluntarily acquired the citizenship of that country; and the burden of proving that he has not so acquired such citizenship shall be on him,

3. The fact that a citizen of India has obtained on any date a passport from the Government of any other country shall be conclusive proof of his having voluntarily acquired the citizenship of the country before that date.”

8. The question whether a citizen of India has between 26th January 1950 and the commencement of the Citizenship Act ceased to be a citizen of India is to be determined in the manner provided by the combined operation of all these provisions earlier set out viz. Section 9 of the Citizenship Act, 1955, and R. 30 read with Sch. III of the Citizenship Rules, 1956.

9. The question as to proper interpretation of these provisions has arisen before the Supreme Court on a number of occasions, and the question not being res integra it will be useful to make immediate reference to the judgments of the Supreme Court which were cited at the bar before us.

10. The vires of Para 3 of Sch. III as well as the constitutionality of S. 9 (2) of the Act were in question in Izhar Ahmed Khan v. Union of India, AIR 1962 SC 1052, and by a majority decision the challenge was negatived by the Supreme Court. The majority held that this was a rule of evidence and fell within the scope prescribed by S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act, and the challenge to its validity on the ground that it was a rule of substantive law had therefore to be repelled. Similarly the challenge to S. 9 (2) of the Act on the ground that it enabled the rule-making authority to make a rule to deprive the citizenship rights of citizens was also not sustained. Inasmuch as we have not allowed counsel to urge and develop the plea as to the validity and the vires of these provisions, it is in our opinion unnecessary to refer to this decision in greater detail; in an appropriate case it might be necessary to do so.

11. Izhar Ahmed Khan's case was required to be considered by the Supreme Court in Md. Ayub Khan v. Commissioner of Police, Madras, AIR 1965 SC 1623. In Md. Ayub Khan's case the Supreme Court did not entertain the plea which had been sought to be advanced before it viz. that Izhar Ahmed's case required reconsideration as certain aspects of the question had not been brought to the notice of the Court. The Court, however, construed and interpreted the provisions which are required to be applied by us also viz. S. 9 of the Citizenship Act and R. 30 and Sch. III of the Citizenship Rules. Md. Ayub Khan's case therefore must be considered in some depth. The petitioner before the Supreme Court claimed that he had acquired the status of an Indian citizen on the commencement of the Constitution and was served with a notice dated 17th July 1957 informing him that as he had obtained Pakistani passport No. 071377 dated 1st April 1953, he should leave India within one month from the date of service of the notice; and in default of compliance he was threatened with prosecution and deportation under the Foreigners Act, 1946 as amended by the Foreigners Law (Amendment) Act, 1957. On 19th August 1957 Md. Ayub Khan applied to the Collector of Madras for registration as a citizen of India. Later on he applied to the Central Government under S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act for determination of the question whether he continued to remain a citizen of India and prayed that he may be given an opportunity to produce all necessary evidence in support of his claim as regards Indian citizenship. Without affording him that opportunity, however, the Government of India by its order dated 7th May 1958 rejected the application of the appellant under S. 9 of the Citizenship Act. He thereupon preferred a petition before the Madras High Court urging, inter alia, that R. 30 contemplated a quasi-judicial inquiry in which an opportunity must be given to the party sought to be affected to make a representation and to adduce evidence to show that the acquisition of a Pakistani passport was not voluntary. The learned single Judge of the Madras High Court rejected this contention, inter alia, observing that as far as the question of opportunity was concerned the appellant, Md. Ayub Khan, "had not indicated on what points he intended to lead evidence and what kind of evidence he intended to adduce". His appeal to a Division Bench of the Madras High Court was also dismissed, the Bench holding that S. 9 "laid down an objective test and when the individual had brought himself within it, the law determines the legal consequences of the situation. Independently of his intent or understanding". It was accordingly held that there was no scope for inquiry of the nature claimed by the appellant. In paragraph 9 of the report we find that the Supreme Court has observed that the determination of the question postulates an approach as in a quasi-judicial inquiry and this requires that the citizen concerned must be given due notice of the nature of the action which in the view of the authority involves termination of Indian citizenship, and reasonable opportunity must be afforded to the citizen to convince the authority that what is alleged against him is not true. It was further observed that what the scope and extent of the inquiry to be made by the authority on a plea raised by the citizen concerned should be, depends upon the circumstances of each case. These observations were pressed into service by learned counsel for the petitioner before us who contended that after the plea raised by his client, the determining authority was required to give to his client an opportunity to substantiate the plea which opportunity had not been given and no proper inquiry as contemplated by the statutory provisions as indicated by the Supreme Court in the above decision has been held. We will have to advert to this aspect of the matter a little later on after concluding the discussion of the judicial decisions cited at the bar relevant on this point.

12. Paragraphs 10 and 11 of the reported decision in Md. Ayub Khan's case (AIR 1965 SC 1623) indicate the scope of this inquiry. These observations which we will proceed to quote in full would also seem to suggest the nature of the plea that can be raised, which plea would be required to be substantiated by the party urging the same and which plea would be required to be properly considered and appreciated by the deciding authority. Paragraphs 10 and 11 of the report may now be set out:

"10. Paragraph 1 of Sch. III which raises a rebuttable presumption, when it appears to the Central Government that a citizen has voluntarily acquired foreign citizenship, casts the burden of proof upon the citizen to disprove such acquisition, and Paragraph 2 which authorises the Central Government to make enquiries for the purpose of determining the question raised, strongly support the view that the Central Government must arrive at a decision that the Indian citizen has voluntarily acquired foreign citizenship, before action can be taken against him on the footing that his citizenship is terminated. Paragraph 3 raises a conclusive presumption that a citizen of India who has obtained a passport from a foreign country on any date, has before that date voluntarily acquired citizenship of that other country. By the application of the rule in Paragraph 3 the authority must regard obtaining of a foreign passport on a particular date as conclusive proof that the Indian citizen has voluntarily acquired citizenship of another country before that date. But obtaining of a passport of a foreign country cannot in all cases merely mean receiving the passport. If a plea is raised by the citizen that he had not voluntarily obtained the passport, the citizen must be afforded an opportunity to prove that fact. Cases may be visualised in which on account of force a person may be compelled or on account of fraud or misrepresentation he may be induced, without any intention of renunciation of his Indian citizenship to obtain a passport from a foreign country. It would be difficult to say that such a passport is one which has been 'obtained' within the meaning of Paragraph 3 of Sch. III and that a conclusive presumption must arise that he has acquired voluntarily citizenship of that country.

11. We are not concerned in this case with the truth or otherwise of the plea raised by the appellant in his petition before the High Court that he was compelled to obtain the passport from the High Commissioner for Pakistan. Bala-krishna Ayyar J. observed that the plea of the appellant was not bona fide. But it is not the function of the Courts to determine the question whether the plea raised is true or not; it is for the authority invested with power under S. 9 (2) to determine the question if it is raised. The High Court in appeal was of the view that S. 9 laid down an objective test and once it was found that the passport was obtained in fact by an Indian citizen from another country, the law determined the legal consequences of that conduct and no question of his "intent or understanding arose". We are unable to agree with that view. If voluntary acquisition of citizenship of another country determines Indian citizenship within the meaning of S. 9 (1), and by virtue of Paragraph 3 of Sch. III of the Citizenship Rules a conclusive presumption of voluntary acquisition of citizenship is to be raised from the obtaining of a passport from the Government of any other country, it would be implicit that the obtaining of a passport was the result of the exercise of free volition by the citizen. The view is strengthened by the scheme of S. 9 (2) read with R. 30 which contemplates an enquiry by an authority prescribed under sub-s. (2) for determination of the question whether citizenship of another country has been acquired by an Indian citizen". (Underlining supplied by us).

13. Reliance had been placed in the course of arguments by the learned counsel for the respondents on Syed Khawaja Moinuddin v. Govt. of India, AIR 1967 SC 1143, where, after considering the representation which had been made by the aggrieved citizen, the Supreme Court observed that the facts put forward by the erstwhile citizen indicated that he had gone voluntarily to Pakistan, and there was no explanation forthcoming for exercising this volition of going to that country. In that case there was a long stay in Pakistan and, according to the Supreme Court, in the representation to the Government this long stay was also not explained. According to the Supreme Court, in these circumstances the Government of India was not called upon to make any detailed enquiry when the provisions of Paragraph 3 of Sch. III of the Citizenship Rules were clearly applicable. It was urged before us — and this submission will be required to be considered — that the pleas to be found in the representation of the petitioner before us which he had submitted in answer to the show cause notice also did not call for a further enquiry. In any case, it was submitted that by the show cause notice the petitioner had been called upon to tender for the consideration of the deciding Officer whatever material he had with him in order to substantiate his pleas and, therefore, he had been given all necessary opportunity which was postulated and contemplated under the relevant statutory provision and that, therefore, there had been no denial of any opportunity. The argument, shortly put, was that an opportunity had been given and not availed of by the petitioner and, therefore, it did not lay in his mouth to complain that opportunity had been denied to him. In this connection the fact that he had not asked for a personal hearing was sought to be emphasised. We will have occasion to refer to this aspect of the matter after trying to analyse the nature of the pleas submitted by the petitioner in his representation in reply to the show cause notice. In our opinion, Moinuddin's case does not depart from the principles laid down by the Supreme Court in Md. Ayub Khan's case (AIR 1965 SC 1623) nor does it interpret that decision in any manner useful for our purposes. On the facts the Supreme Court had arrived at a particular conclusion and it is clear that whether or not there is denial of opportunity would have to depend upon facts of each case and particularly upon the explanation submitted by the citizen who is told that "You appear to have lost your citizenship." If no explanation is furnished by him or if a proper explanation is not furnished by him, then that person cannot be heard to complain that he had been denied the opportunity of substantiating his plea. In other words, it was found in Khawaja Moinuddin's case that there was no plea which was required to be substantiated and this is all that the Supreme Court has observed in that case.

14. These provisions once again came to be considered by the Supreme Court in Mohd. Ilyas v. Union of India, 1970 (3) SCC 61. One of the contentions raised before the Supreme Court in the said case was that the Government of India was bound to give a personal hearing to those who make representations under S. 9 (2) or to afford opportunity to them to adduce oral evidence. This question was expressly left open, the Supreme Court observing that on the facts of that case it was unnecessary to decide the point (see para. 6 of the report). In paragraph 14 of the report there is reference to the pleas contained in the representation made by the aggrieved person and it is observed that it was not his case that he was compelled or forced to obtain a passport from Pakistan or that he was the victim of any fraud. On these pleas, therefore, the Supreme Court rejected the contention advanced on behalf of the appellant before it that the passport had not been voluntarily obtained by him; it observed that on the admitted facts no occasion arose for the Government to give him a personal hearing or to give him an opportunity to adduce oral evidence.

15. It is clear therefore, that in the decision in 1970 (3) SCC 61, on the facts of that case the Supreme Court kept the question open viz. whether the person served with a show cause notice had a right of personal hearing or to adduce oral evidence and merely observed that on the admitted facts of the case and after considering the pleas it could not be said that further opportunity was required to be given to him to substantiate his contention.

16. Thus in the two later judgments the Supreme Court would seem to have adopted the procedure of prima facie considering the pleas contained in the representation made by the aggrieved person in reply to the show cause notice and after applying its mind to these pleas coming to the conclusion whether on these pleas a further inquiry became necessary or not. If on the pleas the view of the Court appears that the case squarely fell within R. 30 and Schedule III, then the Court did not countenance the grievance of the aggrieved person that he was deprived of his citizenship without a proper hearing. It would appear to us that if examination of the petitioner's pleas suggests or shows that a further inquiry is required, then the order determining or deciding the question made against him without affording him such further inquiry would be required to be quashed as being contrary to the principles of natural justice.

17. Before advertng to two decisions of the Calcutta High Court and of the Kashmir High Court, in which the decisions in Izhar Ahmed's case (AIR 1962 SC 1052) and Md. Ayub Khan's case (AIR 1965 SC 1623) were considered and propositions deduced therefrom, we may dispose of the argument postulated in the petition, viz. that the nature or the importance of the proceeding makes it incumbent in all cases to give a personal hearing to the party on whom a show cause notice had been served as well as the right to adduce oral evidence. It was contended that bearing in mind the nature of the show cause notice served and the consequences of the decision made, it was incumbent in every case in which a plea was raised that the Pakistani passport was not obtained voluntarily that a personal hearing must be given to the person sought to be affected by the decision. It was submitted that admittedly these were quasi-judicial proceedings. Indeed, it was urged that this was an issue in the pending litigation which was required to be determined by the Central Government by the statutory provision. It was accordingly sought to be urged that the proceedings were required to be invested with considerable judicial character and a judicial determination of a lis normally postulated personal confrontation. The fact that no appeal was provided by the relevant statutory provision was also emphasised. Now, it would appear to us that the fact that the further hearing of the suit was stayed and the issue was required to be decided in a pending civil proceeding by the Central Government would not by itself alter or affect the character of the determination, though perhaps it would invest it with further solemnity. It is well settled that the right of personal hearing or the right of representation through a lawyer is not a sine qua non of natural justice. It is impossible to accept the general submission that the moment a general or a bald plea is taken claiming that the action in obtaining the passport was not voluntary, that the party raising the plea must be called for a personal hearing. Indeed, it is possible to conceive of a situation where a party raising such plea is required to indicate the nature of evidence in support of that plea, submit such evidence on affidavits, submit documents on which he relies and even indicate the detailed contentions required to be considered by the determining authority in writing. If this is done and it is found from the order that the pleas have been considered and properly appreciated, it would be difficult to hold that such procedure would violate any requirements of natural justice as ordinarily understood. Our attention was drawn by counsel to observations in a fairly recent English case viz. R. V. Gaming Board for Great Britain ex parte Benaim (1970) 2 All ER 528, where Lord Denning M. R. made reference to the observations (at page 533) of Lord Parker C. J. in Re K (K) (an infant). (1967) 2 QB 617/630, where in reference to what is required of an immigration officer it was stated "..... even if an immigration officer is not acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity, he must at any rate give the immigrant an opportunity of satisfying him of the matters in the sub-section, and for that purpose let the immigrant know what his immediate impression is so that the immigrant can disabuse him. That is not, as I see it, a question of acting or being required to act judicially, but of being required to act fairly". Reliance was placed on this passage and it was submitted that it would apply with all greater force to a quasi-judicial proceeding of the nature which was being determined by the Joint Secretary where the Joint Secretary was required to inform the petitioner of his prima facie impression of the petitioner's plea whereupon the petitioner could attempt to convince the officer concerned of the force in the pleas and substantiate them if necessary. Indeed, it is well settled that it is not possible to lay down rigid rules as to what the principles of natural justice are or when they are to be applied and in what manner. Their scope, extent and application will vary from case to case and even in the type of the decision with which we are confronted we feel that it would depend upon the type of plea raised by the party receiving the show cause notice. Indeed, in our opinion, much depends upon the type of representation made by the aggrieved party. The moment such representation is made, the determining authority will have to apply its mind to the nature of the pleas contained in that representation and decide whether the pleas afford any sort of defence or justifification and what is the nature of the evidence indicated in those pleas. It will have to consider whether the party has had the opportunity of bringing such evidence and all other material to substantiate the pleas before the determining authority. If the party has received that opportunity and has availed itself of it or wilfully chosen not to avail of such opportunity, then the determining authority may go ahead and decide on whatever material has been placed before it. If that decision is honestly arrived at, then the procedure adopted cannot be faulted merely on the ground that no personal hearing was afforded to the party or the opportunity to lead oral evidence was denied to that party. The question whether the party has had a proper opportunity or has been denied the opportunity would depend upon the contents of the show cause notice, the reply of the party and, to a limited extent, the impact of denial of the opportunity might be required to be considered with reference to the final order determining the issue. We are unable, therefore, to accept the general submission that a personal hearing or an opportunity to lead oral evidence is a sine qua non of the proper procedure for such inquiries and that the inquiry is vitiated since that procedure was not followed. It may be mentioned at this juncture that this seems to be the main grievance set out in the Special Civil Application. During the course of arguments counsel also contended that even if no personal hearing was required to be given, his client was required to be given a further opportunity to substantiate his case after receipt of the representation by the determining authority, which opportunity has admittedly not been given. Accordingly it was submitted that failure to give such opportunity has resulted in failure of justice inasmuch as relevant considerations which would have been properly brought to the attention of the determining Officer have not been properly and fairly considered by him. We will advert to this aspect of the matter a little later on after completing our discussion of the relevant authorities in connection with the proper scope of S. 9 of the Citizenship Act, R. 30 and Sch. III of the Citizenship Rules.

18. Izhar Ahmed's case and Md. Ayub Khan's case came to be considered by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Md. Nazaharul Haque v. B.

Bagchi. 77 Cal WN 695: (AIR 1974 Cal 29), where after considering a number of authorities including the abovesaid two Supreme Court decisions Laik J. observed (see para 23 of the report) (Cal WN): (See Para 23 of AIR) as follows:—

"23. At any rate, for the purpose of these types of cases as in the instant appeals the following propositions, for which there is ample authority, might be laid down:

(i) The passport obtained by a person from Pakistan would no doubt be evidence that he was a Pakistani national, but that evidence would be subject to the provisions of S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act.

(ii) A Court cannot decide whether an Indian citizen has acquired the citizenship of another country, but the only authority to so decide is the Government of India acting as a quasi-judicial tribunal under the provisions of S. 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act, 1955.

(iii) Section 9 (2) of the Citizenship Act and Para 3 of the Citizenship Rules are intra vires the Constitution and valid law.

(iv) The proposition that as soon as it is alleged that a passport has been obtained by a person from a foreign Government, the State Government can immediately proceed to deport him without the necessary inquiry by the Central Government, is not correct. It is only after the Central Government has decided the point after inquiry that the State Government can deal with the person treating him to be a foreigner. In dealing with the said question the Central Government would undoubtedly be entitled to give effect to Para 3 in Schedule 3 of the Citizenship Rules and would be entitled to deal with the matter in accordance with the other relevant rules framed under the Act, but the question must be first considered by the Central Government. In other words, the decision by the Government of India is a condition precedent in that behalf.

(v) The provision for prescribing rules of evidence, having regard to which the question of acquisition of citizenship of another country has to be determined, clearly indicates that the order is not to be made on the mere satisfaction of the authority without enquiry that the citizen concerned has obtained a passport of another country. The authority has also to determine as to whether the person has voluntarily acquired foreign citizenship.

(vi) The enquiry would be quasi-judicial in nature and the citizen concerned must be given due notice of the nature of the action. Reasonable opportunity must be offered to the citizen to convince the authority that what is alleged against him is not true. If a plea is raised by the citizen that he had not voluntarily obtained the foreign passport, the citizen should be afforded an opportunity to prove the said fact. Termination of Indian citizenship does not merely depend upon action of a foreign country in issuing the passport.

(vii) "The rest of the propositions do not appear to be material for our purposes and are, therefore, not set out.

19. In connection with the aforesaid decision, although it must be conceded that the facts of that case were very much stronger than the facts before us, emphasis was laid by learned counsel for the petitioner on these six propositions above set out which would seem to suggest that the stage of giving opportunity occurs subsequent to the plea raised by the citizen after receipt of the show cause notice, and it was submitted that on the facts of the case before us such opportunity was admittedly not given to the petitioner.

20. The last of the authorities to which detailed reference may be made is the decision of a Full Bench of the Kashmir High Court (consisting of five Judges) in S. Mosin Shah v. Union Govt. of India, AIR 1974 J & K 48 (FB). It was reiterated in that decision that an inquiry under S. 9 (2) is quasi-judicial in its nature and must be based on proper appreciation of the evidence and it must comply with the cardinal rules of natural justice. But it was observed that a personal hearing was not a necessary concomitant of the principles of natural justice. It was clarified that whether or not a personal hearing should be given would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. This is in accordance with our view indicated earlier that it is not an invariable or a universal requirement but would depend upon the circumstances of each case; and in the type of case which we have indicated earlier where a proper opportunity has been given and the submissions of the party fully considered, the party cannot seek to impugn the ultimate adverse decision merely on the ground that a personal hearing was not given or that if such hearing had been given, the opportunity could have been availed of to convert the deciding officer to a different point of view.

21. In S. Mohsin's case (AIR 1974 J & K 48 (FB)) S. Murtaza Fazl Ali, C. J. (as he then was) speaking for the Full Bench of the Jammu & Kashmir High Court referred to Izhar Ahmed's case (AIR 1962 SC 1052) and Md. Ayub Khan's case (AIR 1965 SC 1623), and after analysing them observed (see para 8 of the report) as follows:

"(1) That R. 3 of Sch. III raises a presumption that if a person has acquired a passport of another country, that shall be conclusive proof of the fact that the citizenship was lost.

(2) That before this act can be conclusively proved, the word 'obtained' clearly postulates that the passport must be acquired by free volition or voluntarily.

(3) That the onus of proving the fact that the passport was not acquired voluntarily but under duress or other circumstances is on the citizen concerned and once this plea is raised, it has to be examined by the Central Government while making an enquiry under S. 9 (2).

(4) In other words, the expression 'obtained a passport' appearing in R. 3 of Sch. III does not include the physical or mechanical act of receiving a passport by a person but postulates the securing of a passport wilfully and consciously, knowing full well the consequences of the same. Once this is proved, then the presumption under R. 3 will automatically apply to the acquisition of the passport and will become a conclusive proof of the loss of citizenship. Where, however, it is proved that the passport was obtained under duress, compulsion, undue influence, fraud or fear, it will not amount to obtaining the passport within the meaning of R. 3, Sch. III and therefore the question of treating the acquisition of the passport as conclusive proof of the loss of citizenship would not arise....."

22. The learned counsel for the petitioner submitted that in the view of the Kashmir High Court (AIR 1974 J & K 48) (FB) (which view was based on the analysis of the Supreme Court decisions) that it was necessary that the application for a Pakistani passport should have been made "wilfully and consciously", "knowing full well the consequences of the same". On the other hand, it was urged by the learned counsel for the respondents that although the use of the expression phrase 'wilfully and consciously' would be in accord with the observations of the Supreme Court in Md. Ayub Khan's case (AIR 1965 SC 1623) above reproduced, the said High Court was not justified in adding the further qualifying words "knowing full well the consequences of the same", which, it was submitted, was a gloss put by the High Court on the Supreme Court decision. We were urged to read the Supreme Court decision (Md. Ayub Khan's case) for ourselves and apply it ignoring the gloss, which, it was submitted, was not justified by the express provisions contained in Para 3 of Sch. III even as interpreted by the Supreme Court. It was also submitted that even the Kashmir High Court had restricted the possible pleas available to a person who had obtained a Pakistani passport to the pleas indicated in sub-para (4) of paragraph 8 viz. that it would be open to the party only to show that the passport was obtained under duress, compulsion, undue influence, fraud or fear. It was submitted that only if one of such pleas is raised and substantiated, then alone it could be held that the receiving of the passport would not amount to obtaining the same within Para 3 of Sch. III and therefore the question of treating the acquisition of the passport as conclusive proof of loss of citizenship would not arise. It was submitted — and, indeed, there is some force in that submission — that the available pleas or justifications should not be unduly extended beyond the cases indicated by the Supreme Court or at least beyond the four or five specific pleas indicated by the Jammu and Kashmir High Court.

23. Now, in order to determine whether the plea raised by the petitioner before us in his representation is a permissible plea in the sense that it would amount to some sort of justification for obtaining the Pakistani passport and take the petitioner out of the rigorous application of Para. 3 of Schedule III, it will become necessary to consider the nature of the plea. A copy of the representation submitted by the petitioner to the Central Government in reply to the show cause notice is to be found annexed as part of Exhibit 'B' to the petition. Paras 1 and 2 of the said representation can be said to deal generally with the previous background and history and the petitioner in these two paras has brought to the attention of the determining authority various facts such as that in 1944 he had sold his land at the native place viz. Dera Ismailkhan (admittedly part of Pakistan after 1947) and had come down with the sale proceeds to Bombay with the intention of settling down permanently in Bombay. It has been brought to the notice of the authority that after his arrival in Bombay he started doing business in partnership with his cousin brother at Worli, which partnership was subsequently dissolved and the petitioner continued the business after dissolution as the sole proprietor thereof. The petitioner has brought to the attention of the said authority that after the said dissolution the premises were transferred to the name of the petitioner as also the licence for the said business, the transferring authorities being the State of Bombay and the Bombay Municipal Corporation respectively. The petitioner has also mentioned his place of residence and he claims that the rent bills of the said premises stand in his name. Then comes para 3 of the representation in which details have been given by the petitioner about the circumstances in which the petitioner obtained the Pakistani passport, that being the gravamen of the charge against the petitioner to be found in the show cause notice, where it is alleged that the petitioner had voluntarily acquired the citizenship of Pakistan by reason of his having obtained on 25th May 1953 a passport from the Government of Pakistan. According to the petitioner, in 1953 he received a letter from his father that he was ill and the petitioner therefore desired to go to Pakistan to see his ailing father. The petitioner consulted his maternal-uncle who advised the petitioner to obtain a passport. Accordingly the petitioner got the application typed from a typist near Mandvi Post Office and obtained a Pakistani passport on the strength of the said application. The petitioner contended that he did not understand the implications of the passport and he obtained the passport without applying his mind in order to see his ailing father and because of the anxiety caused by the intimation of this news. According to the petitioner: "I never knew what that document was as I am an uneducated man and do not know English or Urdu", and further "the said passport was not obtained with the intention of becoming a citizen of Pakistan. I had no intention or desire at any time during my stay in this country to leave the same and/or to acquire Pakistani citizenship..... My only intention was to visit Pakistan for the purpose of seeing my ailing father". In his representation the petitioner thereafter goes on to say that subsequent to his obtaining the passport he received intimation that his father who was ailing had expired, and the petitioner therefore did not go to Pakistan and did not utilise the passport for travel. The original passport obtained by the petitioner had been exhibited in the trial Court. We had called for the same and it bears out that it has not been utilised by the petitioner for any purpose. It may be pointed out that the passport was obtained on 25th May 1953. Subsequently in his representation the petitioner draws attention the fact that he got married on 26th June 1954, the petitioner's wife hails from Poona. It is pertinent to note that no subsequent endorsement has been obtained in or made on the said passport for including the petitioner's wife or children. The passport shows that it is issued at New Delhi; it has a life for five years, which would mean that it expired on 24th May 1958; and according to the passport, it is valid for India only. In his representation the petitioner refers to the fact of his marriage, of his having seven children of whom five appear to be receiving education in Poona and Bombay respectively. In his representation the petitioner has emphasised the fact that he has married an Indian citizen, that he has no relations in Pakistan, that all his children have been born, brought up and educated in India and that since his arrival in Bombay in 1944 and since the partition of the country he has not left India or visited Pakistan. A comment was made — and with some justification — that the representation lacks proper particulars, although it would not be possible to call it vague. It is true that the name of the maternal-uncle has not been furnished. It is equally true that although the show cause notice required the petitioner to submit for transmission to the Central Government other material, he did not submit any documents or copies of documents for consideration of the determining authority, in particular the letter which he purported to receive in 1953. Again paragraph 3 of the representation does not specifically say that it was the maternal-uncle who advised the petitioner to obtain a Pakistani passport or that such advice was given on the footing that an Indian passport would not be given or would not be easily given or would not be available in the short time which was available to the petitioner if he were to see his ailing father. It was also submitted that the contentions which had been urged by the petitioner that he obtained the passport under misapprehension and/or on wrong advice without knowing the nature and its implications, were not relevant to the question to be decided viz. whether the petitioner had lost his Indian citizenship by reason of the provisions contained in S. 9 of the Citizenship Act read with R. 30 and Sch. III. In connection with this branch of the argument our attention was drawn to observations in Mohomed Usman v. State of Madras, AIR 1961 Mad 129. One of the pleas considered in the said decision of the Madras High Court was that of one of the petitioners appearing who claimed that he had not received any education and who had acted on information given to him by the police and who contended that he did not have the intention of renouncing Indian citizenship; and this plea appears to have been rejected by the Madras High Court. This rejection, however, appears to be based on the view the Division Bench took of the true meaning of the expression 'voluntarily' in S. 9 (1) of the Act. According to the Division Bench of the Madras High Court, this expression has been used "as contra-distinguished from a foreign nationality resulting from the operation of compulsive laws of the foreign State and not dependent on the explicit consent of the individual concerned and termed in Public International Law 'compulsory', 'involuntary' or 'collective' naturalisation". It appears to us that this along with many of the observations in the above decision with reference to the actual specific pleas of the various petitioners before it would have either to be considered no longer a good law or will require consideration in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Md. Ayub Khan's case (AIR 1965 SC 1623) above referred to.

24. It has become necessary to consider in the light of the decisions as to what are the permissible pleas available to a party who has received a notice of the nature received by the petitioner before us. It is clear that the obtaining of a passport is not to be equated with the mere receipt thereof. It is equally clear that when the Supreme Court refers to cases where, according to the Court, it would be difficult to accept that the passport could be said to have been 'obtained' (see para 10 of the report in Md. Ayub Khan's case) (AIR 1965 SC 1623), it was not giving an exhaustive list of the various types of circumstances in which a person can get out of the consequences of obtaining the passport. Nor was the Court holding that the plea of force, compulsion, fraud or misrepresentation would in addition require an averment that the person had no intention of renouncing his Indian citizenship. Indeed, it would appear that if a passport has been obtained by force or fraud or misrepresentation, then the person raising such plea and justifying it would be required to be exonerated without there being any further plea or without consideration of his intention of renouncing his Indian citizenship; and it would appear that the question of intention of renouncement of his Indian citizenship is a factor, or an aspect which, according to the Supreme Court, is to be required to be considered apart from the case of fraud or force or misrepresentation resulting in the receipt or acquiring of the passport. This would also appear to be sustained by the observations in para 11 of report of the Supreme Court decision, earlier set out where the view of the High Court holding that the intention or understanding was irrelevant was characterised as erroneous. In other words, if a passport has been taken as a result of force or fraud or misrepresentation, it is not 'obtained' within the meaning of Para 3 of Schedule III. Similarly if a person applies for and receives a passport without any intention of renouncing his Indian citizenship or without understanding the nature of what he was doing, it would be an aspect, a factor to be considered by the determining authority. This is in our opinion, implicit in the observation of the Supreme Court to be found in paras 10 and 11 of Md. Ayub Khan's case, and this aspect of the matter has been made explicit in the subsequent decision of the Jammu and Kashmir High Court in S. Mohsin Shah's case (AIR 1974 J & K 48) (FB). It is clear to us that the Full Bench of the Jammu and Kashmir High Court considered the Supreme Court as having laid down the requirement that a person is within the mischief of Para 3 of Schedule III only if he had secured a passport wilfully and consciously, knowing full well the consequences of the same. It is also not possible to accept the submission that the Jammu and Kashmir High Court has travelled beyond the law as laid down by the Supreme Court and that this Court considering S. 9 of the Act and R. 30 and Sch. III for itself and bearing in mind the decisions of the Supreme Court earlier referred to should hold that the intention of the person who applied for a passport and received it or his lack of understanding or the absence of any intention on his part to acquire foreign citizenship or to renounce Indian citizenship were considerations extraneous to and irrelevant for the decision, to be given by the Central Government and in that view of the matter hold that the representation submitted by the petitioner did not require or warrant further inquiry. In other words, we were invited to restrict the available pleas to a case of coercion, compulsion, undue influence, fraud or fear. This submission is required to be repelled and it would appear that there are two reasons for doing so. In the first place, this is an all India statute with the rules also having an all India application and when interpreted by one High Court, that interpretation should ordinarily be followed. In Ambika Silk Mills Co. Ltd. v. Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay City, 22 ITR 58 at p. 64: (AIR 1952 Bom 483 at p. 484), it has been observed by Chagla C. J. that "this High Court has consistently laid down that as far as possible in construing a statute which is an All-India statute there should be uniformity amongst the different High Courts". In a later decision viz. in Maneklal Chuni-lal & Sons Ltd. v. Commr. of Income-tax (Central), Bombay, (1953) 24 ITR 375 (Bom), it was found that the Special Bench of the Madras High Court had considered the point being considered by the Bombay High Court and taken the view in favour of the Commissioner and contrary to the view suggested on behalf of the assessee. It was observed that in conformity with the uniform policy of this High Court as laid down in Income-tax matters, the Madras view was required to be followed "whatever our own view may be". Apart from this principle of uniformity, it would appear to us that what is being urged by counsel for the petitioner would seem to follow from a harmonious reading of the provisions of S. 9 of the Act and R. 30 and Sch. III of the Rules, and it would be impermissible to consider the plea merely with reference to paragraphs of Sch. III without keeping in mind the section and the Rule. It appears to us that in Md. Ayub Khan's case (AIR 1965 SC 1623) the Supreme Court has construed and toned down the scope and operation of Sch. III by a harmonious reconciliation of the paragraphs of that Schedule with the provisions contained in S. 9 of the Citizenship Act, 1955. Bearing in mind the observations of the Supreme Court and of the Calcutta and the Jammu & Kashmir High Court in the decision earlier indicated, it will be impossible to hold that the pleas of the petitioner before us made in his representation to the determining authority were irrelevant and were useless for the purpose of arriving at a proper conclusion whether or not the petitioner had lost his citizenship. It was submitted that the pleas pertaining to the state of mind are not to be easily countenanced and that in almost every case in which a person was sought to be visited with the consequence of his act in obtaining a Pakistani passport he would try to wriggle out of the same by reason of such pleas which would be difficult to repel. It is not to be forgotten, however, that although there are serious consequences involved in the determination of the question, the burden of proof for substantiating the pleas has been cast on the party raising the plea. If that aspect is borne in mind, it would be realised that such pleas frivolously and lightly taken need not be easily or automatically accepted. Such pleas will be required to be closely scrutinised in the light of the available material and ultimately it will be for that party to satisfy the determining authority about the truthfulness of such pleas. For this purpose it appears to us that the various circumstances set out in the representation of the petitioner before us and to which we have briefly alluded in the course of this judgment might have considerable relevance. It will be for the determining authority however, to consider each circumstance and to attach to it the importance it deserves.

25. The question then arises that if, in our opinion, the petitioner had raised certain pleas which were required to be considered, can it be said that he was given proper opportunity to substantiate the same? It was submitted that in the show cause notice the petitioner had been called upon to submit within three months all other materials on which he wished to rely upon to prove that he had not voluntarily acquired the citizenship of Pakistan and that he chose not to furnish necessary particulars or further material. Again, it was emphasised that in his representation the petitioner had not sought any further opportunity or sought a personal hearing, and, indeed, it was pointed out that in the penultimate paragraph of his representation the petitioner had called upon the determining authority to give the necessary decision, though he requested that one be given in his favour. We have already indicated earlier that in our opinion that it is not necessary that a personal hearing or a right to adduce oral evidence is required to be given in all cases. It is, however, impossible to say that by the show cause notice the petitioner was put on guard that apart from making a plea he was called upon to adduce all evidence in his possession and furnish the same, possibly by affidavits, to the determining authority. Indeed, the nature of the inquiry would seem to suggest that it is to be held not in one stage but in two; in the first place, a reply or a plea is to be sought for, and the second or the latter stage must consist in requiring the person to substantiate his plea. If no plea is raised or no proper plea is raised, then the latter stage may not arise at all. In an appropriate case it is possible to visualise that the party may be required to furnish along with his reply all evidence, all clarifications and all documents upon which he relies. This, however, would hardly seem to be a proper procedure, and, indeed, in the instant case it has not been adopted. The show cause notice in our opinion does not call upon the petitioner specifically to substantiate his plea by adducing necessary evidence on affidavits, and it will not serve the respondents by saying that the petitioner did not ask for any further opportunity to substantiate his plea. Once a view is formed that the pleas raised by the petitioner required consideration, then in our opinion it became incumbent on the determining authority to afford to the petitioner such further opportunity as would be reasonable and proper in the circumstances of the case. Indeed, in an appropriate case, though it must not be taken that we are meaning the present, if the plea is complicated or requires detailed investigation, it may be incumbent upon the determining authority to offer a personal hearing or even allow legal representation to the person against whom the show cause notice has been issued. As stated earlier, there is no universal rule and the correct and proper procedure would depend upon the facts of each case and in particular upon the pleas submitted by the recipient of the show cause notice.

26. The question does arise and will be required to be considered whether injury has been caused to the petitioner by the denial of the opportunity which was required to be given to him. Normally in such proceedings where the onus is cast heavily on the person raising the plea, it must be presumed that if further opportunity had been given to that person that opportunity would have been availed of either to substantiate the plea or to convince the determining authority that the plea had a bearing and was required to be considered in order to lessen the harshness of the rules of evidence contained in paragraph 3 of Sch. III. Indeed, in the instant case after a perusal of paragraph 3 of the impugned order it would appear, though it is impossible from the rather terse language employed to conclude definitely, that the determining authority thought that such plea as was sought to be urged in the representation was not material. All that is to be found in paragraph 3 of the impugned order is a reference to the fact that the petitioner was born in 1926 and, therefore, would be about 27 years old in 1953. It is presumed by the determining authority that by reason of this age the petitioner had achieved maturity of age and understanding. On this basis the said order goes on to recite that the petitioner should have (not that he did) taken great care to understand the implications of obtaining a Pakistani passport and therefore his plea cannot be accepted. Now, the discussion seems to proceed upon the footing that such a plea was not available in view of the mature age of the person. It is true that in the last sentence of paragraph 3 of the impugned order there is some discussion as to a very important consideration whether the petitioner had tried to obtain an Indian passport or not. The last sentence, however, makes it clear that it is the opinion of the determining authority that the intention, of the petitioner, the so-called compelling circumstances, the reason for visiting Pakistan, are all totally immaterial provided it is established that his act in applying for a Pakistani passport was voluntary. In our opinion, this is based on a clear misapprehension of the true legal position and the determining authority would have been apprised of the same had he granted to the petitioner a further opportunity either of making a detailed submission and preferring evidence substantiating the plea or giving him a personal hearing. Indeed, a fair perusal of the impugned order would confirm the view that the denial of opportunity to the petitioner has resulted in prejudice to him viz. that the decision has been given and an order has been made without properly and fairly appreciating the pleas to be found contained in the representation.

27. It has to be made clear since our decision will involve a remand of the matter, that no observations in our judgment should be taken to mean that there is material on record which would substantiate the plea or from which it must be held that the petitioner has discharged the burden which is cast on him to show that he had not voluntarily obtained the passport. All that can be said is that there are various aspects to be considered, which would be within the jurisdiction of the Central Government which is the deciding authority, and after which it will be for that authority alone to arrive at the necessary conclusion.

28. As stated earlier, pursuant to the decision of the determining authority the learned Judge of the Bombay City Civil Court has passed a final decree on 13th July 1971 dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs. This was on the footing that although the Court had found him to be a citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution, the Central Government had given its decision that his citizenship had been terminated by the act of obtaining a Pakistani passport on 25th May 1953 and therefore he was not entitled to the declaration sought for. It is obvious that if the impugned order dated 31st December 1970 is required to be quashed and the matter remanded back for a proper inquiry and reconsideration in the light of the observations in this judgment, the further order in Suit No. 98 of 1967 and the decree passed therein cannot stand and will be required to be corrected. We are, however, informed that First Appeal No. 729 of 1971 has been filed against the said decision in this Court and it would appear to us that since that appeal has been filed, the order in this petition ought to be restricted to the order of the Central Government passed on 31st December 1970. If that order is quashed, the foundation of the ultimate decision given in Suit No. 98 of 1967 by the decree of dismissal dated 13th July 1971 will vanish and that decree will be required to be varied. That variation, however, will be required to be done in First Appeal No. 729 of 1971.

29. In the result, the Rule is made absolute as far as the impugned order dated 31st December 1970 is concerned. The 1st respondents are directed to give a fresh decision in accordance with the observations made in this judgment. Mr. Noorani desires us to give an order restraining the respondents from deporting the petitioner out of India. Mr. Manjrekar states and submits that there is no question of deportation till the necessary decision is given and that in fact despite such decision the petitioner has been permitted to stay in India subject to his good behaviour. In view of this statement it is unnecessary to make the order sought for by Mr. Noorani. We, however, direct that First Appeal No. 729 of 1971 be placed on our board on Monday, the 19th instant, for necessary orders.

30. Mr. Noorani does not press for costs.

31. The parties are directed to bear their own costs of this Special Civil Application.

Rule made absolute

VAIDYA AND SHIMPI, JJ.

Haribai, Appellant v. Baba Anna and another, Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1285 of 1970, D/- 6-7-1976.*

Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act (1956), S. 10 (iv) read with S. 3 (a) — Adoption of person who has completed the age of fifteen — Custom — Proof of — S. A. No. 1444 of 1965, D/- 24-4-1972 (Bom), Overruled.

CU/CU/A948/77/RSK

Notwithstanding what was stated in the Dharmashastra Books, the Bombay School of Hindu Law never recognised any age limit for adoption. That is the legal custom and lex loci generally among Hindus relating to adoption in this part of the country, within the meaning of the definition of 'custom' under S. 3 (a) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act. AIR 1972 Bom 98 and (1976) Mah LJ 125, Rel. on. (Para 30)

The definition of 'custom' in S. 3 (a) gives importance not to any particular custom or usage as opposed to Dharma-shastra Text but to any rule which, having been continuously and uniformly observed for a long time, has obtained the force of law among Hindus in any local area, tribe, community, group and family. A distinction between a rule founded on custom and a rule founded on Dharma-shastra is not germane to the definition of the word 'custom' in S. 3 (a). The definition in a way gives effect to the well-known legal maxim: "Via Trita est Via Tuta" (The beaten way is the safe way). S. A. No. 1444 of 1965, D/- 24-4-1972 (Bom), Overruled. (Paras 25, 26)

K. J. Abhyankar, for Appellant; V. B. Rege, for Respondent No. 1.

VAIDYA, J.:— The above Second Appeal was referred to a Division Bench by Kania, J. on March 24, 1976.

2. The Second Appeal arose out of a suit filed by the appellant, Haribai Dattu Sutar, on April 4, 1967, to get possession of the property described at Serial No. 4 in para 1 and also to get possession of the remaining one-half portion of the property at Serial No. 3 in para 1 of the plaint; and for an injunction restraining the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from obstructing the plaintiffs Vahiwat in the property at Serial No. 5 in the plaint.

3. The property described at Serial Nos. 3 and 4 in para 1 consisted of agricultural lands. The property at Serial No. 5 consisted of a house and an open site. These properties originally belonged to Banubai widow of Tatoba Sutar. She had two daughters viz. the plaintiff and one Bhagirathi. Bhagirathi died long ago. Plaintiff Haribai, who was married, was staying with her mother during Banubai's lifetime, looking after the needs of Banubai. Banubai executed a Will on October 30, 1961. The Will is at Ex. 79. It was executed in favour of the plaintiff and the husband of Bhagirathi-bai, viz. Chandrappa. Chandrappa executed a registered release deed (Ex. 89) in her favour on October 10, 1965, in respect of his one-half share in the property. Banubai died on February 25, 1962.

4. It was alleged in the plaint that in June 1963, the two defendants dispossessed her of the suit properties at Serial Nos. 3 and 4 and were threatening to dispossess her of the property at Serial No. 5 viz. the house which was in her possession. Defendant No. 1 claimed to be the adopted son of Banubai under a registered adoption deed dated November 24, 1961 (Exh. 82). According to the plaintiff, the adoption, even if proved, was not valid, inasmuch as it was alleged to be made and the adoption deed was obtained by practising fraud and misrepresentation on the old woman and also because the defendant No. 1 was more than 15 years old at the time of the alleged adoption. On the basis of the said allegations, the plaintiff claimed possession of properties at Item Nos. 3 and 4 and perpetual injunction in respect of Item No. 5.

5. The defendants resisted the suit. They denied the execution of the Will. They further alleged that the Will must have been obtained by exercising fraud on Banubai and without letting her to know the nature of the document. According to them, they were brought up by the old woman, as if they were her sons and out of love and affection she adopted defendant No. 1, out of them, on November 24, 1961, at Karad, and registered the deed of adoption on the same day. She also executed an agreement, Exh. 81, on the same day in favour of their mother Sitabai. They contended that by these two documents, Banubai had revoked the Will in favour of the plaintiff. They denied that any fraud was exercised on Banubai for obtaining the adoption deed. They contended that the adoption of defendant No. 1, though he was more than 15 years of age, was permissible under the custom prevailing amongst the community to which the parties belonged and also generally in Karad. Defendant No. 1 thus claimed title to the suit property as the adopted son of Banubai, and submitted that the suit of the plaintiff was liable to be dismissed with costs.

6. The parties led oral and documentary evidence and on consideration of the said evidence, the learned trial Judge held that Banubai had validly executed the will in favour of the plaintiff and Chandrappa; and Chandrappa had released his 1/2 interest in the property in the year 1965. He held that there was fraud practised on Banubai by the plaintiff and Chandrappa. He also held that the old woman adopted the defendant No. 1 on November 24, 1961, but that the adoption was invalid because the defendant No. 1 was more than 15 years old at the time of adoption; and there was no custom duly proved by him validating such adoption.

7. In the result, he decreed the suit with costs by directing that the plaintiff do get possession of the land at Serial No. 4 from the defendant No. 1, that she should also get joint possession of 1/2 portion of the land at Serial No. 3 from the defendants, although it is difficult to explain why he gave only the joint possession. He also restrained the defendants from obstructing the plaintiff "in her cultivation and Vahiwat", although the serial number was treated as only the house and he directed inquiry into mesne profits under O. XX, R. 12 (1) (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, by his judgment and decree, dated August 31, 1968.

8. In an appeal filed by the defendant No. 1, the said judgment and decree were set aside; and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed with costs, as the learned Extra Assistant Judge, Satara, reversed the findings recorded by the trial Court and held that the plaintiff failed to prove the execution and attestation of the Will, as he came to the conclusion, on consideration of the evidence, that the attestation of the Will was not satisfactorily established and the circumstances excited the suspicion of the Court about the genuineness of the Will.

9. He held that the plaintiff herself had admitted in the R. T. S. Proceedings that the will was obtained by Chandrappa by practising fraud on Banubai, in her absence. In this respect, Banubai had herself sent a notice to Chandrappa complaining about the fraud practised by him on her. When she was confronted with these statements made in the R. T. S. Proceedings, in the present suit, she denied having made such a statement.

10. Secondly, a perusal of the release deed at Ex. 80 also shows that Chandrappa stated therein that after the execution of the Will, the old woman had sent for him and requested him not to act upon the Will and claim any interest for himself thereunder, which appears strange having regard to the statement she had made earlier,

11. Thirdly, the learned Assistant Judge found it rather a strange conduct on the part of Banubai in adopting the defendant No. 1 within three weeks after the execution of the Will. The learned Assistant Judge rightly held that these three circumstances made the genuineness of the Will doubtful; and, therefore, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff failed to prove conscious execution and attestation of the Will by Banubai, as required by law.

12. The learned Assistant Judge further came to the conclusion that the factum of adoption was proved by the evidence of Ramchandra Bhosale, Yeshwant Yadav and Shrirang Bachal, who were aged 22, 25 and 20 years, respectively, at the time of their respective adoptions. The evidence adduced by them showed that there was such a custom prevailing in the area, where the adoption of defendant No. 1 took place, which validates the adoption of defendant No. 1, he being aged about 15 years.

13. The learned Assistant Judge also relied on the evidence of the defendant No. 1's mother, Sitabai and the evidence of Yeshwant Yadav and Shankar Jangam, who also deposed regarding the prevalence of the custom of the adoption of boys of over 15 years. The learned Assistant Judge was of the view that the trial Judge was wrong in discarding their testimony only because they were not in a position to state that such custom was prevalent in Sutar community.

14. The learned Assistant Judge also relied on an unreported decision of V. S. Desai, J. in Second Appeal No. 713 of 1964, decided on 15-6-1965 (Bom). In that case, after considering the provisions of S. 10 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, and the definition of the word 'custom' in S. 3 of the Act, and the decision of this Court in Nathaji Krishnaji v. Hari Jagoji, (1871) 8 Bom HCR 67, V. S. Desai, J. observed as follows:

"There is no doubt whatsoever that in the part of the country to which the Bombay School of Hindu Law applied, person of any age is capable of being taken in adoption. He may be even older than the adoptive mother or father. He may also be a married person having children and even grand-children. The adoption of a married person and even of a person who is older than the adoptive father or mother has been regarded as valid in some of the decided cases on the ground that there is no prohibition in the Hindu Law against such adoption. The adoption of a person of any age is also accepted as valid on the same ground as also on the ground that such adoptions have taken place and accepted as valid on the basis of a long established custom."

In other words, there is a rule of conduct in this area which was observed continuously and uniformly for a long time, that a person of any age can be validly adopted. It can, therefore, be said that there is a custom in this area, which permits the adoption of a boy who has completed the age of 15 years. In my opinion, Mr. Bhandare is also right in his contention that the lower Courts have erred in taking the view that the custom referred to in S. 10 is a custom which has come into existence after the coming into operation of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act."

15. The learned Assistant Judge, following this decision, found that the adoption of defendant No. 1 by Banubai was valid, according to the custom prevailing in the area, governed by the Bombay School of Hindu Law. In view of this conclusion, he came to the conclusion that, under the adoption deed Ex. 82, Banubai had made defendant No. 1 as the absolute owner; and in view of that declaration her previous Will was revoked, within the meaning of S. 70 of the Indian Succession Act. He further came to the conclusion that that declaration which was duly attested by five witnesses under the registered adoption deed amounted to transfer of her interest absolutely to defendant No. 1.

16. The learned Assistant Judge further held that this conclusion was fortified by what was stated in the agreement Ex. 81, which was executed in favour of Sitabai, the natural mother of defendant No. 1, wherein Banubai had reiterated that she had constituted the defendant No. 1 the absolute owner of the property belonging to herself and her husband, further making a declaration that she could not use the rights acquired by her under the Hindu Succession Act to the prejudice of defendant No. 1 and that he would acquire all these rights absolutely on her death. The learned Assistant Judge held that even this agreement Ex. 81 amounted to revocation of the Will. The findings of the learned Assistant Judge are challenged in the above second appeal by the plaintiff.

17. When the second appeal came up for hearing before Kania, J., a reference was made to the judgment of Malvankar, J., in Second Appeal No. 1444 of 1965, with Civil Appln. No. 409 of 1967, decided on 24-4-1972 (Bom) where a view was taken that the Bombay decisions did not show that the validity of adoption was upheld on the basis of custom; and, therefore, the adoption of a boy of more than 15 years of age was invalid under S. 10 (iv) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956. In view of the said judgment of Malvankar, J. being in conflict with the view taken by V. S. Desai, J., Kania, J. referred this second appeal to a Division Bench for hearing and final disposal.

18. It was urged on behalf of the defendant No. 1, that the view taken by V. S. Desai, J. was the view taken by Nain, J. in Dnyanu Gopal v. Jijaba Bala, 73 Bom LR 667: (AIR 1972 Bom 98); and also by one of us (Vaidya, J.) in Ramchandra v. Baburao, 1976 Mah LJ 125; and the view of Malvankar, J. was erroneous. On the contrary, it was urged on behalf of the plaintiff that the view taken by Malvankar, J. was based on a careful consideration of the facts and decisions in Mhalsabai v. Vithoba K. Gulve, (1870) 7 Bom HCR App 26 and in Nathaji Krishnaji v. Hari Jagoji, (1871) 8 Bom HCR 67, and the conclusion drawn therefrom that the rule followed by the Bombay School of Hindu Law was based on Vyavahara Mayukha and not on any custom established in those cases.

19. Similarly, it was pointed out in that case by Malvankar, J. that the decisions in Lakshmappa v. Ramava, (1875) 12 Bom HCR 364 and in Dharma Dagu v. Ramkrishna Chinnaji, (1886) ILR 10 Bom 80, were based on Vyavahara Mayukha and other texts of Hindu Law referred to in the said decisions. According to Malvankar, J., in Gopal Balkrishna v. Vishnu Raghunath, (1899) ILR 23 Bom 250, in regard to the observations made in the judgment, it was not strictly necessary to discuss the validity of the objection arising out of the difference of age between the adopted son and the adopting mother. It was further observed in that case that the rule prescribing a difference of age in favour of the adopting mother must be only regarded as directory rule, and not a command. Malvankar, J. further observed that in Balabai Tukaram v. Mahadu Krishna, ILR 48 Bom 387 : (AIR 1924 Bom 349), the decision was again based not on custom but was on rules of Hindu Law, as interpreted by the Courts.

20. The learned Judge also relied on a passage in Dr. Derrett's Introduction to Modern Hindu Law, 1963 Edition, page 112, where the learned author has observed:

"The adoption of married boys was regular under the text of Vyavahara Mayukha for all castes, and thus became a common place in the former Bombay Presidency. It was reported as customary in certain castes in other parts of India."

He pointed out that even the decision in Vishwasrao v. Sahebrao, AIR 1958 Bom 375, was really based on the texts of Vyavahar Mayukha.

21. Notwithstanding the passages in Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, 1953 edition, paragraph 181, pages 235 and 236, Hindu Law by H. R. Raghavachariar, 6th edition, page 149, paragraph 143, and Mulla's Hindu Law, 13th edition, Section 480 sub-section (3) at page 500, Malvankar, J. observed:

"But all these authorities are based on the decision which I have discussed above and in none of them, there is any indication that the rule that an adoption of a person exceeding 15 years of age is permissible as a result of any custom. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the rule which permitted any person more than 15 years of age to be taken in adoption was based on the text or rule or interpretation of Hindu Law and not on any custom and, therefore, the adoption of the present appellant was rightly declared invalid by both the Courts below."

22. The learned Judge further considered the definition of the word "custom" contained in S. 3 (a) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act. In connection with the argument that Vyavahar Mayukha was itself nothing more than crystallised custom in Bombay Presidency, while rejecting the argument he observed:

"In fact, if the argument is accepted, any text of Hindu Law would in one sense be congeries of customs and, therefore, S. 4 of the Act would be rendered meaningless, inasmuch as every text or rule of Hindu Law can be interpreted to mean congeries of customs and, therefore, saved wherever there is express provision in the Act including S. 10 (iv). I, therefore, do not see any substance in this argument."

23. It must be noted at the outset that the judgment of Nain, J., which was decided on September 22, 1970, was not brought to the notice of Malvankar, J., and none of the above judgments were brought to my notice, when I decided the case in Ramchandra v. Baburao, (1976) Mah LJ 125.

24. What we have to consider, in connection with the validity of adoption of a boy of more than 15 years, in an area which fell within the limits of the Bombay Presidency to which the Bombay School of Hindu Law applies, is first the definition of the word "custom" in S. 3 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, which is as follows:

"In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) the expressions "custom" and "usage" signify any rule which, having been continuously and uniformly observed for a long time, has obtained the force of law among Hindus in any local area, tribe, community, group or family;

Provided that the rule is certain and not unreasonable or opposed to public policy; and Provided further that, in the case of a rule applicable only to a family, it has not been discontinued by the family."

25. The definition gives importance not to any particular custom or usage as opposed to Dharmashastra Text but to any rule which, having been continuously and uniformly observed for a long time, has obtained the force of law among Hindus in any local area, tribe, community, group or family. It does not speak of any rule not based on any text or based on custom. It may be a rule having its origin or the genesis in a text or in a decision of the Court of law. If in any particular local area, the rule has been continuously and uniformly observed for a long time, it must be considered as the "custom" and "usage" for the purpose of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act.

26. The definition in a way gives effect to the well-known legal maxim: "Via Trita Via Tuta". (The beaten way is the safe way). The definition which Malvankar, J. with great respect, appears to have assumed to apply made distinction between a rule founded on custom and a rule founded on Vyavahar Mayukha or other Hindu Dharma Shastras or the text. Such a distinction is not germane to the definition of the word "custom" in S. 3 (a). All that is required for purposes of that definition is that a rule must have been continuously and uniformly observed for a long time; and it must have obtained the force of law among Hindus in any local area, tribe, community, group or family. Whether it was based on a book of Dharma Sastras like Vyavahar Mayukha or any other text was irrelevant to the definition of 'custom' under the Act.

27. This view was the one which was adopted by V. S. Desai, J. in Second Appeal No. 713 of 1964, decided on June 15, 1965, after referring to the case in Nathaji Krishnaji v. Hari Jagoji and other cases. Nain, J. also appears to have taken a similar view on consideration of S. 10 (iv) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, which runs as follows:

"No person shall be capable of being taken in adoption unless the following conditions are fulfilled, namely—

- | | |
|----------|-----|
| (i) xx | xxx |
| (ii) xx | xxx |
| (iii) xx | xxx |

(iv) he or she has not completed the age of fifteen years, unless there is a custom or usage applicable to the parties which permits persons who have completed the age of fifteen years being taken in adoption."

Nain, J. observed in Dnyanu Gopal v. Jijaba Baba, 73 Bom LR 667 at page 668 : (AIR 1972 Bom 98):

"In the judgment of the learned District Judge reliance for proving the custom has been placed on two instances, one of 1942 and another of 1948 and certain oral evidence. These instances may not be sufficiently ancient to establish a custom. But what S. 10 (iv) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, talks of is not only custom, but also usage. The instances and evidence would be sufficient to establish a usage. However, this sufficiency of evidence for establishing a custom or usage loses all importance in territories which were formerly part of State of Bombay, such as Satara District. Even prior to the passing of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act in 1956, the Hindu law applicable to the Bombay State was that a person may be adopted at any age even though he may be older than the adoptor and even though he may be married and had children. It is well known that Hindu law in India is derived from various texts and commentaries some of which have by custom held the field in various parts of India. Hindu law, therefore, is by itself customary law, except to the extent to which it has been subsequently codified. In my opinion, therefore, the prohibition contained in S. 10 (iv) against the person adopted who has completed the age of 15 years has no meaning in relation to male persons adopted in the territories which were comprised in the former State of Bombay which include the District of Satara from where this appeal comes. The custom or rule of Hindu law prevailing in these territories permitting adoption of males over the age of 15 years is expressly saved by S. 10 (iv)."

28. Nain, J. has not expressly referred to the definition of Section 3, but it appears that his observations were impliedly based on the definition which makes no distinction between the rule which prevailed in a particular area, as a result of interpreting the Dharmashastra text, or as a result of custom amongst the communities to which parties belong.

29. As already stated above, what is required by the definition of the words "custom" and "usage" makes no difference between custom, usage and text. All that Section 3 (a) lays down is that the rule must be followed and observed for a long time continuously and uniformly, in the community and it has obtained the force of law among Hindus in any local area, tribe, community, group or family.

30. In Ramchandra v. Baburao, (1976) Mah LJ 125, the passage in Dr. Kane's History of Dharmashastra, Volume III, p. 680, was quoted; and it was held that notwithstanding what was stated in the aforesaid Dharmashastra Books, the Bombay School of Hindu Law never recognised any age limit for adoption. That is the legal custom and lex loci generally among Hindus relating to adoption in this part of the country, within the meaning of the definition of 'custom' under the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act.

31. The history of the evolution of the rule in this country is dealt with great scholarship and precision by Dr. Kane in History of Dharmashastra at pp. 679 to 681, as follows:

"As to the age of the boy to be adopted there is great divergence among the medieval writers which is also reflected in the case law. In this connection certain verses of the Kalikapurana assume great importance. The Vyavaharamayukha and the Dattaka-chandrika hold that the passage is of doubtful authenticity (as the verses are not found in several mss.), while the D. M. (Dattaka Mimansa) and the Nirnyasinidhu hold them to be genuine, and the Sam. K. (Samskara-Kaustubha) pp. (169-172) after referring to these views states that those verses are opposed to what is stated in the Ait. Br. (Aitarya Brahmana) about Sunhasepa who was adopted by Visvamitra as a son even after Upanayana. The verses are: 'O King; that son, whose samskaras up to (including) the cūda (tonsure) ceremony are performed with the gotra of his (natural) father, does not (i. e. cannot) attain the status the adopted son of another. When the ceremonies of cūda and upanayana are performed under his own gotra (by the adoptive father) the dattaka and the other kinds become (recognised as) sons (in the adoptive family); otherwise they are called dasa (slave). After the fifth year the adopted son and the rest cannot be (recognised as) sons. Having taken one who is five years old, one (the adopter) should first perform the putresti. These verses state four propositions: (1) If all samskaras from jata-karma to cuda (i. e. including it) have been performed in the family of birth that boy cannot be adopted in another family; (2) if a boy's cuda and other later ceremonies are performed in the family of adoption he is fully an adopted son; (3) a boy over five years of age cannot be adopted at all; (4) a boy whose cuda has been performed in the family of birth may be adopted up to five years, provided the rite called putresti is first performed in the adoptive family before any other ceremony is performed on the adopted boy. The D. M. (Dattaka Mimansa) says that the best time for adoption is up to three years, then from three years to five is the next best (gauna) and that after five no boy can be adopted. The D. C. (Dattaka Chandrika) (p. 36) holds that a boy of the three higher classes can be adopted up to upanayana and that a sudra boy can be adopted till his marriage. The Nirnayasindhu seems to be of the same opinion. The V. Mayukha (Vyavahar Mayukha) and Sam. K. (Samskara Kaustubha) both hold that even a boy not of the same gotra may be taken in adoption after upanayana or after marriage and even when the person to be adopted has himself had a son. In Bengal, Banaras and Bihar the courts hold that the boys must be adopted before upanayana. The same rule holds good in Madras; but there it is further held that if the boy to be adopted is of the same gotra as the adopter, the adoption may be made after upanayana but before marriage. In Bombay a person may be adopted at any age, even after marriage and even after he has had children and he may be even older than the adopter. In the whole of India, a sudra may be adopted only before his marriage, but in the Bombay Presidency the adoption of a married man and of one having even a child is allowed also among sudras."

32. Having regard to the above authoritative statement of the law, it must be held that the view taken by Malvankar, J. is, with respect, inconsistent with the long line of authorities of this Court, which establish the rule which has been continuously and uniformly observed for a long time and has obtained the force of law among Hindus in this part of the country. That rule amounts to a 'custom' and 'usage' within the meaning of the words "custom" and "usage" contained in S. 3 (a) for the purposes of S. 10 (iv) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act.

33. Moreover, the attention of Malvankar, J. was also drawn to a decision in Balabai Tukaram v. Mahadu Krishna, 26 Bom LR 222: (AIR 1924 Bom 349), where Macleod, C. J., and Shah, J., observed as follows:

"It is quite true that the adoption of a boy who is older than the adoptive father is contrary to the recognised notions of Hindus as to adoptions, and to the fundamental idea of an adopted son. That is the reason why such adoptions are very rare. But having regard to the lines on which these rules relating to adoptions have been interpreted by the Courts, it is difficult to hold that the consideration that the adopted boy should not be older than his adoptive father, can be treated as having the force of a prohibitive rule."

Malvankar, J. has interpreted this to mean: "the decision is not based on custom, but the rules of Hindu law as interpreted by the Courts". Here again, with respect, the distinction which Malvankar, J. made is foreign to the definition of the words "custom" and "usage" contained in S. 3 (a) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act.

34. The law as stated by this Court, as early as in 1871, over 100 years ago, in Nathaji Krishnaji v. Hari Jagoji, (1871) 8, Bom HCR 67, which was mainly relied upon by V. S. Desai, J. was the law "obtaining the force of law in Western India." Melvill, J., has no doubt referred to Dattaka Chandrika, Sir Thomas Strange, Mr. Norton and the earlier decisions as well as to Vyavahar-mayukha as discussed by Macnaghten. But he has also stated at page 72:

"And other authorities on this side of India are, so far as they go, of the same tendency. In a case of great importance, Sree Brijbhokunjee Maharaj v. Sree Gookooloot-saojee Maharaj, reported in 1 Borr 181 (ed 1825), the opinion of the Pandits was that "when a relation is to be adopted, no obstacle exists on account of his being of mature age, married, and having a family, provided he possesses common ability, and is beloved by the person who adopts him," and the court upheld the adoption. The opinion of the Shastris in that case was recognised as an authority (though on another point) by this court in Rakhmabai v. Radhabai, (1868) 5 Bom HC AC 181."

In terms, Malvill, J., observed at the end of the discussion:

"Independently of the Hindu law, we think that there is sufficient authority for holding that such adoptions are in the Dakhan recognised by the custom of the country. Mr. Steele (Law and Custom of Hindu Castes in the Dekkan) p. 44, says, speaking of the law: "The Poona Sastrees do not recognise the necessity that adoption should precede Moonj and marriage," though subsequently, speaking of existing customs, he says the adoptee "should be adopted previously to the performance of his Moonj or marriage, at least if not a near relation" xx xx xx xx Upon a review of all the authorities, we think that we are justified in holding that in Western India the adoption of a sagotra or relation is not invalid because the person adopted was married at the time of the adoption."

35. With great respect, when quoting from the judgment of Melvill, J., Malvankar, J., has missed the significance of the above passage, which followed immediately after the passage quoted by him in his judgment, Melvill, J. rested his judgment on custom in addition to the other authorities and texts he has quoted; and yet Malvankar, J. held that the decision was not based on any custom but on the text, rule or interpretation of Hindu Law.

36. It is difficult for us to agree with that view, as it is clear from what Melvill, J. has stated that Melvill, J. was only giving effect to the rule established in Western India as a result of interpretation of texts and having the force of law based on custom and views expressed by various authorities as explained in several cases and recognised in various cases decided by this Court.

37. In Dharma Dagu v. Ramkrishna Chinnaji, (1886) ILR 10 Bom 80, Sargent, C. J., and Birdwood, J. held that the adoption of a married asagotra Brahman to be valid, not only by applying the rule of Hindu Law administered in Western India, but also applying the doctrine of factum valet. The case by case evolution of law was discussed; and once again, it was laid down that having regard to the Hindu Law administered in Western India, the adoption could not be held to be invalid.

38. It must be noted that in that case, strong reliance was placed on a passage in the judgment in Nathaji's case ((1871) 8 Bom HCR 67) and Lakshmappa v. Ramaya (1875) 12 Bom HC Rep 364, where it was said at page 83:

"If marriage," observes Nanabhai Hari-das J., "because incapable of annulment disqualifies a Sudra for adoption, it must equally, on that ground, disqualify a Brahman for that purpose. But we fail to find it mentioned as a disqualifying cause either by Manu, Kulluka Bhatta, Yajnavalkya or Vijnaneshwara, or by any of the other authorities of weight in this Presidency. On the contrary, we find the Dharma Sindhu, the Sanskara Kaustubha, and the Vyavahara Mayukha distinctly recognising the adoption of a married man, the latter even going a step beyond the other two, and laying it down that a married man, who has even had a son born, may become an adopted son; and, accordingly, in the case of Shri Brijbhukunji Maharaj v. Shri Gookoolotsavji Maharaj, (1 Borr 181) the adoption of a married Brahman of the age of forty-five and having a family was considered a good adoption. The argument, therefore, based upon the assumed invalidity of a married Brahman's adoption falls to the ground." The difficulty of interpreting the passage of Mayukha and Nilkantha's quotation from Kalika Purana, was discussed and ultimately after referring to Steel, Mandlik and other books, in that case also, it was observed that the adoption of a married asagotra Brahman was not prohibited by the Hindu law in force in the Presidency of Bombay.

39. Malvankar, J., with respect, has quoted the above passage and has not made any comment with regard to the position, which according to us, is the rule of Hindu law as interpreted and applied for over a century by this Court with respect to the territory of what was formerly known as the Bombay Presidency.

40. Therefore, with respect we are unable to agree with the conclusion, drawn from these cases decided by this Court, by Malvankar, J., that these decisions were based merely on Vyavahar Mayukha and not on custom. In fact, we find that they were based on the rule of Hindu Law, as recognised and enforced in the courts in this part of the country, relying on the absence of any prohibition in Manusmriti, Yadnyavalkya and Vijnaneshwara, as well as the recognition in Vyavahar Mayukha and also as part of the lex loci applicable to all Hindus in the Bombay Presidency, even assuming that the difference between custom, usage and texts were of any relevance for the purpose of the definition of the words "custom" and "usage" in S. 3 (a) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act. However, as already stated above, we are of the view that the definition does not require us to make any such distinction between a rule based on custom or a rule based on any interpretation of Dharmashastra and texts.

41. We must, therefore, hold that the law as stated by Malvankar, J., with respect, is not correct, and the law as stated by V. S. Desai, J., Nain, J. and in the decision in Ramchandra v. Baburao (1976 Mah LJ 125), is the true view of the law on the point, particularly having regard to the provisions of the definition of 'custom' and 'usage' under S. 3 (a) and S. 10 (iv) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act; and the uniform and continuous recognition and enforcement of the law regarding the limits on the age of the boy to be adopted, as part of the lex loci applicable generally to Hindus domiciled in this part of the country.

42. Having regard to the above conclusions, the validity of the adoption of defendant No. 1 cannot be questioned by the plaintiff on the ground that he was more than 15 years of age. The factum of adoption cannot also be questioned by the plaintiff in the plaint, particularly when the learned Assistant Judge has rightly come to the conclusion, having regard to the oral and documentary evidence produced, agreeing with the finding of the trial Court, that the adoption of the defendant No. 1 by Banubai, was proved beyond any shadow of doubt. The concurrent finding of fact cannot be challenged in second appeal, in view of the limits on the powers of this Court under Ss. 100 and 101 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

43. It was next contended that the learned Assistant Judge erred in doubting the genuineness of the Will made by Banubai. This is a matter of appreciation of evidence. The learned Assistant Judge carefully considered the circumstances, which created a strong doubt about the genuineness of the Will and the attestation made by the witnesses. We find ourselves in complete agreement with the reasonings and findings recorded in this behalf.

44. Moreover, the learned Assistant Judge was quite right in his conclusion that the Will, even if proved, must be held to be revoked within the meaning of S. 70 of the Indian Succession Act, in view of Banubai adopting the defendant No. 1, under the registered adoption deed at Ex. 82; and the agreement, which she had entered into with Sitabai, which is at Ex. 81, as the two documents are also attested by more than two persons. The plaintiff cannot, therefore, rely on the Will.

45. It was lastly contended by Mr. Abhyankar, the learned counsel for the appellant, that under S. 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, the deceased Banubai had become the absolute owner of the suit property when she made the Will on October 30, 1961; and the adoption having taken place, on November 24, 1961, after the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, came into force, the adopted son, defendant No. 1, could not divest Banubai of her right in the property, but she continued to be the owner till she died on February 25, 1962. He, therefore, submitted that the Will could still operate as it was not expressly revoked by Banubai, before she died on February 25, 1962, after the adoption.

46. There is no merit in this contention, firstly, as already stated above, the Will became revoked and ineffective after the adoption and the execution of the adoption deed (Ex. 82) and the agreement (Ex. 81); Secondly, the Will could not come into operation till the death of Banubai; and Banubai had divested herself by making a gift or family arrangement or transfer, under the adoption deed and the agreement with Sitabai, declaring that as a result of the adoption, the adopted son shall become the absolute owner of her estate immediately. This, in our opinion, divested the widow and vested all the property in the son, defendant No. 1, before her death.

47. The Will, therefore, became infructuous before she died, because when she died she left no property which could be acquired under that will. Moreover, under the Agreement (Ex. 81), she had even declared that she shall not exercise any right vested in her under the Hindu Succession Act, to the prejudice of the adopted son; and as this undertaking was given in consideration of the adoption to Sitabai, who had given defendant No. 1 in adoption, that agreement was binding on her. The plaintiff, who claims as her heir, is also bound by the declaration; and she cannot claim any right against the defendant No. 1.

48. Even then, it was contended on behalf of the appellant that the plaintiff is the daughter of Banubai and she had half share in the property under the Hindu Succession Act; and the defendant No. 1 had another half share as the adopted son of Banubai. This argument ignores the agreement (Ex. 81) and the declaration made in Ex. 82. The learned Assistant Judge, in our opinion, rightly held that the declaration (Ex. 82) amounted to transfer of Banubai's interest; and it was a gift of all the property vested in Banubai to her adopted son. The deed was signed by the defendant No. 1 when he was aged 22; and there can be no doubt that it would operate as a gift by acceptance of the gift by him. Although, the deed was called an adoption-deed, it fulfils all the requirements of the gift-deed, as the document was registered and attested as required by S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act.

49. In the result, it must be held that the learned Assistant Judge was quite right in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The Second Appeal is, therefore, dismissed. The judgment and the decree passed by the learned Assistant Judge are confirmed. Having regard to the relations between the parties, there shall be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

R. G. Deo, for Appellant; A. M. Dabir, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT:— Plaintiff has filed this appeal against a concurrent decree passed by both the Courts dismissing his suit for a declaration that he is the adopted son of one Deobhan Buwa and that he is entitled to possession of Survey No. 384/C admeasuring 9 acres 20 gunthas situate at village Isad, Taluka Gangakhed, and for perpetual injunction. His case in the plaint was that Deobhan died leaving two widows Yashodabai and Ansabai defendant No. 1. Both these widows adopted him on 10-7-1856 Fasli after performing due ceremonies and an adoption deed was executed which was registered at Shirad-Shahpur. According to the plaintiff, the original registered adoption-deed was in possession of defendant No. 1. He, however, was unable to produce a certified copy thereof as the records at Shirad-Shapur were transferred to the Office of the District Sub-Registrar, Parbhani and the same were burnt. His case was that in view of his adoption he became the owner of the suit property and was in possession thereof until June 20, 1965, when he was dispossessed by the defendants. It is on these allegations that the plaintiff has filed a suit for possession and injunction. The suit was resisted by both the defendants.

The trial Court took the view that the plaintiff's adoption was not proved. After the evidence of both the sides was completed before the trial Court, an application was made on behalf of the plaintiff to produce a certified copy of the Registered adoption-deed, but the same was rejected by the trial Court. As the adoption of the plaintiff was not proved, the suit was dismissed. In an appeal preferred by the plaintiff, the learned Assistant Judge, Parbhani, took the view that the trial Court ought to have permitted the plaintiff to produce the certified copy of the registered adoption-deed. In view of an application also made before the appellate Court, the certified copy was taken on record. The appellate Court, however, took the view that the adoption was invalid as, according to the plaintiff, the adoption was made by both the widows which, under the Hindu Law, is not permissible. As the adoption was held to be invalid, the suit was dismissed and it is against this dismissal of the suit by both the Courts that the present appeal is filed by the plaintiff.

2. Mr. Deo on behalf of the plaintiff submitted that the appellate Court was in error in taking the view that the plaintiff was adopted by both the widows Yashodabai and Ansabai, defendant No. 1. He urged that the adoption was done by Yeshodabai, the entire ceremonies were performed by her and that was done with the consent of Ansabai. He, therefore, submitted that the appellate Court was in error in taking the view that the adoption was made by both the widows and was, therefore, invalid in law. He submitted that in the certified copy of the registered adoption-deed that was produced by the plaintiff it is clearly mentioned that the adoption was made by Yeshodabai and not by both the widows.

3. Question whether the adoption was by Yeshodabai, one of the widows, or by both will depend upon the facts of this case. In the present case it is quite clear that the plaintiff was hardly 4 or 5 years old when his adoption took place. To support the case of adoption, plaintiff has led oral testimony of three witnesses, Venkatrao, Sambhaji and Sukhalabuwa. Each one of the three witnesses has stated in the beginning of the deposition that both Yeshodabai and Ansabai, defendant No. 1, adopted the plaintiff. If that was so, it is not possible for this Court to re-appreciate the evidence with a view to see what the view ought to be taken. The appellate Court has come to a conclusion that having regard to the evidence of witnesses adduced on behalf of the plaintiff, plaintiff was taken in adoption by both the widows Yeshodabai and Ansabai defendant No. 1. Hindu Law does not permit an adoption by even two co-widows together, what is the effect or validity of the adoption when such adoption is made by two co-widows has been considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Narasimha v. Parthasarathy, (1914) ILR 37 Mad 199 (PC). At page 220 it is observed:—

“..... In the next place only one wife can receive the child in adoption so as to step into the position of being its adoptive mother. This is evident from the cases which establish that the receiving mother acquires in the eye of the law the same position as a natural mother to such an extent that her parents become legally the maternal grandparents of the child. To hold that a child could bear such a relationship to more than one mother would be entirely contrary to settled law and would produce inextricable confusion in the law of inheritance.”

These observations of their Lordships have been followed by the Nagpur High Court the case of Yamuna Bai v. Jamuna Bai, AIR 1929 Nag 211. It is held that whether the adoption is made during the lifetime of the husband or after the death, only one wife can receive a child in adoption so as to step into the position of being its adoptive mother. It is clear from these decisions that Hindu law does not contemplate adoption by two co-widows. In this view of the matter, having regard to the oral evidence led by the plaintiff, the appellate Court was right in taking the view that the adoption was invalid in law. If that was so, then the suit was liable to be dismissed.

4. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed. As the plaintiff was adopted at the time when he was a mere child, the fair order as to costs would be that each party will bear its own costs of the case.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 20, 9 — Suit on contract — Place of suing — Words ‘subject to Kolhapur jurisdiction’ on forwarding note — Implication of.

Plaintiff placed an order for sarees with a dealer at Belgaum. The dealer entrusted the sarees ordered by the plaintiff to the defendant transport company at their Belgaum office under a ‘Goods Forwarding Note’. The defendant company had its registered office at Kolhapur and carried on the business at Kolhapur also. The words “Subject to Kolhapur Jurisdiction” were prominently printed in Italics at the top of the Note. The contents of the note were in English and the consignor knowing full well the contents signed in English. This consignment ought to have reached within 3 or 4 days at Pimpri (within the jurisdiction of the Court at Poona) but was not so received. The plaintiff, therefore, filed a suit at Poona for immediate delivery or to pay the price of sarees, together with interest. The defendant objected to the jurisdiction of Court at Poona because of the ‘subject to Kolhapur Jurisdiction’ clause in the note. The trial court accepting the contention of the plaintiff held that the forwarding note did not amount to a contract between the parties and since the consignment was delivered at Belgaum and was to be handed over to the consignee at Pimpri no part of the cause of action having taken place at Kolhapur the Court at Kolhapur had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

Held in the present case since the defendant-company had its registered office at Kolhapur and it also carried on business at Kolhapur in addition to some other places in India, a suit against the defendant company could be instituted in a Court at Kolhapur. The argument that the Kolhapur Court had no inherent jurisdiction and therefore merely by incorporating such words as “Subject to Kolhapur Jurisdiction” in the Goods Forwarding Note the jurisdiction to entertain a suit could not be conferred on Kolhapur Court was therefore untenable. (Para 16)

A person who signs a document which contains contractual terms is normally bound by them even though he has not read them and even though he is ignorant of their precise legal effect. It is only when the document is not signed but is merely delivered to him that the question would arise whether the terms of the contract were adequately brought to his notice. the plaintiff by requiring him to institute the suit in a court in which according to the contract it was agreed to be instituted. AIR 1967 Cal 24 and (1970) 1 Mad LJ 548 and AIR 1960 Cal 45, Disting. (Para 27)

C. R. Dalvi, for Applicant; C. G. Gavnekar for M. V. Sali, for Opponent.

Tuesday, 16th November, 1976

APTE, J.:— The petitioners who were original defendants in the Court below are a public limited company doing business of transport by road and having their Head Office at Kolhapur. They have also sub-offices at different places to accept goods from the clients and to carry them to their destinations and deliver them to the consignees.

2. One of their offices is at Belgaum and also one at Pimpri within the limits of the Municipal Corporation of Poona.

3. The respondent is a shop styled as M/s. Madhusudan Ramkumar of which Shamsunder Lalchand Mundada is the proprietor. It is doing business of dealing in cloth at Poona.

4. It appears that the respondent-plaintiff placed an order for some handloom sarees with one Harinarayan Govindlal Zanvar of Shahapur, which is a suburb of Belgaum. Harinarayan Zanvar on receiving this order, entrusted a bundle containing sarees ordered by the plaintiff to the defendants at their Belgaum office under what is called 'Goods Forwarding Note' at Exh. 72. At the top of this note it was written in Italics in brackets "Subject to Kolhapur Jurisdiction." This Note is in the form of a request by the consignor to the defendants to accept these goods for transport and deliver them at Pimpri. There is a tabular form in this Note, the first column of which is meant to mention the name and full postal address of the sender; the second column is meant to mention the name and full postal address of consignee (if addressed to self the word 'self' is required to be written). Then the third column is meant for description of articles or packages and then the columns that follow are meant for mentioning the number of articles and the value thereof.

5. Now, in Exh. 72 in the first column the name of the sender shown is H. G. Zanwar of Shahapur-Belgaum and in the second column the name of Madhusudan Ramkumar, has been mentioned as the consignee and the place has been mentioned as Pimpri. The description of the articles is given as 'H. L. Sarees' i. e. Handloom sarees, one gunny case. The value of the articles is shown as Rs. 1576.00. Below this tabular form there is an endorsement as follows:

"I/We do hereby certify that I/We have satisfied myself/ourselves, the description, marks or weight or quality of goods consigned by me/us have been correctly entered in the forwarding note and the "consignment is booked with a full knowledge of conditions recorded on the reverse which conditions I/We accept."

This endorsement has been signed by the consignor. The consignment was booked on May 13, 1970 from Belgaum.

6. The plaintiff's case was that this consignment of sarees which were purchased by him from the consignor ought to have been received by him within 3 or 4 days at the most at Pimpri but they were not received. He made repeated enquiries at the office of the defendants at Pimpri but he did not get any satisfactory reply and therefore ultimately he concluded that the consignment had been lost by the defendants. He, therefore, served a notice dated July 8, 1970 through his Advocate on the defendants calling upon the defendants to deliver the consignment immediately or in the alternative to pay the price of Rs. 1576/- thereof together with interest at 10 per cent per annum.

7. No reply was received from the defendants to this notice and, therefore, the suit in which this civil revision application arises was instituted by the plaintiff on September 9, 1970 in the Court of Small Causes at Poona claiming to recover Rs. 1880/- from the defendants which included Rs. 1576/- as the price of the articles, Rs. 157/- on account of loss of profit which the plaintiff would have earned by sale of these articles, Rs. 30/- as interest in lieu of damages from 15-7-1970 till the date of suit, and Rs. 17/- being the expenses incurred for giving notice.

8. The claim was resisted by the defendants contending inter alia that the consignment having been accepted by the defendants for transport from the consignor subject to Kolhapur jurisdiction, the Court at Poona had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It was also contended that the plaintiff had no right to sue since he was merely a consignee and that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as under the terms of the contract, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to serve a notice on the defendants within 30 days from the date of booking.

9. The trial Court held that although the Goods Forwarding Note, Exh. 72, mentioned at the top "Subject to Kolhapur jurisdiction", that document did not amount to a contract between the parties. In this respect he relied on Amritsar Transport Co. Ltd. v. S. Sohanlal, AIR 1957 J. and K. 7, and he held that since the consignment in this case was delivered to the defendants at Belgaum and it was to be handed over to the consignee at Pimpri within the jurisdiction of the Poona Court, no part of the cause of action having taken place at Kolhapur the Court at Kolhapur had no jurisdiction to try the suit but the Court at Poona had jurisdiction to try the suit. On the question as to whether the plaintiff had a right to sue, the trial Court found that plaintiff having paid price of the goods had become owner of the goods and had therefore a right to sue. In fact, the observation of the learned Judge that the plaintiff had paid the price is contrary to what the plaintiff himself has stated in his evidence. The plaintiff has stated that he had not paid the price. But that, however, is not very material for our purpose. As regards the contention of the defendants that in the absence of notice within 30 days from the date of booking the suit was not maintainable, the view taken by the learned Judge is that the term printed on the reverse of the Goods Forwarding Note, Exh. 72, could not be said to be a part of the contract between the parties and, therefore, it was not a valid term.

10. As a consequence of these findings, the learned Judge decreed plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 1750/- with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum on the principal amount of Rs. 1576/- from the date of suit till payment. The defendants have now come in revision.

11. When this revision application came up for final hearing before My Lord the Chief Justice on April 29, 1976, as the question of jurisdiction which was rather important was involved, the matter was referred to a Division Bench. That is how this revision application has come to be placed before this Division Bench for final hearing.

12. On behalf of the petitioners it was contended that in view of the specific mention in the Goods Forwarding Note, Exh. 72, that the contract of consignment was subject to Kolhapur jurisdiction, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to bring the suit in the competent Court at Kolhapur and that therefore the Small Cause Court at Poona had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit.

13. Now, in the present case there can be no doubt that since the consignment was handed over to the defendants by the consignor at Belgaum, part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Court at Belgaum and as the consignment was to be delivered to the consignee at Pimpri within the jurisdiction of the Civil Court at Poona, part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Poona Court. Under Section 20 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, therefore, this suit could ordinarily have been instituted either at Belgaum or at Poona. Now, it is well settled that where more than one Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit, by agreement the parties can restrict the forum to a particular Court, or in other words the parties can agree that in case of dispute the suit may be filed in one of the Courts which are competent to entertain the suit.

14. On behalf of the respondent-plaintiff, however, it is contended that in the present case no part of the cause of action having arisen within the jurisdiction of the Court at Kolhapur, the Kolhapur Court had no jurisdiction. It was submitted that by agreement the parties cannot confer jurisdiction on a Court which has no inherent jurisdiction to entertain a suit. There can be no dispute or quarrel about this proposition.

15. However, in the present case, as can be seen from the Roadway Bill in respect of this consignment which has been produced at Exh. 68, the defendant-company had its registered office at Kolhapur and they also carry on their business at Kolhapur. Under S. 20 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure, therefore, a suit can also be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant, or each of the defendants where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business or personally works for again, Explanation II to this section says that a corporation shall be deemed to carry on business at its sole or principal office in India, or, in respect of any cause of action arising at any place where it has also a subordinate office at such place. The word "corporation" used in this Explanation includes not only statutory corporation but it also covers a company registered under the Companies Act, as has been explained in Hakam Singh v. Gammon (India) Ltd. AIR 1971 SC 740.

16. It is, therefore, obvious that in the present case since the petitioners-defendants-company have its registered office at Kolhapur and it also carries on business at Kolhapur in addition to some other places in India, a suit against the defendant-company could be instituted in a Court at Kolhapur. The argument that the Kolhapur Court had no inherent jurisdiction and therefore merely by incorporating such words as "Subject to Kolhapur Jurisdiction" in the Goods Forwarding Note the jurisdiction to entertain a suit could not be conferred on Kolhapur Court is therefore untenable.

17. On behalf of the respondent it was argued that such a printed term can never be binding on the person to whom such a forwarding Note is issued unless the party to whom the document is handed over indicates either by word or deed that he has accepted the term. This argument also, in our view, cannot be accepted. As has already been stated above, the words "Subject to Kolhapur Jurisdiction" have been prominently printed at the top of the front side of the Goods Forwarding Note, Exh. 72, and this Note is in the nature of a letter by the consignor to the defendants to transport the consignment from Belgaum to Pimpri for delivery to Madhusudan Ramkumar and the same has been signed in English by the consignor Mr. Zanwar. It can, therefore, be safely presumed that before the consignor affixed his signature to this document, he had gone through the contents of this Forwarding Note from the beginning to end and had after knowing them full well he lent his signature thereto. There is no reason to assume otherwise.

18. A person who signs a document which contains contractual terms is normally bound by them even though he has not read them and even though he is ignorant of their precise legal effect. It is only when the document is not signed but is merely delivered to him that the question would arise whether the terms of the contract were adequately brought to his notice. In this case, at the cost of repetition it may be mentioned that the consignor has affixed his signature in English below this Forwarding Note. The contents of the Forwarding Note are in English and the consignor has also signed in English. It cannot therefore even be argued for a moment that the consignor could not have understood what was printed above his signature in this Forwarding Note.

19. In this connection reference may usefully be made to L'Estrange v. F. Graucob Ltd. (1934) 2 KB 394. In that case the buyer of an automatic slot machine signed and handed to the sellers an order form containing in ordinary print and writing the essential terms of the contract, and in small print certain special terms one of which was "any express or implied condition, statement or warranty, statutory or otherwise not stated herein is hereby excluded." The sellers thereupon signed and handed to the buyer a printed order of confirmation assenting to the terms in the order form. The machine was delivered by the sellers to the buyer, who paid to the sellers an instalment of the price. The machine did not work satisfactorily, and the buyer brought an action against the sellers in the County Court claiming (inter alia) damages for breach of an implied warranty that the machine was fit for the purpose for which it was sold. The sellers pleaded (inter alia) that the contract expressly provided for the exclusion of all implied warranties. The buyer replied that the time when she signed the order form she had not read it and knew nothing of its contents and that the clause excluding warranties could not easily be read owing to the smallness of the print. There was no evidence of any misrepresentation by the sellers to the buyer as to the terms of the contract.

20. On these facts it was held that as the buyer had signed the written contract and had not been induced to do so by any misrepresentation, she was bound by the terms of the contract, and it was wholly immaterial that she had not read it and did not know its contents. Consequently the action failed and the sellers were held entitled to judgment.

21. Mr. Gavnekar for the respondent-plaintiff submitted that even in the presence of such a term in the contract, a party can institute a suit in a different Court having jurisdiction. In support of this argument he first relied on C. Satyanarayana v. L. Narasimham, AIR 1968 AP 330. That was a case arising out of a suit filed by the plaintiff for recovery of certain amount from the defendants who were partners of a firm C. Satyanarayana and K. Kotilingam Setty and Company. The plaintiff's case was that defendant No. 3 who was one of the partners of the firm had borrowed an amount of Rs. 500/- on February 25, 1953 from the plaintiff at Janardanapuram of Kandukor Taluka, in Andhra Pradesh.

22. All the defendants, except defendant No. 3, denied any liability. Defendant No. 3 who was alleged to have borrowed the money also denied to have borrowed any money but he in the alternative, inter alia, contended that the transaction had not taken place at Janardanapuram but had taken place in the City of Madras and hence the Court of District Munsiff of Kanigiri within whose jurisdiction Janaradanapuram was situate had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. In this respect reliance was placed by the 3rd defendant on a letter written by him on which the words "subject to Madras Jurisdiction" were printed, and it was on the strength of this letter that it was contended that the Madras Court alone would have jurisdiction to try suit. A single Judge of the Andhra Pradesh High Court held that merely because the defendants had written a letter on the top of which "Subject to Madras Jurisdiction" was printed, it could not become part of the contract unless it was agreed to by the plaintiff.

23. It is difficult to see how this ruling would be of any assistance to the plaintiff in this case. Simply because the defendant on his side wrote on the letter written by him the words "Subject to Madras Jurisdiction", the plaintiff to whom the letter was addressed could not be held to be bound by what was written on the letter by defendant No. 3, unless of course the plaintiff had agreed to this term. It is obvious from the report that the plaintiff had never agreed to this term unlike in the present case where the consignor has himself signed the Forwarding Note, Exh. 72, which at the top contains the words "Subject to Kolhapur Jurisdiction".

24. Similarly our attention was also invited to three other rulings B. R. H. and M. (India) Ltd. v. S. E. A. Co. Ltd, AIR 1967 Cal 24, M/s. B. S. S. Line v. M. and M. Trading Corporation, (1970) 1 Mad LJ 548 and Lakshminarain v. N. V. Vereenigde, AIR 1960 Cal 45.

25. No doubt, in all these cases the document of contract contained a clause similar to the one in this case. However, the suits were instituted in the Court other than the one mentioned in the contract. But all these cases relate to contracts with foreign firms and the forum provided in the contract was in the foreign country whereas part of the cause of action had admittedly arisen within the jurisdiction of the Courts in India in which these suits were filed. However, relying on the clause in the contract, on behalf of the defendants a contention similar to the one raised in the present case was raised. Even so, it was held that the suits were maintainable in spite of this specific provision in the contract restricting the forum to a particular Court in foreign country. A perusal of the reports of all these cases shows that having regard to the fact that the forum mentioned in the contract was in a foreign country, the balance of convenience was taken into account. No doubt, the parties who make the choice of tribunal normally are bound by the contract and that should especially be the case as to the choice of the law applicable to the contract. However, enforcement by the Indian Courts of the choice of a foreign tribunal could not be ruled as imperative but it was observed in the case reported in (1970) 1 Mad LJ 548 that it should depend on the balance of convenience in particular circumstances and the exigencies of justice. The following passage from Cheshire in his Private International Law was in this connection quoted:

"As distinct from the express or implied choice of the proper law, the express choice of a foreign tribunal is not absolutely binding. In accordance with the excellent principle that a contractual undertaking should be honoured, there is indeed, a prima facie rule that an action brought in England in defiance of an agreement to submit to arbitration abroad will be stayed. The Cap Blanco (1913) P. 130, Austrian Lloyd Steamship Co. v. Gresham Life Assurance Society Ltd., LR (1903) 1 KB 249, but nevertheless the Court has a discretion in the matter and where the parties are amenable to the jurisdiction, as for example, where the defendant is present in England, it will allow the English action to continue if it considers that the ends of justice will be better served by a trial in this country (The Athene (1922) 11 LLL Rep 6. The Fehmarn (1958) 1 WLR 159).

26. Now, in all these three cases the substantial part of the cause of action had arisen in this country and also major part of the evidence was available in this country and, therefore, on the ground of convenience it appears to have been held that in spite of the contract to the contrary, the actions were maintainable in the Courts in this country.

27. It was argued on behalf of the respondent that similar considerations also arise in this case. It was submitted that the consignment was to be delivered by the defendant's office at Pimpri within the jurisdiction of Poona Court and, therefore, the person in charge of the office at Pimpri would be the person who would be able to state whether the consignment was received and if so when and what happened to the consignment and why it could not be delivered to the consignee. In our view, however, since the Court or the forum which the parties had chosen by their contract in this case was not so inconvenient as to cause any injustice to the parties, this argument should not prevail. It is also not possible to hold that any great hardship would be caused to the plaintiff by requiring him to institute the suit in which according to the contract it was agreed to be instituted.

23. It was also attempted to be argued for the respondent that even if by the terms of the contract the parties agree to choose a particular forum, it does not mean that other Courts otherwise competent to entertain the suit cannot entertain and try it or in other words the jurisdiction of such Courts is thereby ousted. Mr. Gavnekar in this connection invited our attention to M/s. Patel Bros. v. M/s. Vadilal, AIR 1959 Mad 227.

29. In that case the plaintiff which was a firm carrying on business at Madras had entered into a contract at Bombay for the purchase of one bale of cotton cloth with the defendants, a limited liability company carrying on business at Bombay. According to the plaintiff, the delivery was to be made at Madras. The defendants contested the claim and one of the objections taken was that the Madras Court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit. A bill, Ex. P. 1, issued by the defendants to the plaintiff was in this connection relied upon. This bill evidenced the contract between the parties and at the top of it the words "Subject to Bombay jurisdiction" similar to the words in the present case were mentioned and underlined. There was nothing to indicate in the contract itself that the delivery was to be made at Bombay and that the document stated that the goods were to be despatched to Madras and specific mention was also made to "No. 7, Godown Street, Madras", which was presumably the place where the goods were to be consigned. There was no evidence as to how the price was to be realised by the plaintiff nor was there any evidence to show as to when the property in the goods were intended to pass to the buyer. The averments in the plaint seemed to suggest that the delivery was intended to be made at Madras. It was held that the mere printing of the words "subject to Bombay jurisdiction" in Ex. P. 1 could not amount to a contract that both the parties agreed to have Bombay as the venue for the settlement of disputes. The mere recital on the top of the bill could not be incorporated as a term of the contract. It was further held that ouster of jurisdiction of a court to which a person is entitled to resort to under the Civil Procedure Code or any other statute cannot be a matter of assumption or presumption but one to be proved by express words contained in the contract or at least by necessary or inevitable implication. On the facts of that case it was held that this test was not satisfied in that case.

30. In the case in hand, however, as we have already discussed above, the words "Subject to Kolhapur Jurisdiction" were prominently printed in Italics at the top of the Forwarding Note. The contents of the entire Forwarding Note are in English and the consignor also signed in English. The consignor, therefore, very well knew or can be presumed to have known what were the contents of this Forwarding Note to which he subscribed his signature. There would, therefore, be an inevitable implication that the consignor knew full well when he signed this Forwarding Note that this contract was subject to the jurisdiction of the Court at Kolhapur and knowing this full well he entered into this contract. In our view, therefore, having regard to the terms of the contract, the parties by their agreement had agreed that any dispute arising out of this contract would be decided by the Court at Kolhapur.

Wednesday 17th November 1976.

31. In this view of the matter it is obvious that the Small Cause Court at Poona had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and, therefore, it ought to have returned the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court.

32. Lastly Mr. Gavnekar for the respondent-plaintiff submitted that this being an action in tort and not on contract, the term of the contract contained in the Goods Forwarding Note, Exh. 72, would not be applicable to the present suit or would not govern this suit. This argument, however, is without any foundation. A bare reading of the plaint would show that the suit has not been based on any tortious act alleged to have been committed by the defendants. The allegations made in the plaint disclose that the claim has been based entirely on the contract to transport the goods from Belgaum to Pimpri and to deliver them to the plaintiff pursuant to the contract contained in the Goods Forwarding Note, Exh. 72. There is not even a remotest suggestion from which any case based on tort could be spelt out. No negligence or conversion of goods has been alleged by the plaintiff against the defendants. It is also not shown that the defendants owed any duty to the plaintiff and the former failed to discharge that duty or did not act with due care and caution in the discharge of that duty. In these circumstances it is not possible to accept the argument that the suit as framed should be treated as one based on tort and should be held to be within the jurisdiction of the Poona Court.

33. In the view which we have taken on the question of jurisdiction, it is not necessary for us to decide the other questions raised on this revision petition, namely, as to whether the plaintiff had a right to sue and whether in the absence of any notice as stipulated in clause 19 printed on the reverse of Exh. 72 the suit would be maintainable.

34. In the result, we make the rule absolute, set aside the decree passed by the Court of Small Causes at Poona and direct that the trial Court on receipt of the record should return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court at Kolhapur. We make no order as to costs throughout.

Order accordingly.

M/s. Bhurmal Kapurchand and Co., Judgment Creditors v. M/s. Premier Machine Tools Co., Judgment-Debtors.

Insolvency Notice No. N/174 of 1976, D/- 30-9-1976.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (1909), Ss. 9 (i) and 9-A (Bombay) — Issuance of insolvency notice — Decree more than two years old — Insolvency Registrar before issuing notice can insist on order of competent court under O. 21, R. 23 C. P. C. (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, Rr. 22, 23). Daljit Krishna v. Nihalchand Jethaji decided by Mukhi, J. on 19-7-1973 (Bom), Dissented from.

There is sufficient authority in law to uphold the practice of the Insolvency Registrar to insist upon order of the competent court under Order 21, Rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in cases where decrees come under the coverage of O. 21, R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. (Para 21)

From the provisions of Ss. 9 (i) and 9-A of the Act it follows that a judgment-debt to sustain an insolvency notice must arise out of an enforceable decree and not out of decree which otherwise is unenforceable. A decree which is more than two years old, is by its own force (proprio vigore) unexecutable. The judgment-debt arising out of such a decree is equally unenforceable unless leave as required by O. 21, R. 22 is first obtained in that behalf. Daljit Krishna v. Nihalchand Jethaji decided by Mukhi J. on 19-7-1973 (Bom), Dissented from. (Para 6)

The issuance of insolvency notice is an equitable mode of execution of a decree or order. In absence of a leave under O. 21,

Rr. 22 and 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not open to the judgment-creditors to execute the decree which is more than two years old. The judgment-creditors are not also entitled to resort to any equitable mode of execution thereof. This is further buttressed by the principle that if it is not permissible for the judgment-creditors to execute the decree under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure directly, court in exercise of its discretion cannot allow the judgment-creditors to execute the said decree indirectly by circuitous method of insolvency proceedings. Case law discussed. (Paras 13, 16)

U. J. Makhija, for Judgment-Creditors.

ORDER:— In this matter which has come up for directions before me, the judgment-creditors put in issue the practice adopted by the Insolvency Registrar with regard to issuance of insolvency notice founded on a decree which is more than two years old. The Insolvency Registrar insisted that before an insolvency notice could be issued, in respect of a judgment-debt under a decree which was more than two years old and thus required compliance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure proceeding in that behalf must be adopted and the said notice made absolute by the competent court. This practice has been prevalent in this court for last several years. This practice is assailed on the ground that it is contrary to the provisions of law or is otherwise unreasonable.

2. On 1st August 1974 a decree was passed in favour of the judgment-creditors by the City Civil Court, Bombay, in Summary Suit No. 3778 of 1974 against M/s. Premier Machine Tools Co., the judgment-debtors. On 26th April 1976 the judgment-creditors made an application to the Insolvency Registrar for issuing an insolvency notice contemplated by S. 9-A of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). The said application was processed by the office of the Insolvency Registrar. The draft of the notice which was submitted by the attorneys of the judgment-creditors was approved by the office of the Insolvency Registrar and sent back to the attorneys. The said insolvency notice was then duly engrossed and submitted again to the office of the Insolvency Registrar for being sealed. The time which was taken in this process rendered the decree passed on 1st August 1974 more than 2 years old and thus required leave of the court for execution under O. 21 R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the said query being raised or the requisition being made in that behalf by the office of the Insolvency Registrar, the attorneys for the judgment-creditors by their precipe dated 16th August 1976 raised objections that the said query or the requisition was unjustified. By the said precipe the attorneys required the Insolvency Registrar to place the matter before me for directions. The said precipe along with a comprehensive and a well-considered note prepared by the Insolvency Registrar, was submitted to me. I directed that the matter be placed on Board for determination of the issues involved therein.

3. In the precipe of the attorneys of the judgment-creditors it is contended that the Insolvency proceedings are not execution proceedings; that the only requirements which have to be fulfilled before an insolvency notice could be issued are those postulated by the relevant provisions of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (hereinafter referred as "the Act") and the rules of this court relating thereto, viz., debt not being barred and the execution of the decree not being stayed; that the purpose of O. 21, R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure was merely to prevent a surprise being sprung upon a judgment-debtor and further the judgment-debtor has an opportunity to show cause against an insolvency notice and to have it set aside on the ground available to him under the provisions of the said Act and the said Rules. In light of these assertions the contention of the judgment-creditors in the said precipe is that the practice adopted by the Insolvency Registrar is not only without sanction of law but is contrary thereto.

4. Shri Makhija appears for the judgment-creditors. The Insolvency Registrar though present in court, is not represented by any counsel. I must observe that the matter being ex parte as if it were, the learned counsel in the best traditions of the bar approached the problem in a very fair and reasonable manner and rendered even handed assistance to this court. According to the learned counsel there are several reasons, for holding that the position adopted by the Insolvency Registrar or the long standing practice of this court adverted to by him is plainly erroneous and requires judicial interdict.

5. The submission of the learned counsel is twofold. The first submission is that upon a true construction of the provisions of S. 9 (i) and S. 9-A of the Act, the only fetters with regard to acts of insolvency based upon an insolvency notice are, (i) 'execution of a decree not having been stayed' (ii) 'the debtor having a counter-claim which equals or is in excess of the judgment-debt' and (iii) the quantum of the debt being disputed. These fetters which are explicit on the language of the said provisions, according to the learned counsel, also constitute restrictions in the matter of issuance of insolvency notice. These restrictions or fetters do not take within their sweep absence of leave under O. 21 R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned counsel argues that the absence of leave under O. 21 R. 22 is no impediment in the way of a judgment-creditor to have an insolvency notice issued for enforcement of his right arising from the 2 years old decree. The other submission is that the issuance of insolvency notice is not an execution of a decree because an insolvency proceeding founded on a decree is not a mode of execution postulated by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code merely deal with the specific modes of execution enumerated in Order 21 R. 11 sub-sec. (2). Thus, absence of leave under O. 21 R. 22 does not impinge upon or otherwise control the provisions of the Act and rules relevant to the insolvency notices issued under provisions thereof or the proceedings subsequent thereto.

6. The first question turns on the interpretation of the provisions of S. 9 (i) read with S. 9-A of the Act. The said provisions are well known and need not be reproduced here. Suffice it to notice that S. 9 (i) by its material provision inter alia provides that if a creditor has served an insolvency notice upon a debtor in respect of a decree or an order for the payment of any amount due to such creditor, execution of which is not stayed and default is made by the judgment-debtor in complying therewith, such a default constitutes an act of insolvency. Sub-s. (i) of section 9 read with the proviso thereto contemplates two limitations: (a) decree the operation whereof is stayed cannot sustain an insolvency notice and (b) a debtor is immunised from non-compliance if the debtor 'has a counter-claim or set off which equals or exceeds the decretal amount' and which counter-claim or set off the debtor 'could not lawfully set up in the suit or proceedings in which a decree or order was made against him.' Section 9-A envisages a third limitation. It inter alia provides by sub-s. (2) thereof that an insolvency notice can be invalidated on ground that the debtor had given a notice to the creditor within the period prescribed by the insolvency notice to the effect that he disputed the validity of the notice on the ground of misstatement as to the actual amount due. There is no doubt that the aforesaid are the only fetters postulated by the Act in regard to act of insolvency or to the process leading to a finding that a debtor has committed an act of insolvency so as to give jurisdiction to the court to make an order upon the basis thereof. These limitations or fetters in my opinion, however do not detract from the two basic concepts that are to be found in the provisions of S. 9 (i) of the Act. The said concepts are 'a creditor', and 'the decree or an order'. The term "creditor" is defined by S. 2 (a) of the Act as including a decree-holder. Conceptually, a decree-holder is a person who not only has a decree in his favour but is in a position to enforce such a decree. A decree-holder must of necessity be a person who is able to enforce a decree or an order. Absence of any such right in the decree-holder merely gives him a husk without a kernel. Law abhors such empty rights. There cannot be a decree without its enforceability. If there is a valid decree it must have the attribute of enforceability. It therefore follows that a judgment debt to sustain an insolvency notice must arise out of an enforceable decree and not out of decree which otherwise is unenforceable. A decree which is more than two years old, is by its own force (proprio vigore) unexecutable. The judgment-debt arising out of such a decree is equally unenforceable unless leave as required by Order 21 R. 22 is first obtained in that behalf.

7. It may also be seen that S. 9 (i) of the Act is modelled on the provisions of S. 1 sub-sec. (1) clause (g) of the English Bankruptcy Act, 1914, Sub-sec. (i) of S. 9 of the Act corresponds to proviso (i) to the said section of the English Act. The said section has been interpreted by the English courts as designating "any person who is for the time being entitled to enforce a final judgment or final order". (see Williams on Bankruptcy, 18th Edn. p. 36). There is no reason why S. 9 (i) of the Act should also not receive the same construction. Similar result follows from the interpretation of the other concept, viz., execution not having been stayed. By a catena of cases in England it is fairly established that the execution of a decree or order would be deemed to be stayed if the judgment-creditor is not in a position to or is not entitled to sue immediate execution. All the English cases need not be cited; it is enough to notice the rule laid down by the Court of Appeal in re A debtor Ex Parte the Debtor: (1908) 1 KB 344. It was a case where the judgment-creditor a Solicitor, brought an action against the debtor for the bill of costs in which a compromise judgment was signed by the court. The judgment-debtor paid some amount in part satisfaction of the judgment-debt and for the balance a bankruptcy notice was served. Subsequent thereto the debtor accepted the bill at one month for the amount of the balance of the debt as also the costs of the bankruptcy notice drawn by the creditor. Acceptance of the bill was consequent upon a letter written by the judgment-creditor to the judgment-debtor. The said letter provided for extension of time for the judgment-debtor to pay the amount owing by him. The bill was endorsed by the Solicitor in favour of his Bank. The bill was on presentment dishonoured. A further bankruptcy notice followed and was served upon judgment-debtor. On these facts it was argued on behalf of the judgment-debtor that having regard to the facts that the bill was outstanding and in the hands of the bank and that the bill operated as an agreement, the judgment-creditor was not entitled to any remedy upon the judgment. In this framework of facts Cozens Hardy M. R. inter alia held at page 349 as follows:—

"It cannot possibly be right that the creditor should be allowed to present a bankruptcy notice, and found upon it a petition in bankruptcy, when he has by taking this bill, agreed that he will not enforce his rights, and agreed that he will suspend his remedies not only during the currency of the bill, but afterwards while the bill is in the hands of a third party".

8. Fletcher Moulton P. J., in his concurring judgment was more explicit. At the same page the learned Judge observed as follows:—

"The extremely able argument of Mr. Hogg raised all the points that could be raised on behalf of the respondent in this case and did so in a way which has much assisted me in common with the other members of the Court. He relies on the bare language of S. 4, sub-s. (1) (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, and says that this bankruptcy notice was good because the creditor had obtained final judgment, and execution had not been stayed upon it. There might have been a question as to whether those words are to be taken in their strictest literal sense i. e. whether they refer solely to a formal stay by order made in chambers or in court suspending the right to enforce execution. But Mr. Hogg very properly felt that he could not press it so far as that. He admitted that by taking the bill in the present case his client had suspended during the currency of the bill the right to issue execution, and that this operated to prevent his serving a bankruptcy notice by reason of its bringing him within the words "execution having been stayed", although no formal stay had been ordered by chambers. In other words, where there are circumstances under which the court would, if applied to, prevent the issue of execution, those circumstances may bring the case within the interpretation which the court has put upon the words "execution having been stayed".

9. The learned Judge did not rest his decision on the admissions made by the learned counsel. He in terms held that the judgment-creditors must show that they 'were in a position to receive at the date when' they "served the bankruptcy notice" (p. 351). The test not being satisfied, the claim of judgment-creditor was negatived. Halsbury's Laws of England, Fourth Edn. Vol. 3, in paragraph 262 sums up the position as follows:—

"Generally speaking, a stay of execution prevents the issue of a bankruptcy notice. For this purpose execution is considered to be stayed if, at the date of the notice, the judgment creditor is not entitled to issue immediate execution on the judgment".

10. It may be observed that the aforesaid exposition of law by Halsbury is based on the ratio of the decision In re a Debtor, Ex Parte the Debtor (1908) 1 KB 344 (supra).

11. On legal parameters noticed above can it be predicated for the judgment-creditor before me that they have a right to immediate execution of the decree dated 1st August 1974. Upon the plain language of Order 21, R. 22, the question, must be answered against the judgment-creditors. The said rule enjoins upon a court to issue a notice where an application for execution is made in respect of a decree which is more than 2 years old (period of 2 years in so far as Bombay is concerned). It is only when the court has issued such a notice and has heard the objection of the judgment-debtor and has made a finding, express or implied, that no cause had been shown for an execution of a decree that the court can pass an order directing the execution of the decree. In absence of such leave it is not controverted before me that no execution of a decree or order under Order 21 R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure is permissible to a judgment-creditor.

12. The second submission of the learned counsel is ingenious and attractive. There seems to be justification in the contention that an insolvency proceeding is not an execution proceeding for the purpose of and within the meaning of relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Equally justified is the submission that modes of execution under the Code of Civil Procedure are those that are to be found in Cl. (j) of sub-rule (2) of R. 11 of Order 21. They do not take within their sweep the so-called mode of execution by insolvency proceedings. This, however, is not the whole truth. It is a well-settled principle of law that insolvency ultimately is an equitable mode of enforcement of a creditor's right. I need not however, express any opinion on this larger question. For the purpose of the present proceedings it is enough to investigate as to whether an insolvency proceeding based upon the enforcement of a judgment-debt is or is not a form of execution. In my opinion, there is intrinsic evidence in the provisions of S. 9 (i) read with S. 9-A of the Act to warrant an inference that the insolvency proceedings contemplated by the said provisions are in the nature of equitable mode of execution of a decree in favour of the judgment-creditor. The said provisions create a statutory ground for an act of insolvency. Section 9 (i) in terms provides that if a notice of the description mentioned in S. 9-A is not complied with, such a non-compliance amounts to an act of insolvency upon which not only the judgment-creditor in question but even the other creditors can found a petition for adjudication. This is the mode of execution of judgment-debt arising out of a decree or an order. This enforcement, it is true, is not a right exclusive to a decree-holder but a right which the decree-holder shares with other creditors in so far as an act of insolvency is concerned. But this does not detract from the basic purpose of an insolvency proceeding which is for realisation of assets including the debts of the decree-holder by the court seizing property of the judgment-debtor and providing for the rateable distribution of the proceeds of such assets amongst insolvents' creditors. If it is not an execution what else can it be said to be? It is undoubtedly true that under the provisions of the Act a discretion has to be exercised by the court but that does not nullify the nature of the insolvency proceedings pertaining to the enforcement of a judgment-debt. It merely renders such proceedings an equitable mode of execution.

13. In view of the legal provision discussed above viz., that issuance of insolvency notice is an equitable mode of execution of a decree or order, the only question which is required to be decided is as to the effect of non-compliance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decree is dated 1st August 1974. It obviously was more than two years old on the date when the insolvency notice was sought to be issued. There is no running away from the inference which is implicit in the scheme of O. 21 Rr. 22 and 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure that in absence of leave to execute the decree, the execution could not be levied in pursuance thereof. Reliance by the learned counsel upon a judgment of this court in Vallabhadas Narandas v. Kantilal G. Parekh; AIR 1947 Bom 430, is unhelpful. Indisputably this court held therein that the purposes of the provisions of O. 21 R. 22 is to prevent a surprise being sprung upon a judgment-debtor. That however is not relevant to the controversy before me. On the material question which arises before me, the decision does not shed any light. It does not deal with a situation where there was no compliance with the provisions of Order 21 R. 22. It was a case where at the stage when the court heard objections pursuant to a notice issued under O. 21, R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court was called upon to decide the question of maintainability of the application of the decree-holder. Kania J. dealt with the facts of the case to determine the issue whether the said application on behalf of the judgment-creditor was not maintainable. In my opinion, the principle laid down in the said decision is not attracted in the present case.

14. As to the effect of non-compliance with the provisions of Order 21 rule 22 the ratio of the decision of this court in Parshram Hanmanta Patil v. Balmukund Lachiram; (1908) ILR 32 Bom 572 is apposite. In that case a Division Bench of this court while dealing with the corresponding provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 invalidated the sale on the ground that the notice was not issued to the judgment-debtor. Implicit in the said decision of this court is a legal principle that absence of notice vitiates all subsequent proceedings.

15. The Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri, 41 Ind App 251 : (AIR 1914 PC 129), characterised the execution proceedings without compliance with the corresponding provisions of Civil Procedure Code, 1882, as lacking in jurisdiction. At page 257 after referring to an earlier decision of the same court in Gopal Chunder Chatterjee v. Gunamoni Dasi; (1893) ILR 20 Cal 370, the Privy Council observed at p. 257 as follows:—

“A notice under S. 248 of the Code is necessary in order that the Court should obtain jurisdiction to sell property by way of execution as against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor. In the case of 27 Indian Appeals, such a notice had been served, and the court had determined, as it had power to do for the purpose of the execution proceedings, that the party served with the notice was in fact the legal representative. It had therefore jurisdiction to sell, though the decision as to who was the legal representative was erroneous. There being jurisdiction to sell and the purchasers having no notice of any irregularity, the sale held good unless or until it was set aside by appropriate proceedings for the purpose. The present case is of a wholly different character. No proper notice was served under the section, and the respondents had full notice of, and indeed were responsible for, the irregularities of the procedure adopted”.

16. In the light of the principle laid down by the Privy Council, the Privy Council upheld the contention of the judgment-debtor as to the invalidity of the sale for want of leave of the court for execution against legal representative. The same principle must also apply to a case where the leave of the court is necessary in regard to a decree which is more than two years old because in principle there can be no distinction between the two situations in so far as the requirement of the leave of the court is concerned. I therefore, must hold that in absence of leave under O. 21, Rr. 22 and 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not open to the judgment-creditors herein to execute the said decree. The execution of the said decree is not permissible under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. It must also be held that the judgment-creditors herein are not entitled to resort to any equitable mode of execution thereof. This is further buttressed by the principle that if it is not permissible for the judgment-creditors to execute the decree under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure directly, this court in exercise of its discretion will not allow the judgment-creditors to execute the said decree indirectly by circuitous method of insolvency proceedings.

17. Reliance by the learned counsel on an unreported judgment of this court in Daljit Kishan v. Nihalchand Jethaji, decided by Mukhi J. on 19th July 1973 (Bom), is misplaced. The ratio of the said decision is plainly. distinguishable. The factual horizons of the said case and those obtaining in the present case are altogether different. It was a case where an insolvency notice was taken out at point of time when no leave under O. 21, R. 22 was necessary. The insolvency notice however, was served after the expiry of the period of two years contemplated for execution of decrees under Order 21 R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was in the context of this fact that the learned Judge dealt with the argument of the judgment-debtor. The learned Judge, no doubt, took the view that he was "unable to agree that resort to the procedure under insolvency Act can be equated with the execution of a decree". The further view taken by the learned Judge was that even though no leave under O. 21, R. 22 was obtained, the decree existed and was not stayed. The latter observation however, was made by the learned Judge upon a concession made at the bar to the effect that there was no stay of the execution of the decree. This is very clear from the concession recorded by the learned Judge in the following words:—

"Now there is no controversy before me that the execution of the decree in question had not been stayed".

18. In my respectful opinion, the aforesaid two observations of the learned Judge, with great respect to him, are enunciations per incuriam. The learned Judge with great respect to him, completely overlooked the statutory provisions contained in S. 9 (i) of the Act, more particularly the interpretation accorded to the terms "creditor" and "execution whereof is not stayed". That apart, it is in so far as this court is concerned, a settled law that in order to sustain an insolvency proceeding it must be shown by the judgment-creditor that he is in a position to enforce the decree or order given in his favour. This is what the Division Bench of this court in J. P. Tiwari v. Bhimraj Harlalka; (1958) 60 Bom LR 923 firmly laid down. It was a case where in regard to the grounds available for challenging an insolvency notice, it was held by the Division Bench of this Court at p 969 as follows:—

"It is well settled that if there is any impediment in the way of a judgment-creditor executing the decree or if the decree is not presently executable, no insolvency notice can be founded on such a decree. It is not necessary that execution of the decree should be stayed formally by the executing court. Even without any such formal order of stay, if the judgment-creditor is not in a position to satisfy the insolvency court that he has a right to execute the decree in praesenti the insolvency notice taken out by the judgment-creditor must fail". (emphasis supplied).

19. This binding authority of the Division Bench of this court was however, not brought to the notice of the learned Judge in Daljit Kishan's case (supra). I have no doubt in my mind that had this authority been brought to the notice of the learned Judge, the observations which fell from him might not have been made. In any event, with respect, I am bound by the ratio of the Division Bench of this Court in J. P. Tiwari's case (1958) 60 Bom LR 923 and must hold that the principle of law laid down by Mukhi J. in Daljit Kishan's case is not the correct statement of law. I respectfully dissent from the aforesaid exposition of law.

20. It may also be observed that the principle enunciated by Chagla C. J. in J. P. Tiwari's case (1958) 60 Bom LR 923 was followed by another Division Bench of this court to which Mukhi J. was also a party. In Ali D. Gandhi v. S. L. Thakurdas, (1975) 77 Bom LR 119, the Division Bench of this court took the view that an insolvency notice can be invalidated upon the grounds inter alia that the subsequent events had rendered the enforceability of the decree at the hands of a judgment-creditor, untenable. The Division Bench in the said case laid down that if the supervening circumstances "rendered the decree unexecutable" (page 127) it was open to a judgment-debtor to successfully impugn the insolvency notice upon the said ground. Having regard to the ratio of the judgment of the Division Bench in Ali D. Gandhi's case (supra) to which Mukhi J. himself was a party, it must be held that the exposition of law in Daljit Kishan's case is impliedly overruled by the said Division Bench.

21. In the result, I find sufficient authority in law to uphold the practice of the Insolvency Registrar to insist upon order of the competent court under O. 21, R. 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in cases where decrees come under the coverage of the O. 21 R. 22 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The submissions of the judgment-creditors to the contrary are rejected and the action and the view of the Insolvency Registrar affirmed.

(A) Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (1882), S. 38 — "Where suit has been contested" — Meaning.

Where the suit was dismissed for default of the plaintiff and the defendant had not only put in her appearance but had also filed certain defences, it was a suit that was contested and hence the Small Causes Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application to set aside the order of dismissal and to restore the suit. The contention that because the suit was dismissed for default, it was not a suit that was contested is not correct, (1906) 3 Cal LJ 199, Distinguished.

M. S. Rane, Advocate, for Applicant; Opponent served.

ORDER:— This is an application in revision against an order made by the Full Court of the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, under S. 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, hereinafter referred to as "the Act".

2. The respondent brought a suit against the applicant to recover money in the Small Causes Court, Bombay. In that suit, the applicant appeared and filed certain defences. The suit was ultimately fixed for hearing on 7th September 1970. On that date, when the suit was called out, the respondent was absent and, therefore, the suit was dismissed for default. The respondent subsequently filed an application for setting aside the dismissal of the suit for his default. Rule was issued to the applicant and after hearing the parties, the trial Court discharged the notice, thus refusing to set aside the dismissal of the suit for default of the respondent. The respondent thereupon filed an application under S. 38 of the Act to the Full Court of the Court of Small Causes which set aside the order of the trial Court and restored the suit of the respondent to file. It is this order which is being challenged in this revision application.

3. Section 38 of the Act is in these words:—

"38. New trial of contested cases.— Where a suit has been contested, the Small Cause Court may, on the application of either party, made within eight days from the date of the decree or order in the suit (not being a decree passed under S. 522 of the Code of Civil Procedure) (XIV of 1882), order a new trial to be held, or alter, set aside or reverse the decree or order, upon such terms as it thinks reasonable, and may, in the meantime, stay the proceedings.

Explanation— Every suit shall be deemed to be contested in which the decree is made otherwise than by consent of or in default of appearance by the defendant."

4. Mr. Rane appearing for the applicant has questioned the jurisdiction of the Full Court of the Court of Small Causes to entertain and proceed with the application under S. 38 of the Act. As before the Full Court, the main ground urged in support of the above contention is that for the applicability of S. 38, what is required is that the suit should have been contested. This, however, could not be a suit that had been contested, because the suit had been dismissed for default of the plaintiff-respondent. As rightly pointed out by the Full Court, the defendant-applicant had not only put in her appearance but she had also filed certain defences and, therefore, it was a suit that had been contested. Mr. Rane has not been able to point out any authority taking the contrary view. The only authority referred to by him is the decision in Ananta Coomari Dassi v. Radharani Dassi (1906) 3 Cal LJ 199. That case is clearly distinguishable because there the defendant had not at all appeared and the suit was decreed ex parte. It could not, therefore, be a suit which had been contested. In fact, the Explanation to S. 38 makes it clear that where a decree is made in default of the defendant's appearance, it cannot be deemed to be a contested suit.

5. Although the above was the only ground urged before the Full Court, Mr. Rane has urged a few more points in support of his contention that the Full Court had no jurisdiction under S. 38 of the Act to entertain and proceed with the application. Mr. Rane does not dispute that S. 38 can be resorted to not only against a decree but even against an order. But his contention is that if the application is made against an order, that order must have the force of a decree and secondly, that order must have been made in the suit. According to him, the order against which the application was made had neither the force of a decree, nor could it be said that the order was made in the suit, inasmuch as it was made in the application to set aside the dismissal of the suit. So far as the first point is concerned, he relies upon the decision in Chinnathambi v. Veerabadriah Naidoo, (1903) ILR 26 Mad 163. In that case, the Court had dismissed the suit in default of the plaintiff's appearance and on an application by the plaintiff to set aside the dismissal of the suit and to restore the suit to file, the Court had set aside the dismissal of the suit and restored the suit to file. The effect of this was that there was no final termination of the suit as the suit had been revived and, therefore, the order setting aside the dismissal of the suit and restoring it to file could not be an order having the force of a decree but was only an interlocutory order. This is made quite clear in the judgment of Benson J. at page 165 of the Report. In the present case, the effect of the order of the trial Court refusing to set aside the dismissal of the suit and to restore it to file was to terminate the suit finally, inasmuch as the earlier order of the dismissal of the suit stood and such an order naturally had the force of a decree. It is, therefore, not possible to accept the first part of the argument of Mr. Rane.

6. On the second part of the argument, Mr. Rane has not cited any direct authority but has only relied upon the wording of S. 38 which says that the application can be made within eight days from "the date of the decree or order in the suit". I do not think that such a restricted interpretation could be placed on the word "suit" in Section 38 as not to cover the application made to set aside the dismissal of the suit for default of the plaintiff and to restore it to file. Mr. Rane has relied upon the decision in Kanji v. Jivaraj, (1930) 32 Bom LR 1009 : (AIR 1930 Bom 412), where a question arose whether the order against which an application under S. 38 of the Act had been made could be said to be an order in the suit. In that case, an ex parte decree was passed in the Court of Small Causes at Bombay against a certain firm, when Kanji Vishram, a partner in the firm, was not served as a partner. The decree-holder got a notice issued to Kanji Vishram under Order XXI, R. 50, sub-rule (2) of the Civil Procedure Code to show cause why his name should not be brought on record as a partner in the firm of Kanji Khimji and Co. and execution issued against him. After considering the objections of Kanji Vishram, the trial Court ordered that Kanji's name be brought on record and the decree executed against him. Kanji Vishram filed an application under S. 38 of the Act to the Full Court. That Court held that it had no jurisdiction to entertain and proceed with such an application. The matter was taken to the High Court and the Division Bench of this Court agreed with the view of the Full Court that it had no jurisdiction to entertain and proceed with the application. The question of jurisdiction depended upon whether a proceeding in which leave is applied for to execute a decree, under O. XXI, R. 50, sub-rule (2), was a suit. The High Court held that such a proceeding is in the nature of a subsidiary application after the decree is passed and before the decree can be executed against the partner against whom the application is made under O. XXI, R. 50, sub-rule (2). I do not think that an analogy of this view can be applied to the facts of the present case to hold that an application filed, after the dismissal of the suit for default of the plaintiff, to have the dismissal set aside and the suit restored to file, cannot be in a suit within the meaning of S. 38 of the Act.

7. In support of his contention that the Full Court had no jurisdiction to entertain and proceed with the application under Section 38, Mr. Rane finally relied upon a decision in Fire Stone Tyre and Rubber Co. v. Ramanuja, AIR 1951 Mad 672. But the question decided there was totally different. In that case, the Full Bench of the Small Cause Court had dismissed an application, for default of appearance, made to it under S. 38 of the Act for a new trial. An application was made to that Court to set aside the order of dismissal of that application for default and the question that arose for consideration was whether the Full Bench of the Small Cause Court could entertain such an application. The question that arose for decision in that case was thus totally different.

8. These were the only submissions made by Mr. Rane. As they have all been rejected, the application in revision fails and is dismissed. The Rule is discharged. There will be no order as to costs, as there is no appearance on behalf of the respondent.

Application dismissed.

late Decree with Civil Appln. No. 3282 of Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (f) — Law of pre-emption — Customary law of pre-emption on basis of vicinage imposes unreasonable restrictions on right to property and hence void.

The customary law of pre-emption on basis of vicinage imposes unreasonable restrictions on the right to acquire, hold and dispose of property guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (f) and hence is void, AIR 1962 SC 1476 and AIR
1965 SC 314, Followed. (Paras 3, 5)

As far as Mahomedan Law of pre-emption is concerned, no distinction can be made between pre-emption based on custom and pre-emption based on personal law, as personal law must also be read subject to the provisions of the Constitution. Although it is a matter of personal law, the law of pre-emption is applied to Mahomedans as a matter of "Justice, equity and good conscience". After the coming into force of the Constitution, however, it is not open to the Courts to say that the pre-emption right which is void under Art. 19 (1) (f) can be recognised as a matter of "justice, equity and good conscience". What is opposed to the Constitu-

K. J. Abhyankar, for Appellants; S. M.
Hussein, (for No. 1), for Respondents.

VAIDYA, J.:— The only question which arises in the above second appeal and which was referred to the Division Bench, was whether the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for pre-emption having regard to the decisions of the Supreme Court in Bhau Ram v. Baij
Nath Singh, AIR 1962 SC 1476, and in Sant Ram v. Labh Singh, AIR 1965 SC 314, where it was laid down that the customary law of pre-emption on the ground of vicinage imposed an unreasonable right to hold, acquire and dispose of property guaranteed under Art. 19 (1) (f) and was void.

2. The ground on which the learned Assistant Judge, in this case, distinguished the present case was that although the right of pre-emption based on custom, was void, according to the said decisions of the Supreme Court, the plaintiff's right to claim pre-emption on the basis of his personal law, which had continued to operate after the coming into force of the Constitution, was not affected by the said decisions.

3. Mr. Abhyankar, the learned counsel for the appellants, has rightly argued that the personal law of the plaintiff viz. Mahomedan Law, was itself based on custom as one of its sources, and, therefore, the learned Judge erred in law in making a distinction between pre-emption based on custom and pre-emption based on personal law. The contention must be upheld, as personal law must be also read subject to the provisions of the Constitution. The definition of the phrase "laws in force" in Art. 13 (3) (b) was held to include law based on custom and usage in India; and the customary law of pre-emption on the ground of vicinage was held unconstitutional and void as it imposed unreasonable restrictions on the right to acquire, hold and to dispose of property guaranteed by Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution.

4. The Mahomedan Law of pre-emption is applied by the Courts in India to Mahomedians as a matter of "Justice, equity and good conscience", except in the Madras Presidency where the right of pre-emption is not recognised at all unless by local customs as in Malabar. After the coming into force of the Constitution, however, it is not open to the Courts to say that the pre-emption right which is void under Art. 19 (1) (f) can be recognised as a matter of "justice, equity and good conscience". What is opposed to the Constitution must be held to be opposed to "justice, equity and good conscience."

5. It should be noted that the Advocate for the plaintiff did not dispute before the learned Assistant Judge that on the date of the sale deed taken by the appellants from defendant No. 1, the road between the adjoining lands was not in existence. It is, therefore, clear that the right of pre-emption was claimed by the plaintiff in the suit only on the basis of vicinage. Such a right is held to be void in the aforesaid decisions of the Supreme Court. The plaintiff's suit is, therefore, liable to be dismissed.

6. Mr. Hussain, the learned Counsel for the plaintiff, submitted that the two Supreme Court decisions are distinguishable, as they dealt with the validity after the Constitution of the customary law and not with the validity of personal law, relying on a decision of the Division Bench of this Court in State v. Narasu Appa Mali, (1951) 53 Bom LR 779 : (AIR 1952 Bom 84), in which it was held that the Bombay Prevention of Hindu Bigamous Marriages Act, 1946, was a valid Act; and a decision of the Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Srinivasa Aiyar v. Saraswathi Ammal, AIR 1952 Mad 193, in which Madras Hindu (Bigamy Prevention and Divorce) Act, was held to be valid.

7. It is true that a distinction is made between personal law and customary law in those decisions; and a view is taken that the words "laws in force" used in Art. 13 may not include personal law. These observations must be understood in the context of the futile challenge to the Hindu Bigamous Marriages Act, which was considered there. They were not observations made in connection with the law of pre-emption, which, as stated above, was applied in this part of the country by this Court, as a matter of "justice, equity and good conscience" before the Constitution, as stated in Mulla's Mahomedan Law, Seventh Edition, 1972, at para 227 at page 230.

8. Although it is a matter of personal law, the law of pre-emption is applied as a matter of "justice, equity and good conscience." The law declared by the Supreme Court is binding on us under Art. 141 of the Constitution. Hence, we do not think it possible to hold that notwithstanding that the Supreme Court has come to the conclusion that a right of pre-emption based on the basis of vicinage is inconsistent with Art. 19 (1) (f), such a right can exist in this country as a matter of "justice, equity and good conscience". "Justice, equity and good conscience" must yield to the Constitution after the Constitution comes into force.

9. In the facts and circumstances of the case, therefore, we allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree passed by the two Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. The parties should bear their respective costs throughout.

10. In view of this, no order is necessary in Civil Application No. 3282 of 1974, filed by the respondent-plaintiff to join the purchaser pendente lite of the subject matter of the suit, as a party in the above Second Appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 555 of 1973, D/-2-3-1976.

Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 20 — Suit for recovery of rent paid in excess of standard rent — Limitation — Time spent in prosecuting application for fixation of standard rent whether can be excluded. (Limitation Act (1963), S. 14 (1)).

The tenant made an application under Section 11 of the Rent Act for fixation of standard rent and made a specific prayer therein that he may be permitted to adjust or deduct from future rent the amount recovered by the landlord in excess of the standard rent that may be fixed. The standard rent was fixed but the court could not grant the prayer for adjustment as it was outside S. 11. Soon thereafter the tenant filed a suit for recovery of the rent paid in excess of the standard rent fixed. Held, prayer in S. 11 application in effect was for asking back the overpayment. The matter in issue in the suit and in S. 11 application thus being the same, in computing the period of six months under S. 20, the time spent in prosecuting S. 11 application could be excluded in view of S. 14 (1) of the Limitation Act. ORDER:— The question arising for determination in this Civil Revision Application is regarding the computation of limitation period for the recovery of rent paid to the landlord which is determined as excessive payment on account of the standard rent getting fixed at a lower amount.

2. The facts of the case are not in dispute. The petitioners, original plaintiffs, had filed Miscellaneous Application No. 82 of 1969 on 28-1-1969 for fixing of standard rent of the premises occupied by them and owned by the opponent, original defendant. In that application a prayer was made for permission to deduct from future rent amount recovered by the landlord in excess of the standard rent that may be fixed. This application was decided on 13-10-1970 and the standard rent was fixed at Rs. 50/- per month as against the contractual rent of Rs. 245/- per month. However, the Court did not grant any adjustment of the overpayment observing that the same was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application was made. On 16-10-1970, therefore the notice (Ex. 28) was served by the petitioners against the landlord seeking to recover excess payment made during the months of July 1968 to December 1968. The suit out of which the present revision petition arises, being Civil Suit No. 3328 of 1970, was filed by the petitioners against the respondent for getting a sum of Rs. 1,170/- as the excess rent and Rs. 10/- more as notice charges. The Small Causes Court Judge, Poona, who heard the suit, allowed the decree in a sum of Rs. 985/- and proportionate costs with future interest at 6 p. c. p. a. This was for the excess rent paid during the months of August 1968 to December 1968 and the notice charges. Excess payment for July 1968 was taken as time-barred. Civil Appeal No. 55 of 1972 was filed against that decision in the District Court at Poona. The Extra Assistant Judge, Poona, allowed the appeal and the decree passed by the trial Court was set aside. According to the learned Assistant Judge, as the claim was not filed within 6 months of the accrual of the cause of action as required by Section 20 of the Bombay Rent Act. In his opinion, under Sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, there could not be the exclusion of time taken in prosecuting the standard rent application. Although the learned Judge held that by reason of S. 29 (2) of the Limitation Act, S. 14 was applicable in computing the period of limitation, sub-section (1) of S. 14, which governed the proceedings, was inapplicable, because the matter in issue in Civil Suit and in the earlier proceedings was not the same.

3. Aggrieved by that decision, the plaintiffs have preferred this revision petition. S. 20 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, to the extent relevant, is as follows:—

Any amount paid on account of rent after the date of the coming into operation of this Act, shall, except in so far as payment thereof is in accordance with the provisions of this Act, be recoverable by the tenant from the landlord to whom it was paid or on whose behalf it was received or from his legal representatives at any time within a period of six months from the date of payment and may, without prejudice to any other remedy for recovery, be deducted by such tenant from any rent payable by him to such landlord."

The learned trial judge has held the claim for the months of August 1968 to December, 1968 recoverable. On the phraseology of S. 20 (1) of the Bombay Rent Act for recovering the excess payment for the above noted months a suit ought to have been filed in February 1969 so as to keep the claim for August 1968 in time. The suit here has actually been filed on 2nd of November 1970, so that prima facie no amount asked for is sought to be recovered within the period of six months.

4. It is true that the application for fixation of standard rent, which was given in January 1969, was not decided till 13th of October 1970. Mr. Divekar, the learned Advocate for the petitioner, therefore, argues that until determination of the standard rent on that day the plaintiffs-petitioners could not have taken up any steps for recovery in the absence of knowing what was the excess amount. It is, however, difficult to hold that for that reason alone we can overlook the provisions of S. 20 of the Bombay Rent Act and come to the conclusion that the limitation actually starts running from 13th of October 1970.

5. The only other way in which the suit could be brought in time is by excluding the time taken in the standard rent application proceedings from 28th January 1969 to 13th of October 1970. In this connection reliance is placed on S. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. Sub-s. (1) of S. 14 relates to the filing of a suit, while sub-sec. (2) is in connection with the filing of any application. Since here exclusion of time of proceedings bona fide taken in the standard rent petition is sought while Suit No. 3328 of 1970 was filed, we will be concerned with sub-s. (1) of S. 14. It runs as follows:—

"In computing the period of limitation for any suit the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceedings whether in a court of first instance or of appeal or revision, against the defendant shall be excluded, where the proceeding relates to the same matter in issue and is prosecuted in good faith in a court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

According to this provision, if time is spent in other civil proceedings which are prosecuted with due diligence and if the proceedings relate to the same matter in issue and are prosecuted in good faith, the time taken up by these proceedings could be excluded if those proceedings were not entertained by reason of the defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature. In addition to the proceedings relating to the same matter in issue, they must not have been entertained by reason of lack of jurisdiction etc. and that these proceedings must have been prosecuted in good faith and with due diligence. Mr. Thatte, appearing for the respondents, contends that this provision could not apply chiefly because the matter in issue in the standard rent petition and the suit is not the same. It has to be remembered in this connection that while Miscellaneous Petition No. 82 of 1969 was filed by the petitioners in that very application, they had asked for adjustment of overpayment. It is, however, contended that under S. 11 of the Rent Act, Courts could not pass any order either of adjusting the amount or allowing recovery of the amount but that only fixation of rent could be declared, and as such the matter in issue in the two proceedings cannot be the same.

6. In developing this argument Mr. Thatte, relied upon the decision reported in Maganlal Chhotalal Desai v. Chandrakant Motilal, (1969) 71 Bom LR 89 : (AIR 1969 SC 37). The Supreme Court there was concerned in finding out whether the defendant paid or was ready and willing to pay rent due from him. According to the defendant, he was compelled to pay Rs. 15,224/- between March 14, 1950 and August 4, 1954. The Courts below found that between these two dates he paid Rs. 14,169-2-0 on account of rent from October 1, 1948 at the rate of Rs. 300/- per month. These payments were in excess of the standard which was eventually fixed at Rs. 125/- per month. The rent falling due after August 4, 1954 was not paid. The question was whether the rent was in arrears. Claim was made that the over-payment should be treated as rent paid, by adjustment or deduction of the over-payments. That claim was denied by making the following observations:

"The section gives the tenant a general right of recovery of the overpaid rent within six months from the date of payment. Without prejudice to any other mode of recovery, he may deduct the overpayment from any rent payable by him to the landlord. Deduction is one mode of recovery. If the amount is incapable of recovery because of the bar of limitation, it cannot be recovered by deduction. In other words, the right of recovery by deduction is barred at the same time as the right of recovery by suit. If the tenant seeks recovery of the overpaid amount he must bring the suit or make the deduction within six months."

7. Apparently, the defendant had not filed any suit for the recovery of the overpayments and on the date the Supreme Court was concerned in finding out whether adjustment could be made, the claim was time-barred by reason of S. 20 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947. That is why the Court held that the amount was not recoverable because of the bar of limitation and that the right of recovery by deduction is also barred at the same time as the right of recovery by suit.

8. In my opinion, the point raised for decision here is different. Adjustment by way of deduction was claimed retrospectively in the suit before the Supreme Court when that was out of limitation. The question for our consideration in the present revision petition is whether such limitation is saved or whether time is extended by reason of the application of S. 14 (1) of the Limitation Act.

9. During the course of arguments Mr. Thatte, for the respondent, referred me to the decision in Diment v. Robert, (1925) 1 KB 9. The provision in S. 8 of the Mortgage Interest Restriction Act with which the Court of Appeal was concerned is almost similar and the word 'recoverable' appears in that section as well as in S. 20 of the Bombay Rent Act in similar circumstances. The head-note of the case runs as follows:—

"The effect of the provisions of S. 8, sub-s. (2) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restriction Act, 1923, whereby any rent or interest paid by a tenant or mortgagor in excess of the increases allowed by the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, shall be 'recoverable at any time within six months' is that the tenant to recover the excess, must take some kind of legal proceeding, as by issue of a writ of summons within the prescribed period. It is not necessary that he should actually have obtained judgment before the six months have expired".

Mr. Thatte, emphasises the statement that the tenant must take some kind of legal proceedings within the prescribed period of six months. However, the controversy in that suit and the other decisions referred to, one of which is Lewis v. Makay, (1924) 2 KB 136, centred round the interpretation of the word 'recoverable'. It was contended that within that period of six months the tenant himself actually must have obtained a judgment for repayment of the excess and not simply taken some steps towards recovery. The contention was repelled. Dealing with that contention, Pollock

"Now what is the meaning of the word Recoverable? Does it mean that the money must have been recovered, in the sense that a judgment must have been given to enforce its recovery, or does it mean that a suit for its recovery has been commenced? The Divisional Court decided that it means that the tenant must have taken steps to recover by issuing legal proceedings, and I think that view is correct. Counsel for the appellant referred to Ings. v. London and S. W. Rly. Co., but it seems to me that that case has no bearing on the present one. One must always look at the purpose of an Act of Parliament and the basis of such decision. There were other cases: Morris v. Duncan (1899) 1 QB 4, was relied upon but it seems to me that the judgment in that case was the exact opposite of the argument presented to us by counsel. I am satisfied that the judgment of the divisional Court was right. It is impossible to suppose that the Legislature intended to leave the tenant to the chance of his right to recover falling within the area of very busy court, or to be determined by the changes or chances of the Court's business." The contention, depending upon the contingency of the decision being obtained from the Court over which the litigant had no control, was negatived, and it was held that mere taking of some legal proceeding was sufficient.

10. In our case, on behalf of the petitioners-plaintiffs, it is said that the petitioners had taken steps by filing Miscellaneous Application No. 82 of 1969 in which they had also prayed for adjustment, and that, therefore, it could be held that they had started the proceedings. Again, therefore, the question falling for determination in the present matter would be whether the petitioners could relate back their claim in Suit No. 3228 of 1970 to the filing of the application on 28th of January 1969. That they could do only by the help of S. 14 (1) of the Limitation Act and the question would be whether, in the circumstances of the case, that is permissible.

11. According to Mr. Thatte, the petitioners cannot link the two matters. He argues that it was open for the petitioner to file a suit just when they filed the application for fixation of standard rent. In that suit, they could have claimed the relief of recovery of overpayment simultaneously with the prayer for fixation of standard rent. In other words, although the standard rent was not fixed and though the exact amount recoverable was not known at the time of the filing of such a contemplated suit, it is argued that he could have envisaged some figure as standard rent and could have framed his plaint in terms of such a figure. According to him, this kind of suit is contemplated by S. 20 of the Rent Act and he relies upon the observations made in Dalal's Bombay Rent Act, (4th Edition) at page 542, which are as follows:—

"It is, however, not a condition precedent to the filing of a suit for the recovery of the amount paid in excess of the standard rent and permitted increases that the standard rent or permitted increases should have been already fixed by the court under an application. The scheme of the section is to give a right of recovery within a period of six months from the date of payment. It is in a suit filed for the recovery of such an amount, that the court will have to decide after a proper trial as to whether the amount is in excess of the amount payable in accordance with the provisions of this Act. It is in such a suit that the court will, if required, decide the standard rent and/or the permitted increases, as the case may be. A tenant may, therefore, file a suit to recover an amount which, according to him, is in excess of the standard rent and permitted increases and therein pray for the determination of the standard rent and/or permitted increases." The case on which these observations of the learned Author are based was also cited before me. It is a decision of a Bench of Small Causes Court, of 15th October, 1965 in RAR Appeal No. 360 of 1960 in RAE Suit No. 2146/11321 of 1955 (Moosaji Adamji Lakdawalla v. Lingappa Puttal Pujari). Principal facts of the case can be usefully noted. The appellant Moosaji Adamji had let out to the respondent Lingappa Puttal Pujari a plot of land by an indenture of lease dated 7th October 1952 at a monthly rent of Rs. 135/-. On the same day, he borrowed from the respondent a sum of Rs. 1,625/- on a promote. Rs. 60/- per month was the instalment of repayment of that loan with liberty to adjust the same with the rent falling due. In July 1953 Lingappa filed an application for fixation of the standard rent of the premises. Pending disposal of the petition, a Commissioner was appointed for valuing and suggesting fair rent. He had indicated that Rs. 55-8-0 could be the fair rent. However, on 1-12-1955, the main petition was dismissed on the ground that the provisions of the Rent Act were not applicable to the premises in question. An appeal filed over it was also dismissed on 29-2-1956. On 27-8-1955, Lingappa filed the suit claiming to recover from the appellant under the provisions of

S. 20 of the Rent Act, certain sum paid by him in excess of the standard rent. Obviously while filing this suit, the standard rent he has envisaged is of Rs. 55-8-0 as suggested by the Commissioner. But the whole proceedings could not have attracted S. 20 of the Rent Act because of the finding in the earlier petition and in appeal over it that the Rent Act did not apply to the premises in dispute. Had that finding been maintained, the fate of the suit was very clear. However, in between the filing of the suit and the ultimate decision of it, certain other events happened. On 11th September 1956 Civil Revision Application filed by Lingappa in the standard rent proceedings was allowed and the matter was remanded for fixation of standard rent. The trial Court then fixed it in April 1957 at Rs. 76/- per month. Appellate Bench changed the figure to Rs. 40-33 on 25-9-1957 and the same was maintained in the Civil Revision Application filed over it. On the date of the decision of the Suit, therefore, the plaintiff then could easily lay hand on the finding of standard rent at Rs. 40.33. In the suit, Lingappa had given credit to the landlord of the standard rent he had envisaged and had also calculated the dues under the pronote.

12. One of the contentions raised in opposing the suit was that there was no cause of action for the suit when it was filed, inasmuch as no standard rent was fixed on that date. In dealing with the objection, the learned judges have observed that the standard rent application was not pending but the revision application filed by the tenant was pending whereunder the standard rent application was remanded to the trial Court for disposal. In this context the following are further observations:—

“We are of the view that it is not a condition precedent to the filing of a suit under S. 20 of the Rent Act to recover back the amount of excess over the standard rent paid to the landlord, that the standard rent should have already been fixed by the Court. In a case where the contractual rent charged from the tenant happens to be the rent at which the premises were first let after 1st September 1940, it is no doubt true that prima facie such contractual rent would be regarded as the standard rent till the standard rent is fixed by the Court either upon an application made under S. 11 of the Rent Act or in a suit. But it is open to a tenant in such a case to file a suit to claim back what is excess over the standard rent according to him and at the same time pray that the standard rent be fixed and decree may be passed for such amount paid to the landlord within the prescribed period as is in excess of the standard rent so fixed. In the present case it was not necessary for the trial Court to go into the question of fixation of the standard rent as when the suit came up for hearing, the standard rent was already fixed by the appellate Court in the standard rent application filed by the respondent. We are, therefore, unable to uphold the contention of Mr. Tunara that the respondent had no cause of action for filing the suit on the date when it was filed.”

The language used in these observations shows that the fixation of the standard rent is not a condition precedent for the filing of the suit so that it could not be urged that before fixing of the standard rent, no action under S. 20 of the Rent Act could be taken. The possibility of the tenant filing a suit simultaneously with the prayer to fix standard rent has been considered and approved. Now, what is sought to be argued is that that is the only mode by which recovery of excess payment by suit can be made and that unless such an action is taken, the tenant is deprived of his remedy to file a suit and recover the amount. This is on the background of the expiry of the period of six months before the fixation of the standard rent in a proceeding started. That the filing of a suit as indicated above is possible and permissible would not however, mean that other remedy is not possible. If, for instance, in the present case action taken by the tenants at the time of the filing of the standard rent application in praying for adjustment is looked upon as a step for adjustment of the overpayment or a step in the nature of recovering the excess payments, and if in a regular suit filed thereafter time spent in those proceedings could be excluded, then the ruling given by the learned Judges of the Small Causes Court, ought not to come in the way of a tenant. Hence also, the crucial question falling for determination in this revision application is, in the circumstances as existing in the present case, whether S. 14 (1) of the Indian Limitation Act is applicable. The learned trial Judge was of the view that the matter in issue in the Miscellaneous Application No. 82 of 1969 and the subsequent suit, being Suit No. 3328 of 1970, was the same. He did not appreciate the distinction made on behalf of the landlord that the relief claimed in the standard rent application was one of adjustment, whereas the relief claimed in the suit was for recovery of the amount. He felt that the argument had the ring of the phraseology used in sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Limitation Act which obviously was not applicable and in finding that the matter in issue in both the proceedings was the same he concluded that in the Standard Rent Application, the plaintiffs had claimed adjustment in respect of the amount paid in excess of the standard rent and in the suit also they claimed back the same amount.

13. The learned Appellate Judge, has not found favour with that reasoning. He calls this view erroneous. According to him, the cause of action for filing standard rent application arose under S. 11 of the Rent Act when the tenant found that the agreed rent charged by the landlord was excessive. That application was essentially for fixing of the standard rent and although there was an ancillary prayer for permission to deduct from future rent that much amount recovered by the landlord in excess of the standard rent that may be fixed for a period of six months immediately preceding the months in which the application was filed, he concludes that the matter in issue was not the same. According to him, the making of adjustment was outside the purview of the application under S. 11 of the Rent Act. Then he observed:

“Merely because the plaintiffs had made a prayer in the standard rent application for permitting them to make adjustment of the amount recovered in excess of the standard rent in future rent that was certainly not “a matter in issue “in that application which is now in issue in the present suit.”

It cannot be denied that an order for recovery of amount or for adjustment could not be passed under S. 11 of the Rent Act, but in fact such a prayer for adjustment, which, in effect, was for appropriating the excess amount paid was made. That prayer could not have been granted and has not been granted by the Court deciding that application because that court had no jurisdiction to grant such a claim. The matter, however, does not rest upon drawing distinctions in the real function of S. 11, but in finding out precisely whether when some other prayer was made that prayer was made in good faith and was prosecuted with diligence, and as such, when an adverse finding is obtained on the score of lack of jurisdiction it could be looked upon as sufficient to exclude the time taken in prosecuting those proceedings.

14. If the contention raised by Mr. Thatte is accepted almost always a tenant would have to file a suit under S. 20 of the Rent Act in which the relief under S. 11 may have to be claimed. It is seldom that standard rent petitions get decided in six months. It would have also one more curious result. After presenting an application for fixation of standard rent usually an interim order under sub-s. (3) of S. 11 is passed for depositing the rent intermily fixed or paying it out and out to the landlord. In a given case, the amount so fixed intermily may happen to be in excess of the standard rent ultimately fixed. It would also be that a tenant may prefer to make payment out and out to the landlord after obtaining such order. If the standard rent proceedings last for more than 6 months, as they often so last, amount paid during the pendency of the proceedings and which happens to be in excess of the standard rent ultimately fixed, would also become non-recoverable, thus, putting a premium on the landlord's conduct of recovering excess amount. I do not think that that result was intended by the Legislature. A diligent litigant aware of his rights rushes to the Court for fixation of standard rent. In case the same is fixed quickly, he could easily obtain a relief for the excess payment made during the previous six months. On the other hand, if because of the congestion of work in Court he is unable to obtain an order, he stands to lose and that is dependent, not upon his volition but upon the exigencies of the Court. The King's Bench ruling cited above, has not looked upon such a result with favour.

15. The question for our consideration is whether the proceedings in the two actions relate to the same matter in issue so that under S. 14 of the Limitation Act, time could be extended. In the application for fixation of standard rent the Court is invited to fix the correct rent, and thus, to determine what rent was excessively charged. In the suit for recovery of overpayment, the determination of the excessively charged amount has also to be looked into before granting further relief. To my mind, to that extent, the matter in issue is the same in the two proceedings, more so, where in the application of the type, with which we are concerned, a precise prayer for adjustment, which is one of the modes of recovering of the excess payment was also made. Fixation of the standard rent always operates retrospectively. In both the proceedings, therefore, there is determination of the excessive rent charged. I feel, therefore, that the view taken by the learned Extra Assistnat Judge cannot be upheld, when there was an express prayer at the time of the filing of the standard rent application to grant adjustment. It was in effect a prayer for asking back the overpayment. The same could not have been known till the proceedings lasted and immediately thereafter separate suit was filed. The matter in issue thus being the same, computation of the limitation period would be after taking into account the period spent in prosecuting the standard rent application as provided in S. 14 (1) of the Limitation Act. Consequently the decree of the trial Court will have to be restored. Hence, I pass the following order:

ORDER

The rule is made absolute.

The revision application is accepted, the order passed by the Extra Assistant Judge Poona, on 19-4-1973 is set aside and the decree of the trial Court dated 11-2-1972 is restored.

The opponent to pay the costs of the petitioners and to bear his own.

Revision allowed.

Customs Act (1962), Ss. 110 (2) and 124 — Failure to issue show cause notice within prescribed time — Not a fetter upon power to initiate confiscation proceedings. AIR 1973 All 433, Not Foll.

The object underlying S. 110 is not initiation of proceedings for confiscation of goods or for imposition of personal penalty, but is to indicate what will happen if such initiation has not taken place within the time prescribed by the section itself. The consequences of non-initiation of proceedings within the prescribed time are that the goods shall be returned to the person from whose possession they were seized. All the provisions of Ch. XIII are steps to facilitate investigation machinery and failure to issue a show cause notice under Cl. (a) of S. 124 within the prescribed time will only result in an obligation on the part of the Customs Authorities to return the goods to the person from whose possession they were seized. There is nothing in the language of S. 110 to indicate that a fetter or limitation is imposed upon the power of the Competent Authority to initiate proceedings under S. 124. On the other hand, S. 124 is contained in Ch. XIV which contains substantive provisions relating to confiscation of goods etc. and imposition of penalty. Under S. 124 issue of a show cause notice prior to passing an order of confiscation or imposition of personal penalty is mandatory, but the language of S. 124 is clear and precise and no restriction or limitation or even a fetter is imposed as regards the time when proceedings may be initiated by issue of a show cause notice. S. 124 prescribed the conditions precedent which are to be fulfilled by the Authority before an order of confiscation of goods or an order imposing any penalty can be passed against any person. These conditions precedent are laid down in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of S. 124. None of the three conditions precedent even suggests that there is a limitation on the exercise of the power either as regards the time or existence of seizure. On a plain reading of S. 124 it will be open to the Competent Officer to pass an order of confiscation of goods or imposing any penalty without seizing any goods or after returning the goods under the proviso to S. 110 (2) for failure to initiate proceedings within the prescribed time. An investigation machinery cannot be equated with a limitation upon a substantive power contained in S. 124; more so, when the only consequence that follows for failure to give notice within the prescribed time is laid down in S. 110 (2), namely return of goods to the person from whose possession they were seized. A. K. Sen with M/s. S. J. Sorabjee, P. A. Mehta and N. K. Thakore, for Appellants in Appeal No. 81 of 1972 and for Respondents in Appeal No. 84 of 1972; R. J. Joshi with C. J. Shah and S. B. Sukhtankar, for Respondents in Appeal No. 81 of 1972 and for Appellants in Appeal No. 84 of 1972.

KANTAWALA, C. J.:— The firm of Messrs. Mohanlal Devdanhbai Choksey (petitioner No. 1) consisting of three partners, petitioners Nos. 2 to 4, carries on business of sale and purchase of gold and silver bullion. On Jan. 10, 1969 the petitioners delivered to the proper officer under the Customs Act, 1962 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") an intimation under S. 11J of the Act in respect of their shop at Sheikh Memon Street as being the place where the silver and gold bullion which were the goods notified under S. 11-I of the Act are being kept or stored by them. According to them between 14th and 23rd Jan. 1969 they sold and delivered three consignments of silver bullion to a firm carrying on business at Nasik. On Jan. 23, 1969 they effected sale of 22 bars of silver weighing in the aggregate 666.533 Kgs. valued at Rs. 3,70,356/- to the said firm at Nasik. On the same day they obtained from the Competent Officer a transport voucher under S. 11K for transport of the said goods by road from Bombay to Nasik. In the said transport voucher it was mentioned that the goods would leave the petitioner's shop at Sheikh Memon Street at 6 p. m. on Jan. 23, 1969. Such time was mentioned in the transport voucher according to the petitioners because the Excise Officer declined to sign a transport voucher on that day if the goods were to be transported the next day as intended by the petitioners. On Jan. 23 1969 at about 7.30 p. m. a party of Customs Officers raided the garage and residence of the petitioners Nos. 2, 3 and 4 at building "Triveni", situate at Walkeshwar Road, Bombay and seized 22 bars of silver from that garage along with 11 small pieces of silver contained in a gunny bag which was found on the loft. The Customs Officers also seized a Willy's Station Wagon bearing No. MRW-9690 and some old books of account. They also seized from the residence of petitioners Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in building Triveni currency notes of the value of Rs. 54,000/- and 7 gold coins and some cash. On Jan. 24, 1969 from the shop of the petitioners at Sheikh Memon Street books of account, documents and other things were taken charge of. On July 22, 1969 the Collector of Central Excise and Customs, Bombay passed an order to the effect that he was satisfied that there were sufficient grounds for extending the period by six months for the issue of notice prescribed under S. 124 of the Act and accordingly, in exercise of the powers conferred by S. 110 (2) of the Act he extended the period for issue of the notice by six months from July 23, 1969. On January 22, 1970 the Assistant Collector, Directorate of Revenue Intelligence, Bombay Unit, issued a show cause notice to the petitioners calling upon them to show cause why the silver bullion which was seized should not be confiscated and they should not be held liable for imposition of the penalty under Chapter XIV of the Act. By the said notice the petitioners were also called upon to show cause why the Willy's Station Wagon bearing No. MRW-9690 and the 'Contex-30' calculating machine that were seized should not be confiscated. On Feb. 20, 1970 the petitioners filed a petition under

Art. 226 of the Constitution on the Original Side of the High Court inter alia to challenge the validity of the order of extension dated July 22, 1969 and the show cause notice dated Jan. 22, 1970. They prayed for a writ of mandamus or other appropriate relief directing the respondents, their officers, servants and agents to return to them forthwith all the goods seized, currency notes of Rs. 72,278/-, 7 gold coins, 'Contex-30' calculating machine, Willy's station wagon bearing No. MRW-9690 and the books of account and other documents seized by them and to withdraw and cancel the order of extension dated July 22, 1969 and the said show cause notice dated Jan. 22, 1970. In this petition the Assistant Collector, Directorate of Revenue Intelligence, Bombay Unit, the Collector of Central Excise, and the Collector, Directorate of Revenue Intelligence, Bombay Unit and the Union of India were made party respondents. The petition was resisted by the respondents and affidavits in reply were filed by the Assistant Collector, Directorate of Revenue Intelligence and the Superintendent of Central Excise and Customs.

2. When the petition came up for hearing before the learned trial Judge two contentions were urged on behalf of the petitioners. Firstly it was contended that the order dated July 22, 1969 whereby the period for issue of a show cause notice under S. 124 of the Act was extended, was in breach and violation of the principles of natural justice as the said order was issued by the Officer without giving any opportunity whatsoever to the petitioners. Secondly, it was contended that even the seizure of the goods was unjustified, because, on the facts of the case it was impossible for any officer to entertain any reason to believe that the goods that were seized were liable to confiscation within the terms of S. 110 (1) of the Act so as to justify the seizure. On that ground the validity of the show cause notice dated January 22, 1970 issued under S. 124 of the Act was challenged. The learned Judge following the decision of the Supreme Court in Asst. Collector of Customs and Supdt. Preventive Service Customs, Calcutta v. Charan Das Malhotra, reported in AIR 1972 SC 689, took the view that as the order extending the time for issuing the show cause notice under Section 124 was passed without giving any opportunity to the petitioners of being heard, the said order was liable to be quashed. So far as the validity of the show cause notice dated Jan. 22, 1970 was concerned, he took the view that the attempt on the part of the petitioners to show that the customs authorities would have had no reason to believe that the goods in question were liable to confiscation was an ill-advised and ill-founded attempt and he had no hesitation in rejecting the said contention. In view of these findings having regard to the provisions of S. 110 of the Act he issued a writ of mandamus against the respondents directing them to return to the petitioners forthwith the 22 bars of silver, 11 small pieces of silver, Willy's station wagon bearing No. MRW 9690, books of account and other documents seized from the garage and 25 pieces of silver, 'Contex-80' calculating machine, books of account and other documents seized from the petitioner's shop. By his order he also directed the respondents to withdraw and cancel the order of extension of time dated July 22, 1969. While this petition was pending criminal proceedings were also adopted by the Officers of the Customs Department in the Court of the learned Presidency Magistrate and in view of the pendency of the said proceedings he directed that the property which was directed to be returned should not be returned to the petitioners in compliance with the judgment till two weeks from the date of delivery of the judgment so as to give the respondents an opportunity to apply for an order under S. 516A of the Code of Criminal Procedure to the learned Magistrate before whom the criminal proceedings were pending. It is against this order passed by the learned Judge that these two cross appeals are filed. Appeal No. 81 of 1972 is filed by the petitioners while cross appeal No. 84 of 1972 is filed by the original respondents.

3. Mr. Sen the learned counsel on behalf of the petitioners contended that having regard to the provisions of the Act seizure under S. 110 was sine qua non to exercise of the powers of confiscation under S. 124 of the Act. He submitted that a notice under S. 124 of the Act cannot be issued unless there is valid seizure of the goods under S. 110; that such valid seizure is a fetter upon the power of the authorities to issue a show cause notice under S. 124 and that a notice under S. 124 of the Act is a condition precedent to exercise of the power of confiscation of the goods. He submitted that the impugned show cause notice dated Jan. 22, 1970 in so far as it relates to confiscation of the goods must be quashed once the six months' period prescribed in S. 110 expires and no show cause notice is issued within that period and when no valid order of extension of the period of seizure or for issue of the show cause notice is passed by the appropriate authorities. According to his submissions, a show cause notice under Section 124 cannot be given once the period of six months or the extended period mentioned in the proviso has elapsed since the date of the seizure. His submission was that as under the order of the trial Court the goods are ordered to be returned to the petitioners, the proceedings initiated pursuant to the notice dated Jan. 22, 1970 under S. 124 of the Act cannot be continued and they should be quashed. On the other hand, Mr. Joshi on behalf of the original respondents contended that S. 110 and S. 124 are entirely independent provisions that S. 110 is contained in Chapter XIII which deals with searches, seizure and arrest. He submitted that these provisions constitute the machinery to facilitate proper investigation of a case and anything contained in a provision contained in a section in Chapter XIII cannot affect or impose a fetter upon the powers conferred in the substantive provisions which are contained in Chapter XIV of the Act. Chapter XIV of the Act according to his submission contains substantive provisions for confiscation of goods and conveyances and imposition of penalties. S. 124 is contained in Chapter XIV and it makes the issue of a show cause notice a condition precedent before any order confiscating any goods or imposing any penalty on any person can be passed under this Chapter. He submitted that the provisions of S. 124 are independent provisions and thereby no limitation as to time is prescribed for the issue of such a show cause notice, nor do they contain any provision to the effect that an order of confiscation cannot be passed or proceedings for such confiscation cannot be instituted unless they are first seized and continued under seizure while proceedings are initiated and continued. He also submitted that for initiation of proceedings under S. 124 no limitation or restriction as regards time is imposed and S. 110 contained in Chapter XIII and S. 124 contained in Chapter XIV should be considered in their proper perspective and nothing contained in S. 110 can be regarded or considered as a fetter upon the exercise of powers under Section 124. He urged that the consequences of non-compliance with the principles of natural justice while passing an order of extension under S. 110 are provided in the section itself and it would not be permissible to the Court to enlarge the scope of S. 110 beyond what is contained therein.

4. So far as the cross appeal preferred by the original respondents is concerned, he submitted that the order of the learned Judge directing return of the books of account and documents to the petitioners should be modified as some of the said books of account and documents have been tendered as exhibits in the criminal proceedings pending before the learned Magistrate and some of them are likely to be tendered as exhibits in the proceedings initiated for confiscation of the goods and imposition of personal penalty against the petitioners. He therefore, submitted that having regard to the subsequent events this order qua return of books of account and documents should be modified. So far as the return of silver bullion is concerned, he drew our attention to the events that have taken place after the matter was disposed of by the learned Judge and submitted that in view of the subsequent events that have taken place the order passed by the learned Judge should be modified or in any event a clarification should be made so that the original respondents may not be hauled up for contempt in case, in view of the order that may be passed by the learned Magistrate or in view of the order of confiscation that may be passed by the authorities under the Act, it may not be possible for any of the original respondents to return the silver bullion, the Willy's station wagon and/or the 'Contex-30' calculating machine to the petitioners.

5. By Central Ordinance No. 1 of 1969 which was promulgated on Jan. 3, 1969 Chapters IVA and IVB were added in the Act and the said provisions were continued later on by Act 12 of 1969. These Chapters IVA and IVB have been introduced in the Act with effect from Jan. 3, 1969. Section 11-I authorises the Central Government by notification to specify goods of any particular class or description in regard to which special measures may be deemed necessary for checking its illegal export. It is common ground that under the said section Central Govt. has specified silver bullion and coins as being such goods. Under S. 11J it is obligatory upon any person who possessed goods so specified by the Central Government to intimate particulars of the place where such goods were kept or stored by him. Sections 11K, 11L and 11M regulate the transport thereof. Chapter XIII of the Act contains provisions relating to searches, seizure and arrest. Sec. 110 in this Chapter deals with seizure of goods, documents and things and its provisions are as under:—

"110. (1) If the proper officer has reason to believe that any goods are liable to confiscation under this Act, he may seize such goods:

Provided that where it is not practicable to seize any such goods, the proper officer may serve on the owner of the goods an order that he shall not remove, part with, or otherwise deal with the goods except with the previous permission of such officer.

(2) Where any goods are seized under sub-sec. (1) and no notice in respect thereof is given under Cl. (a) of Section 124 within six months of the seizure of the goods, the goods shall be returned to the person from whose possession they were seized:

Provided that the aforesaid period of six months may, on sufficient cause being shown, be extended by the Collector of Customs for a period not exceeding six months.

(3) The proper officer may seize any documents or things which, in his opinion, will be useful for, or relevant to, any proceeding under this Act.

(4) The person from whose custody any documents are seized under sub-sec. (3) shall be entitled to make copies thereof or take extracts therefrom in the presence of an officer of customs."

Chapter XIV of the Act contains provisions relating to confiscation of goods and conveyances and imposition of penalties. Section 111 enumerates the types of goods which are liable to confiscation. After the Ordinance No. 1 of 1969 was promulgated; Cl. (p) was added in S. 111 whereby one of the types of goods that are liable to confiscation was added as under:—

"(p) any notified goods in relation to which any provisions of Chapter IVA or of any rule made under this Act for carrying out the purpose of that Chapter have been contravened."

Section 112 provides for imposition of personal penalty. Section 113 enumerates the types of goods liable to confiscation. By Ordinance No. 1 of 1969 which was continued by Act 12 of 1969 Cl. (1) was introduced in this section and one of the types of goods which could be confiscated under this clause was any specified goods in relation to which any provisions of Chapter IVB or of any rule made under the Act for carrying out the purposes of that chapter have been contravened. Section 124 provides for issue of show cause notice before confiscation of goods etc. and its provisions are as under:—

"124. No order confiscating any goods or imposing any penalty on any person shall be made under this chapter unless the owner of the goods or such person—

(a) is given a notice in writing informing him of the grounds on which it is proposed to confiscate the goods or to impose a penalty;

(b) is given an opportunity of making a representation in writing within such reasonable time as may be specified in the notice against the grounds of confiscation or imposition of penalty mentioned therein; and

(c) is given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in the matter:

Provided that the notice referred to in Cl. (a) and the representation referred to in Cl. (b) may, at the request of the person concerned be oral."

Section 126 provides that when any goods are confiscated under the Act, such goods thereupon vest in the Central Govt. and the officer adjudging confiscation shall take and hold possession of the confiscated goods.

6. The proviso to sub-sec. (2) of S. 110 empowers the Collector of Customs on sufficient cause being shown to extend the period of six months mentioned in the main provision of that sub-section by a further period not exceeding six months. In the present case such an order of extension was passed on July 22, 1969 and it is common ground that the said order of extension was passed by the Collector of Central Excise without giving any opportunity to any of the petitioners to show cause why the period specified therein should not be extended. In the case of Asst. Collector of Customs v. Malhotra, (AIR 1972 SC 689) the Supreme Court has taken the view that the power under S. 110 (2) is quasi-judicial and that at any rate one requiring a judicial approach. While power of seizure under Section 110 (1) can be exercised on the basis of reasonable belief on the part of the concerned officer, the power of extending the period to give notice under S. 124 (a) is to be exercised only on "sufficient cause being shown." This expression envisages at least some sort of enquiry on facts placed before the authority and determination by him of those facts. Extension order is not to be passed mechanically. The power under sub-sec. (1) cannot be equated with the power under the proviso to sub-sec. (2) of Section 110. The Supreme Court accordingly took the view that the Collector could not extend the period for giving notice of confiscation under S. 124 (a) without giving an opportunity of hearing to the person whose articles are seized. In view of this decision of the Supreme Court the order of the learned Judge quashing the order of the Collector of Central Excise dated July 22, 1969 extending the period for issue of the notice under S. 124 by six months from July 23, 1969 is not challenged, because the said order is passed in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Malhotra's case.

7. Before the learned Judge the validity of the show cause notice issued under S. 124 (a) was challenged on the ground that the Competent Officer concerned could not have reason to believe that the goods seized were liable to confiscation. In view of the circumstances enumerated by him in his judgment that contention has not been canvassed before us. However, it is urged by Mr. Sen before us that upon a proper interpretation of Section 110 seizure of the goods which are liable to confiscation is a condition precedent to initiation of any proceedings for confiscation thereof and if such goods are not either validly seized or are not continued under seizure before issue of a show cause notice under Section 124, then it is not open to the Authority to initiate proceedings by giving a show cause notice under S. 124 (a). He strongly relied upon the provisions of sub-s. (2) of Section 110 and submitted that it is implicit in the provisions of the said section that a show cause notice under Cl. (a) of S. 124 cannot be issued after the expiry of the period of six months from the date of seizure if there is no extension, or after the expiry of the further period of six months if there is an extension as contemplated by the proviso to sub-sec. (2), particularly when the goods are required to be returned to the person from whose possession they were seized. The effect of S. 110 has to be judged in the light of the provisions of Chapter XIII in which this section occurs. Chapter XIII deals with machinery for searches, seizure and arrest with a view to facilitate investigation. Sub-sec. (2) of Section 110 only provides for the consequences that will follow in case goods are seized as contemplated by sub-sec. (2) thereof and no notice in respect thereof is given under Cl. (a) of Sec. 124 within the specified period of six months or within the extended period contained in the proviso. He emphasised the words of the proviso to sub-sec. (2) of S. 110 to the effect that the aforesaid period of six months may on sufficient cause being shown, be extended by the Collector of Customs for a period not exceeding six months. His submission was that the expression "the aforesaid period of six months" related to the period prescribed for issue of a notice under Cl. (a) of S. 124. Thus the provisions of sub-sec. (2) according to his submission are a fetter or limitation upon the exercise of the powers conferred by S. 124 for initiation of proceedings for confiscation of goods or imposition of personal penalty. He also emphasised that even though in sub-sec. (1) of S. 110 the word "may" is used in the expression "he may seize such goods", it should be interpreted as "shall" and seizure is compulsory before any order of confiscation can be passed. He also referred to the provisions of Section 126 which provides inter alia that the officer adjudging confiscation shall take and hold possession of the confiscated goods. According to his submission taking and holding of possession of the confiscated goods anticipate that they are in the custody of the Authority as a result of initial seizure and the provisions of S. 110 have to be construed and given effect to in the light of the chapter in which they are contained. It should not be overlooked that the object underlying S. 110 is not initiation of proceedings for confiscation of goods or for imposition of personal penalty, but is to indicate what will happen if such initiation has not taken place within the time prescribed by the section itself. The consequences of non-initiation of proceedings within the prescribed time are set out in the section and they are that the goods shall be returned to the person from whose possession they were seized. All the provisions of Chapter XIII are steps to facilitate investigation machinery and failure to issue a show cause notice under Cl. (a) of S. 124 within the prescribed time will only result in an obligation on the part of the Customs Authorities to return the goods to the person from whose possession they were seized. There is nothing in the language of S. 110 to indicate that a fetter or limitation is imposed upon the power of the Competent Authority to initiate proceedings under Section 124. On the other hand, S. 124 is contained in Chap. XIV which contains substantive provisions relating to confiscation of goods etc. and imposition of penalty. Under S. 124 issue of a show cause notice prior to passing an order of confiscation or imposition of personal penalty is mandatory, but the language of S. 124 is clear and precise and no restriction or limitation or even a fetter is imposed as regards the time when proceedings may be initiated by issue of a show cause notice. Section 124 prescribes the conditions precedent which are to be fulfilled by the Authority before an order of confiscation of goods or an order imposing any penalty can be passed against any person. These conditions precedent are laid down in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of S. 124 and they are: The owner of the goods or such person who is liable for penalty is to be given a notice in writing informing him of the grounds on which it is proposed to confiscate the goods or to impose a penalty; — secondly, such owner or person is to be given an opportunity of making a representation in writing within such reasonable time as may be specified in the notice against the grounds of confiscation or imposition of penalty mentioned therein and thirdly, such owner or person is to be given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in the matter. None of the three conditions precedent even suggests that there is a limitation on the exercise of the power either as regards the time or existence of seizure. On a plain reading of S. 124 it will be open even to the Competent Officer to pass an order of confiscation of goods or imposing any penalty without seizing any goods or after returning the goods under the proviso to sub-sec. (2) of S. 110 for failure to initiate proceedings within the prescribed time. An investigation machinery cannot be equated with a limitation upon a substantive power contained in S. 124; more so, when the only consequence that follows for failure to give notice within the prescribed time is laid down in Section 110 (2), namely return of goods to the person from whose possession they were seized. Even if the provisions of Ss. 110 and 124 are to be harmoniously read, it will not be possible for us to imply such a fetter, restriction or limitation on the exercise of the powers conferred by S. 124.

8. Reliance was placed by Mr. Sen upon the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Mohammad Hanif v. Collector of Customs and Central Excise, AIR 1973 All 433. In this case the facts are:— Petitioner's goods were seized but no notice under Section 124 was served stating why the goods should not be confiscated; on the petitioner's application claiming back the goods, a show cause notice was served on him without giving him an opportunity of being heard. It was held that the statutory period of six months within which notice must be given could not be extended. There is not much discussion in this judgment. The learned Judge with respect has omitted to consider the scheme of Chapters XIII and XIV of the Act. He has also omitted to take into account the consequences that will follow for failure to give a notice, which are indicated in S. 110 (2) of the Act. Even there is no discussion as regards the unrestricted language used in S. 124. In the absence of proper discussion, with respect, it will not be possible for us to accept the view that has been taken by the learned Judge especially when it is inconsistent with the view that has been expressed by the Supreme Court and by the other High Courts in various decisions.

9. The question was first considered by the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Malhotra's case reported in AIR 1968 Cal 28: (1968 Cri LJ 33). In that case one of the prayers made before the Court was for return of the goods seized. The Court held that the notice under S. 124 (a) not having been issued within six months and the extension having been illegally obtained ex parte the goods were liable to be returned. The notice under S. 124 (a) was also independently challenged in that case and was set aside by that Court not on the ground that it was not issued within six months as prescribed by S. 110 (2), but on a totally different ground, namely, that the notice was materially vague. The question as to what would be the effect of non-issue of a notice under S. 124 (a) within six months on the proceedings for confiscation and imposition of penalty, was specifically considered by the Court. The Division Bench held:

"The next question is as to what is the effect of the second extension being invalidated. So far as Section 110 is concerned, it deals not with the issue of notice but with the seizure of the goods and the return thereof. In other words, if the provisions are not satisfied the goods seized have to be returned. Therefore, since the extension had not been properly granted the appellant is entitled to the return of the goods. That by itself may not invalidate the notice itself. For that purpose, we have to travel to the next point taken, namely the nature of the notice which has been issued under Section 124 of the said Act."

Thus the Division Bench clearly took the view that an invalid extension of time for continuing the goods under seizure does not by itself or automatically invalidate the notice issued under S. 124 (a). The decision in Malhotra's case ultimately came up for consideration before the Supreme Court and the judgment of the Supreme Court is as pointed out above reported in AIR 1972 SC 689. In para. 5 of the judgment the Supreme Court specifically referred to the provisions of Ss. 110 and 124 of the Act and after referring to Section 124 observed:

"the section (Sec. 124) does not lay down any period within which the notice required by it has to be given. The period laid down in Section 110 (2) affects only the seizure of the goods and not the validity of the notice."

10. It was urged by Mr. Mehta on behalf of the petitioners that these are mere passing observations of the Supreme Court and cannot be even regarded as obiter dicta. We are unable to accept this contention. In para. 5 the Supreme Court has considered the provisions of Ss. 110 and 124 of the Act and also the effect thereof. These observations, on the contrary, reaffirm the view that has been taken by the Division Bench, namely, that S. 124 does not lay down any period within which a notice to show cause is required to be given and that the period laid down in S. 110 (2) has relation to the seizure of goods but has nothing to do with the validity of the notice under S. 124. Even if these observations are regarded as passing observations, upon a proper interpretation of Section 110 as well as S. 124 we take the same view as has been taken by the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court and which view is reaffirmed by the above observations of the Supreme Court.

11. The provisions of S. 110 and S. 124 had come up for consideration before the various High Courts where contentions similar to those urged by Mr. Sen were advanced. Reference can be made to the Judgment of the Division Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Collector of Customs and Central Excise v. Amruthalakshmi reported in (1974) 2 Mad LJ 88: (AIR 1975 Mad 43). In that case no notice under Section 124 was given within six months from the date of seizure of the goods effected under S. 110. The Division Bench of the Madras High Court has taken the view that there is no connection between the exercise of power of confiscation of goods and imposing of penalty and the provisions in Section 110 of the Act which required the officer to hand over the goods to the owner after the period specified, if no notice under S. 124 (a) of the Act was given. Section 110 puts a limit to the power of seizure and retention of goods by the officer. When once action was taken under S. 124 before the expiry of the period in S. 110, he might continue to retain the goods. But the failure to give notice under S. 110, did not in any way affect the power of the authorities to proceed with the proceedings for confiscating the goods or imposing any penalty. It is further pointed out that Sections 110 and 124 are entirely independent. Section 110 dealt with the right of the officer to retain the seized goods for a specific period and his duty to return them to the possession of the owner from whom they were seized unless action under Section 124 had been taken. Section 124 prescribed the procedure under which the goods could be confiscated and penalty could be imposed. All that Section 124 required was fulfilling the conditions specified in subcls. (a), (b) and (c). It is further pointed out that there was no substance in the contention that if the notice under S. 110 was not in accordance with law, the authority under Section 124 would have no jurisdiction to proceed with the confiscation proceedings or with the imposition of penalty. The Division Bench took the view that the view taken by the trial Court that notice under Sec. 110 (2) and notice under Section 124 of the Act should be given within six months from the date of seizure of the goods was not correct. It also held that the view that a vested right was created in favour of the owner of the goods when a show cause notice under Section 124 was not given within six months as provided for under S. 110 (2) was also not correct.

12. The same is the view taken by the Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court in the case of J. K. Bardolia Mills v. M. L. Khunger, Dy. Collector of Central Excise and Customs, reported in (1975) 16 Guj LR 119. It is reiterated that the provisions relating to the seizure of the goods and those relating to the confiscation of the goods or imposition of penalty stand on different footing. S. 124 of the Act does not lay down any period within which the notice required by it has to be given. The period laid down in S. 110 (2) of the Act relates only to the seizure of the goods and not the validity of the notice. Once the order of confiscation of the goods is passed under the provisions of S. 111 of the Act the question of return of goods after the expiry of the period mentioned in S. 110 of the Act cannot survive. The Division Bench also pointed out that if the intention of the legislature was to restrict confiscation of goods or imposition of penalty only in respect of the goods which are seized under S. 110 of the Act, the legislature would have used the language qualifying the word "goods" used in Sections 111, 112 and 124 of the Act. The words used in Sections 112 and 124 are "any goods" and "any person." These words are of widest import and they cannot be given a restricted meaning as is sought to be given by the petitioner. There is nothing in these provisions to indicate that the goods in respect of which an order of confiscation or penalty can be passed under Ss. 111 and 112 of the Act must be goods seized under the provisions of S. 110 of the Act. The period of six months mentioned in S. 110 relates only to the seizure of the goods and not to validity of the notice under S. 124 of the Act. Section 124 does not lay down any period within which the notice required by it has to be given.

13. A similar view is taken by a single Judge of the Punjab High Court in the case of Muni Lal v. Collector, Central Excise, Chandigarh, AIR 1975 Punj and Har 130 and later on by a single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in the case of All India General Transport Corporation v. Collector of Central Customs, (1975) 79 Cal WN 663. Thus it is very clear that an invalid order to retain the goods under seizure passed under S. 110 (2) does not affect the validity of a show cause notice issued under S. 124 (a) of the Act.

14. Coming to the appeal preferred by the original respondents, Mr. Joshi has urged two submissions before us. First he submitted that the order passed by the learned Judge for return of the books of account and documents should be modified as the said books of account and documents are either tendered as exhibits in the proceedings before the learned Magistrate or in the proceedings for adjudication under S. 124 or may be required for the said purpose. Sub-s. (3) of S. 110 of the Act empowers a proper officer to seize any documents or things which in his opinion will be useful for or relevant to any proceeding under the Act. The books of account and documents which have been tendered as exhibits in the proceedings before the learned Magistrate or which are required to be tendered as such exhibits, can be retained by the Customs Authorities. The books of account and documents which are already tendered or likely to be tendered as exhibits in the proceedings for confiscation of goods and imposition of personal penalty can equally be retained by the appropriate authorities in view of the said proceedings. The rest of the books of account and documents which are not required to be tendered as exhibits in either of the two proceedings or are irrelevant to the proceedings, will have to be returned to the petitioners because such books of account and documents will not be of any useful purpose to the authorities for either of the proceedings.

15. Mr. Joshi has invited our attention to the events that have taken place after the petition was disposed of by the trial Court in relation to silver, other pieces of bullion and other articles. The learned Judge by his order directed return of silver, station wagon, calculating machine etc. subject to the direction that the said property should not be returned to the petitioners in compliance with his judgment till two weeks from the date of delivery of the judgment so as to give to the original respondents an opportunity to apply for an order under Section 516A of the Code of Criminal Procedure to the learned Magistrate before whom the criminal proceedings were pending. Pursuant to such liberty an application was made on behalf of the prosecution under Section 516A of the Code of Criminal Procedure on July 27, 1972. In the said application, the partnership firm and the two of its partners filed an application before the learned Magistrate inter alia stating that they agreed not to transfer or alienate the seized items without the written permission of the Court. On the said application on August 22, 1972 the learned Magistrate passed the following order:—

"On the accused executing a bond in the sum of Rs. 5,52,000/- with two sureties of equal amount, the complainant shall deliver to them all the silver ingots and the silver pieces seized by him on 23/24-1-1969 and as mentioned in the panchanama and on usual conditions, except samples produced in Court."

"On the accused executing a bond with one surety in the sum of Rupees 15,000/- with one surety of the like amount, the complainant shall deliver to them the Willy's Station Wagon No. MRW-9690 which was seized from the accused and on usual conditions."

The accused shall not deal or dispose of the Station Wagon, silver ingots or silver pieces until the final disposal of this case."

Against the order passed by the learned Magistrate a Criminal revision application being Application No. 682 of 1972 was filed on behalf of the Customs Authorities. That application was disposed of by Bhole, J. by his judgment and order dated Oct. 9, 1972. In the course of his judgment he observed as under:—

"I do not, therefore, think that in the facts and circumstances of this case it is necessary to alter this order passed by the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate. The order in my view will sufficiently take care of the silver and will not in any way jeopardise the criminal proceedings or the proceedings before the Customs Authorities. I will, however, add one more condition. The Customs Authorities shall be given an opportunity to inspect the silver which is in the custody of the respondents in the first week of every month and they shall notify the Customs Authorities as well as the Court below the place where the silver is stored".

By an order dated Oct. 27, 1972 the learned Magistrate directed the Customs Authorities in the criminal case to return the silver bars, silver pieces and ingots lying in the custody of the Department to accused Babubhai Mohanlal Choksey, partner of M/s. Mohanlal Devdanbhai Choksey. It was also confirmed that as per the order two sureties of Rs. 2,76,000/- each have been accepted by it and their bonds have been taken in Court. Pursuant to the said order dated Oct. 27, 1972 the seized silver, excepting samples, was returned to accused Babubhai Mohanlal Choksey, partner of M/s. Mohanlal Devdanbhai Choksey.

16. Apart from these criminal proceedings, proceedings for confiscation of the goods including silver ingots and silver pieces, station wagon and the calculating machine are also initiated by the authorities under the Act and the said proceedings are pending.

17-18. In this view of the matter, the writ of mandamus passed by this Court for return of silver and silver pieces, the station wagon, the calculating machine will have to be modified as per the following directions:—

So far as the bars of silver and silver pieces are concerned, which are already returned to the petitioners under the bond, the same will continue to remain with the petitioners subject to such final orders as may be passed by the Magistrate. In case before the criminal proceedings are over, the proceedings for confiscation of the goods before the Customs Authorities are completed and an order for confiscation is made, then the Customs Authorities will be at liberty to apply to the learned Magistrate to pass appropriate orders in respect of such items of goods or things which may be confiscated. Such compliance with the order of the Magistrate either upon dismissal of the criminal proceedings or upon disposal of the adjudication proceedings under the Act will be subject to the right of the aggrieved party to adopt such legal proceedings as may be available in accordance with law. So far as the calculating machine is concerned, Mr. Mehta on behalf of the petitioners states that the petitioners will produce the same as and when required in adjudication proceedings before the Customs Authorities without prejudice to the petitioners' rights and contentions. So far as the station wagon is concerned, the same continues to remain with the Customs Authorities as no bond contemplated by the order of the Magistrate has been executed by the petitioners. So far as books of account and documents are concerned, the Customs Authorities shall return all such books of account and documents except those which have been tendered as exhibits or which are likely to be tendered as exhibits in the criminal proceedings or in the adjudication before the Customs Authorities.

19. In the result, the Appeal No. 81 of 1972 filed by the Petitioners is dismissed with costs. So far as appeal No. 84 of 1972 filed by the Customs Authorities and Union of India is concerned, the order passed by the trial Court will stand modified as per the directions given above, and both the parties will bear their respective costs of this appeal. Liberty to the respondents' attorneys in appeal No. 81 of 1972 to withdraw the amount of Rs. 500/- deposited by the petitioners as security for costs. Liberty to the Customs Authorities and the Union of India to withdraw the sum of Rs. 500/- deposited by them in appeal No. 84/72 towards security for costs.

Order accordingly.

Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), Ss. 36, 38, 39 — Claim for possession by landlord under S. 38 (2) — Developments subsequent to institution of proceedings should be taken into account. (Civil P. C. (1908), O. 7, R. 7).

Where the petitioner landlord applied for possession for personal cultivation against his tenants under Section 36 read with Section 38 events happening subsequent to making of the application should be taken into account while deciding the claim for possession of the landlord.

(Paras 2, 30)

Changes in the circumstances between the date of notice under Section 38 and the date of application cannot have effect on the rights of the parties. Spl. Civil Appln. No. 3482 of 1958, D/- 14-7-1959 (Bom), Approved.

(Para 6)

Appeals and revisions being continuation of the trial, according to the procedural law in India, subsequent developments, even after the order, shall have to be taken into account. This doctrine is an exception to the ordinary general rule that rights of the litigants should be decided by reference to facts existing on the date of the institution of the proceedings. This doctrine is accepted as part of the procedural law which requires the Courts to take into account such events to mould the relief when the relief claimed becomes inappropriate and also to avoid the multiplicity of proceedings and perpetuation of injustice. AIR 1975 SC 1409, AIR 1974 SC 1178, AIR 1941 FC 5, Rel. on. (Para 14)

The language of Section 38 makes it unnecessary to invoke this doctrine during the period of trial but invoking of this doctrine may become necessary if any such subsequent developments take place after the order but before the appeal or revision is finally disposed of. The Court, however, has to scrupulously guard against the danger of the Court's process being abused by making out a pretence of such developments to drag on the proceedings. The court would indeed be very slow to admit such pleas unless the developments are substantial in nature and prima facie evidence to that effect is cogent. AIR 1975 Bom 137, Approved. (Para 14)

The landlord's right to resume land is dependent on fulfilment of certain conditions. The conditions are in the nature of personal qualifications. Their continuous existence till the final disposal of the application is sine qua non for deflecting from the statutory course. Absence thereof on the date of the order deprives him of such right. That the right is not of a recurring nature is absolutely irrelevant. (Para 16)

Ordinary rule of rights getting crystallized on the date of application is inapplicable to proceedings under Section 38 in view of the scheme under which rights do not get crystallized till the date of the order. (Para 17)

The Act is meant avowedly for the protection of the tillers and the actual cultivators. Landlords intending to personally cultivate are intended to be benefited only if such intention is genuine and lasting. The situation as on the date of the order being reflective of such intention, becomes relevant. The landlord cannot claim equality as long as he does not happen to be a cultivator. This apart, whatever inequality exists is made even immune from constitutional attack under Art. 31A of the Constitution. (Para 19)

Preliminary decisions can also be assailed in appeal or in revision. If new facts come to light or some material developments take place subsequently, there is nothing provided in sub-s. (3) of S. 36 which can prevent consideration thereof or reconsideration of the issues so decided in the light of these facts.

R. R. Deshpande and S. R. Deshpande (In S. C. As. Nos. 535, 540, 541, 544, 545 and 549 of 1968) and J. N. Chandurkar (In S. C. A. Nos. 660 and 663 of 1968), for Petitioners; J. N. Chandurkar (for No. 1) In S. C. As. Nos. 535, 540, 541, 544, 545 and 549 of 1968 and A. S. Deshpande (for No. 1) In S. C. A. No. 660 of 1968, for Respondents. R. N. Deshpande and S. N. Kherdekar as Interveners in all S. C. As.

DESHPANDE J.:— All these companion matters raise a common question of some importance. The question was referred to the Division Bench on 9-2-1972 and then to the Full Bench on 13-8-1974. In all these petitions, the petitioner is the same landlord. His application for possession dated 3-10-1961 after attaining majority on 4-10-1960 against his different tenants under S. 36 read with S. 38 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"), for personal cultivation were rejected by the Additional Tahsildar on 30-5-1964 and the order is confirmed in appeal and revision. According to the concurrent orders, the petitioner failed to prove that the lands sought to be resumed constituted the principal source of his income. This finding, among others, is based on the fact that the petitioner acquired about 40 acres of land and sums of Rupees 20,000/-, Rs. 7,000/- and Rs. 2,000/- on different dates during the pendency of the proceeding. In spite of some contrary observations of the Revenue Tribunal, it is not disputed before us that this property was acquired by the petitioner after institution of proceeding. According to the petitioner, such subsequent developments cannot be taken into account. Opinion on this point was found to have been divided. Hence this reference to the Full Bench.

2. The question referred to the Full Bench may be quoted as follows:

"Whether events happening subsequent to either giving of the notice under S. 38 or making of the application under S. 36 read with S. 39 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, should be taken into account while deciding the claim for possession of the landlord?"

3. Now, these are applications under S. 38 (2) of the Act. The respondents are not the occupancy tenants. The landlord can terminate the tenancy either under sub-sec. (1) or (2) by (a) serving notice and (b) making application for possession before the date or the period prescribed. But this can be done only if he (i) requires the land (ii) requires bona fide, and (iii) requires for personal cultivation. Mere requirement of land is not enough, nor even mere bona fide requirement, unless the same is for personal cultivation. Even if such requirement exists, such resumption still depends on a few additional conditions enumerated in S. 38 (3), namely, that (i) he does not have any land under his personal cultivation and if he has any, it is less than three family holdings, (ii) such land happens to be his principal source of income, (iii) he is shown to be the holder in the record-of-rights and on the specified date, (iv)

the tenants a liable to be affected are comparatively junior. All the conditions are cumulative. Sub-sections (4) to (6) deal with the area of land required to be left with the tenant, immunity from further resumption and apportionment of rent. Landlords owners of land after August 1953 are prevented from resuming the land if the tenant had already become a protected lessee before the date of his becoming owner.

4. Certain salient features of the Act shall have to be borne in mind to ascertain the true impact of these conditions. The right of the landlords to resume their lands under the ordinary law of the land is subjected to several limitations under the Act. This piece of legislation reflects the agrarian policy of the State formulated in compliance with the Directive Principles of the Constitution. Firstly, the underlying object is to eliminate the absentee landlord from the scene step by step and ensure transfer of the land to the tiller finally. Secondly, the rights of the persons personally cultivating the land are preferred and precedence is given to them in all respects till the ownership gets transferred to them. Thirdly some of the provisions of the Act are based on the hypothesis that an area of three family holdings satisfies the needs of an agriculturist family, absorbs its cultivating capacity, enables it to concentrate and improve the yield of the land and discourages it from exploiting the labour of others. This limit also appears to have been aimed at preventing the concentration of land in the same hands and facilitating distribution of such surplus land on lease to the needy under Section 84 of the Act. The Act itself does not provide directly for acquiring land in excess of three family holdings from the holders. However, acquisition of ownership by the tenant under Ss. 42, 46 and 49A or resumption of land from the tenant in addition to other restrictions is limited to such area as would, together with the land already under personal cultivation, not exceed the area of three family holdings. Even after surrender of land by the tenant, the landlord is not permitted under S. 21 to retain area more than is necessary to make up the total of three family holdings for his personal cultivation, the remaining area being treated as surplus. Fourthly, after the Tillers' Day all lands excepting the categories covered by Chapters IV to VI are intended to be statutorily disposed of either by transferring the same to the tenants as owners to make up the total of three family holdings for their personal cultivation under S. 42 or 49A (4), or failing that, to restore to the landlord under S. 43 (14-A) read with Section 46 and Ss. 21 and 49A (5) read with Section 21, and failing that, to transfer to the pool of surplus land for disposal under Section 84 of the Act. The provisions of Ss. 38, 39, 39A, by way of exceptions, contemplate deflection of this statutory course for the benefit of the landlords, who used the land for their maintenance and can personally cultivate the same. On the existence of the above conditions and on compliance with the requirements of these provisions, depends the deprivation of the tenants of their rights in the land or deflecting of the statutory course. Chapter III-A provides for resumption by the members of the Armed Forces on more liberal terms. The true implications and dimensions of these conditions for resumption of the land under Section 38, or even of similar conditions under Ss. 39 and 39A can be better grasped if this legislative policy is borne in mind.

5. Acquisition of property including agricultural one subsequent to the date of application has its impact on bona fide requirement and extent of the resumable land as also on its being the principal source of income. That is why Shri R. R. Deshpande, the learned Advocate for the petitioner, strenuously urged that events subsequent to the institution of the proceedings cannot be taken into account as rights of the parties ought to be decided by reference to facts as in existence at the initiation thereof.

6. The situation as on the date of notice does not appear to be of any significance. There is no obligation to apply before the last date prescribed for making applications, nor the section requires any period to be mentioned in the notice of termination. Theoretically, the landlord terminating the tenancy by notice on the day when the Act was brought into force in 1958 could have chosen not to apply till 31-3-1961. Even the termination of the tenancy does not become operative till, in addition to giving notice, an application for possession is made in terms of the language of this section. Changes in the circumstances, between the date of notice and the date of application thus cannot have effect on the rights of the parties.

7. The situation on the date of application, however, undoubtedly is material. Ordinarily rights of the litigants are determined at the trial by reference to the facts as they exist on the date of the institution of the lis. If the required conditions are found not to be existing on that date, the landlord would be disentitled to make any such application for possession and this will disable him from preventing the land being disposed of in terms of the provisions of Sections 41 to 50 of the Act. The remote possibility of the landlord getting the land under S. 49A (5) read with Section 21 due to tenant's disability to purchase is not relevant in this context. The landlord would not be able to defeat the statutory disposal of the land without possessing these qualifications on the date of the application. While considering whether these conditions exist or not, possession of precarious, casual or drying sources of income, shall have to be excluded from consideration and foreseeable circumstances, even though not in existence actually, but having a bearing on these conditions, shall have to be necessarily taken into account.

8. Would the existence of these conditions be necessary on the date of the order also? The date of the order has got to be equated with the date of the trial for practical purposes. The salient features of the Act discussed above, make it difficult to answer this question in the negative. Thus, the disability to personally cultivate, even in terms of the broad definition of "to cultivate personally" in the Act or discontinuance of the requirement of the landlord or, such lands ceasing to be the principal source of income, or land more than three family holdings being already under personal cultivation of the landlord on the date of the order, is bound to disentitle him from claiming resumption. If the tenant cannot be deprived of his statutory rights in the land without all such personal qualifications, continuous existence thereof must be deemed to be indispensable till the date of the order. Section 36 (3) of the Act empowers the Tahsildar to pass such order on the application under Section 38, as he deems fit. It will not be possible for the Tahsildar to pass an order for resumption in favour of the landlord even when he finds that all or any of the conditions do not exist on the date of the order. He would ill afford to ignore that such restoring the land to the undeserving landlord would deprive the tenant of his rights in the land without the required statutory basis and defeat the legislative intent and the policy.

9. That the need of the landlord to personally cultivate land must exist even after the order of possession is made, can be gathered from the scheme of S. 52 of the Act. The tenant is enabled thereunder to claim back possession, if the landlord fails to personally cultivate the land after getting such possession. He is enabled even to claim damages from him from the date of such failure. Such failure is assumed by the legislation to indicate the absence of the landlord's need of the land. It is only when the doctrine of repose intervenes after the expiry of 12 years from the date of possession that the landlord is relieved of such obligations. As held in Godavaribai Jayaram v. Kashiram, 57 Bom LR 1111: (AIR 1956 Bom 752) the landlord gets the resumption order on the representation that all these conditions exist and he is so qualified to claim resumption. Failure to personally cultivate the land is considered to be the breach of such representation. This also indicates the legislative intent of the necessity of existence of these conditions, at any rate, till the order is made.

10. Section 38 (3) (a) permits the landlord to resume three family holdings if he does not happen to have any land under his personal cultivation at all on the date of notice or the expiry of the period thereof. We have already indicated how the situation as on the date of notice is irrelevant. The same is true of the position as on the date of expiry of the notice, as the section does not require mentioning of any period as such in the notice. This phraseology fitted with Section 38 as it stood before amendment and is out of tune with the amended section. Reference can, appropriately and harmoniously, in the present context, be construed as being intended to the date of the application. Clause (b) then enables the landlord to resume so much area as would make up the total area under his personal cultivation to three family holdings. This implies exclusion of the area already under personal cultivation from the permissible total of such three family holdings. Clause (b) does not specifically indicate if the reference to the land already under personal cultivation is intended to the one specified in Cl. (a) or to the land that may come under his personal cultivation subsequent to these dates but before the date of order. According to Shri R. R. Deshpande, reading of both the clauses would indicate that only the land on the dates mentioned in Cl. (a) is liable to be excluded while determining the resumable area and not the land that may come under his personal cultivation in any way otherwise subsequent to these dates. The contention is not doubt attractive and made plausible because of some ambiguity. The same, however is not acceptable to us. Firstly, all the clauses of S. 38 (3) are independent of each other. There is no reason why these two clauses alone could have been intended by the legislature to be so read together. Secondly, there does not appear to be any rational basis for distinction between the land already under personal cultivation on the dates in Cl. (a) and the land acquired thereafter, in the matter of exclusion from the limits of three family holdings. Thirdly, the contemplated ceiling under these clauses is not so much on the area to be resumed as on the area to be possessed, though incidentally it goes to determine the area to be resumed. It is aimed at ensuring that resumption does not result in the landlord coming into possession of in all more than three family holdings including the land already under personal cultivation. This is just in keeping with the legislative intent as reflected in S. 21 of the Act. This would emphasise how consideration of the holdings of the landlord under personal cultivation as on the date of the order including the subsequently acquired land is imperative under these clauses. In fact, the limits imposed under these clauses as also under sub-sec. (4) can be worked out only on the date of the order and that too appropriately by reference to the position as it stands on that date.

11. The third condition, as to the land to be resumed, becoming the principal source of income, also must be in existence both on the date of the application as also on the date of the order for the same reasons. This condition further indicates the anxiety of the Legislature not to deprive the tenant of his rights in the land unless his landlord requires the land for his main and not subsidiary source of income. Though some estimate of such comparative income by reference to the time of application is inevitable, any comparison of income from the existing permanent sources of income with the income of the land to be resumed would become really unrealistic if it is not made with reference to the period as nearer to the date of order as possible. This is an additional reason why the time when the order comes to be passed becomes all the more relevant. This consideration also appears to have weighed with the Division Bench of Chainani C. J. and V. S. Desai J. while deciding Special Civil Appln. No. 3482 of 1958 decided on 14-7-1959 (Bom) (Kunjilal v. Bhivsan). The date for ascertaining the comparative incomes, in the opinion of the Division Bench, "cannot, therefore, be earlier than the date on which the Mamlatdar makes an order for possession of the land in favour of the landlord." With respect, we find ourselves in agreement with this view. Our attention was not drawn to any contrary view on this point. The view seems to have stood the test of time. There is not much difference of substance in the phraseology of the repealed Section 34 (2) (c) and the substituted Section 31A (c) of the Bombay Enactment one saying "the income by the cultivation of such land will be the main source of the income of the landlord for his maintenance" and the other saying "the income by the cultivation of the land of which he is entitled to take possession is the principal source of his maintenance." The wording of S. 31A (c) of the Bombay Act is identical with Section 38 (3) (c) of this Act.

12. This rule cannot also be different with regard to even the small holders who are exempted from the conditions of this clause if they are shown to be earning their livelihood principally by agriculture or agricultural labour.

13. In the very nature of things, the conditions in Clauses (d) and (e) in sub-section (3) of Section 38 ought to exist on the date of the application as also on the date of the order. Thus, the conditions entitling the landlord to resume land from his tenant must be in existence both on the date of the application as also on the date of the order. That the conditions are relaxed when the tenant is found unable to exercise his statutory right of purchase under Ss. 43 (14-A) and 49A (5) read with S. 21 is not relevant. In that case, the land can also be resumed by the landlord for personal cultivation to make up the total area under his personal cultivation to three family holdings, without proof of other conditions. Where, however, there is a competition between his need and the statutory rights of the tenant, continuous existence of these conditions till the date of order is made inevitable. This appears to be so on the plain language of S. 38 when considered in the context of the salient features of the Act. Absence of these conditions has the effect of altering the rights of the landlord as these existed on the date of the application, and the relief claimed in the application is liable to become inappropriate and, therefore, liable to be rejected. Granting such a relief would indeed result in perpetuation of injustice and also driving the tenant to the remedy under S. 52 of the Act and resulting in the multiplicity of proceedings.

14. Appeals and revisions being continuation of the trial, according to the procedural law in India, subsequent developments, even after the order, shall have to be taken into account. This doctrine is an exception to the ordinary general rule that rights of the litigants should be decided by reference to facts existing on the date of the institution of proceedings. This doctrine is accepted as part of the procedural law which requires the Courts to take into account such events to mould the relief when the relief claimed becomes inappropriate and also to avoid the multiplicity of proceedings and perpetuation of injustice. It will be enough to refer to the cases of P. Venkateswarlu v. Motor & General Traders, (AIR 1975 SC 1409), Shikhar-chand v. D. J. P. Karini Sabha, (AIR 1974 SC 1178), and Lachmeshwar Prasad v. Keshwar Lal, (AIR 1941 FC 5) in this context. The language of Section 38 makes it unnecessary to invoke this doctrine during the period of trial but invoking of this doctrine may become necessary if any such subsequent developments take place after the order but before the appeal or revision is finally disposed of. The Court, however, has to scrupulously guard against the danger of the Court's process being abused by making out a pretence of such developments to drag on the proceedings. The court would indeed be very slow to admit such pleas unless the developments are of substantial in nature and prima facie evidence to that effect is cogent.

15. This view is also in accord with the recent judgment of the Division Bench (Deshmukh and Shah JJ.) of our Court in Hariba v. Motibai, 1974 Mah LJ 823 : (AIR 1975 Bom 137). It is held therein that on the death of the landlord during the pendency of the proceedings under Section 33B of the Bombay Act for resumption of land for personal cultivation, fresh inquiry into the entitlements of the heirs of the landlord is imperative and would become necessary. It is obvious that this could not have been done without invoking this doctrine, though no reference is made to it specifically.

16. Shri R. R. Deshpande, however, contends that the doctrine cannot be applicable to the cases under the Tenancy Act when the right conferred upon the landlord is not of a recurring nature. It is true that the landlord cannot make any application after the Tillers' Day if he was disqualified till the previous day but becomes so qualified after the expiry thereof. He should not be deprived of this right, contends Shri Deshpande if subsequent developments disqualify him when he was qualified on the date of application. It is difficult to accede to this contention. The landlord's right to resume land is dependent on fulfilment of certain conditions. The conditions are in the nature of personal qualifications. Their continuous existence till the final disposal of the application is sine qua non for deflecting the statutory course. Absence thereof on the date of the order deprives him of such right. That the right is not of a recurring nature is absolutely irrelevant.

17. Shri Deshpande also contends that the landlord's right to resume land gets crystallized on the date of the notice itself, and therefore, the subsequent developments cannot have the effect of unsettling such rights. The contention is thoroughly misconceived. In the first place, even in terms of Section 38, the termination of tenancy takes place on giving notice and making application and not on giving notice alone. Secondly, this only puts an end to contractual tenancy. The tenant still gets protection of the statute and such termination does not become effective till the date of order for possession. Termination even cannot be said to have become operative strictly. Ordinary rule of rights getting crystallized on the date of application is inapplicable to proceedings under Section 38 in view of the scheme under which rights do not get crystallized till the date of the order.

18. His contention that the provision is intended for the benefit of the landlord is true to a certain extent. But benefit thereunder is intended for a needy landlord and is made dependent on continuous existence of certain conditions. The same cannot be relaxed without defeating the object of the statute.

19. Shri Deshpande contends that on our construction, the tenant alone stands to benefit from such subsequent events, while the landlord would invariably be the loser. Such an unreasonable construction of any statute contends Shri Deshpande, is impermissible. That our above interpretation operates harshly and even inequitably against the landlord is indisputable. But this is implied in the very scheme of the Act and is not the result of our interpretation. The Act is meant avowedly for the protection of the tillers and the actual cultivators. Landlords intending to personally cultivate are intended to be benefited only if such intention is genuine and lasting. The situation as on the date of the order being reflective of such intention, becomes relevant. The landlord cannot claim equality as long as he does not happen to be a cultivator. This apart, whatever inequality exists is made even immune from constitutional attack under Art. 31A. We should not, however, be assumed to have held that subsequent developments would in no case benefit the landlord. If he was not qualified to claim resumption on the date of application, subsequent developments so qualifying him cannot be of any avail to him and hence cannot be relevant. If, however, he is so qualified on the date of application, subsequent developments, even if favourable to him, shall have to be taken into account unless the same are shown to be the result of his own manipulations or wrongs. This indeed is implicit in holding that situation as on the date of the order also is relevant.

20. Shri Deshpande then contends that taking subsequent developments into account at any stage may result in unfairness, as the landlord may not get any opportunity to explain the same. It is of course a factor which every Court or Authority taking the subsequent developments into account shall have to bear in mind. In fairness, every litigant must get an opportunity to explain every adverse subsequent development. Whenever any such development is brought to the notice of the Court, the issue arising out of the same shall have to be properly tried. And as indicated earlier, the Court trying the case would no doubt have to be very careful in guarding against frivolous pleas and furnishing this as a handle to prolong litigation. It shall have to be borne in mind that taking into account such subsequent developments is analogous to admitting additional evidence and pleas based thereon cannot be allowed as a matter of course.

21. Shri R. R. Deshpande also contends that in either case this principle cannot have any application to the cases covered by Ss. 39 and 39A of the Tenancy Act, the provisions thereunder being intended specifically for the benefit of small landholders. Under both these sections, landlords having only one, or one third of family holding and possessing certain other qualifications are enabled to make an application for resumption even after the Tillers' Day i.e. 1-4-1961, the Tiller's Day having been extended for their tenants. They are also enabled to resume up to one family holding without ensuring retention of any area for the tenants as under S. 38 (4) of the Act. The nature and the underlying object of the conditions on which such landlords can resume lands from their tenants, though different in details, are in essence the same as under S. 38 of the Act. There is nothing in any of these provisions militating against consideration of subsequent events which, as indicated earlier, is essential to comply with the legislative policy. It is true that in the event of acquisition of larger areas of lands by such landlords during the pendency of the proceedings, they may cease to be such small landholders. The tenants of these landholders cannot be prevented from insisting on taking these subsequent developments into account for their protection. In that event, the Courts shall have to take them into account and, to dispose of those applications as if they were made under Section 38 of the Act. Acquisition of further land may at best prevent them from claiming relief as such small land-holders. This, however, will not by itself result in the rejection of the applications outright as apprehended by Shri Deshpande, even though the applications were made long after the date prescribed under S. 38. The applications being competent on the date when they were made and the authority having jurisdiction to entertain them at the relevant time, the landlord would not stand divested of his rights to resume merely because of his subsequent acquisition of more lands. Its only effect will be that the claims would be subjected to the limitations prescribed under S. 38 of the Act.

22. Shri R. R. Deshpande and Shri Chandurkar drew our attention to several cases supporting their respective contentions. In his exhaustive judgment in the case of Laxman v. Dadarao (Spl. C. A. No. 617 of 1970 decided on 30-8-1971 (Bom)) Chandurkar J. has referred to all these cases. It will be enough to refer to the judgment of Tarkunde and Gokhale JJ. in Madhav Vithoba v. Dhondudas, 1966 Mah LJ 827: (AIR 1967 Bom 250) which is extensively quoted by Chandurkar J. and mainly relied on by Shri Deshpande before us. In Madhav Vithoba's case a limited question was if the land acquired by the tenant subsequent to the institution of the proceeding can be taken into account for fixing the resumable area under S. 33B (5) of the Bombay Act. Ordinarily, holding of the tenant or his subsequent acquisition is never relevant under the Tenancy Act and the landlord cannot have any claim or interest over the tenant's land. However, S. 33B (5) (b) contemplates division of the land in dispute between landlord and tenant in such manner as to leave both of them in possession of equal holdings. Actual application of this provision to a variety of setup of facts has always been found to be a very difficult problem and in spite of its reference to the Full Bench twice, it still eludes perfect solution. The construction placed on the peculiar wording of this clause necessitates taking into account other lands under personal cultivation of the landlord and the tenant. In order presumably to prevent further encroachment on the rights of the tenant under such construction the Division Bench held that any subsequent acquisition of land by the tenant and consequentially by the landlord cannot be taken into account u/s. 33B (5). This limited proposition on the construction of S. 33B (5) of the Bombay Act by itself does not admit of any dispute. But holding that the doctrine of taking subsequent events into account to mould relief according to the altered rights is inapplicable to the tenancy cases, appears to us to be wide of the mark and beyond the requirements of the limited question arising therein. In application of the above doctrine is sought to be justified on three grounds, namely, that (i) right is not of recurring nature, (ii) notice of termination becomes operative on the required conditions from the date of its issue, and (iii) statutory rights under the Special Tenancy Act are different in nature from the rights under general law. Shri Deshpande adopted the same reasoning and we have already indicated why the first two of the three reasons are unacceptable to us. We have not been able to trace any reason in the judgment why the cases under the Tenancy Act can be excluded from the above doctrine. Such a view is contrary to the ratio of the Supreme Court judgment in the case of P. Venkateswarlu, (AIR 1975 SC 1409) (supra) in which this doctrine is applied to the case arising out of Rent Control legislation. With respect, the view adopted in Madhav Vithoba's case on this larger question must be held to be incorrect, though its interpretation of S. 33B (5) (b) is unexceptionable. This apart, the Division Bench distinguished the ratio in Kunjilal v. Bhivsan, Spl. Civil Appln. No. 3482 of 1958, D/- 14-7-1959 (Bom) (supra) on the ground that it was based on the working of S. 34 (2) (c) of the Bombay Act. We have already indicated how the ratio of Kunjilal's case Spl. Civil Appln. No. 3482 of 1958, D/- 14-7-1959 (Bom) has relevance to the point arising in this case. Madhav Vithoba's case is thus distinguishable.

23. Chandurkar J. also relied on the reference made in S. 39 (2) (a) to the holding of the landlord on the date of his application, which has to be taken into account, to determine the area to be resumed. Reference to the dates, in this clause cannot have different incidence from such reference to the dates under Section 38 (3) (a). We have already discussed its effect. Such reference to the dates, in our opinion, does not make any difference to the point under consideration.

24. There is no doubt that a few of the observations made by Deshmukh J. in Ramkrishna v. Laxmibai (Spl. C. A. No. 283 of 1966 decided on 10/11th Oct. 1967 (Bom)) support the contention of Shri Deshpande. The case with which Deshmukh J. was dealing however, is distinguishable on facts. The landlord therein had filed an application for possession against several tenants. Some of the tenants gave up the fight and the landlord got possession of the land with them, while others pursued their remedies up to the High Court. The tenants contended before Deshmukh J. that the income of the lands so already resumed by the landlord also ought to be taken into account to determine if lands still sought to be resumed, happened to be the principal source of income or not. The learned Judge held—and in our opinion, rightly—that it was in effect a trial of one application by the landlord against all his tenants and ordinarily all the applications should have been consolidated for trial. The income from all the sources of the landlord at the relevant time required comparison with the income of all the lands sought to be resumed. The question of comparing the income afresh of the lands, still remaining unresumed due to pendency of proceedings, with the added income of these very lands accidentally resumed earlier in almost the same proceedings could never have arisen. Apart from this not being a new or un contemplated subsequent development in the true sense of the term, any such process involves an element of incongruity and inconsistency. Such acquisition of land is distinctly different from the one by surrender under Section 21 or in wholly different and unconnected proceedings or by inheritance, or otherwise. However, the learned Judge also sought to fortify his conclusion by observing that subsequent events cannot be taken into account under any circumstances. With respect, this does not appear to be correct. Now, it is true that mostly the trial gets protracted due to the defects in the machinery of the Court and sins thereof should not ordinarily be allowed to visit the litigants. Such contingencies would never arise if the trial is concluded on the very date of application. Unfortunately, however, the trial does get prolonged and where relief depends on the continuous existence of the conditions under the terms of the statute, absence thereof on the date of order cannot be just winked at. Such inevitable delay rather results in revealing the true character of the claim which speedy trial perhaps prevents. The case of Hariba v. Motibai, (AIR 1975 Bom 137) (supra) is illustrative of how consideration of subsequent events becomes indispensable to effectuate the legislative intent.

25. The Division Bench decision in Special Civil Applns. Nos. 1263 of 1961; 943 of 1960 and 785 of 1962, decided respectively on 16-3-1962, 9-1-1964 and 12-2-1963 (Bom) stand slightly on different footing. Subsequent developments in the above cases were being relied on to clothe the landlords with the right of resumption which they did not possess on the dates of applications according to the facts then existing. As indicated, the tenant's rights in the land cannot be allowed to be impaired by any such subsequent developments, clothing the landlord with entitlements which he lacked on the crucial date.

26. Reliance also was placed on the judgment in the case of Atma-ram Onkar v. Ananda, (1970) 72 Bom LR 287 (decided by one of us, i.e. Deshpande J.). Two subsequent events were sought to be relied on in the case, one being the order of the Commissioner passed under S. 88D of the Bombay Act cancelling 88C certificate, and other being increase in the income of the landlord. The order of the Commissioner was found to be without jurisdiction and hence was excluded from consideration. Reference to the above doctrine is only a part of the reasoning to support such exclusion. It was, however, held that the increase in income could be taken into account. The ratio of the case thus does not help the petitioner.

27. We allowed Shri R. N. Deshpande and Shri S. N. Kherdekar, on their request, to intervene as the point arising in this reference appeared to us to be of some importance. The main contention of Shri R. N. Deshpande is that the doctrine of taking subsequent events into account is based on the provisions of O. 7, R. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure and can have no application whatsoever to the statutory rights created under the Tenancy Act. The contention appears to us to be ill-founded. It would be enough to refer to the observations of Krishna Iyer J. made in a case arising out of Rent Act proceedings i.e. in P. Venkateswarlu v. Motor & General Traders (AIR 1975 SC 1409):

"It is basic to our processual jurisprudence that the right to relief must be judged to exist as on the date a suitor institutes the legal proceeding. Equally clear is the principle that procedure is the handmaid and not the mistress of the judicial process. If a fact, arising after the lis has come to court and has a fundamental impact on the right to relief or the manner of moulding it, is brought diligently to the notice of the tribunal, it cannot blink at it or be blind to events which stultify or render inept the decretal remedy. Equity justifies bending the rules of procedure, where no specific provision or fairplay is violated, with a view to promote substantial justice — subject of course, to the absence of other disentitling factors or just circumstances."

A little later the learned Judge observed:

"If the litigation pends, the power exists, absent other special circumstances repelling resort to that course in law or justice..... We affirm the proposition that for making the right or remedy claimed by the party, just and meaningful, as also legally and factually in accord with the current realities, the court can, and in many cases must, take cautious cognisance of events and developments subsequent to the institution of the proceeding provided the rules of fairness to both sides are scrupulously obeyed."

We must, however, hasten to repeat that taking into account the subsequent developments in the present case during the pendency of the trial does not depend so much on this doctrine of processual jurisprudence as on the plain language of the statute itself. Shri R. N. Deshpande also is right in contending that while construing the provisions it matters little whether the construction benefits the landlord or the tenant. We have already discussed what the true impact of the phraseology used in this context is.

28. Shri Kherdekar drew our attention to the definitions in Sections 2 (21), 2 (16), 2 (13) and 2 (12) of the words "person", "joint family", "family holding", and "personal cultivation" and contended that if these definitions are taken into account properly, consideration of subsequent developments in the manner which we are suggesting would be rendered improper. We have not been able to see what really turns on these definitions. He particularly drew our attention to sub-s. (3) of S. 36 which requires the Tahsildar in all applications under S. 38 to frame preliminary issues with regard to the matters mentioned in Cls. (c) and (d) of sub-s. (3) and Cls. (b), (c) and (d) of sub-sec. (4) of S. 38. We are unable to see how this can make any difference to the legal position. Such preliminary decisions can also be assailed in appeal or in revision. If new facts come to light or some material developments take place subsequently, it is difficult to see how anything provided in sub-sec. (3) of S. 36 can prevent consideration thereof or reconsideration of the issues so decided in the light of these facts. Shri Kherdekar could not dispute that facts not brought to light for some reason or other can also be taken into account by the trial or the appellate Court if a case for that is properly made out. We are unable to see on what footing the evidence with regard to subsequent developments can be shut out.

29. Shri R. R. Deshpande wanted to rely on the judgment of the Supreme Court in Nathia Agarwalla v. Jahanara Begum (AIR 1967 SC 92) in support of his contention that interpretation of words and phrases in one Act would not necessarily be a guide for interpreting words and phrases in different Acts. The proposition appears to us to be unexceptionable, though it does not have any relevance to the point discussed above.

30. The answer to the question referred to us is thus in the affirmative. The cases will now be placed before a single Judge for disposal according to law.

Answered in the affirmative.

KANTAWALA, C. J.

Yasin Dadu Patil, Appellant v. Kasim Babalal Patil, Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 1434 of 1969, D/- 9-12-1976.*

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 8, S. 11 — Second suit for redemption — Payment not made in accordance with decree passed in earlier redemption suit — Mortgagor not debarred in earlier proceedings from right to redeem — Second suit is not barred. (T. P. Act (1882), S. 60) — (Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (1879), Section 15-B).

*(Against decision of N. B. Naik Dist. J. at Sangli in Civil Appeal No. 394 of 1968).

If the mortgagor obtains a decree for redemption and the decree does not provide that in default of payment by the mortgagor he shall be debarred of all right to redeem, the right to redeem is not extinguished and the mortgagor can file another suit for redemption. AIR 1934 PC 205, Rel. on. (Para 5)

Unless a specific order as contemplated by O. 34, R. 8 (3) is passed, a mortgagor or his successor-in-interest is never debarred from his right to redeem simply because a decree in an earlier suit for redemption was passed with the terms whereof he did not comply. Unless a decree as contemplated by R. 8 (3) is passed debarring the mortgagor from the right to redeem, the right to redeem will always subsist unless it is extinguished by acts of parties. (Para 5)

Section 15-B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1879, does not contain any provision overriding the provisions of O. 34, R. 8 or the right to redeem defined in S. 60 of the T. P. Act. On the contrary S. 15-B is enacted for the facility of a debtor rather than for depriving him of a right which otherwise is available to him in law. It cannot be interpreted to mean that it curtails the right which is normally available to a mortgagor. (Para 6)

When the earlier suit for redemption was instituted by the mortgagor what was in issue then was whether the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem and when the subsequent suit for redemption was filed the issue was whether the mortgagor was at the relevant time entitled to redeem. These issues being separate, until the right to redeem is extinguished as contemplated by Section 60 of the T. P. Act or O. 34, R. 8 the right to redeem will continue to subsist notwithstanding the institution of an earlier suit for redemption and passing of a decree therein. (Para 6)

S. C. Pratap, for Appellant; M. A. Rane, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The plaintiff has filed this appeal against a concurrent decree passed by both the Courts dismissing his suit on a preliminary ground that the present suit was not maintainable in view of a decree passed in an earlier suit for redemption being Civil Suit No. 235 of 1945. One Shekan Kasim Patil was the owner of survey No. 16/6 admeasuring 39 gunthas situate at village Kundalwadi, Taluka Walva, District Sangli. By a usufructuary mortgage dated June 6, 1927 Shekan Kasim Patil mortgaged this property to one Aba Farid Bargir to secure repayment of Rs. 150/- borrowed by him. Aba Farid Bargir, the mortgagee, by a registered deed of assignment dated May 25, 1938 assigned his interest in the mortgage in favour of defendant Kashim Patil. The plaintiff purchased the equity of redemption from Shekan Kasim Patil by a registered deed dated 26-10-1956. The plaintiff filed a suit in the year 1967 for redemption of this mortgage. It was inter alia contended by the defendant in the written statement that the original mortgagor Shekan Kasim Patil had filed a suit for redemption against the defendant being suit No. 235 of 1945. In that suit on November 22, 1946 a decree to the following effect was passed:—

"The plaintiff do pay to the defendants Nos. 2 to 7 Rs. 140/- together with interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum from the date of the decree till satisfaction by two equal annual instalments. The first instalment to be paid in the month of April 1947 and the second in April 1948.

In default of payment of any instalment as aforesaid the said defendants shall realise the same by sale of a sufficient portion of the mortgaged property under Sec. 15-B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (hereinafter referred to as "the Act")

The plaintiff do recover possession of the suit land from the defendants forthwith. The plaintiff do pay the costs of defendant No. 3 and bear his own. The costs to be paid along with the aforesaid instalments." The payment in accordance with this decree was not made.

2. Before the trial Court a preliminary issue was raised whether the present suit was competent in view of the decision in Civil Suit No. 235 of 1945. The trial Court took the view that the suit was not maintainable and that finding of the trial Court was confirmed in appeal by the learned District Judge, Sangli. It is against this concurrent decree passed by both the Courts on the preliminary issue that the present appeal is filed by the plaintiff.

3. Mr. Pratap on behalf of the plaintiff submitted that both the Courts were in error in taking the view that by reason of the decree passed in the earlier Civil Suit No. 235 of 1945 and the payment not being made in accordance therewith, the present suit was not maintainable. His submission is that having regard to the provisions of S. 60 of the T. P. Act unless the equity of redemption is extinguished by act of parties or by the decree of a Court the right to redeem will survive and the fact of mere institution of an earlier suit for redemption will not come in the way of the mortgagor or his successor-in-title filing a fresh suit for redemption. He submitted that the right to redeem in the present case has not been extinguished either by act of the parties or as a result of the decree passed in the earlier suit and therefore a second suit for redemption is not barred. Mr. Rane, on the other hand, on behalf of the defendant submitted that in view of the provisions of Section 15-B of the Act when the decree was passed on November 22, 1946 in Civil Suit No. 235 of 1945 a final decree was passed debarring the mortgagor from the right to redeem the mortgaged property and therefore a subsequent suit for redemption could not be instituted. He, therefore, submitted that both the Courts were right in taking the view that the present suit instituted by the plaintiff was not maintainable in view of the earlier decree passed in Civil Suit No. 235 of 1945.

4. Section 60 of the T. P. Act provides for right of mortgagor to redeem. That section inter alia provides that the right of a mortgagor to redeem will subsist unless the right conferred by this section has been extinguished by act of parties or by the decree of a Court. It is not the case of either party that the right of redemption has been extinguished by act of parties. The only question that arises for consideration is, is the right to redeem the mortgage extinguished by reason of the decree passed in Civil Suit No. 235 of 1945? Order 34 Rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for a final decree in a redemption suit. Rule 8 provides that:

"8. (1) Where, before a final decree debarring the plaintiff from all right to redeem the mortgaged property has been passed or before the confirmation of a sale held in pursuance of a final decree passed under sub-rule (3) of this rule, the plaintiff makes payment into Court of all amounts due from him under sub-rule (1) of Rule 7, the Court shall, on application made by the plaintiff in this behalf, pass a final decree or, if such decree has been passed, an order—

(a) ordering the defendant to deliver up the documents referred to in the preliminary decree, and, if necessary,—

(b) ordering him to re-transfer at the cost of the plaintiff the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree.

"and, also, if necessary,—

(c) ordering him to put the plaintiff in possession of the property.

(2) Where the mortgaged property or a part thereof has been sold in pursuance of a decree passed under sub-rule (3) of this rule, the Court shall not pass an order under sub-rule (1) of this rule, unless the plaintiff, in addition to the amount mentioned in sub-rule (1), deposits in Court for payment to the purchaser a sum equal to five per cent of the amount of the purchase-money paid into Court by the purchaser.

Where, such deposit has been made, the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for repayment of the amount of the purchase-money paid into Court by him, together with a sum equal to five per cent thereof.

(3) Where payment in accordance with sub-rule (1) had not been made, the Court shall, on application made by the defendant in this behalf,—

(a) in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale or of such an anomalous mortgage as is hereinbefore referred to in Rule 7, pass a final decree declaring that the plaintiff and all persons claiming under him are debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property and, also, if necessary, ordering the plaintiff to put the defendant in possession of the mortgaged property; or

(b) in the case of any other mortgage, not being a usufructuary mortgage, pass a final decree that the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold and the proceeds of the sale (after deduction therefrom of the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is found due to the defendant, and the balance, if any be paid to the plaintiff or other persons entitled to receive the same."

There is no order or decree passed at any time by the Court in the earlier proceedings debarring the mortgagor from all right to redeem the mortgaged property. If that is so, the right to redeem is not extinguished.

5. It is well settled that if the mortgagor obtains a decree for redemption and the decree does not provide that in default of payment by the mortgagor he shall be debarred of all right to redeem, the right to redeem is not extinguished and the mortgagor can file another suit for redemption. This view has now been settled by the Privy Council in Raghunath Singh v. Hansraj Kunwar, (1934) 61 Ind App 362: (AIR 1934 PC 205). See Mulla's Transfer of Property Act, 6th edition page 434. What has to be considered is, is the mortgagor debarred from all right to redeem by reason of the decree that was passed in the earlier suit No. 235 of 1945. It is urged by Mr. Rane that as the earlier decree inter alia provided that the plaintiff do recover possession of the suit land from the defendant forthwith it is quite apparent that subsequently the mortgagor or his successor-in-interest is debarred from all right to redeem. It is not possible for me to accept this contention. Unless a specific order as contemplated by Rule 8 (3) of O. 34 is passed a mortgagor or his successor-in-interest is never debarred from his right to redeem simply because a decree in an earlier suit for redemption was passed with the terms whereof he did not comply. Unless a decree as contemplated by Rule 8 (3) of O. 34 is passed debarring the mortgagor from the right to redeem, the right to redeem will always subsist unless it is extinguished by acts of parties. In the present case, it is nobody's case that the right to redeem is extinguished by acts of parties nor is it extinguished by the decree of the Court in the earlier suit, because, the earlier decree does not contain any provision debarring the mortgagor from his right to redeem in default of payment in accordance with the provisions thereof.

6. Reliance was placed by Mr. Rane upon the provisions of Section 15B of the Act. That section confers power upon the Court to order payment by instalments in case of decree for redemption, foreclosure or sale. There is nothing in the provisions of Section 15-B which will support the contention of Mr. Rane. It does not contain any provision overriding the provisions of O. 34, R. 8 or the right to redeem defined in Section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. On the contrary Sec. 15-B is enacted for the facility of a debtor rather than for depriving him of a right which otherwise is available to him in law. It cannot be interpreted to mean that it curtails the right which is normally available to a mortgagor. As in the present case the right to redeem was not barred by decree or order of the Court it subsisted even when the present suit was filed. It is well settled that a second suit for redemption is not barred by res judicata or principles analogous thereto. When the earlier suit for redemption was instituted by the mortgagor what was in issue then was whether the mortgagor was not entitled to redeem and when the subsequent suit for redemption is filed the issue is whether the mortgagor is now entitled to redeem. These issues being separate, until the right to redeem is extinguished as contemplated by S. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act or R. 8 of O. 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the right to redeem will continue to subsist notwithstanding the institution of an earlier suit for redemption and passing of a decree therein. Thus, in my opinion, both the Courts were in error in taking the view that the present suit was not maintainable in view of the decree passed in the earlier suit No. 235 of 1945.

7. In the result, the appeal is allowed. The order passed by both the Courts is set aside and it is held that the present suit is maintainable notwithstanding the decree passed in Civil Suit No. 235 of 1945. The suit is remanded back to the trial Court for determination in accordance with law. The orders as to costs passed by both the Courts are set aside and the defendant will pay the costs throughout. As this is a suit of the year 1967 the trial Court is directed to dispose of it within a period of three months from the date the papers are received by the trial Court.

Appeal allowed.

Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (1947), Section 12 (2) — Notice of demand — Mistakes in.

The construction of a notice of demand of arrears of rent and permitted increases issued under Sec. 12 (2) must not be liberal. It is vital that a landlord should make a correct demand unless he chooses not to specify the amount. He can simply demand arrears of rent. In such a case, it would be left to the tenant to make the payment on the basis of his calculation. A landlord cannot sit on the fence whereby the rigour of protection secured to the tenant is rendered illusory. (Para 17)

A landlord should not be penalised for innocent or harmless mistakes. A demand which is fictitious or untenable cannot be excused on the ground of mistake or oversight. Such serious infirmities will invalidate the notice. A demand for rent and permitted increases must be honest and accurate.

Held, in the present case there was no misunderstanding or inadvertence on the part of the landlord in making a demand for permitted increases and municipal taxes to the extent claimed. If demands were allowed to be inflated and the notices were to be held as good under Section 12 (2), such an approach would defeat the protection afforded by the special enactment. (Para 16)

(1966) Civil Appeal No. 387 of 1964,
D/- 5-4-1966 (SC)

K. Y. Mandlik, for Petitioner; V.
V. Karmarkar, for Opponent No. 1.

ORDER:— The present writ petition under Art. 227 of the Constitution is filed by the petitioner-landlord who has lost in the trial Court as well as in the appellate Court. The suit for eviction was filed on the grounds of arrears of rent and reasonable and bona fide personal requirement under the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as "the Bombay Rent Act"). The respondent is the tenant. In order to understand the nature of the controversy between the parties, it is necessary to refer to some details.

2. The respondent has been a tenant of the suit premises for several years. Prior to December 1958 he was paying monthly rent of Rupees 50/- to the then owner. Between December 1958 and April 1964, the owner was different. The present petitioner purchased the suit property in April 1964. The petitioner's predecessor-in-title had filed Regular Civil Suit No. 245 of 1962 against the respondent, in which the standard rent was fixed at Rs. 16/- per month. A sum of Rs. 1475/- was paid on account of rent in that suit. That suit came to be dismissed on 28th December 1963. The petitioner's predecessor-in-title preferred an appeal being Civil Appeal No. 407 of 1964. That appeal was prosecuted by the petitioner, but it came to be dismissed, on 28th September 1965.

3. The petitioner then proceeded to issue a notice dated 7th December 1967 (Ex. 66) for determining the contractual tenancy and for demanding the arrears of rent from 1st April 1962 to 17th January 1968 at the rate of Rs. 16/- per month aggregating to Rs. 920/-, Rs. 69/- by way of permitted increases for the said period and Rs. 412.91 by way of municipal taxes and thus in all Rs. 1401.91. The said notice was served on 15th December 1967. On 8th January 1968, a sum of Rupees 989/- was remitted by the respondent by Money Order, but the petitioner refused to accept the same. This was followed by a reply dated 13th January 1968 (Ex. 67) from the respondent recording the fact that the money order was refused and that the petitioner was not entitled in law to recover Rs. 412.91 by way of municipal taxes. The petitioner did not choose to send a reply to the said letter.

4. There was a lull till the petitioner once again issued a notice dated 22nd November 1968 (Ex. 48) terminating the tenancy of the respondent and making a demand for arrears of rent. The present demand consisted of Rs. 1288/- by way of arrears of rent from 1st April 1962 to 17th December 1968 at the rate of Rs. 16/- per month, Rs. 96.60 by way of permitted increases and Rs. 495.49 by way of municipal taxes, and thus in all for Rs. 1880.09. The notice was served on 29th November 1968. The respondent remitted a sum of Rupees 1900/- by two money orders, one of Rs. 900/- and the other of Rupees 1000/-. Both these money orders were refused by the petitioner. The coupon in respect of money order of Rs. 900/- is Ex. 58 and the other coupon relating to the money order of Rs. 1000/- is Ex. 59. The contents of both the coupons are in these words:—

"Saprem Namaskar to Shri Ganpat-rao alias Gajanan Sambhuappa Ghongade residing at Latur from Motilal Kachrual Lunawat on behalf of Motilal Champalal. Your notice dated 22-11-68 is received on 29-11-68. As demanded in your notice, a total sum of Rupees Nineteen Hundred in two Money Orders respectively for Rupees Nine Hundred and Rupees One thousand is sent herewith. You are requested to accept the same and acknowledge the receipt thereof.

Yours

Sd/-

Motilal Kachrual Lunawat

26-12-68."

The respondent by letter dated 1st March 1969 (Ex. 68) placed on record the fact of refusal of the said two money orders. On 3rd March 1969, the petitioner filed the present suit for ejectment.

5. The trial Court calculated the arrears from 18th December 1959 to 22nd December 1968 at the rate of Rs. 16/- per month and arrived at the figure of Rs. 1712/-. The Court gave credit for Rs. 1475/- paid by the respondent in the former suit No. 245 of 1962. After taking into consideration the further arrears till 3rd March 1969, the trial Court found that the arrears due were to the tune of Rs. 290.80. The trial Court found that the petitioner failed to prove that he had in fact incurred liability in respect of permitted increases and municipal taxes. The petitioner failed to produce receipts showing that he was required to pay the tax at increased rates as demanded by him from the respondent. Therefore, the trial Court held that the petitioner was not entitled to increase in rent, much less to recover the amount claimed in suit. As regards the remittance of Rs. 1900/- within one month from the service of the notice, the trial Court held that the petitioner refused to accept the money orders and observed that he did so in order to allow the respondent to remain in arrears of rent for a period of more than six months and to take advantage of that fact. In these circumstances, the trial Court passed a decree for a sum of Rs. 290.80 only and dismissed the suit as regards recovery of possession.

6. The appellate Court took the view that if the respondent wanted to adjust the payment of Rs. 1475/- made by him to the previous landlord before the present suit, he could have done so only within six months from the date of the payment in view of the provisions contained in Sec. 20 of the Bombay Rent Act and, therefore, the respondent was not entitled to get credit for the payment of Rs. 1475/-. As regards the demand for municipal taxes, the appellate Court referred to the evidence of the petitioner and pointed out his admission showing that the municipal tax was reduced on the basis of his application, though he did not know the extent of reduction. It appears that in these circumstances the Advocate for the petitioner did not argue that the petitioner was entitled to claim any increase in rent over and above Rs. 16/- per month on any ground. Regarding the remittance of Rs. 1900/-, the appellate Court in para. 9 of the judgment considered various aspects of the matter and believed the respondent's case that he had sent the two money orders in question which covered the entire demand of the petitioner and that the said amount was remitted within one month as required by law. The Court also considered the various payments made after the filing of the suit and came to the conclusion that the respondent was not a defaulter and, therefore, the petitioner could not evict him on that ground. In the result, the appeal was dismissed.

7. The validity and correctness of the order dated 22nd March 1972 dismissing the petitioner's Civil Appeal No. 86 of 1971 is under challenge.

8. Two points are raised by Mr. Mandlik, the learned counsel for the petitioner. Firstly, the present case is governed by S. 12 (3) (a) of the Bombay Rent Act because the respondent neglected to make payment within one month from the date of the service of the notice dated 22-11-1968 served on 29-11-1968. Secondly, the respondent is not entitled to relief against forfeiture of tenancy as there is no compliance with the provisions of S. 12 (3) (b). According to Mr. Mandlik, the respondent did not make the payment on the day when the issues were framed and thereafter he continued to be irregular in making the payment into Court.

9. Mr. Karmarkar, learned Counsel for the respondent, on the other hand, submitted that the respondent did not neglect to pay the arrears. The entire amount of arrears as demanded was remitted by money-orders, but the petitioner refused to accept the same. The notice contained a false demand. It was to the knowledge of the petitioner that the respondent had paid Rs. 1475/- towards the arrears of rent for the period 18-12-1959 to 22-11-1968 and the balance due was only Rs. 237/-. It was further contended that in the notice of demand the petitioner knowingly made a false demand in respect of permitted increases to the extent of Rs. 96.60 and municipal taxes to the extent of Rs. 495.49. Even as regards the arrears of rent, the petitioner falsely demanded the arrears with effect from 1-4-1962, whereas actually the amount could be claimable from 2-6-1962 and, therefore, the demand for Rs. 1288/- towards the arrears was deliberately inflated and the actual amount could have worked out to Rs. 1240/- for the period 2nd June 1962 to 17th December 1968. In these circumstances, the notice of demand is not valid. The petitioner, therefore, could not bring the present suit for ejectment on the ground of arrears of rent.

10. In support of the first contention, it was argued by Mr. Mandlik that the two coupons, Exs. 58 and 59, do not show when the money-orders were sent and on what date they were refused. The arrears of Rs. 1880.09 were sent in part. Therefore, the petitioner was entitled not to accept part payment. There is no evidence that the postman went with the two money orders at the same time or that the two money orders reached the petitioner at the same time and through the same postman. Assuming they were sent on 26-12-1968, there is no evidence that the two money orders were tendered on or before 28th December 1968. These contentions have no merit in view of the contents of Exs. 58 and 59 and the finding of fact arrived at by the Courts below.

11. In this connection, Mr. Mandlik next urged that it was the duty of the respondent to examine the postman as the petitioner had denied that he had refused to accept the money orders. Mr. Karmarkar pointed out that this point was neither taken in the memo of appeal nor raised before the appellate Court, nor is it made a ground of attack of the impugned order in the present petition. He submitted that both the Courts have come to a concurrent finding that the two money orders were sent to the petitioner on 26-12-1968 and they were refused.

12. I think that the petitioner ought not to be allowed to raise this contention at this stage. From the discussion of the evidence by the appellate Court, it appears that the petitioner went out of Latur without making arrangements for receiving the rent or for accepting money orders during his absence. The Court also considered the previous conduct of the petitioner in persistently refusing the money orders. Both the Courts have believed the say of the respondent in this behalf. It appears that the respondent had been vigilant and careful in remitting not only the whole amount of Rs. 1880.09 as demanded but rounded off the figure at Rs. 1900/-. This was done by him despite the fact that a year before the petitioner had sought to make a demand for arrears of rent as well as for permitted increases and municipal taxes, out of which he had remitted Rs. 989/- by money order and had challenged the demand for permitted increases and municipal taxes by his letter dated 13-1-1968. The present demand also contained a demand for permitted increases and municipal taxes to the extent of Rs. 502.09. But nevertheless the respondent chose to square up the demand and did not enter into any controversy about the same. Having regard to the fact that this point was not raised by the petitioner in the lower appellate Court and the two Courts have given a concurrent finding, he cannot be allowed to raise it at this stage.

13. It is convenient now to examine the question of the validity of the demand made by the petitioner under Section 12 (2) of the Bombay Rent Act, on the basis of which he has laid down the foundation for ejection on the ground of arrears of rent. We have noticed that the demand notice is excessive to the extent of Rs. 592.09 being the aggregate amount of permitted increases and municipal taxes. The trial Court has held that the petitioner had failed to produce any receipt of payment and, therefore, he is not entitled to claim the same. The appellate Court relied upon the petitioner's admission which disclosed that instead of the municipal taxes being enhanced, they were reduced on his application. All these facts were to the special knowledge of the petitioner. Notwithstanding this position, he chose to make a demand of Rupees 592.09 which he could not sustain — not because he failed to prove but he had no case. The demand was, therefore, patently mala fide and dishonest. The demand was also inflated with regard to the arrears of rent because the actual dues ought to have been Rs. 1240/- as found by the appellate Court and not Rs. 1288/- as demanded by the petitioner.

14. Mr. Mandlik submitted that the notice of demand is to be construed liberally and a mistake like making a demand for a larger amount would not render the notice invalid. In support of his submission, he placed reliance on an unreported decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Raghunath Ravji Dandekar v. Anant Narayan Apte, Civil Appeal No. 387 of 1964 decided on 5-4-1966 (SC). Before I go to the relevant observations of Their Lordships of the Supreme Court relied upon by Mr. Mandlik, it is necessary to bear in mind the circumstances in which the plaintiff in that case had made a mistake. In that case, there was a demand of Rs. 7050/- in the notice though actually as found by the Courts below only Rs. 6900/- were due and therefore the notice under Section 12 (2) of the Bombay Rent Act demanding Rupees 7050/- as arrears of rent was held bad. The mistake might have arisen in that case because three years according to the British Calendar would have 37 months according to the Hindu Calendar because there was an intercalary month in the Hindu Calendar once in three years of the British Calendar. The following observations were quoted by Mr. Mandlik:—

"We have not been able to understand how the notice to quit under the Transfer of Property Act would be bad because by mistake or oversight more was demanded in the notice under S. 12 (2) of the Act than was due. All that S. 12 (2) requires is notice by the lessor for payment of arrears of rent. It is true that such a notice generally contains the amount due as arrears of rent. But if there is a mistake in the amount specified in the notice, that does not in our opinion make the notice under S. 12 (2) bad or because of that make the notice to quit under the Transfer of Property Act bad."

15. Reliance was also placed on a decision of this Court in Lalshankar Mulji v. Kantilal, 74 Bom LR 241: (AIR 1972 Bom 373). It is held in that case that a notice under Section 12 (2) of the Bombay Rent Act is not invalid simply because by mistake or oversight the landlord has demanded the rent for the month for which it was not due. It is also observed in that case that a liberal construction should be put upon a notice to quit in order that it should not be defeated by inaccuracies either in the description of the premises or the name of the tenant or the date of the expiry of the notice and that the test of its sufficiency is not what its contents would mean to a stranger ignorant of all the facts and circumstances touching the premises to which the notice purports to refer but what they would mean to tenants presumably conversant with all those facts and circumstances, and the mistakes, if any, should not be construed with a desire to find faults, but they should be construed liberally. In that case, the landlord was under a mistaken belief while asking for rent for the period from 15-8-1965 to 15-9-65 because he thought that he could demand such rent since he was terminating the tenancy on and from 15-9-1965. Thus in that case, the demand for rent of one month could be said to have been made on account of a genuine mistake.

16. The view expressed in these two cases seems to be that having regard to the facts of a particular case, if there is an error in calculations which can be connected with circumstances in which a mistake can genuinely creep in, then such a mistake would not invalidate the notice so as to non-suit the plaintiff-landlord. The view seems to be that the Court should look out for substantial accuracy and discourage technical objections. A landlord should not be penalised for innocent or harmless mistakes. For our purposes, the angle from which the validity or invalidity of the notice is to be examined is "the demand of arrears of standard rent and permitted increases" and not matters like name and address of the tenant, description of property, date of expiry of the notice, etc. I do not think that these two authorities are for the benefit of a landlord who makes a false demand or makes a demand of a part of rent and permitted increases to which he is not entitled. A demand which is fictitious or untenable cannot be excused on the ground of mistake or oversight. Such serious infirmities will invalidate the notice. In my judgment, the demand for rent and permitted increases must be honest and accurate. In the present case, there was no misunderstanding or inadvertence on the part of the petitioner in making a demand for permitted increases and municipal taxes to the extent of Rs. 592.09 and rent of Rs. 48.00 for the period 1-4-1962 to 2-6-1962. If demands were allowed to be inflated in this manner and the notices are to be held as good under S. 12 (2), I think such an approach would defeat the protection afforded by this special enactment. It is one thing that in the present case the respondent had means to pay even the 30 per cent inflated demand, but take a case where a tenant is poor and has limited means. If he does not comply with the notice within a period of one month from the date of service, he cannot enjoy the protection and safeguard which the Legislature has been giving from time to time for nearly one third of a century by extending the life of the Act.

17. In my view, the construction on a notice of demand of arrears of rent and permitted increases issued under S. 12 (2) must not be liberal. It is vital that a landlord should make a correct demand unless he chooses not to specify the amount. He can simply demand arrears of rent as suggested by the Supreme Court in Raghunath's case. In such a case, it would be left to the tenant to make the payment on the basis of his calculation. A landlord cannot sit on the fence whereby the rigour of protection secured to the tenant is rendered illusory. The rigour of the law under the Bombay Rent Act is that a tenant must pay up within one month from the date of service of the notice of demand or otherwise face eviction. It is true that a tenant can still file an application for fixation of standard rent within one month from the receipt of the notice of demand and avert the course of ejectment proceedings. But that would be in a case where the standard rent or permitted increases is in dispute. In a case of the present type where the standard rent has already been fixed in a previous proceeding and the respondent had no means to verify about his liability for permitted increases and municipal taxes, he had no other alternative but to make the payment in order to save his home. Had he omitted to remit the amount as demanded, he could have been a victim of "neglect" under S. 12 (3) (a) or accused of not being "ready and willing" to pay up under S. 12 (1) assuming that concept can be introduced under S. 12 (3) (a).

18. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the present case, the mistakes in the notice dated 22nd November 1968, Ex. 48, relating to the demand under Section 12 (2), are fatal and that notice could not be the basis of a decree for possession on the ground of arrears of rent as contemplated under S. 12.

19. In my opinion, the present case is not governed by S. 12 (3) (a) as urged by Mr. Mandlik as there was no "neglect" on the part of the respondent in making the payment of arrears of rent within one month from the date of service of the notice. The two Courts below have accepted the respondent's case that they had in fact remitted the entire amount of arrears within one month from the date of service of the notice, but it was the petitioner who refused to accept the money-orders.

20. Coming to the second contention that the respondent is not entitled to relief against forfeiture of tenancy on account of non-compliance with the provisions of S. 12 (3) (b) of the Bombay Rent Act, it is to be noted that the respondent had deposited Rs. 1600/- as against Rupees 1648/- which were found due. The lower appellate Court had given an opportunity to the respondent to pay the remaining amount. I do not propose to interfere with the order of the appellate Court in the exercise of my supervisory jurisdiction under Art. 227 of the Constitution on the peculiar facts of this case. As pointed out above, the respondent had paid Rs. 1475/- in Civil Suit No. 245 of 1962. The trial Court in the present suit had given them credit for that amount, but the appellate Court chose to differ. The appellate Court overlooked the fact that the petitioner had been made a party in Civil Appeal No. 407 of 1964 since he purchased the property on 7-4-1964. The respondent ought to have been given credit for the amount paid by them in that suit. In these litigations, the respondent had to pay the amount of Rs. 1475/- twice for the same period. The conduct of the petitioner seems to be to eject the respondent from the suit premises anyhow.

21. In the result, the petition fails. The rule is discharged. As regards costs, the petitioner to pay to the respondent the costs of Civil Appeal No. 86 of 1971 and the costs of this petition.

Petition dismissed.

Laxmibai Sadashiv Date and others, Appellants v. Ganesh Shankar Date and others, Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 372 of 1968, D/- 8-4-1976*.

Bombay Merged Territories Miscellaneous Alienations Abolition Act (22 of 1955), Section 4 — Service inam — Grant to family in name of senior member — Abolition — Effect on rights of members of family under personal law. (1976) 78 Bom LR 720, Overruled.

The non-obstante clause is contained at the inception of S. 4 and the sole object of S. 4 is to abolish alienations and rights and incidents in respect thereof. The right of a member of a joint Hindu family to ask for partition of a joint family property cannot be regarded as a right relating to grant of land as service inam or as an incident in respect thereof. The sole object underlying S. 4 is to abolish all alienations defined in the statute and to extinguish all rights legally subsisting on the appointed date in respect of such alienations and all other incidents thereof. This provision does not affect the normal rights of a member of a Hindu family under the personal law applicable to Hindus. Hence where the service inam was a grant to the joint Hindu family in the name of the senior member and the same was abolished it could not be contended that the right of the other members of the family relating to partition of joint family property was extinguished nor could it be contended that when the regnant was made under S. 7 the other members had no right to ask for a share therein by way of partition, AIR 1973 Bom 323, Approved; (1976) 78 Bom LR 720, Overruled.

* (Against decision of V. T. Kakade, Civil Judge Sr. Division at Kolhapur in Spl. Civil Suit No. 48 of 1965.)

KANTAWALA, C. J.— The Division Bench consisting of Deshmukh and Sapre, JJ. by its judgment and order dated 14th/15th July 1975 has referred the following question for determination by the Full Bench:—

“When an alienation like the service inam in this case was a grant to a family in the name of senior member and the same is abolished, whether the provisions of S. 4 of the Bombay Merged Territories Miscellaneous Alienations Abolition Act, 1955, extinguish the ordinary rights and incidents in respect of such alienation under the personal law of the parties?”

2. The dispute in this appeal relates to lands pertaining to service inam. Originally the grant was to one Gangadhar and after his death an heirship enquiry was started in the year 1889. As a result thereof, the name of Narhari, his son, was entered as Navawala in respect of service inam by an order dated May 10, 1889. The genealogy of Narhar Gangadhar is as under:—

(For Table see below)

After the death of Narhari in the year 1919 the proceedings initiated at the instance of the Chief Sahab of Ichalkaranji showed that he was dissatisfied with the services rendered by the existing members of Date family i. e. Narhari's and Gangadhar's family. It was also found that there was no able person in the family who could render service. In view thereof the inam was resumed and the lands were cultivated through the State. On or about Jan. 5, 1928, Sadashiv the eldest son of Narhari, made an application to the Chief Sahab that the inam may be revived and services may be accepted from Date family. Sadashiv himself was unable to render service and offered that his younger brother Balkrishna was able and competent as well as willing to render such service. After reviving the Vatan in the name of Sadashiv the services of Balkrishna were accepted. Balkrishna also gave a writing to the effect that he was willing to render service on behalf of his brother. This arrangement continued till 1943 when the rendering of services was cancelled. Thereafter it was not necessary to render such service. There were two pieces of land pertaining to this inam, one being survey No. 28/1, situate at Ichalkaranji and the other being survey No. 661/5 situate at village Lat. As Balkrishna was put into possession of these lands upon revival of Vatan, his possession continued till the Bombay Merged Territories Miscellaneous Alienations Abolition Act, 1955 (hereinafter referred to as “the Act”) was passed whereby alienation was abolished altogether. Balkrishna died in the year 1952 and after his death the two inam lands continued to be in possession of his heirs who are defendants Nos. 11 to 5. The plaintiffs who are the sons and grand-sons of Shankarrao, one of the sons of Narhari filed a suit for partition and possession of their one-fourth share in the two inam lands and for past and future mesne profits. They pointed out that orders were already passed in respect of regnant of one of the pieces of land, namely, survey No. 28/1 from Ichalkaranji and the regnant in the case of survey No. 661/5 of village Lat was kept pending by the Revenue Authorities as the disputes raised by defendants Nos. 9 to 11 were pending. The plaintiffs alleged that upon payment of occupancy price on behalf of the family during the time stipulated in the Act Government was bound to regnant the land and these two survey numbers were treated as family lands. According to the plaintiffs the four branches of Date family representing the four sons of Narhari were each entitled to one-fourth share in these two survey numbers. The plaintiffs accordingly asked for a declaration of their one-fourth share in these two lands which were then in possession of Balkrishna's heirs, the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, and they sought a direction of the Court to effect a partition and for delivery of possession of their one-fourth share therein, Defendants Nos. 6 to 8 who represented the branch of Madhav the youngest son of Narhari admitted the claim of the plaintiffs and were agreeable to a decree being passed. Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 representing the branch of Balkrishna, the third son of Narhari contended that in the year 1928 when the inam was revived it was a grant in favour of Balkrishna alone and both the pieces of land represented the personal acquisition of Balkrishna. After the abolition of the inam under the Act both the pieces of land became the private property of Balkrishna's branch and defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were solely entitled to the said two pieces of land as they alone paid the occupancy price in respect thereof.

3. The plea of defendants Nos. 9 to 11 who represented the branch of Sadashiv the eldest son of Narhari, was that in the year 1928 the inam was revived in the name of Sadashiv alone; that it was personal grant to Sadshiv; that while Sadashiv was the holder of the inam the Act came into force and the alienation was abolished; that Sadashiv was alive at the time when the Act came into force and that having regard to the provisions of S. 7 of the Act Sadashiv alone was entitled to the regrant of these two pieces of land.

4. The trial Court took the view that the inam in respect of these two pieces of land was a service inam in favour of Date family; that it came down from generation to generation and the last holder thereof was Sadashiv in whose name the inam was revived by the then Chief Saheb of Ichalkaranji. According to the trial Court the revival of the inam in the name of Sadashiv was a grant to Date family as such and not individual to Sadashiv; that such grants of service inam constituted impartible estate with consequential rights of succession by the rule of primogeniture; that in respect of such grant the junior members of the family who otherwise formed a coparcenary had only right of succession to the property by survivorship if and when an appropriate occasion arose. As a result of the regrant under S. 7 of the Act the property became the private property of the entire Date family. Thus the trial Court rejected the contentions of the members of the branches of Balkrishna as well as Sadashiv and gave a declaration that each of the four branches was entitled to a one-fourth share therein and partition should be effected by the Collector in the normal manner.

5. An appeal was preferred by the defendants Nos. 9 to 11 who are the heirs of Sadashiv. This appeal came up for hearing before the Division Bench consisting of Deshmukh and Sapre, JJ. The Division Bench in the referring judgment gave a clear finding that the inam in dispute was a service inam granted to Date family, but it was always recorded in the name of the seniormost member of the seniormost branch which was also the customary manner of recording the rights under the inam. The Division Bench further held that Narhari was the grantee of the inam as representing Date family and Sadashiv became the grantee in the year 1928 as representative of the family consisting of himself and his three brothers. This clear finding of the Division Bench has been reaffirmed at the later stage in para. 37 of the judgment where it is observed:

"Prima facie, according to us, it is the prior holder who must be restored the land. Who that holder is, is a question, which we have already answered in our earlier discussion. That holder of the inam was the family of Dates, though it was represented in Government records by Nawawala who was the seniormost member. Since the holder is thus the family, the regrant under S. 7, though in the name of the former Nawawala, must be deemed to be regrant to the family of Dates."

In view of the said clear finding, according to the Division Bench, the legitimate conclusion to be arrived at was that the property in the regrant was a Raytwa land and since Date family was a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law as administered in the Bombay area, the property must be now treated as a joint Hindu family property with the normal incidents accompanying the Mitakshara joint family property.

6. It was, however, urged by Mr. Gadgil who appeared for the appellants before the Division Bench that the above conclusion was not possible in view of the express language of S. 4 of the Act. He contended that all rights legally subsisting and all incidents of alienations were extinguished by the provisions of S. 4 of the Act and that as such it must be treated to be a grant to Sadashiv and his branch alone without any rights in favour of the other members of Date family; that in other words, to the regranted land the normal personal law of the party would not apply, but it must be deemed to be a grant to the individual alone as a separate property. Before the Division Bench the judgment of Malvankar, J. in the case of Dhondi Vithoba v. Mahadeo Dagdu (1973) 75 Bom LR 290 : (AIR 1973 Bom 323) and the judgment of the Division Bench (consisting of Vaidya and Lentin, JJ.) in First Appeal No. 111 of 1966 with First Appeals Nos. 176 and 204 of 1966 decided on 12-3-1975* were cited. The view taken by Malvankar, J. was the one which supported the claim of the plaintiffs while that view was dissented from by the Division Bench. When the appeal came up for hearing before Deshmukh and Sapre, JJ. they felt that the view taken by Malvankar, J. was preferable to the one taken by Vaidya and Lentin, JJ. and, therefore, referred the above question for determination by the Full Bench.

7. Mr. Paranjpe on behalf of the appellants (Defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11) contended that the finding of the Division Bench that the service inam was granted to Date family, that Narhari as grantee of the inam represented Date family and Sadashiv became the grantee in the year 1928 as representative of the family consisting of himself and his three brothers, is not justified if regard be had to the special features of an impartible estate and he wanted to challenge the correctness of the said finding. As this finding was given by the Division Bench after considering the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Shiba Prasad v. Rani Prayag Kumari, AIR 1932 P. C. 216 and the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Krishna v. Sarvagna Kumara Krishna, AIR 1970 SC 1795, we have not permitted Mr. Paranjpe to go behind this finding as it is a considered finding of the Division Bench upon appreciation of evidence and the position in law. The reference had to be made to the Full Bench because it was contended before the Division Bench by Mr. Gadgil that in view of the non obstante clause used in S. 4 of the Act all rights legally subsisting in respect of alienations like inam and all other incidents of such alienations were deemed to be extinguished. Even the incidents qua partition in respect of joint Hindu family property were also extinguished and, therefore, when after resumption of the inam a regrant was made it was a regrant only to the senior-most member of the branch, who was in possession of the land and enjoyment of the income therefrom at the time when the Act came into force. The submission of Mr. Paranjpe is that S. 4 whereby alienations and rights and incidents in respect thereof are abolished starts with the non obstante clause to the effect "Notwithstanding anything contained in any usage, settlement, grant, agreement, sanad, order, rule, notification or Vat Hukum or any decree or order of a Court or any law for the time being applicable to any alienation in the merged territories" which is very comprehensive in its nature, and thereby not only all rights and incidents in relation to alienations of the lands are extinguished, but even the rights of the holder under the personal law like Hindu Law, to ask for partition, are taken away. In support of this contention, reliance was placed by him upon the decision of the Division Bench of Vaidya and Lentin, JJ., above referred to and he submitted that in view of this non obstante clause as the right of a member of a joint Hindu family in respect of an impartible estate is taken away it is only the senior-most member of the senior-most branch who will be entitled to the regrant and the other members of the joint family will not be entitled to claim any share by demanding a partition of the land on the footing that it is a joint family property.

8. The Act was amended with a view to abolish some of the alienations of miscellaneous character prevailing in the merged territories and to provide for matters consequential and incidental thereto. The word 'alienation' in the Act meant a grant or recognition as a grant (I) of a village, portion of a village or land to any person, whether such grant be of soil with or without exemption from payment of land revenue or of assignment of the whole or a share of land revenue thereof, (II) of total or partial exemption from payment of land revenue to a person in respect of any land held by him, or (III) of cash allowance or allowance in kind to any person by whatever name called, by the ruling authority for the time before merger or by the State Government after merger. Chapter II of the Act deals with abolition of alienation and conferment of occupancy rights. S. 4 of the Act deals with abolition of alienations and rights and incidents in respect thereof. Its provisions are as under:—

"4. Notwithstanding anything contained in any usage, settlement, grant, agreement, sanad, order, rule, notification or Vat Hukum or any decree or order of a Court or any law for the time being applicable to any alienation in the merged territories with effect from and on the appointed date.

(i) all alienations shall be deemed to have been abolished;

* (reported in (1976) 78 Bom LR 720.)

(ii) Save as expressly provided by or under this Act all rights legally subsisting on the said date in respect of such alienations and all other incidents of such alienations shall be deemed to have been extinguished."

9. Under S. 5 all alienated lands are made liable for payment of land revenue in accordance with the provisions of the Code and the rules made thereunder and the provisions of the Code and the rules relating to unalienated lands shall apply to such lands. The provisions as regards regrant of such lands are contained in Ss. 6 and 7. We are concerned in the present case with S. 7 (2) and its provisions are as under:—

"7. All land held under a watan is hereby resumed and shall be regranted to the holder in accordance with the following provisions, namely:—

(1) x x x x

(2) in the case of a watan to which cl. (1) does not apply the land appertaining to the watan shall be regranted to the holder on payment of the occupancy price equal to twelve times the amount of the full assessment of such land within the prescribed period.

x x x x"

10. In the referring judgment a clear and unequivocal finding is given by the Division Bench that so far as the holder prior to the abolition of the alienation was concerned, it was Date family; that Narhari was grantee of the inam as representing Date family and Sadashiv became the grantee in the year 1928 as representative of the family consisting of himself and his three brothers. The short question that was canvassed before the Division Bench was that in view of the non obstante clause in S. 4 the ordinary incident under the personal law of Hindus relating to partition of joint family property was extinguished and therefore, when a regrant was made under S. 7 it was Sadashiv alone who was entitled thereto and the other members of the family had no right to ask for a share therein by way of partition. It is undoubtedly true that S. 4 starts with a non obstante clause, but it is a well recognised canon of construction to give effect to a non obstante clause having regard to the object with which it is enacted in a statute. The non obstante clause is contained at the inception of S. 4 and the sole object of S. 4 is to abolish alienations and rights and incidents in respect thereof. The right of a member of a joint Hindu family to ask for partition of a joint family property cannot be regarded as a right relating to grant of land as service inam or as an incident in respect thereof. The sole object underlying S. 4 is to abolish all alienations defined in the statute and to extinguish all rights legally subsisting on the appointed date in respect of such alienations and all other incidents thereof. These provisions have nothing to do with the normal rights of a member of a Hindu family under the personal law applicable to Hindus.

11. Provisions similar to those in the Act, contained in the Bombay Inferior Village Watans Abolition Act (Act 1 of 1959) came up for consideration before Malvankar, J. in Dhondi Vithoba v. Mahadeo Dagdu reported in (1973) 75 Bom LR 290 : (AIR 1973 Bom 323). He held that after the abolition of a Watan, held as joint family property or held by tenants in common, under the Bombay Inferior Village Watans Abolition Act, 1958, the resumption and regrant of the land to the Watandar of the Watan, does not take away the character of the land as joint family property or as held by tenants in common. He has further taken the view that even though the Watan is abolished and its incidents are extinguished under the Act and the lands are resumed under S. 4 of the Act, the Act maintains the continuity of the interest in the lands of the persons before and after the coming into force of the Act, provided the holder pays occupancy price. What the Act does is only to effect a change in the nature of the tenure or in the nature of the holding, in that before the abolition of the Watan the land was being held by the Watandar in consideration of rendering service and non-payment of assessment, but after the abolition of the Watan and its incidents he holds it in consideration of the payment of occupancy price and the land revenue. It does not effect any other change in any other rights of the holders in such lands. At page 293 (of Bom LR) : (at p. 325 of AIR) after summarising the provisions of the Bombay Inferior Village Watans Abolition Act, 1958 Malvankar, J. points out:—

"It seems to me, therefore, that what S. 4 sub-ss. (1) and (2) seek to abolish and extinguish is the inferior village hereditary office together with the tenure of watan property held, acquired or assigned under the watan law for providing remuneration for the performance of the duty appertaining to an inferior village hereditary office and all the incidents thereto including the right to hold office or to levy customary fees or perquisites in money or in kind, and the liability to render service. It does not affect the ordinary incidences of the property under personal law. In other words, if such property is joint family property or the property held by tenants in-common, its incidences are not extinguished by the abolition of the watan and extinction of its incidents."

12. The decision of Malvankar, J. was cited before Vaidya and Lentin, JJ. while disposing of First Appeal No. 111 of 1966 with First Appeals Nos. 176 and 204 of 1966 by their judgment dated 12-3-1975*. The learned Judges disagreed with the conclusion arrived at by Malvankar, J. It may be observed that before Vaidya and Lentin, JJ. Mr. Paranjpe who appeared for the appellants in that appeal made submissions totally inconsistent with the submissions made before us. Actually his submissions were in consonance with the view which has been expressed by Deshmukh and Sapre, JJ. in the referring judgment in the present case. The question that came up for consideration before Vaidya and Lentin, JJ. related to interpretation of the provisions of S. 4 of the Watans Abolition Act. The learned Judges pointed out that on a plain reading of the section along with the definition of the words "existing watan law" and "inferior village watan" contained in S. 2, they found no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that by the section the Legislature intended to extinguish all rights and incidents in Sanadi Inam lands in suit with effect from Feb. 1, 1959 on which date the Act was brought into force in Kolhapur State by a Gazette Notification, R. D. No. PKA 1058-IX/205276-L, dated January 21, 1959, published in the Government Gazette, Part IV-B, page 160, in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (4) of S. 1 of the Watans Abolition Act and that the words "all incidents appertaining to the said watans shall be and are hereby extinguished" must include every kind of incident including the so-called incident of a right to partition as claimed by the plaintiff in that case, even if such right existed. With respect, we are unable to concur with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judges. The object of S. 4 was not to affect in any manner rights created under the personal law relating to the parties and if the property belonged to joint Hindu family, then the normal rights of the members of the family to ask for partition were not in any way affected by reason of the non obstante clause contained in S. 4. In our opinion, the view that has been taken by Malvankar J., in Dhondi Vithoba's case (AIR 1973 Bom 323) is the correct view and the resumption and regrant of the land to the watandar of the watan does not take away the character of the land as joint family property or as held by tenants-in-common.

13. Accordingly, the question referred to us is answered in the negative.

14. In para 52 of the referring judgment it is made clear that if the question referred to is answered in the negative, then the decree for declaration of rights and partition as awarded by the trial Court will have to be confirmed with a rider that the decree for partition be subject to the permission of the Collector. In case such permission is not granted, all the parties will be entitled to joint possession each of the branches having one-fourth share in the property.

15. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, subject to the aforesaid rider.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 355

CHANDURKAR AND LENTIN, JJ.

Sadashiv Karu Jamdade and others, Petitioners v. The State of Maharashtra and others, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 650 of 1971, D/-26-3-1976.

(A) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Ss. 3 (f), 4, 6 — "Public purpose" — Acquisition of land for resettlement of project-affected persons — Acquisition is for public purpose and not for benefit of any particular individual. AIR 1956 Punj 83 and AIR 1966 Pat 420, Relied on. (Para 8)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 359 — Suspension of proceedings — Enforcement of right under Art. 14 suspended — Proceedings challenged on ground of violation of Art. 14 — Proceedings cannot be suspended without ascertaining as to whether a case of violation is made out. AIR 1976 Cal 17, Dissented from.

With regard to the question as to what is the effect of the Presidential Proclamation under Art. 359 on certain pending matters in which a challenge to the proceedings is raised on the ground of violation of Art. 14, it is the substance of the matter which must be ascertained and the ascertainment of the substance of the matter will necessarily involve some argument and some discussion. This would mean that the proceedings cannot be mechanically suspended because they merely refer to a violation of Art. 14. A proceeding will fall within the sweep of Art. 359 (1) "when it is shown that the said claims cannot be effectively adjudicated upon without examining the question as to whether the citizen is in substance, seeking to enforce

any of the said specified fundamental rights." Effective adjudication would mean that a decision in favour of the petitioner is necessary which would have the effect of enforcement of the fundamental right claimed by the petitioner. The word 'enforcement' used in Art. 359 (1) contemplates an order or a proceeding which compels obedience in accordance with the constitutional imperative in Art. 14 so far as that Article is concerned. If the object of the Presidential Proclamation is that the Court cannot compel the State to give effect to the mandate contained in Article 14, how that object would in any way be frustrated if in a given case, it is found on facts that the petitioner has not made out any case of violation of Art. 14. The dismissal of a petition on a finding that no violation of Art. 14 has been proved will not amount to any breach of the terms of the Presidential Proclamation. On the other hand, if an enquiry is made to find out whether a breach has been established and the Court stays its hands in a case where the petitioner has been able to establish its breach and further to deal with the proceedings, it will then amount to suspension of the proceedings. The state of the proceeding when the Court refuses to go ahead and issue a mandamus enforcing the fundamental right under Art. 14 even after it is found that the petitioner has made out a case in his favour for enforcement of that right will still be a state of suspension inasmuch as the proceedings have not concluded definitely. Therefore, it cannot be said that merely because averments alleging a breach of Art. 14 are made in the petition the court suspends the proceedings during the subsistence of emergency without even ascertaining as to whether the petitioner is able to make out a case of the violation of the provisions of Art. 14. AIR 1964 SC 381 and Misc. Petn. No. 344 of 1974 Dt. 25-2-1976 (Bom), Relied on. AIR 1976 Cal 17, Dissented from. (Para 17)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Compulsory acquisition of property — Acquisition of land for resettlement of project-affected persons — Acquisition on basis of total holding but without taking into account number of members in family of holder — Not discriminatory.

The acquisition of land was for the purpose of resettlement of project-affected persons and the classes of the holders were determined on the basis of their total holding. All persons having a holding equal to the area contemplated by the slab system were treated similarly. The slab system was based on certain considerations, namely, that a person should not become landless and the minimum land which must remain with him after acquisition must be equal to an economic holding. The slab system varying from 10 acres to 30 acres was clearly based on the footing that where a holder had more land, more land could also be acquired from him.

In the circumstances, the classification on the basis of total holding cannot be said to be an arbitrary one even if another basis was possible. This classification has a rational relationship with the object to be achieved, viz., to build up a pool of land available without creating a new class of landless people. Classification on basis of number of members in a family would be almost impossible task and Art. 14 does not contemplate any mini classification. The mere fact that holders of the same extent of land may have a larger or smaller number of members in their families cannot enable the petitioner to challenge the acquisition on the ground that differently situated persons have been similarly treated. AIR 1974 SC 1631, Relied on.

Raghvendra A. Jahagirdar, for Petitioners; R. W. Adik, Advocate General with C. J. Sawant, Addl. Govt. Pleader; D. R. Dhanuka and D. P. Hegde, Asstt. Govt. Pleaders, for Opponents.

CHANDURKAR, J.:— This petition by the three petitioners, out of whom petitioner No. 1 is the father and petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 are his sons, is directed against a notification issued by the Commissioner, Poona Division, Poona, under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act, and a Government Resolution No. RPA-1069-R. I. dated 31st October 1969.

2. Field survey No. 534/4 area 3 acres 6 gunthas is owned by petitioner No. 2 and field survey No. 579/48 stands in the name of the petitioner No. 3, though both these fields originally stood in the name of petitioner No. 1. A notification came to be issued by the Commissioner, Poona Division, under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act acquiring a part of the area of survey No. 534/4 and the entire survey No. 579/4B. This notification refers to several other fields which, according to the notification, were needed for a public purpose which was stated as for "re-settlement of the persons likely to be affected due to Krishna Dhom Project". The Krishna Dhom Project is a project undertaken by the State of Maharashtra for construction of a dam at Dhom. According to the plan, this dam is to have canals for irrigation both on the left and the right banks of Krishna river and the total irrigable area which will be irrigated through these canals including the canals from the dam at Arphal is estimated to be 1,59,200 acres. The proposed expenditure for the Krishna Dhom Project is stated by the State Government to be Rupees 2550.92. The work on this project, according to the State Government, will affect 32 villages in the western part of Taluka Wai, and a village by name Vyahalis out of these 32 villages will be fully submerged. The Gaothans of 12 of the 32 villages are expected to be fully submerged and the remaining villages will be partially submerged. As a result of this submergence the total number of persons affected will be 17,867 and, according to the Revenue Records, the Khatedars whose lands will be affected will be 2967 in number. The total land which will be submerged as a result of the Dhom Dam is expected to be 6433 acres.

3. Now, the case of the State Government is that until lands are acquired for re-settlement of the persons whose land will be affected by the construction of the dam, possession of their lands cannot be taken. This, therefore, first necessitated acquisition of land for the purposes of settlement of the persons whose lands would be submerged as a result of the construction of the dam and as a matter of policy, the Government has decided to acquire, for the purposes of resettlement, lands from the Khatedars from the benefited zone, that is, the area falling within the command area of the said project. This decision was taken by a meeting of the senior officers of the Government including the Commissioner of Poona, the Director of Settlement and Secretary to the General Administration Department, the Chief Engineer in charge of the Project, the Collectors of Satara and Sangli and other senior officials held on 13th July 1968. They had originally made out a schedule for guidance in the matter of acquisition of the land and their decision was approved by the Government. This decision came to be formulated in the form of a Government Resolution which is also impugned in this petition.

4. Since this Government Resolution has been vehemently attacked we may briefly refer to the salient features of this Government Resolution dated 31st Oct. 1969. This Resolution referred to the fact that since a separate machinery for speedy resettlement of the project-affected persons was necessary, a Directorate of Resettlement was created in September 1965. The functions of the Director of Resettlement were stated as follows:—

- (1) Allotment of alternative lands.
 - (2) Development of alternative lands referred to in (1) above.
 - (3) Provision of drinking water supply in new village sites.
 - (4) Provision of primary schools in village sites.
 - (5) Offering employment opportunities to the displaced persons in State as well as private sector enterprises.
 - (6) Grant of loan facilities for village housing in new sites.
 - (7) Payment of compensation (a) in cash (equivalent to the difference between the value of the lands acquired from the people and the value of alternative lands provided to them and (b) in full where no such alternative lands are given.
 - (8) Wherewithals for good agriculture.
 - (9) Provision of approach and internal roads in the new sites.
 - (10) Supply of electricity for domestic as well as agricultural purposes.
 - (11) Provision of community works.
- These functions indicate that the task of resettlement was to be handled by the Director in all its aspects and it was not restricted only to making available of agricultural land for cultivation to those whose lands were submerged as a result of the Dhom Project. The task of resettlement included the re-establishment of new villages altogether with all the necessary facilities incidental to the location of Abadi or village sites. Indeed this was made further clear in paragraph 6 of the impugned Government Resolution which created an Advisory Committee at the District level and the essential items of resettlement were stated in paragraph 6 to be involving the following items:—
- (1) Selection of Gaothan sites,
 - (2) Selection of alternative, agricultural land,
 - (3) Providing civic amenities in new Gaothan, and
 - (4) Such other concessions as are necessary for the resettlement of the affected families.

The selection of Gaothan sites had to be made in consultation with the project-affected persons. With regard to the alternative agricultural land, the following guidelines were stated:—

"It has been decided to grant alternative agricultural land to Project Affected Persons as far as possible. This mainly depends on the availability of land in the vicinity of the Project. The land that is to be granted is procured from the following sources:—

- (1) Government waste land.
- (2) Government forest and land either Revenue or Reserved.
- (3) Surplus land available under the Land Ceiling Act.
- (4) Galper lands.

If the land referred to above is either not adequate to meet the demand of the Project Affected persons or is not available at all then the land is acquired from the benefited zone and distributed to those whose lands are acquired for the projects. However, care is taken to see that the persons are left with economic unit or holding. In order to acquire lands in this way from benefited zone, Government has laid down the slab system, which is as follows:—

10 acres or less than	Nil.
10 acres	Nil.
10 to 15 acres	2 acres.
15 to 30 acres	5 acres.
More than 30 acres	5 acres plus the entire land which is more than 30 acres".

So far as distribution of land is concerned, the Government Resolution referred to the fact that it was not always possible to grant lands equivalent to what the project-affected persons have lost, but it was stated that efforts were made "to grant to displaced Khatedars at least 4 acres of dry land or two acres of seasonally irrigated land or one acre of irrigated land wherever feasible". The civic amenities which were to be provided were basic civic amenities, that is, drinking water wells, school buildings, temples, Samaj Mandirs, internal and approach roads, etc. in the new Gaothan from project funds.

5. The Government has estimated that 4902 acres and 23 gunthas of land is required for rehabilitating project-affected persons of Krishna Dhom Project. According to the Government, the petitioners held an area of 14 acres and 35½ gunthas out of which only 2 acres and 35 gunthas were perennial Bagayat lands and the land that was being acquired was only 3 acres of Jirayat land.

6. Now, when originally a notification under S. 4 of the Land Acquisition Act was issued in respect of the petitioners' land, an enquiry under S. 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act was made and after the Land Acquisition Officer had made his report to the Commissioner, the impugned notification came to be issued. The petitioners' case before the Land Acquisition Officer, when objections were submitted under S. 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act, appeared to be that there was already a partition on 4th February 1964 as a result of which joint family land was divided between the petitioner No. 1 and his four sons and the lands which had been notified for the purposes of acquisition had gone to the share of petitioners Nos. 2 and 3. Thus according to the petitioners, the holding of each of the sons did not exceed three acres and, therefore, no part of the land could be acquired. In other words, in the enquiry under S. 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act, a partition was set up with a view to show that the holding of each of the petitioners was less than 8 or 10 acres and, therefore, their land should not be acquired. Petitioner No. 1 specifically stated that he had nothing more to add which meant that he did not want to raise any other objection to the acquisition. This objection was rejected by the Land Acquisition Officer and one of the contentions raised in the petition by the petitioners is that the Land Acquisition Officer had mechanically given effect to the Government policy Resolution without applying his mind to the facts of each case. When a notification under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act came to be issued on 17th December 1970, the petitioners filed this objection on 25th February 1971 challenging the acquisition proceedings.

7. So far as the present petitioners are concerned, the challenge before us mainly turned on the ground of discrimination resulting from the slab system incorporated in the Government Resolution as a criterion for acquisition of land. But before we take up the challenge on the ground of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India, we will dispose of two other challenges which have been raised by the learned Counsel for the petitioners in this petition.

8. It was contended at the outset that since under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act land could be acquired only for a public purpose, the purpose for which the land in question is being acquired cannot be said to be a public purpose because the only object of the State Government is to take land from the petitioners and hand it over to some other person who may be one of the project-affected persons. Thus, according to the learned Counsel, the acquisition of land is for the benefit of one single individual and cannot, therefore, be said to be for public purpose. The learned Counsel for the petitioners placed reliance on the decision of Privy Council in Hamabai Framjee Petit v. Secretary of State, AIR 1914 PC 20. Now, it is well established that no exhaustive definition of the expression "public purpose" is possible. The definition of public purpose in S. 3 (f) of the Land Acquisition Act is an inclusive definition. It will, therefore, have to be decided on the facts and circumstances of each case whether the purpose for which acquisition is sought to be made is a public purpose. It is also well established that a public purpose must include the welfare of a large section of the community as opposed to the private comfort or advantage of the members of the public (See Arnold Rodricks v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1966 SC 1788). The purposes for which land is being acquired have been elaborately set out in the impugned Government Resolution and there is no doubt that the land which is being acquired by the impugned notification is acquired for the purposes of resettlement of project-affected persons. What would be the scope and extent of resettlement is also made clear in the Government Resolution. In a welfare State it was eminently proper for the Government to see that the project-affected persons, who are uprooted from the land which would be submerged under the dam, are resettled by the creation of new village sites where proper civic amenities will have to be made available to such resettled persons. What would be the nature of the basic civic amenities which the Government intends to make available to the resettled persons is also made clear in the Government Resolution. Now, in our view, it is too late in the day to even urge that when land is required for the establishment of a new village site, such a purpose cannot be called a public purpose. The whole argument of the learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioners is based on the assumption that their land is being acquired for the benefit of any particular individual. In fairness to the learned Counsel for the petitioners, it must, however, be stated that he conceded that it was not possible for the petitioners to name any particular individual for whose benefit the land was going to be acquired. That the land was being acquired for the benefit of the community as such—the community consisting of the project-affected persons—is now beyond dispute. The decision of the Government as contained in the impugned resolution shows that it has arrived at a certain figure with regard to the requirement of land in order to resettle the project-affected persons. Obviously, the acquisition is intended to build up a land pool out of which land would be made available for different uses such as allocation of building sites to individuals, reservation of land for communal purposes, land over which buildings will be constructed and wells will be dug and it is difficult to entertain an argument that when land is acquired for building up such a pool of land, the land is being acquired from the petitioners for the benefit of any particular individual. We have, therefore, no doubt in this case that resettlement of project-affected persons was clearly a public purpose for which a notification for acquisition of land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act could validly be taken. If any authority is needed for the proposition that acquisition of land for the purposes of village sites is a public purpose, it can be found in the decisions of the Punjab and the Patna High Courts relied upon by the learned Advocate General in Tilak Ram v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 Punj 83, and Muhammad Oamar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 Pat 420. In Tilak Ram v. State of Punjab, a Division Bench of the Punjab High Court took the view that there was nothing illegal or unjust in the Government taking steps to rehabilitate thousands of persons who had been displaced as a result of acquisition of their land for a public purpose by acquiring land for them in the near vicinity of their original homes and resettle them on that land and such an object was a public purpose and it could not be placed on the same footing as a transfer of land from one individual to another. A Division Bench of the Patna High Court in Muhammad Oamar v. State of Bihar has also taken a similar view. The acquisition in that case was for rehabilitation and resettlement of those villagers whose lands were taken away for what was known there as Hatia Project which was started for the construction of the factories and other buildings of Heavy Engineering Corporation at Hatia near Ranchi town and the question was whether acquisition for the rehabilitation and resettlement of the villagers whose lands had been taken away for the project was acquisition for public purpose. The Division Bench took the view that the rehabilitation of persons displaced by the acquisition made for the Corporation was a public purpose and land could be validly acquired.

9. The second contention raised by the learned Counsel for the petitioners was that the notification under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act was vitiated because what purported to be an enquiry under S. 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act was in effect a farce of an enquiry because the Land Acquisition Officer was obliged to give effect to the scheme contained in the Government Resolution and the provisions of S. 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act cannot, therefore, be said to have been complied with.

10. Now, S. 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act requires a person interested in any land which has been notified under S. 4 to submit his objection to the acquisition to the Collector or the Land Acquisition Officer in writing. It is then obligatory on the Land Acquisition Officer to give the objector an opportunity of being heard either in person or by pleader and after making such enquiry as the Land Acquisition Officer thinks necessary, he has to make a report in respect of the land which has been notified under S. 4 (1) to the Commissioner. The State Government has produced the entire record of the land acquisition proceedings. The proceedings show that the only objection to the acquisition made by petitioner No. 1, whose name alone appeared to be recorded in the Revenue Records as the owner of the land, was that he had orally partitioned the lands five years back and each of his sons was cultivating three acres of land. The obvious object of this objection was to show that in view of the impugned Government Resolution, since the second and the third petitioners had land less than 10 acres, their lands should not be acquired. The record shows that the petitioner No. 1 who on the entries in the Revenue Records, was the only person interested, was heard. He had produced before the Land Acquisition Officer a copy of the partition deed said to have been executed in 1964 on a general stamp paper of Rs. 3/-. The Land Acquisition Officer found that the partition deed was not a registered document, that the partition had not been given effect to in the Record of Rights and he, therefore, rejected the story of partition as not genuine. Now, when on facts the Land Acquisition Officer has held that the story of partition has not been proved, it is difficult to see how this report is open to challenge on the ground that the Land Acquisition Officer was mechanically giving effect to the impugned Government Resolution. Indeed it appears that if it could have been successfully shown to the Land Acquisition Officer that petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 have been separately holding land as a result of a valid partition, it may be that the acquisition proceedings would have been dropped in view of the policy of the Government as contained in the impugned Government Resolution. It is, therefore, difficult for us to accept the argument that the enquiry under S. 5-A of the Land Acquisition Act was mere farce and, therefore, the notification under S. 6 was vitiated.

11. We now come to the main debate which took place at the bar on the question as to whether any final orders could be passed in this petition in view of the fact that the impugned Government Resolution has been challenged on the ground of violation of the equal protection clause contained in Art. 14 of the Constitution of India. The argument runs thus: The impugned Government Resolution contains a decision to acquire land only on the basis of the total holding of the Khatedar irrespective of the size of the family of each Khatedar and thus whatever may be the size of the family of the Khatedar, they are all treated in the same manner with regard to the extent of the liability of their lands to acquisition. Thus equal treatment is meted out to persons who are differently situated and there is, therefore, a violation of Article 14. Further, the President of India has issued a Proclamation under Art. 359 (1) of the Constitution of India which requires all proceedings pending in any Court for the enforcement of a right under Art. 14 of the Constitution to be suspended for the period during which the Proclamations of Emergency made under cl. (1) of Article 359 of the Constitution on 3rd December 1971 and on 27th June 1975 were both in force. Therefore, as long as any one of the two proclamations of Emergency continues to be in force, the proceedings must stand suspended in the same state as they were on 27th June 1975, that is, the date of the Proclamation under Art. 359 (1) of the Constitution of India. It is, therefore, argued that this Court must stay its hands and must not deal any further with the petition of the petitioners during the subsistence of the Proclamation of Emergency.

12. Now, the question as to what was the effect of the Presidential Proclamation on certain pending matters in which a challenge to the land acquisition proceedings was raised on the ground of violation of Article 14 was involved in a large number of cases. We have therefore heard the learned Counsel for the petitioners at considerable length and we have also heard Mr. Rane who is appearing as Counsel for the petitioner in Special Civil Application No. 2908 of 1974. Counsel for petitioners heavily relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in Makhan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1964) 4 SCR 797 : (AIR 1964 SC 381), a decision on which the learned Advocate General appearing for the State of Maharashtra also heavily relies for the proposition that a mere mention of Article 14 in a petition could not have the effect of keeping the proceedings suspended and that the Court was entitled to go into the question as to whether a decision on the alleged violation of Art. 14 of the Constitution was necessary for effectively determining the right, the violation of which has been complained of by the petitioner.

13. Since much turns on the construction that we shall place on the Presidential Proclamation of 27th June 1975, we propose to reproduce the provisions of Art. 359 as also the Presidential Proclamation. Art. 359 of the Constitution reads as follows:—

“359. (1) Where a Proclamation of Emergency is in operation, the President may by order declare that the right to move any court for the enforcement of such of the rights conferred by Part III as may be mentioned in the order and all proceedings pending in any court for the enforcement of the rights so mentioned shall remain suspended for the period during which the Proclamation is in force or for such shorter period as may be specified in the order.

(1A) While an order made under cl. (1) mentioning any of the rights conferred by Part III is in operation, nothing in that Part conferring those rights shall restrict the power of the State as defined in the said part to make any law or to take any executive action which the State would but for the provisions contained in that Part be competent to make or to take, but any law so made shall, to the extent of the incompetency, cease to have effect as soon as the order aforesaid ceases to operate, except as respects things done or omitted to be done before the law so ceases to have effect.

(2) An order made as aforesaid may extend to the whole or any part of the territory of India.

(3) Every order made under cl. (1) shall, as soon as may be after it is made, be laid before each House of Parliament.”

It may be stated that clause (1A) above was added by the Constitution Thirty-eighth Amendment Act, 1975. The words “enforcement of rights” are to be found also in Article 226 of the Constitution of India as also in Article 32 of the Constitution of India. Article 226 (1) of the Constitution provides:

“226. (1) Notwithstanding anything in Art. 32, every High Court shall have power, throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction, to issue to any person or authority, including in appropriate cases any Government, within those territories directions, orders or writs, including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto and certiorari, or any of them, for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Part III and for any other purpose.”

The Proclamation issued by the President of India on 27th June 1975 reads as follows:—

“In exercise of the powers conferred by cl. (1) of Art. 359 of the Constitution, the President hereby declares that the rights of any person (including a foreigner) to move any court for the enforcement of the rights conferred by Art. 14, Art. 21 and Art. 22 of the Constitution and all proceedings pending in any Court for the enforcement of the abovementioned rights shall remain suspended, for the period during which the proclamation of emergency made under cl. (1) of Art. 352 of the Constitution on the 3rd December 1971 and on the 25th June, 1975 are both in force.

This order shall extend to the whole of the territory of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

This order shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any order made before the date of this order under cl. (1) of Art. 359 of the Constitution.”

The main contention on behalf of the petitioners as well as the one advanced by Mr. Rane is that the suspension of proceedings referred to in the latter part of the Presidential Declaration must be construed with regard to the State of the proceedings pending in a Court for the enforcement of a fundamental right either under Art. 14, Article 21 or Article 22 with reference to 27th June 1975 on which day the Presidential Proclamation was issued. It is contended that the only criterion for finding out whether a proceeding falls within the latter part of the Presidential Proclamation is the nature of the relief asked for in the petition. It is urged that if the Court proceeds to hear the petition and disposes of the petition even by dismissing it, there will be no suspension of the proceeding, but there will be a termination of the proceeding which is not permissible in view of the express words in the latter part of the Proclamation. However, when it was put to the learned Counsel as to whether or not even an interim order could be passed in a proceeding, an alternative argument was advanced that it may be possible for the Court to ascertain whether Art. 14 is involved in the case, but once it is found that the petitioner wants to urge for a relief based on the alleged violation of the right under Art. 14, the proceedings must then be stayed whatever may be the consequences. Indeed, the learned Counsel went to the extent of contending that once a petition is admitted, notwithstanding the fact that a challenge on the ground of Art. 14 is not even possible on the facts alleged in the petition, no final orders in that petition could be made and the consequences of any particular injunction or a stay order issued in the proceedings may continue to the prejudice of the State or for the matter of that to the prejudice of any party whatsoever and such a consequence, if it results from the terms of the Presidential Proclamation, must necessarily follow.

14. On the other hand, it was contended by the learned Advocate General that before an order for suspension of the proceedings is passed, the Court is duty bound to see that the petitioner proves that he has a right, that there is a violation of such a right in the sense that he has a cause of action and that the proceeding is really a proceeding for enforcement of such a right. In other words, it is contended that before an order for suspension of the proceeding till the revocation of the Proclamation is made, the Court will have to decide whether the proceeding is for enforcement of a fundamental right.

15. Now, so far as a citizen is concerned, there can be no doubt that the fundamental right under Article 14 of the Constitution vests in him by the very provisions of the Constitution. The question, however, is whether when in a given proceeding a petitioner contends or alleges that his fundamental right under Art. 14 has been violated and, therefore, the proceedings should remain suspended, the Court is bound to accept ipse dixit of a petitioner or whether it is open to the Court to go further into the matter and find out whether there is in fact any violation of a fundamental right and it is unable to give any relief to the petitioner because of the amended Presidential Proclamation in the matter of enforcement of the rights enumerated in the Presidential Declaration.

16. It is difficult for us to hold that merely a label given by a petitioner to the petition would be conclusive of the question as to whether the proceedings must stand suspended under the terms of the Presidential Proclamation of 27th June 1975. There can be no doubt that in a proceeding like the instant one, the petitioner seeks to enforce his alleged right under Art. 14 against the State. What then is the effect when the Presidential Proclamation makes it imperative for the proceeding for enforcement of such a right to be suspended? The object of the Proclamation, which it does not seem possible to dispute, is that immunity is granted to the State during the Emergency against any challenge to the action of the State on the ground of violation of Article 14 of the Constitution. There can be no doubt that the effect of the Presidential Proclamation is that in a pending proceeding the Court will not be able to make any order or issue any writ in order to enforce a fundamental right referred to in the Presidential Proclamation. That appears to us to be the object of suspension of these proceedings contemplated by the Presidential Proclamation. But it cannot be the object of the Presidential Proclamation that where a pending proceeding can be terminated without giving a relief amounting to enforcement of a fundamental right, the proceeding must still stand suspended. If the State is not going to be affected in any manner whatsoever by an order in a pending proceeding in the matter of enforcement of a fundamental right the violation of which is alleged by a petitioner, we fail to see why such a proceeding should remain suspended merely because it falls within the description of a proceeding for enforcement of a right referred to in the Proclamation. The scope of a declaration under Art. 352 (1) of the Constitution was considered at length by the Supreme Court in Makhan Singh's case cited supra (AIR 1964 SC 381). The Supreme Court dealt with the scope of Art. 359 (1) in that case and it was observed as follows:—

“Since the object of Art. 359 (1) is to suspend the rights of the citizens to move any court, the consequence of the Presidential Order may be that any proceeding which may be pending at the date of the Order remains suspended during the time that the Order is in operation and may be revived when the said Order ceases to be operative; and fresh proceedings cannot be taken by a citizen after the order has been issued, because the Order takes away the right to move any court and during the operation of the Order, the said right cannot be exercised by instituting a fresh proceeding contrary to the Order. If a fresh proceeding falling within the mischief of Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order issued under it is instituted after Order has been issued, it will have to be dismissed as being incompetent. In other words, Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order issued under it may constitute a sort of moratorium or a blanket ban against the institution or continuance of any legal action subject to two important conditions. The first condition relates to the character of the legal action and requires that the said action must seek to obtain a relief on the ground that the claimant's fundamental rights specified in the Presidential Order have been contravened, and the second condition relates to the period during which this ban is to operate. The ban operates either for the period of the Proclamation or for such shorter period as may be specified in the Order."

It is on these observations that the learned Counsel for the petitioners relied and, according to him, the first condition is clearly satisfied in the instant case inasmuch as the action in the instant case is one which seeks to obtain a relief on the ground that the claimant's fundamental rights specified in the Presidential Order had been contravened. It is vehemently urged that both the conditions laid down by the Supreme Court are satisfied in the instant case and during the time the Presidential Proclamation of 27th June 1975 remains in force, the present proceedings must stand suspended.

17. The observations of the Supreme Court quoted earlier must, however, be read along with the other observations made later in the same judgment. It may be remembered that in Makhan Singh's case (AIR 1964 SC 381) the constitutional validity of S. 3 (2) (15) (i) and S. 40 of the Defence of India Act, 1962, and R. 30 (1) (b) of the Defence of India Rules was challenged before the Supreme Court on the ground that they contravened the fundamental rights of the petitioners under Arts. 14, 21, 22 (4), (5) and (7) of the Constitution. Later in the decision, the Supreme Court dealt with the question as to what was the nature of the proceedings which were barred by the Presidential Order issued under Art. 359 (1) and dealing with this question, it was observed as follows:—

"The next question to consider is, what is the nature of the proceedings which are barred by the Presidential Order issued under Art. 359 (1)? They are proceedings taken by citizens for the enforcement of such of the rights conferred by Part III as may be mentioned in the order. If a citizen moves any court to obtain a relief on the ground that his fundamental rights specified in the Order have been contravened, that proceeding is barred. In determining the question as to whether a particular proceeding falls within the mischief of the Presidential Order or not, what has to be examined is not so much the form which the proceeding has taken, or the words in which the relief is claimed, as the substance of the matter and consider whether before granting the relief claimed by the citizen, it would be necessary for the Court to enquire into the question whether any of his specified fundamental rights have been contravened. If any relief cannot be granted to the citizen without determining the question of the alleged infringement of the said specified fundamental rights, that is a proceeding which falls under Art. 359 (1) and would, therefore, be hit by the Presidential Order issued under the said Article. The sweep of Article 359 (1) and the Presidential Order issued under it is thus wide enough to include all claims made by citizens in any court of competent jurisdiction when it is shown that the said claims cannot be effectively adjudicated upon without examining the question as to whether the citizen is in substance, seeking to enforce any of the said specified fundamental rights."

When it was contended before the Supreme Court that the proceeding under S. 491 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code, would not fall within the sweep of the Presidential Order, the Supreme Court rejected the contention with these observations:

"In this connection, it is hardly necessary to emphasise that in deciding the present question, we must take into account the substance of the matter and not attach undue or exaggerated importance to the form of the proceedings. If the form which the proceedings take is held to be decisive in the matter, it would lead to this irrational position that an application containing the requisite averments in support of a plea for the release of the detenu would be thrown out by the High Court if in form it purports to be made under Art. 226, whereas it would be entertained and may indeed succeed if it purports to be made under S. 491 (1) (b)... Thus the true legal position, in substance, is that the clause "the right to move any court" used in Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order takes in all legal actions intended to be filed, or filed, in which the specified rights are sought to be enforced, and it covers all relevant categories of jurisdictions of competent courts under which the said actions would otherwise normally have been entertained and tried."

The above quoted observations of the Supreme Court are, in our view, a complete answer to the contention raised on behalf of the petitioners that the moment the petition is merely framed as one to enforce the right under Art. 14 of the Constitution, it must be deemed to be covered by the Presidential Proclamation and the proceedings must be stayed. As pointed out by the Supreme Court, it is the substance of the matter which must be ascertained and the ascertainment of the substance of the matter will necessarily involve some argument and some discussion. This would mean that the proceedings cannot be mechanically stayed or suspended because they merely refer to a violation of Article 14 of the Constitution. It is important to note that the observations of the Supreme Court indicate that a proceeding will fall within the sweep of Art. 359 (1) "when it is shown that the said claims cannot be effectively adjudicated upon without examining the question as to whether the citizen is in substance, seeking to enforce any of the said specified fundamental rights." It appears to us that the use of the words "cannot be effectively adjudicated upon" is of some significance. It appears to us that effective adjudication would mean that a decision in favour of the petitioner was necessary which would have the effect of enforcement of the fundamental right claimed by the petitioner. The word 'enforce' means, as per the Random House Dictionary, amongst other things, "compel obedience to". Thus the word 'enforcement' used in Art. 359 (1) or in Article 226 of the Constitution, contemplates an order or a proceeding which compels obedience in accordance with the constitutional imperative in Art. 14 so far as that Article is concerned. The effect of the Presidential Proclamation under Article 359 is that the Court cannot compel the State to give effect to the mandate contained in Article 14. If that was the object of the Proclamation and the provisions of Art. 359 (1), we fail to see how that object would in any way be frustrated if in a given case, it is found on facts that the petitioner has not made out any case of violation of Art. 14. The dismissal of a petition consequent on a finding that no breach or violation of the fundamental right under Art. 14 has been proved will not amount to any breach of the terms of the Presidential Proclamation. On the other hand, if an enquiry is made to find out whether a breach has been established and the Court stays its hands in a case where the petitioner has been able to establish its breach and further to deal with the proceedings, it will then amount to suspension of the proceedings in compliance with the Presidential Proclamation. The meaning of the word 'suspend' as given in the Random House Dictionary is "to hold or keep undetermined; refrain from forming or concluding definitely". The state of the proceeding when the Court refuses to go ahead and issue a mandamus or a direction enforcing the fundamental right under Art. 14 even after it is found that the petitioner has made out a case in his favour for enforcement of that right will still be a state of suspension inasmuch as the proceedings have not concluded definitely. We are, therefore, unable to accept the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners as also of Mr. Rane that merely because averments alleging a breach of Art. 14 of the Constitution are made in the petition, we must adjourn the proceedings sine die and allow the proceedings to pend indefinitely without even ascertaining as to whether the petitioner is able to make out a case of the violation of the provisions of Article 14 of the Constitution.

18. We may in passing refer to a decision of Deshmukh J. dated 25-2-1976 relied upon by the learned Advocate General in Misc. Petn. No. 344 of 1974 (Bom), Bharat Barrel and Drum Mfg. Co. Pvt. Ltd. v. The State of Maharashtra, in which a contention identical to the one which is advanced before us was rejected by the learned Judge. A notification of acquisition was challenged in that case on the ground of violation of Article 14 of the Constitution and it was contended that the proceedings could not be proceeded with in view of the Presidential Proclamation of 27th June 1975 and of January 8, 1976 suspending the right to approach a court for enforcement of fundamental rights under the Constitution. The notification related to acquisition for a public purpose and an interim order was issued after the petition was admitted and the consequence was that if the petition was not heard during the pendency of the Emergency, the acquisition would be postponed. The learned Judge having heard the parties at considerable length came to the conclusion that the petitioners' alleged challenge under Art. 14 of the Constitution was no challenge at all, but that the application was a frivolous one merely to prolong the acquisition by the State for the purpose of the Municipal Corporation. On merits the learned Judge took the view that the petitioners in that case had no valid right at all to oppose the acquisition and an attempt to resort to provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution was a mere pretext to somehow gain time and put off the evil day of acquisition.

19. The learned Counsel for the petitioners has placed reliance on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Jagdish v. Union of India, AIR 1976 Cal 17. That was a case in which the petitioner had challenged notice under S. 269 (1) of the Income-tax Act, 1961, and in the petition the provisions of Section 269-C to Section 269-I and Section 269-R were challenged as ultra vires of Article 19 (1) (f), Article 14 and Article 31 of the Constitution. An injunction was granted and it was contended before the learned Judge that in view of the Presidential Proclamation, the proceeding should be suspended and in the premises, the interim order must necessarily continue. The learned Judge dealing with this contention observed:

"The position seems to be rather unfortunate because in this case there was an interim order and the effect would be that the interim order would continue so long as the emergency continues or until the proclamation is revoked, though the examination of the question which was possible because the matter is ready for hearing, might have revealed that the proceedings under the notice were valid. In numerous cases (sic) under Art. 14 are involved and while new applications or cases where Article 14 is resorted to are no longer possible during the continuance of the emergency, the persons who have obtained Rules or orders of injunction prior to the 27th of June, 1975 would continue to enjoy those injunctions without the Courts having the opportunity to examine the validity or the propriety of the said orders simply because the questions under Article 14 are involved in those applications."

The learned Judge, therefore, adjourned the hearing of the petition sine die. There is no doubt that this decision wholly supports the contention raised on behalf of the learned Counsel for the petitioners, but having regard to the discussion made earlier, we are unable to agree with the view taken by the learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court.

20. We have, therefore, heard Mr. Jaha-girdar on the merits and the only contention raised is that the Government Resolution is bad because it treats differently situated persons in the same manner. As already pointed out, the argument is that while laying down the extent of lands to be acquired from each Khatedar, no account is taken of the number of members of the Khatedar's family and that is why the impugned Government Resolution amounts to infringement of the guarantee of equality under Article 14 of the Constitution.

21. Now, it is difficult for us to even entertain such a challenge to the Government Resolution. It cannot be disputed that the petitioner No. 1's lands are not being acquired by the Government Resolution. The acquisition of the petitioner No. 1's lands is made under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. Those provisions are not challenged. Neither, it must be said in fairness to the petitioner's counsel, was it urged that acquisition of land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act was in any way infirm or defective. The acquisition of petitioner No. 1's land is not directly the result of the impugned Government Resolution. The impugned Government Resolution merely provides for certain guidelines. It cannot be disputed that the petitioner No. 1 could not have posed any challenge successfully to a notification under the Land Acquisition Act even if his entire holding was validly acquired as a result of a notification under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act. Such an acquisition of the entire holding was clearly permissible under law. His grievance appears to be that while his entire land could have been taken validly under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, land to a lesser extent has been taken in consequence of a Government Resolution and this acquisition is bad because the extent of the land was so fixed that the size of the family of other Khatedars in the same slab has not been taken into account. It is difficult for us to see how such a challenge could be entertained even prima facie. As the Resolution indicates, various modes have been set out therein in order to build up the pool of land necessary for the resettlement of project-affected persons. Government would use its own land; it would use the land which came as surplus land under the provisions of the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961; if possible, it would use Galper lands and if even then the requirements of land were not met, land would be acquired from private Khatedars. It is there that for the guidance of the Land Acquisition Officer, it has been laid down that he must see that at least an economic holding, which means about 8 acres, is left with the Khatedar. In other words, care was taken to see that another class of landless people is not created as a result of the Land Acquisition proceedings. Now, these were merely guidelines for determining as to how much of land should be taken from each Khatedar though, if necessary, the entire land of the Khatedar was liable to be acquired validly under the statutory provisions of the Land Acquisition Act.

22. Even otherwise it appears to us that the challenge to acquisition of land on the ground of violation of Article 14 of the Constitution is entirely misconceived. It is now well established that Article 14 does not prohibit classification, but the classification must be founded on an intelligible differentia and the differentia must have a rational relation with the object to be achieved. In other words, a reasonable classification is always permissible. The object of the resettlement scheme is to obtain land. A classification based on the total holding cannot be said to be arbitrary or unreasonable. The slab system which has been laid down in the Government Resolution is thus based on certain considerations, namely, that a person should not become landless and the minimum land which must remain with him after acquisition must be equal to an economic holding. The slab system varying from 10 acres to 30 acres is clearly based on the footing that where a Khatedar has more land, more land can also be acquired from him. Therefore, it cannot be said that the classification is arbitrary and there is no doubt that this classification has a rational relationship with the object to be achieved, namely, to build up a pool of land available without creating a new class of landless people. Not much need be said to point out that the kind of criterion which is suggested by the learned Counsel for the petitioners is almost an impossibility. To determine as to how much land should be acquired on the basis of the number of members in the family would be an almost impossible task and Article 14 does not contemplate any mini classification. There can be no rigid formula of a reasonable classification and whether a classification is reasonable or not will have to be decided on the facts of each case. As long as a classification includes all persons and things similarly situated, the classification could be held to be valid and reasonable. The classes of Khatedars referred to in the impugned Government Resolution are determined on the basis of their total holding. The content of the words "similarly situated" was discussed by the Supreme Court in Mohammad Shujat Ali v. Union of India, AIR 1974 SC 1631 in paragraph 25 as follows:—

"But the question is: what does this ambiguous and crucial phrase, "similarly situated" mean? Where are we to look for the test of similarity of situation which determines the reasonableness of a classification? The inescapable answer is that we must look beyond the classification to the purpose of the law. A reasonable classification is one which includes all persons or things similarly situated with respect to the purpose of the law. There should be no discrimination between one person or thing and another, if as regards the subject-matter of the legislation their position is 'substantially the same. This is sometimes epigrammatically described by saying that what the constitutional code of equality and equal opportunity requires is that among equals, the law should be equal and that like should be treated alike. But the basic principle underlying the doctrine is that the legislature should have the right to classify and impose special burdens upon or grant special benefits to persons or things grouped together under the classification, so long as the classification is of persons or things similarly situated with respect to the purpose of the legislation, so that all persons or things similarly situated are treated alike by law."

The Government Resolution deals with the question of the extent of land to be acquired from the Khatedars on the basis of the extent of the land held by the Khatedar and all Khatedars having a holding equal to the area contemplated by the slab system laid down in the said resolution are treated similarly. If this basis cannot be said to be in any way arbitrary, even if another basis was possible, that would be no ground for striking down the guidelines on the ground of infraction of Article 14 of the Constitution.

23. The learned Counsel for the petitioners heavily relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in State of Kerala v. Haji K. Kutty, AIR 1969 SC 378. That was a case in which the provisions of the Kerala Buildings Tax Act, 1961, were challenged because for determining the quantum of tax, the sole test made was the area of the floor of the building and it was found that the Act applied to the entire State of Kerala and whether the building was situated in a large industrial town or in an insignificant village, the rate of tax was determined by the floor area; it did not depend upon the purpose for which the building was used, the nature of the structure, the town and locality in which the building is situated, the economic rent which may be obtained from the building, the cost of the building and other related circumstances which may appropriately be taken into consideration in any rational system of taxation of building. Striking down the provisions of that Act, the Supreme Court observed as follows:—

"But in enacting the Kerala Buildings Tax Act no attempt at any rational classification is made by the legislature. As already observed, the Legislature has not taken into consideration in imposing tax the class to which a building belongs, the nature of construction, the purpose for which it is used, its situation, its capacity for profitable user and other relevant circumstances which have a bearing on matters of taxation. They have adopted merely the floor area of the building as the basis of tax irrespective of all other considerations. Where objects, persons or transactions essentially dissimilar are treated by the imposition of a uniform tax, discrimination may result, for, in our view, refusal to make a rational classification may itself in some cases operate as denial of equality."

Now, those observations were particularly made in the context of imposition of a uniform tax only on the basis of floor area irrespective of all other considerations and where no attempt was made to make any rational classification. The failure to make any rational classification was itself held to amount to a denial of equality. In the instant case distinct and clear guidelines in the matter of extent of land to be acquired have been laid down with reference to the total holding of the Khatedars. The observations of the Supreme Court relied upon cannot, therefore, be of any assistance to the petitioners.

24. We have already pointed out that a classification on the basis of total holding cannot be said to be an arbitrary classification. The mere fact that holders of the same extent of the land may have a larger or smaller number of members in their families cannot enable the petitioners to challenge the decision to acquire land on the ground that differently situated persons have been similarly treated because it was perfectly permissible to make a classification on the basis of the total holding of the Khatedars. Therefore, even assuming that it was permissible to consider the challenge to the guidelines contained in the Government Resolution, we find that there is a clear and a distinct basis for the classification and there was no question of any violation of the provisions of Article 14 of the Constitution.

25. In the view which we have taken, we are unable to hold in favour of the petitioner No. 1 that the proceedings for acquisition of his land were in any way infirm on the ground of violation of the provisions of Article 14 of the Constitution. This cannot, therefore, be treated as a case in which an effective determination in favour of the petitioner No. 1 of the challenge on the ground of alleged violation of Article 14 becomes necessary.

26. In this view of the matter, we must reject the petition. Rule discharged. However, there will be no order as to costs of the petition.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 367

NAIK AND SAWANT, JJ.

Ramabai Balkrishna Nene and others, Petitioners v. The Secretary Urban Development Public Health and Housing Deptt. and others, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1087 of 1971, D/- 12-10-1976.

(A) Bombay Town Planning Act (1954), S. 10 — Section does not contemplate individual notices. (Para 20)

(B) Constitution of India, Arts. 359 (1) and 226 — Order under Art. 359 made by President — Effect on pending proceedings and interim orders passed in those proceedings. AIR 1976 Cal 17 Dissented from. Order in Misc. Petn. No. 501 of 1975 D/- 13-8-1976 (Bom) Overruled.

When order is made by the President under Art. 359 (1) what remains suspended is the pending proceeding which in truth and substance is for the enforcement of the right mentioned in the Presidential Order and not the enquiry about the existence or otherwise of such right. It could never have been intended that the proceedings which are liable to be dismissed in limine on the ground of laches as being hopelessly barred by time with no reasonable explanation for the delay, or on the ground of suggestio falsi and suppressio veri, or on the ground of res judicata should also be kept pending with the interim orders of stays and injunctions granted therein, with full force during the period mentioned in the President's order merely because there is an allegation in the petition about the infringement of any of the fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order. The State may also prove that the so-called infringement of a fundamental right is only a frivolous allegation and that in fact there is no such violation. In such a case no injustice would be done if the petition is disposed of and the rule is discharged. It is only such proceedings where the petitioner in fact at the time of enquiry proves that there is an infringement of a fundamental right and that he cannot hope to get the rule made absolute except on that ground alone which are intended to be attracted by the Presidential Order suspending the pending proceedings.

EU/EU/B615/77/RSK

AIR 1977 Bom 355 held is not inconsistent with AIR 1964 SC 381, or with AIR 1976 SC 1207. Order in Misc. Petn. No. 501 of 1975, D/- 13-8-1976 (Bom) Overruled.

It is inconceivable that when the main proceedings for enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order is itself kept suspended any interlocutory order issued in that proceeding could still continue to be operative. That would make the very object of the proclamation of the President and the provisions under Art. 359 of the Constitution nugatory. AIR 1976 Pat 248 Relied on; AIR 1976 Cal 17 Dissented from; Order in Misc. Petn. No. 501 of 1975 D/- 13-8-1976 (Bom) Overruled.

M. V. Paranjape with P. M. Pradhan for V. N. Ganpule, for Petitioners; C. J. Sawant, Addl. Govt. Pleader with A. M. Salik, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, (for Nos. 1, 2 and 4) and N. B. Shetye for Y. S. Chitale (for No. 3) for Opponents.

NAIK, J.:— The petitioners have filed this petition under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India, for quashing the notification issued by the Government on 7th July 1966 and 26th November 1970 under S. 10 of the Bombay Town Planning Act, 1954 modifying the development plan which was proposed by the Poona Municipal Corporation.

2. The petitioners are owners of old city survey No. 906/1 situate in Poona, which is to the north of Laxmi Road. It appears that on 28th Nov. 1958, the Municipal Corporation of Poona made a declaration of its intention of making a development plan under S. 4 (1) of the Bombay Town Planning Act, 1954 and the plan was actually published as required by S. 3 (1) of that Act in the Bombay Government Gazette dated 26th Feb. 1959. On 30th Sept. 1964, the Corporation submitted a modified plan to the Government after following the requisite procedure. In the modified plan the Corporation had reserved the property comprised in city survey No. 437/C which is to the north of the petitioner's city survey No. 906, for the purpose of a play-ground. But then the Government modified that plan by its order dated 7th July 1966 whereby the Government directed that the city survey No. 437 which is to the north of petitioners' city survey No. 906 should be used as a car parking space instead of a play ground. It was further provided that with a view to have access to that car parking space from Laxmi road which goes from east to west, the petitioner's property should be reserved as access to that parking space. This modified plan as modified by the Government under S. 10 of the Act, was in fact published in the Government Gazette on 8th July 1966.

3. On 11th Jan. 1967, the Maharashtra Regional and Town Planning Act, 1966 came into force. The Standing Committee of the Poona Municipal Corporation, therefore, passed a resolution dated 22nd Feb. 1969 for acquisition of the petitioners' land as provided by the sanctioned modified plan. The said proposal was sent to the Commissioner of Poona Division on 28th Mar. 1969. The Commissioner, therefore, issued a notification under S. 126 (2) of the Maharashtra Regional and Town Planning Act, 1966 on 26th Nov. 1970 wherein the petitioners' property which was proposed to be acquired was described as city survey No. 906 admeasuring 145.5 sq. metres. That notification was published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette on 17th Dec. 1970.

4. The 2nd respondent who is a Land Acquisition Officer thereafter issued a notice to the petitioners under S. 9 (4) of the Land Acquisition Act, on 23rd Dec. 1970. The petitioners' statement was recorded on 11th Jan. 1971 and the petitioners pointed out that their property was not properly described and that the area described was also incorrect. That is why a corrigendum dated 5th Feb. 1971 was published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette describing the petitioners' property as city survey No. 906/1 of Sadashiv Peth, admeasuring 352.8 sq. metres and city survey No. 906/2 admeasuring 556.9 sq. metres. This notification was published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette on 20th Feb. 1971.

5. The petitioners therefore approached this Court on 3rd May 1971 challenging the order of the Government passed under S. 10 of the Bombay Town Planning Act on 7th July 1966 and published in the Government Gazette on 8th July 1966. The vires of the Bombay Town Planning Act is challenged on the ground that it does not provide for individual notices and therefore it being an unreasonable restriction on the petitioners' right to own property, it is void under Art. 19 of the Constitution of India. The vires of S. 10 of the Town Planning Act is also challenged on the ground that the Government is authorised to make a modification of the plan without giving any opportunity to the concerned holders to make a representation against the proposed modification. There is also an allegation that there is discrimination practised against the petitioners in singling out their property for reservation and that amounts to violation of the petitioners' fundamental rights under Art. 14 of the Constitution. There is also another allegation that since permission was given by the Corporation from time to time to carry on construction on the rear portion of their property after the declaration of the intention under S. 4, the Corporation is estopped from acquiring the property. Lastly, it is alleged that the reservation and acquisition is mala fide.

6. As often happens, immediately after filing the petition, the petitioners moved for interim stay in terms of prayer (d) of the petition and the same was granted while issuing the rule.

7. Both the State and the Corporation have filed their returns and it is enough to state that both of them have contended that the petition is liable to be dismissed in limine because of the inordinate delay in moving the Court.

8. When the petition was called on for hearing, evidently having realised the force of the respondents' contention that the petition is liable to be dismissed on the ground of inordinate delay, Mr. Paranjpe, learned counsel for the petitioners after stating the facts submitted that since among other contentions, the petition raises the question of the infringement of the fundamental rights under articles 14 and 19 of the Constitution, having regard to the order of the President dated 26th June 1975 under Cl. (1) of Art. 359 and the subsequent order dated 8th Jan. 1976, the entire proceeding being suspended the Court cannot proceed with the matter nor suspend the stay order and it should be left as it is during the period provided in the orders of the President. In support of his submission that the Court cannot proceed to make any enquiry in the matter or suspend the stay order, Mr. Paranjpe relied upon certain passages in the judgment of the Supreme Court reported in Makhan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 381 and in particular he strongly relied upon a judgment of the learned single Judge of this Court to which we will have occasion to refer in the course of this judgment.

9. Mr. Sawant, Counsel for the State submitted that notwithstanding the orders of the President dated 27th June 1975, and 8th Jan. 1976, the Court can proceed to enquire into the matter and find out whether in fact there is a violation of any of the fundamental rights mentioned in the orders of the President. It is only if it is found that there is such an infringement, submitted Mr. Sawant, that the Court may keep the matter pending during the period provided for in the order of the President but in that event the interim stay also shall have to be suspended. In support of his submission, Mr. Sawant has relied upon a Division Bench decision of this Court in Special Civil Application No. 650 of 1971, decided by Chandurkar and Lentin JJ. on 26th Mar. 1976 : (reported in AIR 1977 Bom 355).

10. At the outset we may mention that the petition on the face of it is hopelessly delayed and no attempt is made to give any reasonable explanation for the inordinate delay of nearly five years. It is alleged in para 39 of the petition that the notification under S. 10 of the Bombay Town Planning Act was published on 8th July 1966 and that the petitioners in the absence of any individual notices to them were not aware that their property was being acquired for the purpose of parking space in the Development plan. It is further alleged that the petitioners came to know about acquisition of their property only when the Land Acquisition Officer issued notice under S. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act to the petitioners by which the petitioners were called upon to file their objections on 11th Jan. 1971. It is further alleged that the said notice did not give correct area of the petitioners' property, and that it is only after the statement of the petitioners was recorded that the Government by notification dated 15th Feb. 1971 carried out the necessary corrections in the area of the petitioners' property which was sought to be acquired and after the necessary corrections were made, the petitioners have been called upon to submit their objections. Therefore, conclude the petitioners that there is no delay or laches on the part of the petitioners to approach this Hon'ble Court.

11. Now the averments in this para. themselves make it clear that there is no dispute that the notifications under S. 10 of the Bombay Town Planning Act was in fact published in the Government Gazette on 8th July 1966.

12. S. 10 (1) of the Bombay Town Planning Act, 1954 reads as under:—

"The State Government may, after consulting the Consulting Surveyor, by notification in the Official Gazette sanction the development plan submitted to it for the whole of the area, or sanction it separately in parts, either without modification or subject to such modification as it considers expedient within the time prescribed where the development plan is sanctioned separately in parts, then each part so sanctioned shall be deemed to be the final development plan for the purposes of the succeeding provisions of this Act, and those provisions shall apply in relation to such part as they apply in relation to a development plan relating to the whole of the area."

13. Sub-s. (2) of Sec. 10 provides:

"The State Government shall fix in such notification a date not earlier than one month after the publication of such notification on which the final development plan shall come into force."

14. It would, therefore, appear that when the State Government sanctions the development plan submitted to it under S. 9, all that is required to be done is to publish the same by a notification in the official Gazette.

15. S. 4 of the Bombay Town Planning Act, 1954 provides that the local authority has to make a declaration of its intention to prepare a development plan and despatch a copy thereof to the State Government for publication in the official Gazette and shall publish it in the prescribed manner for inviting suggestions from the public within a period of two months.

16. The development plan is to be prepared under S. 3 and published in the prescribed manner and must be submitted to the State Government for sanction.

17. S. 7 lays down the contents of the development plan.

18. S. 8 provides the particulars to be published and submitted to the State Government along with the development plan.

19. Under S. 9, if within two months from the date of publication of the development plan any member of the public communicates in writing to the local authority any suggestion relating to such plan, the local authority shall consider such suggestion and may, at any time before submitting the development plan to the State Government, modify such plan as it thinks fit.

20. When the development plan thus goes to the State Government for its consideration and sanction, under S. 10, the State Government has the power to sanction the same with or without modification and all that is required to be done, to give effect to it is to publish the same by a notification in the official Gazette. There is, therefore, no provision in S. 10 of the Act for giving individual notices to the owners of the property who may be affected by this modified plan. In fact it is too late in the day to challenge the vires of the Bombay Town Planning Act inasmuch as the validity of the same has been upheld by the Supreme Court in Maneklal Chhotalal v. M. G. Makwana, AIR 1967 SC 1873 and K. L. Gupta v. Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay, AIR 1968 SC 303.

21. After all the publication of a notification in the official Gazette is the only mode provided. The notification which is challenged included the plan and schedule annexed to it. That plan which could have been available for inspection only if the petitioners had bothered to do so, would have clearly shown to them that their property was included in the modified plan for the purpose of access to the car park which is to the rear side of their property which abuts on the Laxmi Road. What is, however, argued by Mr. Paranjpe is that publication in the official Gazette cannot be equated with knowledge. In support of his submission reliance was placed on the case reported in Cresta Holding Ltd. v. Karlian (1959) 3 All ER 656.

22. That was a case where the plaintiffs had sued twelve defendants alleging fraud against the first two named defendants, whereby the plaintiffs had been defrauded of a sum of £300,000. The eleventh defendants were bankers against whom the plaintiffs alleged in the statement of claim that as a result of the fraud the bankers received a cheque and the proceeds thereof and "did not receive the same as purchasers for value without notice" viz. without notice that that property had been dealt with as previously alleged without the authority of the plaintiffs. On the application of the bankers particulars of this allegation concerning notice were ordered to be given after discovery. On appeal by the plaintiffs held—

“(i) ‘notice’ was not a synonym for ‘knowledge’ and the allegation was not an allegation of a condition of mind within R. S. C., Ord. 19, R. 22, which accordingly had no application.

(ii) the bankers were entitled to particulars after discovery showing how they were alleged to have received notice that the cheque or proceeds thereof had been dealt with without the plaintiffs’ authority, since the present case was one where ‘the form or the precise terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which such notice was to be inferred’, were material within R. S. C., Ord. 19, R. 23.”

23. This authority therefore has absolutely no application to the facts of our case. As we have pointed out it is alleged in Para 39 of the petition that a modified plan was in fact published in the Gazette on the 8th July 1966, which was the only mode of publication which is provided by the Act in respect of plans which are sanctioned by the Government with or without modification. Clearly, therefore, this petition, which was filed in 1971 is hopelessly delayed and since no reason or explanation is offered, having regard to the preliminary objection raised by the respondents, it has got to be dismissed in limine on that ground alone without going into the merits of the petition, unless as contended by Mr. Paranjpe we cannot proceed with the matter in view of the Presidential Orders dated the 27th June 1975 and 8th January 1976, issued under Art. 359 (1) of the Constitution. It is, therefore, necessary to consider the submissions made in that connection,

24. Art. 359 (1) of the Constitution provides:—

“359 (1): Where a Proclamation of Emergency is in operation, the President may by order declare that the right to move any court for the enforcement of such of the rights conferred by Part III as may be mentioned in the order and all proceedings pending in any Court for the enforcement of the rights so mentioned shall remain suspended for the period during which the Proclamation is in force or for such shorter period as may be specified in the order.”

25. On June 27, 1975, the President of India passed the following order:—

“In exercise of the powers conferred by Cl. (1) of Art. 359 of the Constitution the President hereby declares that the right of any person (including a foreigner) to move any court for the enforcement of the rights conferred by Arts. 14, 21 and 22 of the Constitution and all proceedings pending in any Court for the enforcement of the above mentioned rights shall remain suspended for the period during which the proclamations of emergency made under Cl. (1) of Article 352 of the Constitution on the 3rd December 1971 and on the 25th June, 1975 are both in force.

This order shall extend to the whole of the territory of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

This order shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any order made before the date of this order under Cl. (1) of Article 359 of the Constitution.

26. On 8th Jan, 1976, the President of India issued another notification which is to this effect:—

“In exercise of the powers conferred by Cl. (1) of Art. 359 of the Constitution, the President hereby declares that the right of any person to move any Court for the enforcement of the rights conferred by Art. 19 of the Constitution and all proceedings pending in any Court for the enforcement of the above mentioned rights shall remain suspended for the period during which the proclamations of emergency made under Cl. (1) of Art. 352 of the Constitution on the 3rd Dec, 1971 and on the 25th June, 1975 are both in force. This order shall extend to the whole of the territory of India except the State of Jammu and Kashmir.”

27. It would appear that both Art. 359 (1) and the above mentioned two orders of the President are in two parts. The first part provides that the right of any person to move any Court for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Arts. 14, 21 and 22 or 19 as the case may be shall remain suspended for the period during which the proclamation of emergency made under Cl. (1) of Art. 352 of the Constitution on the 3rd Dec. 1971 and 25th June 1975 are both in force. The second part of the order provides that all proceedings pending in any court for the enforcement of the above mentioned rights shall remain suspended for the period during which the proclamation of emergency made under Cl. (1) of Art. 352 of the Constitution on the 3rd Dec. 1971 and on the 25th June 1975 are both in force,

28. The first part of Art. 359 (1) and the orders of the President of India dated 3rd Nov. 1962 which dealt only with the first part of Art. 359 (1). came to be considered by the Supreme Court in the case of Mohan Choudhary v. Chief Commr., Union Territory of Tripura AIR 1964 SC 173. The Supreme Court held that by reason of that order the petitioners had no locus standi to enforce their right under Arts. 21 and 22. It was observed by the Supreme Court at the end of Para. 7 of the judgment as under:

"Unquestionably, the Court's power to issue a writ in the nature of Habeas Corpus has not been touched by the President's Order, but the petitioner's right to move this Court for a writ of that kind has been suspended by the order of the President passed under Art. 359 (1). The President's Order does not suspend all the rights vested in a citizen to move this Court but only his right to enforce the provisions of Arts. 21 and 22. Thus, as a result of the President's Order aforesaid, the petitioner's right to move this Court, but not this Court's power under Art. 32, has been suspended during the operation of the Emergency, with the result that the petitioner has no locus standi to enforce his right, if any, during the Emergency."

29. Once again in the case of Makhan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 381, the Supreme Court was concerned only with the interpretation of an order covering the first part suspending the right to move any Court for the enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in that order. Evidently following its earlier decision in Mohan Choudhary's case, (AIR 1964 SC 173) the Supreme Court held that the petitioners had no right to move the Court during the period the order of the President was in force.

30. In the course of this judgment however, certain observations were made by Gajendragadkar J. in Paras. 13 and 19 of the judgment on which considerable reliance is placed by both the sides. In Para. 13, it is observed as under:—

"Since the object of Art. 359 (1) is to suspend the rights of the citizens to move any Court, the consequence of the Presidential Order may be that any proceeding which may be pending at the date of the Order remains suspended during the time that the Order is in operation and may be revived when the said Order ceases to be operative; and fresh proceedings cannot be taken by a citizen after the order has been issued, because the Order takes away the right to move any Court and during the operation of the Order, the said right cannot be exercised by instituting a fresh proceeding contrary to the Order. If a fresh proceeding falling within the mischief of Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order issued under it is instituted after the Order has been issued, it will have to be dismissed as being incompetent. In other words, Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order issued under it may constitute a sort of moratorium or a blanket ban against the institution or continuance of any legal action subject to two important conditions. The first condition relates to the character of the legal action and requires that the said action must seek to obtain a relief on the ground that the claimant's fundamental rights specified in the Presidential Order have been contravened and the second condition relates to the period during which this ban is to operate. The ban operates either for the period of the Proclamation or for such shorter period as may be specified in the Order."

31. Para 19 of this judgment on which also reliance is placed is as under:—

"The next question to consider is, what is the nature of the proceedings which are barred by the Presidential Order issued under Art. 359 (1)? They are proceedings taken by citizens for the enforcement of such of the rights conferred by Part III as may be mentioned in the order. If a citizen moves any Court to obtain a relief on the ground that his fundamental rights specified in the Order have been contravened, that proceeding is barred. In determining the question as to whether a particular proceeding falls within the mischief of the Presidential Order or not, what has to be examined is not so much the form which the proceeding has taken, or the words in which the relief is claimed as the substance of the matter and consider whether before granting the relief claimed by the citizen, it would be necessary for the Court to enquire into the question whether any of his specified fundamental rights have been contravened. If any relief cannot be granted to the citizen without determining the question of the alleged infringement of the said specified fundamental rights, that is a proceeding which falls under Art. 359 (1) and would, therefore, be hit by the Presidential Order issued under the said article. The sweep of Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order issued under it is thus wide enough to include all claims made by citizens in any Court of competent jurisdiction when it is shown that the said claims cannot be effectively adjudicated upon without examining the question as to whether the citizen is in substance seeking to enforce any of the said specified fundamental rights. We have already seen that the operation of Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order issued under it is limited to the period during which the proclamation of emergency is in force, or for such shorter period as may be specified in the Order. That being so, we feel no difficulty in holding that proceedings taken by a citizen either under Art. 32 (1) or under Article 226 (1) are hit by Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order issued under it. In this connection it would be legitimate to add that the contention of the appellants which seeks to confine the operation of Art. 359 (1) only to the right to move the Supreme Court, would make the said provision almost meaningless. There would be no point in preventing the citizen from moving this Court, while leaving it open to him to move the High Courts for the same relief and then to come to this Court in appeal, if necessary." (emphasis supplied).

32. Again certain observations in Para. 30 which were relied upon are to this effect:—

"In our opinion, therefore, once it is shown that the proceedings under S. 491 (1) (b) cannot make a substantial progress unless the validity of the impugned law is examined on the ground of the contravention of the specified fundamental rights, it must follow that the bar created by the Presidential Order operates against them as much as it operates against proceedings taken under Art. 226 (1) or Art. 32 (1). Thus, the true legal position, in substance, is that the clause "the right to move any Court" used in Art. 359 (1) and the Presidential Order takes in all legal actions intended to be filed, or filed, in which the specified rights are sought to be enforced, and it covers all relevant categories of jurisdictions of competent courts under which the said actions would otherwise normally have been entertained and tried." (emphasis supplied)

33. Thereafter very recently also in the Habeas Corpus case reported in Additional District Magistrate, Jabalpur v. Shivakant Shukla, AIR 1976 SC 1207, while considering the first part of the Presidential Order, which provides that the right to move the Court for the enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned therein shall remain suspended, the Supreme Court by majority judgment of 4 to 1 has interpreted it to mean, that the petitioner has no locus standi to move the Court for enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the Order of the President, approving the view of the Supreme Court about the interpretation of that Clause in Mohan Choudhary's case (AIR 1964 SC 173) and also in Makhan Singh's case (AIR 1964 SC 381). It is therefore settled law that so far as the first part of the order of the President is concerned, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, no person has a locus standi to move the Court for enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the President's Order.

34. In fact the final order of the Court in Para. 574, of the judgment is to this effect:—

"In view of the Presidential Order dated 17th June 1975 no person has any locus standi to move any writ petition under Article 226 before a High Court for habeas corpus or any other writ or order or direction to challenge the legality of an order of detention on the ground that the order is not under or in compliance with the Act or is illegal or is vitiated by mala fides factual or legal or is based on extraneous considerations."

35. Therefore, what is held by the Supreme Court in Mohan Choudhary's case (AIR 1964 SC 173) and Makhan Singh's case (AIR 1964 SC 381) and also in the latest Habeas Corpus case is that having regard to the first part of the order of the President issued under Art. 359 (1), no person has any locus standi to move the Court for the enforcement of the rights conferred by Arts. 14, 21, 22 or 19 as the case may be. In none of these cases which went up to the Supreme Court, the question as to what is to be done in respect of the proceedings pending in any Court for the enforcement of the above mentioned rights on the date of the order of the President made under Art. 359 (1) had directly come up for decision so far as we are aware. It is, therefore, necessary to consider the effect of the second part of the order of the President which provides: "The President hereby declares that all proceedings pending in any Court for the enforcement of the above mentioned fundamental rights shall remain suspended for the period during which the proclamation of emergency made under Cl. (1) of Art. 352 of the Constitution on the 3rd Dec. 1971 and on the 25th June 1975 are both in force."

36. What is argued by Mr. Paranjpe before us by laying emphasis on certain observations in Paras 13 and 30 of the judgment in Makhan Singh's case (AIR 1964 SC 381) is that the moment there is a mention in a petition of the infringement of any of the fundamental rights mentioned in Arts. 14, 21, 22 or 19 in a proceeding which was pending when the order of the President under Article 359 (1) was passed, notwithstanding the fact whether an injunction or stay has been issued against the State, the matter remains suspended and the Court has no jurisdiction to look into it and it must necessarily send such proceedings to the record room till the expiry of the period mentioned in the order of the President without disturbing the interlocutory orders of stay or injunction.

37. As against that it is contended by Mr. Sawant, Counsel for the State that that interpretation which is sought to be put by Mr. Paranjpe is not correct and there is nothing in the order of the President to prevent the State from showing that the petition is liable to be dismissed in limine without even considering the question of the fundamental rights involved, say on the ground of inordinate delay as in the instant case. He further submits that even in proceedings which remain suspended the interlocutory order or injunction must also remain suspended.

38. Now it is important to bear in mind that what stands suspended is a pending proceeding for the enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order. The question of enforcement of the relevant fundamental rights would only arise if in fact it is established that there is a violation of any of the said fundamental rights.

39. In this connection it is worthwhile to note that under Art. 226 of the Constitution, notwithstanding anything in Art. 32, every High Court shall have power, throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction, to issue to any person or authority, including in appropriate cases any Government, within these territories directions, orders or writs including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warrant and certiorari, or any of them, for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by part III and for any other purpose.

40. This Art. provides that the High Court has power to issue writs for the enforcement of all the rights conferred by Part III and for any other purpose. It is needless to say this power of the High Court to issue the Writs is nowhere sought to be taken away by the order of the President. What is taken away by the first part of the order as has been held by the Supreme Court is the locus standi of a person to move the Court for enforcement of his fundamental rights mentioned in the order of the President. So also pending proceedings which are sought to be suspended are the proceedings for the enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the order of the President. In other words, what is suspended is the enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the order even in respect of the pending proceedings. The stage of enforcement would only arise if after an inquiry it is found out that the petitioner has in fact proved the violation of his fundamental right, and it may be said at that stage only that having regard to the fact that the proceeding is for the enforcement of the fundamental right which stands suspended the court could not issue a writ which it could have otherwise issued.

41. Now, while interpreting the order of the President one should not ignore the object with which the order is passed. Art. 352 provides that if the President is satisfied that a grave emergency exists whereby the security of India or of any part of the territory thereof is threatened whether by war or external aggression or internal disturbance, he may by Proclamation, make a declaration to that effect,

42. Art. 359 provides for the suspension of the enforcement of the rights conferred by Part III during emergencies, as the marginal note shows.

43. The first part of the article and the order of the President which is drafted in terms of this Article, declares that no person shall have a right to move any Court for the enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the order. The object evidently is that having regard to the grave emergency which threatens the security of India or any part thereof, it was thought necessary that the State should be free to carry on its activities without the impediment of the citizens enforcing their fundamental rights by approaching the High Court under Art. 226 or the Supreme Court under Art. 32 of the Constitution. Surely the Constituent Assembly could not have been unaware of the fact that when the emergency is proclaimed and the President issues an order in exercise of the powers mentioned in Art. 359 (1), several writ petitions would be pending in the High Courts and the Supreme Court and interim stay orders and injunctions would have been issued in most of these cases. It is not unlikely that as a result of the stay orders and injunctions issued in those pending proceedings, many important projects like the construction of roads, railways or bridges which are so essential for the safety and security of the nation or the nation-building projects like construction of dams and canals and town planning etc. have been held up. Could it have been the intention of Constituent Assembly that while pending the emergency nobody should have a right to move the Court for the enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the order of the President but during that very emergency the State should be helpless to proceed with the projects of national importance involving national safety and progress because of the injunctions and stay orders which might have been issued in the proceedings which were already pending when the order of the President was passed? After all we have to consider the provisions of a Constitution. This is not a document which could be interpreted like a text book with the help of a dictionary. It is always essential to bear in mind the object with which the Constituent Assembly enacted the provisions of Art. 359 (1) and the President issued the orders acting under the said Article. If the interpretation which is sought to be put by Mr. Paranjpe on pending proceedings is to be accepted it would make the very purpose of Art. 359 (1) nugatory.

44. Again we are also unable to agree that merely because there is an allegation in the petition about the infringement of any of the fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order, the Court has to accept that ipse dixit as an automaton and stay its hands. It would be too much to hold that the Constituent Assembly intended that notwithstanding the fact that the allegation may be frivolous, or that the petition is liable to be dismissed in limine on the ground of laches as being hopelessly barred by time with no reasonable explanation for the delay, or on the ground of suggestio falsi and suppressio veri, or on the ground of res judicata, it should be kept pending with the interim orders of stays and injunctions granted therein, with full force during the period mentioned in the President's order. It therefore appears to us that what shall remain suspended is the pending proceeding which in truth and substance is for the enforcement of the rights mentioned in the Presidential Order and not the enquiry about the existence or otherwise of such rights. It further appears to us that it could never have been intended that the proceedings which are liable to be dismissed in limine on one or the other grounds just mentioned by us or as may be urged by the State should also be kept pending during the period mentioned in the Presidential Order.

45. Now there are two likely interpretations of the Presidential Order as far as pending proceedings are concerned. One interpretation is that the moment there is a mention of a breach of fundamental right mentioned in the Presidential Order, the petition must be kept pending untouched, and the stay and interim orders which might have been passed must remain in force, as is contended by Mr. Paranjpe. There is no doubt in our mind that the Parliament could never have intended that even while the pending proceeding is kept suspended, the interim orders and stays secured by the petitioners in the said proceedings should remain alive and in full force.

46. The other possible interpretation of the order in our opinion and a better interpretation would be that what was intended to be suspended was not the inquiry into or adjudication of the alleged infringement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the President's order but the actual enforcement of that right by issuing a writ. This interpretation which we are trying to put would not cause any hardship either to the citizen or to the State. For instance, once it is held as we do, that what is barred is the order enforcing the fundamental right but not the adjudication, it should be easy to see that the Court can proceed to hear the petition on merits and find out if in truth and substance it is a proceeding for enforcement of a fundamental right. If as happens in many cases, the petitioner has a good case even otherwise than on his claim based on the violation of fundamental right, he may as well give up his contention founded on fundamental right and prosecute that application to a conclusion. Similarly it should be equally possible for the respondents as we have pointed out earlier, to show that in fact the petition is liable to be dismissed in limine either on the ground of laches or res judicata or on the ground of suggestio falsi and suppressio veri or on any other ground. The State may also prove that the so-called infringement of a fundamental right is only a frivolous allegation and that in fact there is no such violation. In such a case no injustice would be done if the petition is disposed of and the rule is discharged.

47. We may take up another instance where the petitioner in fact at the time of the enquiry proves that there is an infringement of a fundamental right and that he cannot hope to get the rule made absolute except on that ground alone. In our opinion it is only such proceedings which are intended to be attracted by the second part of the Presidential Order suspending the pending proceedings.

48. When we mentioned this approach of ours to the interpretation of the Presidential order concerning the pending proceedings and invited Mr. Paranjpe to point out the drawbacks in the view we are taking he submitted firstly that the view we are taking would be inconsistent with the observations of the Supreme Court in paragraph 13 of Makhan Singh's case, (AIR 1964 SC 381) that the consequences of the Presidential order may be that any proceedings which may be pending at the date of the order remain suspended during the time the order is in force and may be reviewed when the order ceases to be operative. He also submitted that our view would be inconsistent with the observations in paragraph 30 of Makhan Singh's case to the effect "It covers all relevant categories of jurisdictions of competent courts under which the said actions would otherwise normally have been entertained and tried." He also submitted that the expression "enforcement" which occurs both in the first part and in the second part of Art. 359 (1) must receive the same meaning. He also drew our attention to the following observations in para 257 at page 1285 of his Lordship Beg J. in the Habeas Corpus case, (AIR 1976 SC 1207) to the effect: "Indeed, the clear object of such a suspension seems to me to be that Courts should not undertake inquiries into the violations of the alleged right." He further submitted that the view we are taking might affect the right of a petitioner to appeal to the Supreme Court.

49. We are not impressed by any of these submissions. The observations in Makhan Singh's case, (AIR 1964 SC 381) must be read in the context in which they were made, and in particular they must be read in the light of the observations in Para 19 of that very judgment. There is no doubt that the expression "enforcement" which occurs twice in Art. 359 (1) must receive the same meaning. But it is significant to note that by the first part it is clear that the right of a citizen to move any court for the enforcement of his right itself is suspended. Therefore his right to approach the Court with a grievance of the infringement of the fundamental rights is barred at the threshold and there is no need to consider whether the allegation is frivolous or otherwise. As we shall presently show it is not the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain such a petition which is barred but it is the right of a citizen to make a grievance about the infringement of the fundamental rights which is barred at the threshold, and it is that locus standi itself which is taken away. As against that in a pending proceeding what is suspended is the enforcement of that right, and that stage would only come when it is found on enquiry that in truth and substance there is an infringement of that right. See the observations in Makhan Singh's case in para 19. If there is no infringement of the right the question of enforcement does not arise. Therefore, as we stated earlier, out of the two possible interpretations about the suspension of the pending proceedings, we are of the view that the second view to which we have given expression appears to be the better view.

50. Having expressed our views, we now proceed to consider the decisions of this Court on which reliance is placed by the parties. On behalf of the State, reliance is placed on the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Chandurkar and Lentin JJ. in Special Civil Application No. 650 of 1971, decided on 26th Mar. 1976: (reported in AIR 1977 Bom 355). That was a petition where land acquisition proceedings in connection with resettlement of the persons likely to be affected by the Krishna Dhom Project were challenged. In that case also it was urged on behalf of the petitioners that having regard to the order of the President, the Court could not enquire into the matter nor suspend the interim stay orders. On the other hand, it was urged on behalf of the State that the Court has certainly the right to look into the matter to find out whether there is an infringement of a fundamental right. The Division Bench after considering Art. 359 (1) and the proclamation issued by the President of India on 27th June 1975 and in particular after considering the observations of the Supreme Court in Makhan Singh's case, (AIR 1964 SC 381) contained in parags. 13, 19 and 30 observed as under:—

"There can be no doubt that the effect of the Presidential Proclamation is that in a pending proceeding the Court will not be able to make any order or issue any writ in order to enforce a fundamental right referred to in the Presidential Proclamation. That appears to us to be the object of a suspension of these proceedings contemplated by the Presidential Proclamation. But it cannot be the object of the Presidential Proclamation that where a pending proceeding can be terminated without giving a relief amounting to enforcement of a fundamental right, the proceeding must still stand suspended....."

"The above quoted observations of the Supreme Court are, in our view, a complete answer to the contention raised on behalf of the petitioners that the moment the petition is framed as one to enforce the right under Art. 14 of the Constitution, it must be deemed to be covered by the Presidential Proclamation and the proceedings must be stayed. As pointed out by the Supreme Court, it is the substance of the matter which must be ascertained and the ascertainment of the substance of the matter will necessarily involve some argument and some discussion. This would mean that the proceedings cannot be mechanically stayed or suspended because they merely refer to a violation of Article 14 of the Constitution. It is important to note that the observations of the Supreme Court indicate that a proceeding will fall within the sweep of Art. 359 (1) "when it is shown that the said claims cannot be effectively adjudicated upon without examining the question as to whether the citizen is in substance, seeking to enforce any of the said specified fundamental rights."

It appears to us that the use of the words "cannot be effectively adjudicated upon" is of some significance. It appears to us that effective adjudication would mean that a decision in favour of the petitioner was necessary which would have the effect of enforcement of the fundamental right claimed by the petitioner. The word "enforce" means, as per the Random House Dictionary, amongst other things, "compel obedience to." Thus the word "enforcement" used in Art. 359 (1) or in Article 226 of the Constitution contemplates an order or a proceeding which compels obedience in accordance with the constitutional imperative in Art. 14 so far as that Article is concerned. The effect of the Presidential Proclamation under Article 359 (1) is that the Court cannot compel the State to give effect to the mandate contained in Art. 14. If that was the object of the Proclamation and the provisions of Art. 359 (1), we fail to see how that object would in any way be frustrated in a given case, it is found on facts that the petitioner has not made out any case of violation of Article 14. The dismissal of a petition consequent on a finding that no breach or violation of the fundamental right under Article 14 has been proved will not amount to any breach of the terms of the Presidential Proclamation. On the other hand, if an enquiry is made to find out whether a breach has been established and the Court stays its hands in a case where the petitioner has been able to establish its breach and further to deal with the proceedings, it will then amount to suspension of the proceedings in compliance with the Presidential Proclamation. The meaning of the word "suspend" as given in the Random House Dictionary is 'to hold or keep undetermined; refrain from forming or concluding definitely.' The state of the proceeding when the Court refuses to go ahead and issue a mandamus or a direction enforcing the fundamental right under Art. 14 even after it is found that the petitioner has made out a case in his favour for enforcement of that right will still be a state of suspension inasmuch as the proceedings have not concluded definitely. We are, therefore, unable to accept the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners as also of Mr. Rane that merely because averments alleging a breach of Art. 14 of the Constitution are made in the petition, we must adjourn the proceedings sine die and allow the proceedings to pend indefinitely without even ascertaining as to whether the petitioner is able to make out a case of the violation of the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution."

51. With respect, we agree with the above observations of the Division Bench.

52. It also appears that a similar question was raised before Deshmukh J., in Misc. Petition No. 344 of 1974, Messrs. Bharat Barrel & Drum Mfg. Co. Pvt. Ltd. v. The State of Maharashtra, decided on 25-2-1976 (Bom). There also a notification of acquisition was challenged on the ground of violation of Art. 14 of the Constitution and it was contended that the proceedings could not be proceeded with in view of the Presidential Proclamation of 27th June 1975 and of 8th Jan. 1976, suspending the right to approach a Court for enforcement of fundamental rights under the Constitution. The learned Judge having heard the parties came to the conclusion that the petitioners' alleged challenge was no challenge at all, but that the application was a frivolous one merely to prolong the acquisition by the State for the purpose of the Municipal Corporation, and on merits the learned Judge took the view that the petitioners in that case had no valid right at all to oppose the acquisition and an attempt to resort to provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution was a mere pretext to somehow gain time and put off the evil day of acquisition.

53. The latest case which is decided by the Court on the point and is relied upon by Mr. Paranjpe is the decision of Regé J., in Misc. Petition No. 501 of 1975, Metro Theatre Bombay Ltd., v. State of Maharashtra, decided on 13-8-1976 (Bom). That was a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution seeking for a writ of mandamus against the respondents directing them to withdraw certain notices issued to the petitioners and to give sanction to the grant of a licence to the 1st petitioners for the sale of mild liquor at their restaurant in Metro Cinema, Bombay, and further directing the 2nd respondent to withdraw or cancel the said notice and to grant to the 1st petitioners a licence for the sale of mild liquor. Therefore, that was a petition which in terms sought to enforce fundamental rights guaranteed by Art. 14 of the Constitution.

54. The Court had issued a rule nisi on 10th Apr. 1975. The Court had also at the time of admission granted an injunction against the respondents restraining them from taking any action in furtherance of the notice, and, what is more, the Court had also granted a mandatory injunction directing the respondents to issue a temporary licence to the petitioners. Thus the petition was in fact pending when the President passed the order under Art. 359 of the Constitution. It appears from the judgment that after reading the petition, the learned Judge thought that having regard to the Presidential Order, the petition ought to stand suspended. But this proposal of the learned Judge, it appears was opposed by the respondents who relied heavily on the Division Bench decision of this Court in Special Civil Application No. 650 of 1971 viz. Chandurkar and Lentin JJ., dated 26th Mar. 1976 (reported in AIR 1977 Bom 355) to which attention has already been drawn.

55. The learned Judge posed the question as to what is the ambit of the court's power or jurisdiction under the said order directing the suspension of the pending proceedings. Referring to the Division Bench decision, the learned Judge observed:

"It is true that the Division Bench of this Court in its aforesaid decision relying on the prior decision of the Supreme Court in Makhan Singh's case reported in AIR 1964 SC 381, has come to the conclusion as pointed out by the learned Counsel for the Respondents. With great respect to the learned Judges, I have not been able to agree with the said decision. However, before I state my reason for the same, I may first state my views on the said question."

56. Proceeding thus the learned Judge observed, "in my view the said order has the effect of barring the jurisdiction of the court to entertain or deal with any proceedings wherein any of the fundamental rights mentioned in the order are sought to be enforced."

57. In support of his view that the court has no jurisdiction to enquire into the merits of the pending proceedings, the learned Judge relied firstly on the very paragraphs 13 and 19 of the judgment of Gajendragadkar J., in Makhan Singh's case (AIR 1964 SC 381) which were relied upon by the Division Bench for the view it had taken, and observed. "In my view with great respect to the learned Judges the said ratio drawn from Makhan Singh's case, on which the ultimate conclusion of their decision is based, do not appear to be justified."

58. Having made these observations the learned single judge says that in spite of his disagreement with the views of the Division Bench, if that decision had stood by itself, he would have been bound to follow the same. However the learned single Judge observed, that having regard to certain observations of the Supreme Court in the recent Habeas Corpus case, he was fortified in his view that the Court's jurisdiction in the matter of pending proceedings involving enforcement of fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order is barred and the court should not even undertake an enquiry into the violation of such alleged fundamental right. He further observed that since the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Habeas Corpus case, taking a contrary view was not available to the Division Bench of this Court, the said decision of the Division Bench cannot be considered to be good law.

59. We have already indicated how we prefer the view of the Division Bench, therefore, in so far as the observations of the learned single Judge based on the interpretation of Makhan Singh's case, (AIR 1964 SC 381) are concerned, it is unnecessary to repeat our views once again. It will be therefore necessary to examine whether the learned Judge was right in relying upon the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Habeas Corpus case for coming to the conclusion that the Court has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter, and that the Court should not even undertake an enquiry into the violation of alleged fundamental rights.

60. It is true that in support of his view the learned Judge has relied upon the observations of His Lordship the Chief Justice in the Habeas Corpus case. The observations relied upon are to this effect: (para 44 p. 1227).

"If Courts will in spite of the Presidential order entertain such applications and allow the detenus to enforce to start or continue proceedings or enforce fundamental rights. Art. 359 (1) will be nullified and rendered otiose."

61. The next observations which are relied upon are that of Beg J., in para 345 at page 1308 and they are to this effect:

"This further clarifies and emphasizes that the intention behind the Presidential Order of 1975 was to actually affect the jurisdiction of Courts in which proceedings were actually pending. The inference from this feature also is that all similar proceedings in future will, similarly, be affected."

62. The last observations which are relied upon are also of Beg J., in para 257 at page 1285 which are to this effect:—

"Art. 359 is very clear on the point. There remains no right, for the time being to an enquiry into conditions which may enable a party to secure release in assertion of rights guaranteed either by Art. 21 or by other articles whose "enforcement" is suspended. Indeed, the clear object of such a suspension seems to me to be that Courts should not undertake inquiries into the violations of the alleged right."

63. By relying on these observations the learned Single Judge came to the conclusion that the court's jurisdiction in the matter of pending proceedings involving enforcement of fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order is barred and the Court should not even undertake an enquiry into the violation of such alleged fundamental right. In other words it would appear that the learned Judge relied upon certain observations in Makhan Singh's case (AIR 1964 SC 381) and on the above observations of their Lordships of the Supreme Court for taking the view he did. But then a perusal of the judgments in Makhan Singh's case and the Habeas Corpus case would show that the inference is not correct. In the first place what was involved in Makhan Singh's case was the right to move the Court for enforcement of the fundamental rights. Earlier also a similar question was involved before the Supreme Court in Mohan Choudhury's case, (AIR 1964 SC 173) and the Court had held that a person has no locus standi to move the Court and the Supreme Court had in terms held that by the Presidential Order it is the petitioner's right to move the Court but not the Court's power or jurisdiction under Art. 32 which had been suspended during the operation of the emergency. with the result that the petitioner had no locus standi to enforce his right if any, during the emergency.

64. Adverting to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Habeas Corpus case, (AIR 1976 SC 1207) that was also a case in which the first part of the order viz, the right to move the Court for enforcement of the fundamental rights was involved. His Lordship Ray C. J., has observed as under in para 34 at page 1224:—

"It is incorrect to say that the jurisdiction and powers of this Court under Article 32 and of the High Courts under Art. 226 are virtually abolished by the Presidential Order without any amendment of the Constitution. No amendment of the Constitution is necessary because no jurisdiction and power either of this Court or of the High Court is taken away. When a Presidential Order takes away the locus standi of the detenus to move any Court for the enforcement of fundamental rights for the time being, the jurisdiction and powers of this Court and of the High Courts remain unaltered, Art. 359 (1) is not directed against any court. It is directed against an individual and deprives him of his locus standi."

65. Again, Chandrachud J., in para 434 at page 1329 has observed as under:—

"It is also not correct to say that any particular interpretation of Art. 359 (1) will mean the abolition of the jurisdiction and power of the Supreme Court under Art. 32 and of the High Courts under Art. 226 of the Constitution. The true implication of the Presidential Order is to take away the right of any person to move any court for the enforcement of the rights mentioned in the Order. In strict legal theory the jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court and the High Courts remain the same as before since the Presidential Order merely takes away the locus standi of a person to move these Courts for the enforcement of certain fundamental rights during the operation of the Proclamation of Emergency."

66. It may be mentioned that in support of that view, reference was made to the decision of the Supreme Court in Mohan Choudhury's case, (AIR 1964 SC 173) also.

67. Bhagwati J., has observed as under in para 556 at page 1383:—

"To my mind, it is clear that if a petition or other proceeding in Court seeks to enforce a positive legal right conferred by some legislation, it would not be barred by the Presidential Order Of course, this does not mean that whenever a petition for a writ of habeas corpus comes before the Court, it must be rejected straightway without even looking at the averments made in it. The Court would have to consider whether the bar of the Presidential Order is attracted and for that purpose, the Court would have to see whether the order of detention is one made by an authority empowered to pass such an order under the Act; if it is not, it would not be State action and the petition would not be one for enforcement of the right conferred by Article 21."

Tuesday, October 12, 1976,

68. Thus it will be seen that as just pointed out while Their Lordships the Chief Justice, Chandrachud J. and Bhagwati J., have in terms held relying on the decisions in Mohan Choudhury's case; (AIR 1964 SC 173) and Makhan Singh's case (AIR 1964 SC 381) that it is the locus standi of the petitioner to move the Court for habeas corpus which is suspended and not the jurisdiction of the Court as such, His Lordship Beg J., however, while agreeing with the majority view of the other learned Judges that the Presidential Proclamation takes away the locus standi of a petitioner to move the Court for a habeas corpus has observed in para 316, at page 1299 as under:—

"It is true that the Presidential Order of 1975, like the Presidential Order of 1962, does not suspend the general power of this Court under Art. 32 or the general powers of High Courts under Art. 226, but the effect of taking away enforceability of the right of a detenu to personal freedom against executive authorities is to affect the locus standi in cases which are meant to be covered by the Presidential Order. Courts, even in Habeas Corpus proceedings, do not grant relief independently of rights of the person deprived of liberty."

69. What is more, His Lordship Beg J., even in respect of the matters covered by the first part of the Order suspending the right to move the Court for enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order has stated that the Court shall have to make some enquiry inasmuch as His Lordship has observed in para 400 at page 1320 as under:—

"A prima facie valid detention order, that is to say, one duly authenticated and passed by an officer authorised to make it, recording a purported satisfaction to detain the petitioner under the Maintenance of Internal Security Act, which is operative either before or after its confirmation by the Government, is a complete answer to a petition for a Writ of Habeas Corpus. Once such an order is shown to exist in response to a notice for a Writ of Habeas Corpus, the High Court cannot inquire into its validity or vires on the ground of either mala fides of any kind or of non-compliance with any provision of the Maintenance of Internal Security Act in Habeas Corpus proceedings."

70. We may also observe in this connection that other learned Judges who have definitely held that the jurisdiction of the court is not barred by the Presidential Order issued under Art. 359 (1), have also taken the view that the Court has power to make an enquiry into the matter and not to dismiss the petition merely because it happens to be a petition for enforcing the writ of habeas corpus.

71. Chandrachud J., in para 477 at page 1343 has observed as under:—

"So long as the statutory prescription can be seen on the face of the order to have been complied with, no further inquiry is permissible as to whether the order is vitiated by legal mala fides."

72. Bhagwati J., has observed in para 556 at page 1383 as under:—

"Of course, this does not mean that whenever a petition for a writ of habeas corpus comes before the Court, it must be rejected straightway without even looking at the averments made in it. The Court would have to consider whether the bar of the Presidential Order is attracted and for that purpose the Court would have to see whether the order of detention is one made by an authority empowered to pass such an order under the Act; if it is not, it would not be State action and the petition would not be one for enforcement of the right conferred by Article 21....."

73. It would thus appear from a scrutiny of the judgment of the Supreme Court in the Habeas Corpus case that Their Lordships have approved the decision in Mohan Choudhury's case; (AIR 1964 SC 173) and Makhan Singh's case, (AIR 1964 SC 381) that what is barred by the Presidential Order is not the jurisdiction of the Court but the locus standi of the petitioner to move the court for enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the order of the President. It is further held as we have pointed out that to the extent indicated by Their Lordships an enquiry is certainly possible and ought to be made to decide the question as to whether in fact the petition raises a question of the infringement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order.

74. In this connection it is important to bear in mind that a judgment of the Supreme Court or of any Court as a matter of fact is not to be read as if it is a statute. In making that observation we are only quoting the observations of His Lordship Chandrachud J., in paragraph 471 of the judgment in the Habeas Corpus case. Again, while dealing with certain observations made by the Supreme Court in Makhan Singh's case, (AIR 1964 SC 381) about the possible pleas available to a detenu, which were pressed before Their Lordships in the Habeas Corpus case, (AIR 1976 SC 1207) Bhagwati J., in para 546, page 1377 has observed as under:—

"Now, at first blush, these observations do seem to support the contention of the detenus. But there are two very good reasons why I do not think these observations can be of much help in the determination of the question before us. In the first place, the question as to what were the other pleas available to a detenu in challenging the legality or propriety of his detention, despite the Presidential Order dated 3rd Nov. 1962, was not in issue before the Court and did not fall to be decided and the aforesaid observations made by the Court on this question were, therefore, clearly obiter. These observations would undoubtedly be entitled to great weight, but, as pointed out by this Court in Madhav Rao Jiwaji Rao Scindia v. Union of India, (1971) 3 SCR 9: (AIR 1971 SC 530) "an obiter cannot take the place of the ratio. Judges are not oracles." These observations do not, therefore, have any binding effect and they cannot be regarded as conclusive on the point."

75. We are aware that these observations were made by Their Lordships of the Supreme Court while dealing with the earlier judgments of the Supreme Court and that those observations have no application so far, as the binding nature of the obiter observations of the Supreme Court on the High Courts and other Courts is concerned. But then what is observed by His Lordship thereafter is of significance to us as laying down the guidelines for interpreting any judgment which may be cited before a Court. His Lordship has observed as under:—

"Moreover, it must be remembered that when we are considering the observations of a High Judicial authority like this Court, the greatest possible care must be taken to relate the observations of a Judge to the precise issues before him and to confine such observations, even though expressed in broad terms, in the general compass of the question before him, unless he makes it clear that he intended his remarks to have a wider ambit. It is not possible for judges always to express their judgments so as to exclude entirely the risk that in some subsequent case their language may be misapplied and any attempt at such perfection of expression can only lead to the opposite result of uncertainty and even obscurity as regards the case in hand. ... It was pointed out by the House of Lords as far back as 1901 in Queen v. Leatham, 1901 AC 495 "Every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be exposition of the whole law, but are governed and qualified by the particular facts in which such expressions are to be found." This Court had also occasion to point out in the State of Orissa v. Sudhansu Sekhar Misra (1968) 2 SCR 154: (AIR 1968 SC 647) that the observations in a judgment must be "only in the context of the question that arose for decision." It would not be right, as observed by this Court in Madhav Rao v. Union of India, (AIR 1971 SC 530) "to regard a word, a clause or a sentence occurring in a judgment of this court, divorced from its context as containing a full exposition of the law on a question" particularly "when the question did not even fall to be answered in that judgment."

76. Having regard to the above guidelines laid down by His Lordship for interpreting and understanding the judgments of the Supreme Court, it would be always essential to consider as to what exactly was the point which Their Lordships were called upon to decide and what their decision thereon is. Judged in that light all that has been held either in Mohan Choudhury's case, (AIR 1973 SC 173) or in Makhan Singh's case, (AIR 1964 SC 381) and in the recent Habeas Corpus case is that a person has no locus standi to move the Court for a writ of habeas corpus during the period the order of the President is in force. It is nowhere held in any of these cases that the Court has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. If at all, it has been in terms held that the jurisdiction of the Court to issue writs is not taken away. Again, in none of these cases decided by the Supreme Court so far, the question of interpretation of the second part of the Ordinance about pending matters with which we are concerned in this petition was required to be considered and decided upon. Having regard to that position with great respect we are unable to agree with the learned Single Judge (Rege J.) when he took the view that in the view he was taking that the court has no jurisdiction to inquire into a petition pending on the date of the order of the President he is fortified either by the decision of the Supreme Court in Makhan Singh's case or by the observations of Ray C. J. and Beg J., in the Habeas Corpus case on which he has placed reliance. That being so the learned Judge was also not right in coming to the decision that the view of the Supreme Court is contrary to the view taken by the Division Bench consisting of Chandurkar and Lentin JJ. in Special Civil Application No. 650 of 1971 decided on 26th Mar. 1976 = (reported in AIR 1977 Bom 355) and that the said decision of the Division Bench cannot be considered to be good law. Differing therefore from the learned Single Judge, we hold that the view taken by the Division Bench in Special Civil Application No. 650 of 1971 is not inconsistent with the decision of the Supreme Court either in Makhan Singh's case or in the Habeas Corpus case (AIR 1976 SC 1207). In our view, therefore, the decision of the Division Bench is still good law, but we would however like to add, as pointed out by us earlier, that the scope of the enquiry which is permissible under the second part of the order of the President in respect of pending matters is still wider in the sense that that provision would not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to dismiss a pending petition if on a perusal of the petition and the return filed by the respondents, it appears that the petitioner has moved the Court after an inordinate delay for which he has no reasonable explanation or that the petition is frivolous on the face of it or that it suffers from suggestio falsi and suppressio veri or raises a question of fundamental right by attacking the provisions of a section or statute the validity of which has been already pronounced by the Supreme Court or on the ground of res judicata.

77. That leads us to the next important point which is urged before us viz. what is to be done about the interlocutory stay orders or injunctions which have been issued prior to the proclamation of the Order of the President under Art. 359 in respect of cases where on an enquiry it is found that there is a breach of one or the other of the fundamental rights referred to in the two Presidential Orders issued under Art. 359 of the Constitution. Since such a proceeding to enforce the fundamental right by the issue of an appropriate writ has to be kept suspended till the expiry of the period mentioned in the Presidential Order, it would automatically follow that the interlocutory orders which might have been issued in such petitions though issued prior to the date of the Presidential Order have got to be evidently suspended as otherwise the very object of suspending such proceedings would be frustrated. Evidently the intention of the Parliament was that during the period of emergency the State must be free to carry on its activities in the larger interests of the nation without any fetters or impediments by the citizens getting the State's proposed activities stayed by the Court either by stay orders or injunctions. It is inconceivable that when the main proceeding for enforcement of the fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order is itself kept suspended any interlocutory order issued in that proceeding could still continue to be operative.

That would make the very object of the proclamation of the President and the provisions under Art. 359 of the Constitution nugatory.

78. In this connection we agree with respect, with the decision of the Division Bench of the Patna High Court in Kailash Pati Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1976 Pat 248. The learned Judges in para 6 of the judgment have observed as under:—

“The word ‘suspended’ used in Art. 359 (1) cannot be interpreted to mean only staying the proceedings. There is difference between the effect of an order suspending a proceeding and the effect of an order of merely staying the proceedings. In Art. 359 (1), instead of the word ‘suspended’ if the word ‘stayed’ had been used, then any such proceeding where such right is enforced had to be stayed. However, if the proceedings pending before this Court, where such right is enforced, is to remain suspended due to the Presidential Order, then even the order of stay which is only ad interim in nature and is to continue during the pendency of the proceeding will also be deemed to be suspended. The matter may be different, if some final judicial order had been passed. It is well known that any order of stay which is to continue during the pendency of a proceeding before the High Court cannot be considered to be a final order.”

79. It is true that the learned single Judge (Rege J.) expressed his inability to agree with that decision and on the other hand he preferred to follow the decision of a single Judge in Jagadish v. Union of India, AIR 1976 Cal 17. The learned single Judge whose view has prevailed with Rege J., has observed as under:—

“In view of the aforesaid proclamation it was contended that inasmuch as in this case the enforcement of the right conferred under Article 14 of the Constitution was involved the proceeding should remain suspended and in the premises the interim order must necessarily continue. The position seems to be rather unfortunate because in this case there was an interim order and the effect would be that the interim order would continue so long as the emergency continues or until the proclamation is revoked, though the examination of the question which was possible because the matter is ready for hearing, might have revealed that the proceedings under the notice were valid. In numerous cases (sic) under Art. 14 are involved and while new applications or cases where Article 14 is resorted to are no longer possible during the continuance of the emergency, the persons who have obtained Rules or orders of injunction prior to the 27th of June, 1975 would continue to enjoy those injunctions without the Court's having the opportunity to examine the validity or the propriety of the said orders simply because the questions under Article 14 are involved in those applications....."

80. Furtheron in the next para the learned single Judge of the Calcutta High Court has observed:—

"In order to facilitate the disposal of these orders of injunctions obtained against the fiscal authorities, the authorities should consider whether it is desirable that Art. 359 (1) of the Constitution should be amended. The result of the proclamation made under Article 359 of the Constitution and the order issued by the President seem to be that the orders of injunction would continue until the emergency is revoked. That might not be what was desired."

81. With great respect, in spite of the view that the result contemplated by the learned Judge was not desired, the learned Judge has taken the view which he has and it is this view which has prevailed with the learned single Judge of this Court. It may be mentioned that there is no discussion in the judgment of the learned single Judge of the Calcutta High Court for taking the view he has done. On the other hand, the Division Bench of the Patna High Court in Kailash Pati Singh's case, (AIR 1976 Pat 248) has come to its decision referred to above, after detailed discussion of the observations of the Supreme Court in paragraph 13 of Makhan Singh's case, (AIR 1964 SC 381). In fact the judgment of the learned single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in Jagadish's case (AIR 1976 Cal 17) was also relied upon before them on behalf of the petitioner. But the learned Judges for very good reasons refused to consider that decision as good law. In fact they expressed their surprise as to how if the proceeding pending before the Court is to remain in moratorium or under a blanket ban, the interim order passed in the same proceeding which is to continue during the pendency of the proceeding can remain in force.

82. We may also mention that the decision of the single Judge of the Calcutta High Court was also cited before the Division Bench of Chandurkar and Lentin JJ. which decided Special Civil Application No. 650 of 1971 = (reported in AIR 1977 Bom 355) and the learned Judges, in our opinion, rightly observed that they were unable to agree with the view taken by the learned single Judge of the Calcutta High Court

With respect, even on that point we are in agreement with the decision of the Division Bench and also the decision of the Patna High Court. We cannot agree with the view of the learned single Judge of the Calcutta High Court on the point of the continuance of the stay or injunction orders even during the period when the main proceeding stands suspended in view of the Presidential Orders issued under Art. 359 (1) of the Constitution.

83. In the result, in our opinion, the learned single Judge of this Court (Rege J.) was not right in the view he has taken either about the scope of the enquiry to be made by the Court in pending proceedings or about the helplessness of the Court in the matter of injunctions or stay orders which were issued prior to the coming into force of the order of the President.

84. Our conclusions therefore are that the decision of the Division Bench of this Court consisting of Chandurkar and Lentin JJ. in Special Civil Application No. 650 of 1971 = (reported in AIR 1977 Bom 355) is still good law in spite of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Habeas Corpus case, (AIR 1976 SC 1207) and in respect of matters which were pending on the date of the order of the President involving the alleged infringement of the fundamental rights mentioned therein, an enquiry is certainly possible to the extent indicated by the Division Bench and also to the extent which is indicated by us. It is not every petition containing an allegation of a breach of a fundamental right mentioned in the order of the President which needs to be suspended without taking into consideration the allegations in the petition and the returns which are filed and to the extent indicated by us, the court has every jurisdiction to dispose of the writ petitions. With regard to stay orders or injunctions issued in the pending proceedings prior to the coming into force of the Presidential Order under Art. 359 (1), if it is found on enquiry on perusal of the case and the returns that the proceeding has to be kept suspended during the period mentioned in the order of the President, the stay orders or injunctions issued in the said petition shall have to be simultaneously suspended.

85. Since we have taken the view that this petition suffers from the vice of inordinate delay of about five years which has not been explained the petition is dismissed with costs and the rule is discharged.

Petition dismissed.

Special Civil Applns. Nos. 5377 of 1976, 1880 of 1973, 1428 and 1703 of 1975, D/-22-4-1977.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 227 (as amended by Constitution (42nd Amendment) Act, 1976) — Power is both judicial and administrative.

The contention that the amended Article 227 retains with the High Court only administrative superintendence over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction must be rejected. On a true and proper construction of the language employed in the amended Art. 227 it is clear that superintendence which every High Court is said to possess over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction under sub-art. (1) includes judicial superintendence or judicial supervision. Under sub-article (1) it has been generally provided that every High Court shall have superintendence over all courts without specifying whether it is administrative or judicial which ordinarily would mean superintendence of both kinds and this is made amply clear in sub-art. (5) according to which power of superintendence has been conferred upon the High Court to question any judgment of any inferior court provided that such judgment is otherwise subject to either appeal or revision to the High Court and it is obvious that judgments can be questioned judicially and not administratively. In other words, it is plain that judicial supervision over inferior court's judgments is contemplated by sub-art. (5). It will further appear clear that under sub-article (5) some limitation or restriction is placed upon the High Court's judicial supervision or superintendence over the judgments of any inferior court, in that such judicial supervision or judicial superintendence would be available to the High Court only in cases where such judgments are otherwise subject to an appeal or revision but such a limitation or restriction re-emphasises the fact that the superintendence spoken of by the amended Art. 227 (1) includes judicial supervision or judicial superintendence.

(Paras 6 and 7)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 227 — Article is not merely procedural but confers substantive right on litigant to move High Court. AIR 1962 Punj 94, AIR 1951 Bom 423 and AIR 1968 Bom 51, Distinguished; AIR 1964 SC 381 and 1970 (2) SCR 197, AIR 1953 SC 210, AIR 1950 SC 124, AIR 1955 SC 233 and AIR 1976 SC 1207, Referred. (Para 11)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 227 (prior to and after Constitution (42nd Amendment) Act, 1976) — Pending petitions — Must be disposed of in accordance with original Art. 227. (Interpretation of Statutes).

The amended Art. 227 has not been given any retrospective operation either by express words or by necessary intendment and the amended Article is clearly prospective in operation. That being the position and since Art. 227 is not procedural but confers a right of action on a litigant it is obvious that all petitions pending as on 1-2-1977 i.e. the date on which the amended Art. 227 came into force must be heard and disposed of in accordance with the original or un-amended Art. 227. (Para 13)

It is a well established principle that where a statute is passed pending an action strong and distinct words are necessary to alter the vested rights of either litigant as they stood at the commencement of the action. Applying this principle it will be clear that pending petitions under the original Art. 227 will not be affected by the amended article, inasmuch as, there are no words at all, much less strong and distinct words, in the amended Art. 227 which suggest either expressly or by necessary implication that any alteration was intended in the right of the petitioners to continue and complete their proceedings in accordance with the Article as it stood at the commencement of their action. (1861) 10 CB (NS) 179, (1885) 15 QBD 234 and AIR 1950 Bom 236, Ref. (Para 14)

The principle is also well established that unless contrary can be shown a provision which takes away the jurisdiction of a court is itself subject to implied saving of litigant's right and since there is nothing in the amended Art. 227 to indicate to the contrary, the petitioners' right to continue the pending petitions under the original Art. 227 must be held to have been saved. AIR 1928 Cal 640 (FB), AIR 1957 SC 540, 1905 AC 369 and AIR 1943 FC 24, Rel. on. (Paras 17, 18)

In S. 58 of the 42nd Amendment Act, 1976 the Parliament has made special provision with regard to pending petitions under Art. 226 and has by that provision enacted that such pending petitions shall be dealt with in accordance with the amended Art. 226. A similar provision in regard to pending petitions under the unamended Art. 227 has not been made and, therefore, a reasonable inference arises that Parliament did not intend that pending petitions under the original Art. 227 should be governed by the amended Art. 227. (Para 13)

(D) Constitution of India, Art. 227 (as amended by Constitution (42nd Amendment) Act, 1976) — Power of judicial superintendence — Extent of — 'Courts' — Meaning.

The expression 'Courts' occurring in the amended Art. 227 will have to be understood in its normal accepted connotation especially in the absence of any definition being given in the Constitution. The proposition is well settled that all Courts are tribunals but all tribunals are not Courts. The proposition in other words means that some tribunals would be basically courts i.e. courts in their normal connotation while some others would not be courts and, therefore, it cannot be said that Parliament wanted to exclude all tribunals from the purview of the High Court's superintendence under the amended Art. 227 but it can be said that Parliament intended to exclude only such tribunals as are not basically courts from the High Court's superintendence. It follows that the High Court's power of judicial superintendence under the amended Art. 227 certainly covers judgments of all Courts meaning thereby all regular civil and criminal courts constituted under the hierarchy of courts subject to its appellate or revisional jurisdiction but also extends to tribunals, bodies or authorities, whatever be their label provided two conditions are satisfied: (a) such tribunal, body or authority is basically a Court i.e. it performs judicial function of rendering definitive judgments having finality and authoritativeness to bind the parties litigating their rights before it in exercise of sovereign judicial power transferred to it by the State and (b) such tribunal, body or authority is subject to High Court's appellate or revisional jurisdiction. The reliance placed on Arts. 323A and 323B for the purpose of inferring an intention on the part of Parliament to exclude all tribunals from the purview of High Court's superintendence under the amended Art. 227 is misplaced. TULZAPURKAR, Actg. C. J.:— These four petitions have been placed before this larger bench with a view to ascertain the impact of Art. 227 of the Constitution as amended by the Constitution (42 Amendment) Act, 1976 on pending petitions filed under that Article prior to its amendment and to consider the allied questions that arise under the said amended article. Each of the four petitions has been regarded as being representative in character of a large number of petitions that have been filed and are pending in this Court since prior to 1st February 1977, the date on which the amended Art. 227 has come into force.

2. By Spl. Civil Application No. 5377 of 1976 a certain decision rendered in appeal and confirmed in review by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal under the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961 has been challenged by the petitioners therein under Art. 227; the petition was filed on 9-12-1976 and rule nisi and interim stay were granted by this Court on 14-12-1976. Spl. Civil Application No. 1880 of 1973 is directed against an order dated 21-6-1973 passed by the Commissioner, Poona Division, rejecting an application made by the petitioners under S. 88D (1) (iv) of the Bombay Tenancy & Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, whereby the petitioners had sought revocation or cancellation of the exemption certificate granted to their landlord under S. 88C on 5-7-1958; the petition was filed under Art. 227 on 3-8-1973 and rule nisi and interim stay have been granted by this Court on 6-8-1973. In Spl. Civil Application No. 1428 of 1975 the petitioners therein have challenged the validity and/or legality of two notifications — Section 4 notification dated 25-8-1969 and S. 6 notification dated 12-9-1972 issued under the Land Acquisition Act purporting to acquire the petitioners' lands for public purpose viz. resettlement of persons likely to be affected due to Krishna Dam Project under Art. 227; the petition has been filed on 21-6-1975 and rule and interim injunction have been issued by this Court on 1-7-1975. In Spl. Civil Application No. 1703 of 1975 the petitioner's (plaintiff) suit for possession against his tenant under the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 was dismissed by the learned Judge of Small Causes Court at Pune on 5-6-1974 and against the dismissal he had filed an appeal to the District Judge at Pune and the learned Assistant Judge who heard the appeal allowed the same but remanded the suit back to the trial Court with certain directions; the petitioner-plaintiff has challenged the appellate court's order under Art. 227 of the Constitution; the petition was filed on 1-8-1975 and rule and interim stay have been granted by this Court on 4-8-1975. It is thus clear that all these four petitions filed under the unamended Art. 227 have been admitted and are pending in this Court on 1-2-1977 when the amended Art. 227 has come into force and the principal question that has been raised before us is whether the amended Article 227 would be applicable to or affect in any manner these four and similar other pending petitions? If the answer to the first question be in the affirmative, the second question raised is whether this Court can and/or should permit the petitioners to amend their petitions so as to convert them into petitions under Article 226 of the Constitution? Yet another question raised is what is the true effect of deletion of the words 'and tribunals' from the original Art. 227 and addition of the words 'subject to its appellate jurisdiction' after the words 'all courts' in the amended Art. 227 (1) on future petitions that might be filed after 1st February 1977 under the amended Art. 227?

3. On the principal question as to whether the pending petitions (meaning petitions filed and admitted before 1-2-1977) under the original Art. 227 would be governed or affected by the amended Art. 227 which has come into force on 1st February 1977, Mr. Seervai appearing for the petitioners submitted that such pending petitions will have to be proceeded with, heard and disposed of by this Court under the original Art. 227 and the hearing and disposal of these petitions will not be affected in any manner by the amended Art. 227 for three or four reasons; in the first place he urged that the amended Art. 227 has not been given any retrospective operation either expressly or by necessary intendment so as to apply to or govern the pending petitions and in the absence of such retrospective operation the pending petitions must be dealt with and disposed of in accordance with the original or unamended Art. 227; secondly, he pointed out that in the context of S. 58 of the 42nd Amendment Act, 1976 making special provisions in regard to pending petitions under the original Art. 226 (where expressly it has been enacted that such pending petitions shall be dealt with in accordance with the amended Art. 226) and in the absence of similar provision in regard to pending petitions under the unamended Art. 227 it should be reasonably inferred that the Parliament did not intend to make the amended Art. 227 applicable to pending petitions filed under the original or unamended Art. 227 and the intention was clear that such petitions should be governed and disposed of under the original Art. 227; thirdly, he relied upon S. 6(e) of the General Clauses Act, 1897 as also on the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in the leading case of Colonial Sugar Refinery Ltd. v. Irving reported in 1905 AC 369; and lastly, in the alternative, he urged that quite independently of S. 6 of the General Clauses Act, such pending petitions would be saved from the amended Article and would have to be dealt with and disposed of in accordance with the original Article 227 in view of the well-settled general principle that, unless contrary can be shown a provision which takes away the jurisdiction of a court is itself subject to an implied saving of a litigant's right and there is nothing in the amended Art. 227 to indicate to the contrary. On the second question mentioned above, he submitted that if the Court came to the conclusion that the pending petitions under the original Art. 227 were governed by and were required to be proceeded with under the amended Art. 227, it would be both reasonable and equitable to grant permission to the petitioners to amend their petitions so as to convert them into petitions under Art. 226, for, it is because of amendment that has been effected by Parliament in the original Art. 227 that the necessity to amend the petitions in the above manner could be said to have arisen, for which the petitioners cannot be blamed; of course, he fairly conceded that unless the petitioners were able to make out a case under Art. 226 the Court would not be in a position to grant any relief to them, but that would be an aspect touching the merits of the case which the Court will have to determine after the amendment was allowed. On the third question he submitted that in regard to future petitions the High Court will be able to exercise the power of superintendence under the amended Art. 227 not only over all courts but also over tribunals, bodies or authorities provided two conditions were satisfied viz. (i) such tribunal, body or authority, whatever be its label, was basically a court and (ii) such tribunal, body or authority was subject to High Court's appellate or revisional jurisdiction; in other words, the amended Art. 227 is not confined to exercising judicial superintendence over regular civil or criminal courts constituted under the hierarchy of Courts but would extend to tribunals, bodies or authorities, who perform judicial functions of rendering definitive judgments having finality and authoritativeness to bind the parties litigating their rights before them in exercise of sovereign judicial power transferred to them by the State, provided such tribunals, bodies or authorities are subject to High Court's appellate or revisional jurisdiction.

4. In reply Messrs. Paranjpe and Bhabha, who appeared for the Union of India, Mr. R. W. Adik, the learned Advocate-General of Maharashtra and counsel for the respondents raised two or three contentions. In the first place, it was contended that the amended Art. 227 confers on the High Court only 'administrative superintendence' over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction and the amendment effected in the original Article 227 has taken away the power of 'judicial superintendence' that had been conferred on the High Court by that article before its amendment; in other words, by the amendment the article has been brought on par with S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935 and has ceased to be on par with S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 or S. 15 of the High Courts Act, 1861 and since judicial superintendence has been taken away by the amendment with effect from 1-2-1977, the High Court cannot exercise judicial superintendence even in regard to pending petitions because that power no longer exists. Secondly, it was contended that assuming without admitting that the amended Art. 227 retains the power of judicial superintendence with the High Court, such power under the amended article is now confined to all courts which are subject to High Court's appellate or revisional jurisdiction and the expression 'all courts' must mean regular civil or criminal courts constituted under a hierarchy of courts, that is to say, courts constituted under the Bombay Civil Courts Act, the Presidency and Provincial Small Cause Courts Acts, the Bombay City Civil Court Act and criminal courts constituted under the Criminal P. C. and would not extend to any tribunal or authority or even a court constituted under any other enactment for enforcing the rights and liabilities created by such enactment and as such no petition under the amended Art. 227 would lie against the decisions or orders of various tribunals like the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal acting under the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 or Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961 or Maharashtra Co-operative Tribunals acting under the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, etc. Thirdly, it was contended that Art. 227 being merely procedural would normally operate retrospectively and cover pending petitions without express provision being made in that behalf and as such absence of a provision in regard to pending petitions under the original Art. 227 as is to be found in Section 58 of the 42nd Amendment Act in regard to pending petitions under Art. 226 would not lead to an inference that the pending petitions under Art. 227 were not governed nor intended to be governed by the amended Art. 227. As regards S. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 and the principle of Colonial Sugar Refinery Co.'s case (1905 AC 369) it was contended that neither S. 6 nor the ratio of the Privy Council decision would be applicable to the pending petitions in question, inasmuch as, both S. 6 as also the Privy Council decision deal with 'accrued right' or 'vested right of appeal' and it is such right and proceeding in respect thereof that are saved from the effect of a repealing enactment, while Art. 227, both in its original form as well as in its amended form merely conferred and confers power upon the High Court to exercise superintendence over all courts and tribunals (under the unamended article) and over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction (under the amended article) but did not and does not confer any right on a litigant; in other words, since Art. 227 dealt with and deals with procedural rights by way of conferring power of superintendence upon High Courts and not with substantive right of any litigant, S. 6 would be inapplicable and the presumption would be that the amended article would have retrospective operation and govern the hearing and disposal of pending petitions.

5. At the outset it must be clarified that the contention raised by Messrs. Paranjpe and Bhabha that the amended Art. 227 confers on the High Court only 'administrative superintendence' over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction and that with effect from 1-2-1977 the High Court no longer enjoys any power of judicial superintendence in respect of judgments or orders of such Courts is, in our view, irrelevant qua the pending petitions filed under unamended Art. 227 if the hearing or disposal of such petitions is to be governed not by the amended article but by the original Art. 227, inasmuch as, it was not disputed by them that under the original Art. 227 the High Court had power of judicial superintendence. However, the aspect whether under the amended Art. 227 judicial superintendence has been taken away and merely administrative superintendence has been retained with the High Court would assume importance qua future petitions and also qua pending petitions if such petitions are held liable to be heard and disposed of in accordance with the amended Art. 227. After clarifying the position as above, we shall proceed to deal with the aforesaid contention. The question is whether the amended Art. 227 retains with the High Court merely administrative superintendence over all courts and takes away the High Court's power of judicial superintendence over all courts and tribunals hitherto enjoyed by it under the original Art. 227? According to Messrs. Paranjpe and Bhabha, initially under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 both administrative as well as judicial superintendence had been conferred upon the High Court with respect to subordinate courts, but with the repeal of Government of India Act, 1915 and coming into force of the Government of India Act, 1935, S. 224 of the latter Act conferred power of administrative superintendence on the High Court in respect of 'all courts subordinate to its appellate jurisdiction' and though under the original Art. 227 of the Constitution power of superintendence, both administrative and judicial, could be said to have been conferred upon the High Court over all courts and tribunals the amended Art. 227 has been brought on par with S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935 and has ceased to be on par with S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 or S. 15 of the High Courts Act, 1861 and therefore under the amended Art. 227 the High Court has merely administrative supervisory powers over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction. In support of this contention reliance was placed by Counsel upon the provisions of S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935, original Art. 227 of the Constitution and the amended Article 227 of the Constitution and also on two decisions — one of the Supreme Court in Waryam Singh v. Amarnath reported in AIR 1954 SC 215 and the other of this Court in Kavasji Pestonji Dalal v. Rustomji Sorabji Jamadar reported in AIR 1949 Bom 42.

6. It is not possible to accept this contention for two reasons, namely (a) on a true construction of the amended Article 227 (5) it is clear that judicial superintendence or judicial supervision though limited in extent has been retained with the High Court along with its administrative superintendence or supervision and (b) the decided cases on which reliance has been placed do not support the contention urged. Looking at the contention from the construction point of view it will be necessary to set out the material parts of the amended Art. 227 being sub-art. (1) and sub-art. (5) thereof. These run thus:

227. Power of superintendence over all courts by the High Court.—

(1) Every High Court shall have superintendence over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction.

xxx

xxx

(5) Nothing in this article shall be construed as giving to a High Court any jurisdiction to question any judgment of any inferior court which is not otherwise subject to appeal or revision.

On a true and proper construction of the language employed in the aforesaid provisions it will appear clear that superintendence which every High Court is said to possess over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction under sub-art. (1) includes judicial superintendence or judicial supervision. Under the sub-art. (1) it has been generally provided that every High Court shall have superintendence over all courts without specifying whether it is administrative or judicial which ordinarily would mean superintendence of both kinds and this is made amply clear in sub-art. (5) according to which power of superintendence has been conferred upon the High Court to question any judgment of any inferior court provided that such judgment is otherwise subject to either appeal or revision to the High Court and it is obvious that judgments can be questioned judicially and not administratively. In other words, it is plain that judicial supervision over inferior court's judgments is contemplated by sub-art. (5). It will further appear clear that under sub-art. (5) some limitation or restriction is placed upon the High Court's judicial supervision or superintendence over the judgments of any inferior court, in that such judicial supervision or judicial superintendence would be available to the High Court only in cases where such judgments are otherwise subject to an appeal or revision but such a limitation or restriction re-emphasises the fact that the superintendence spoken of by the amended Article 227 (1) includes judicial supervision or judicial superintendence. Secondly, it would not be quite correct to say that S. 224 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935 took away from the High Court its judicial supervision or superintendence over all courts subordinate to it. But on a fair reading of that provision it will appear clear that judicial supervision or superintendence which was unquestionably vested in the High Court over its subordinate courts under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 was merely limited or restricted to some extent and was not taken away altogether as has been suggested by Messrs. Paranjpe and Bhabha and therefore it would be incorrect to say that the amended Art. 227 of the Constitution by reason of its being brought on par with S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935 has the effect of taking away from the High Court its power of judicial supervision or superintendence over the subordinate courts. It is true that in the original Art. 227 there was no provision similar to sub-s. (2) of S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935 and such a provision now finds a place in the amended Art. 227 in sub-art. (5) thereof but by reason of such provision all that could be said is that judicial supervision or superintendence conferred upon the High Court over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction could be said to have become limited or restricted to the same extent as it had been limited or restricted under S. 224 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935. This position as we shall point out later has been clarified by the decision of this Court in Kavasji Pestonji Dalal's case (AIR 1949 Bom 42). After all this power of judicial superintendence conferred by the amended Art. 227 is, as pointed out by Harries, C. J. in Dalmia Jain Airways' case (AIR 1951 Cal 193) (SB) to be exercised most sparingly and only in appropriate cases in order to keep the subordinate courts within the bounds of their authority and not for correcting mere errors.

7. Coming to the decided cases the position was well settled that the superintendence conferred upon each High Court by S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 included judicial superintendence by the High Court over its subordinate courts. In Emperor v. Balkrishna Hari Phansalkar, reported in 34 Bom LR 1523: (AIR 1933 Bom 1) Sir John Beaumont, C. J. has observed at p. 1545 (of Bom LR): (at p. 4 of AIR) as under:

"Under S. 107 the High Court has superintendence over all Courts for the time being subject to its appellate jurisdiction. It is not disputed that rights of superintendence include not only superintendence on administrative points, but superintendence on the judicial side too, and that under its power of superintendence the High Court can correct any error in a judgment of a Court subject to its appellate jurisdiction."

In Emperor v. Jamnadas Nathji reported in 39 Bom LR 82: (AIR 1937 Bom 153) Broomfield and Sen, JJ. invoked their jurisdiction under S. 107 to reverse a conviction which was wrong on the face of it. In that case the party who could have appealed had not appealed and therefore no application by him in revision could be entertained by the High Court but in order to prevent an obvious miscarriage of justice the court interfered invoking its power of judicial superintendence under S. 107. It was not disputed before us that the original Art. 227 of the Constitution was on par with S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 with the only difference that the power of superintendence under the original Art. 227 was extended to 'tribunals' in addition to 'all courts'. But the original Art. 227 had been differently structured as compared to S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, inasmuch as, the power of superintendence had been divided into two parts; the first part being sub-art. (1) containing general power and the second part being sub-art. (2) containing enumeration of certain specified powers of superintendence. This difference in the structure of the original Article 227 gave rise to a contention that in view of what was contained in sub-art. (2) the entire article conferred on the High Court merely administrative superintendence over all courts and tribunals, but such a contention was negated by the Supreme Court in Waryam Singh's case (AIR 1954 SC 215). In para. 13 of its judgment the Supreme Court dealt with the nature of superintendence under the original Art. 227 of the Constitution in these words:

"The material part of Art. 227 substantially reproduces the provisions of S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 except that the power of superintendence has been extended by the Article also to Tribunals. That the Rent Controller and the District Judge exercising jurisdiction under the Act are Tribunals cannot and has not been controverted. The only question raised is as to the nature of the power of superintendence conferred by the Article. Reference is made to Cl. (2) of the Article in support of the contention that this Article only confers on the High Court administrative superintendence over the Subordinate Courts and Tribunals. We are unable to accept this contention because Cl. (2) is expressed to be without prejudice to the generality of the provisions in Cl. (1)." "Further, the preponderance of judicial opinion in India was that S. 107 which was similar in terms to S. 15 of the High Courts Act, 1861, gave a power of judicial superintendence to the High Court apart from and independently of the provisions of other laws conferring revisional jurisdiction on the High Court." The above observations therefore clearly show that the power of superintendence that was conferred upon each High Court under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 as well as under the original Art. 227 of the Constitution was not merely administrative superintendence but included judicial superintendence. The position under S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935 has been clarified by this Court in Kavasji Pestonji Dalal's case, (AIR 1949 Bom 42) to the effect that all that sub-s. (2) of S. 224 did was that it limited or restricted judicial superintendence of High Court in respect of the judgments of inferior courts to a certain extent, namely that such judicial superintendence in respect of the judgments of inferior courts would be available to the High Court only where such judgments were otherwise subject to an appeal or revision to the High Court. This conclusion has been reached after considering the marginal notes as well as the enacting parts of S. 107 of the 1915 Act and S. 224 of the 1935 Act and conflicting decisions of several High Courts. In para 10 of its judgment this is what the Division Bench has observed:

"The prohibition under sub-s. (2) only refers to those judgments of an inferior Court which are not otherwise subject to appeal or revision to the High Court. But the prohibition cannot and does not apply to judgments which are subject to appeal or revision. If S. 224 (1) gave the High Court the power of judicial interference, that power obviously has not been wholly taken away, but it has been taken away to the extent of those judgments which are not subject to appeal or revision. In other words, if a judgment is subject to appeal or revision, it seems that the High Court would still have the power to interfere judicially apart from and over and above, merely dealing with those judgments in appeal or revision."

Again in para 28 the Division Bench has observed thus:

"Sub-s. (1) is identical in terms with S. 107, Government of India Act, 1915, except of course with regard to the deletion of Cl. (b) of S. 107, and in my opinion sub-s. (1) includes the power which existed under S. 107, Government of India Act, 1915, of judicial superintendence and correction. By reason of sub-s. (2) that power is taken away only with regard to judgments which are not subject to appeal or revision."

In our view, the amended Art. 227, being on lines of S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935, must be construed as conferring power of judicial superintendence on the High Court qua all inferior courts and insertion of sub-art. (5) therein, which is in pari materia the same as sub-s. (2) of S. 224 of the 1935 Act, would only have the effect of limiting or restricting the judicial superintendence over the judgments of inferior courts to the extent to which such judgments are otherwise subject to appeal or revision to the High Court. Reliance was placed on certain observations made by the Supreme Court in Waryam Singh's case in para 13 of its judgment which follow the observations quoted by us earlier and these are as follows:

"In this connection it has to be remembered that S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 was reproduced in the Government of India, 1935 as S. 224. Section 224 of the 1935 Act, however, introduced sub-s. (2), which was new, providing that nothing in the section should be construed as giving the High Court any jurisdiction to question any judgment of any inferior Court which was not otherwise subject to appeal or revision. The idea presumably was to nullify the effect of the decisions of the different High Courts referred to above. S. 224 of the 1935 Act has been reproduced with certain modifications in Art. 227 of the Constitution. It is significant to note that sub-s. (2) to S. 224 of the 1935 Act has been omitted from Art. 227. This significant omission has been regarded by all High Courts in India before whom this question has arisen as having restored to the High Court the power of judicial superintendence it had under S. 15 of the High Courts Act, 1861 and S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915."

It must be pointed out that the Court's decision that judicial superintendence was vested in the High Court under the original Art. 227 actually rested on two grounds: (a) on construction the Court held that sub-Art. (2) did not affect the generality of the provision contained in sub-art. (1) which included judicial superintendence and (b) the preponderance of judicial opinion in India was that S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 gave the power of judicial superintendence to High Court. Therefore, the decision on the point was principally based on construction of the article. Further, while elaborating the second ground on which its decision rested the Court has observed that when S. 107 of the 1915 Act was replaced by S. 224 in the 1935 Act, sub-s. (2) of S. 224 was newly introduced and the idea presumably was to nullify the effect of the decisions of different High Courts but the expression 'the idea presumably was' itself clearly suggests that that was not the definite opinion of the Court. It is thus clear that the two decisions on which reliance was placed by Counsel for the Union of India do not support the contention urged. In our view, on pure construction of S. 224 (2) and amended Art. 227 (5) it is clear that judicial supervision or superintendence, though limited in extent did vest and does vest in the High Court. The contention therefore that the amended Art. 227 retains with the High Court only administrative superintendence over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction must be rejected.

8. Having come to the conclusion that even under the amended Art. 227 power of judicial supervision or superintendence with the limitation or restriction indicated above has been retained with the High Court over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction, we shall next deal with the contention urged by Messrs. Paranjpe and Bhabha on behalf of the Union of India and Counsel for the respondents that Art. 227 is merely procedural and confers power of superintendence upon the High Court and it neither deals with nor confers any right of action on the litigant and therefore the amendment effected therein would normally operate retrospectively and cover pending petitions without express provision being made in that behalf. On the other hand, on behalf of the petitioners Mr. Seervai contended that Art. 227 has never been regarded as an article dealing with the procedural matters or procedural rights but it confers substantive right upon a litigant to move the High Court and therefore the presumption would be the other way about, namely, that the amendment effected therein would ordinarily be prospective in the absence of retrospective operation being given to it either expressly or by necessary intendment and as such the pending petitions will have to be dealt with and disposed of in accordance with unamended Art. 227. Therefore, the question that arises for consideration is whether Art. 227 is purely procedural and deals with procedural matters like conferring power on the High Court to exercise judicial superintendence or it deals with and confers any right or substantive right on a litigant to move the High Court. In support of the contention that Art. 227 is procedural and merely confers power of judicial superintendence upon High Court and not any right on the litigant reliance was placed upon the language of the article itself as also certain observations in decided cases. The unamended Art. 227 (1) ran thus:

"Every High Court shall have superintendence over all courts and tribunals throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction."

The amended Art. 227 (1) runs thus:

"Every High Court shall have superintendence over all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction."

It was urged that the aforesaid provision by its very language merely conferred and confers power of superintendence upon every High Court and did not and does not say anything about conferring any right upon any litigant to move the High Court. It was pointed out that whenever the framers of the Constitution wanted to confer any right upon a litigant, appropriate phraseology has been used by them and in this behalf reference was made to Arts. 132 and 133 of the Constitution by which a right of appeal has been conferred upon a litigant to approach the Supreme Court against the judgments or decisions of High Courts. It was further urged that under Art. 227 the High Court can suo motu exercise its power of superintendence over subordinate courts and what can be done by the High Court suo motu cannot be regarded as conferring any right upon a litigant; it was also contended that the granting of relief on a petition filed under Art. 227 was and is discretionary and therefore Art. 227 could not be regarded as conferring any right upon a litigant. Reliance was also placed upon certain observations made by the Punjab High Court in Chautala Workers' Co-op. Society Ltd. v. State of Punjab reported in AIR 1962 Punjab 94 and by this Court in two cases, A. R. Sarin v. B. C. Patil reported in AIR 1951 Bom 423 and N. M. Nayak v. Chotalal Hariram reported in 69 Bom LR 551 : (AIR 1968 Bom 51). In the case before the Punjab High Court a distinction has been made between supervisory or revisional powers on the one hand and the appellate power on the other hand the material observations on which reliance was placed have been set out in the head-note (d) of the report, which runs thus:

"Supervisory or revisional power is considered to be a power vesting in the higher or superior tribunal to satisfy itself about the soundness or correctness of the order of the inferior tribunal. One usually accepted difference between the two powers (appellate and supervisory) appears to be that an appeal confers a right on the aggrieved party to complain in the prescribed manner to the higher forum, whereas the supervisory or revisional power has for its object the right and responsibility of the higher forum to keep the subordinate tribunals within the bounds of law. The latter power, therefore, can always be exercised suo motu in order to see that the subordinate tribunals do not transgress the limits of law.

and keep themselves within the power conferred on them."

In first Bombay decision (A. R. Sarin's case) the following observations of the Division Bench appearing on p. 426 of the report were relied upon:

"But in order that a petition for a writ of certiorari would not lie, the petitioner must have a specific legal remedy, and specific legal remedy in this context can only mean that he must have a right to approach a Court and he must have a right to a remedy if his case was just. Art. 227 only deals with the power of the High Court and not with the rights of litigant. A litigant may approach the High Court, but he has no right to do so, nor has he a right to a remedy because the High Court may refuse a remedy under Art. 227. Therefore the mere power of superintendence conferred upon the High Court does not disentitle a petitioner seeking a writ of certiorari from coming to this Court and asking for that writ."

Similarly in the second Bombay decision (N. M. Nayak's case) the following observations which appear on page 553 (of Bom LR) : (at p. 53 of AIR), of the report were relied upon:

"Now, it is well established that the High Court would exercise its powers under Art. 227 most sparingly in order to prevent gross injustice. The powers under Art. 227 are exercised by the Court in its discretion and cannot be claimed as of right by any party."

In other words, relying upon the language of Art. 227 and the observations quoted from the three rulings cited above it was contended that Art. 227 must be regarded as being merely procedural conferring power of superintendence upon High Court and not an article conferring any right upon a litigant—much less any substantive right or vested right like a right of appeal. It is not possible to accept this contention for the reasons which we shall presently indicate.

9. In the first place no particular phraseology or definite language is required for conferral of a right of action or a right to move a court upon a litigant and simply because Art. 227 says that every High Court shall have superintendence over all courts it does not mean that such language is decisive on the point that no right of action is conferred on the litigant; the language used will have to be considered in the light of the entire scheme of the Constitution which confers fundamental and other rights on citizens and non-citizens and provides for remedies for enforcement of such rights. Secondly, the argument that Art. 227 confers suo motu power of superintendence upon the High Court or that the granting of relief thereunder is discretionary with the High Court and therefore no right could be said to have been conferred on the litigant does not impress us at all. The mere fact that power of judicial superintendence can be exercised by the High Court suo motu does not and cannot negative the right of a litigant to move the Court if the article otherwise confers or grants such a right, for, the two concepts—concept of suo motu exercise of powers and concept of exercising the power on being invited to do so upon an application by a litigant—are distinct and different. Similarly the aspect that granting of relief under Art. 227 is always within the discretion of the High Court can have no bearing on the question whether the article confers a right on the litigant, for, granting of specific performance or injunction is equally discretionary but it cannot be suggested that a plaintiff has no right to file a suit for such reliefs. In this respect Art. 226 and Art. 227 stand on the same footing and it is well established that if a proper case is made out for the exercise of the Court's power under either of these articles and there exist no other circumstances like laches or delay or coming to court with unclean hands etc. it will be the duty of the court to exercise the power in favour of the petitioner. The Supreme Court has in this context observed thus: "Having regard to the nature of the powers conferred and the object intended to be achieved by their conferment, there can be little doubt that in dealing with the applications made before them the High Courts have to exercise their discretion in a judicial manner and in accordance with principles which are well settled in that behalf. The High Courts cannot capriciously or unreasonably refuse to entertain the said applications and deal with them on the merits on the sole ground that the exercise of their jurisdiction under Art. 226 (1) is discretionary". (vide para 18 of the judgment in Makhan Singh's case reported in AIR 1964 SC 381 at p. 394-395). The three decisions, one of the Punjab High Court and the other two of this Court, are clearly distinguishable and the observations relied upon will have to be regarded as having been made in the context of the points that arose for decision in each of the cases and as such inapplicable to the question at issue before us. In the Punjab case the question that arose for determination related to the nature of power conferred on the State Government under S. 64 (h) (as added in Punjab) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 to deal with the appellate orders passed by the Appellate Tribunal/Authority in appeal and the question was whether the power conferred under Cl. (h) was liable to be struck down as arbitrary and vague in the absence of any test or criteria being indicated therein by reference to which the power could be exercised and the Punjab High Court held that the power under Cl. (h) appeared to be analogous to the power of revision and Cl. (h) could not be struck down as being arbitrary and vague and it was in that context that the Court made a distinction between supervisory or revisional powers on the one hand and appellate powers on the other and made the observations relied upon to the effect that whereas an appeal confers a right on the aggrieved party, supervisory or revisional power has for its object the right and responsibility of the higher forum to keep the subordinate tribunals within the bounds of law and that the same can be exercised suo motu. The observations relied upon were therefore made in the context of the question as to what was the nature of power conferred on the State Government under S. 64 (h) and the Court held the power to be the power of revision and having held so it distinguished that power from the appellate power. The observations made by this Court in A. R. Sarin's case, (AIR 1951 Bom 423), on which reliance has been placed do lend some support to the contention urged on behalf of the Union of India but it may be pointed out that those observations were made in the context of the question whether Art. 227 provides for a specific legal remedy so as to disentitle a petitioner to seek a writ of certiorari under Art. 226 and the Court held that the petitioner was entitled to the writ under Art. 226, inasmuch as Art. 227 could not be said to provide a specific legal remedy and the reason stated is that a litigant may approach the High Court but he has no right to do so, nor has he a right to a remedy because the High Court may refuse a remedy under Art. 227. This reasoning runs counter to the Supreme Court's observations which we have quoted above in Makhan Singh's case reported in AIR 1964 SC 381 at p. 394-395. As regards the observations made by this Court in N. M. Nayak's case it is clear that those observations do not lend much support to the contention, for, all that those observations indicate is that the power exercisable under Art. 227 is always sparingly used to prevent gross injustice and the exercise thereof is discretionary with the High Court. In none of these cases the question whether Art. 227 is merely procedural or confers a right of action on the litigant directly arose for decision and therefore the observations which were made in the context of other questions that arose for determination in each of the three cases cannot avail the Counsel for Union of India and the Respondents.

10. In our view, while considering the question whether Art. 227 is purely procedural or confers a right on the litigant to move the High Court it will be wrong to consider Art. 227 in isolation but all the three articles viz. Arts. 32, 226 and 227 which deal with high prerogative writs and writ jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the High Courts will have to be considered together. Furthermore, the nature of remedies provided by such writs and the manner in which and the purpose for which the remedies have been provided under these articles will have an important bearing on the question at issue. At the outset it may be stated that there is a well recognised distinction between remedies in private law and remedies in public law and that writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto and certiorari are clearly remedies in public law, though issuance of some of them benefits private individuals. All these writs are known in English law as high prerogative writs associated with the King's name. The theory of English law is that the King himself superintends the due course of justice through his own Court preventing cases of usurpation of jurisdiction and insisting on vindication of public rights and protecting the liberty of the subjects by speedy and summary interposition. It is this theory of English law and the concept of prerogative writs that have been borrowed and incorporated in our Constitution by its founding fathers. In the pre-Constitution days only the three High Courts in the presidency towns of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras had the power to issue the prerogative writs but their power to issue the said writs was confined only to the local limits of their original civil jurisdiction (vide Privy Council decision in the Parlakimedi case: 70 Ind App 129 : (AIR 1943 PC 164). This power to issue such writs within those limits was derived by these High Courts as successor Courts of the Supreme Court which had been exercising jurisdiction over each of the Presidency Towns of Bombay, Calcutta and Madras, the Supreme Courts themselves having got under their respective Letters Patent all the powers, jurisdiction and authority of the Courts of King's Bench in England. The other High Courts in India had no power to issue such writs at all. In that situation, the framers of the Constitution, having decided to provide for certain basic safeguards for the people in the new set up which they called 'fundamental rights' thought of providing for speedy and inexpensive remedies for enforcement of such rights and that is how Articles 32, 226 and 227 came to be enacted in the Constitution. Thus the nature of the remedies provided, the manner in which and the purpose for which these have been provided show that these articles will have to be regarded as conferring a right on the litigant to move the Court for enforcement of fundamental and other rights and not as articles merely dealing with procedural matters. In other words, it would be clear that the power conferred upon the Supreme Court under Art. 32 (2) and upon the High Court under Art. 226 (1) to issue directions, orders or writs including the writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto and certiorari will have to be equated with the conferral of remedies in public law, that is to say, conferral of a right to constitutional remedies upon a litigant notwithstanding the phraseology used in Art. 32 (2) and Art. 226 (1), namely "the Supreme Court/ every High Court shall have power...to issue directions or orders or writs". Such result, in our view, follows from the nature of remedies provided by such high prerogative writs and the manner and purpose for which such remedies have been provided in these articles. That the remedies provided by high prerogative writs are remedies in public law as opposed to remedies in private law and that the theory of English law qua these writs have been borrowed and introduced in our Constitution by its framers will be clear from the following observations of Ramaswamy, J. in the judgment of the Supreme Court in Md. Hanif v. State of Assam reported in 1970 (2) SCR 197 at pp. 202-203 :

"It is true that the jurisdiction of the High Court under Art. 226 is an extraordinary jurisdiction vested in the High Court not for the purpose of declaring the private rights of the parties but for the purpose of ensuring that the law of the land is implicitly obeyed and that the various tribunals and public authorities are kept within the limits of their jurisdiction. In other words, the jurisdiction of the High Court under Art. 226 is a supervisory jurisdiction, a jurisdiction meant to supervise the work of the tribunals and public authorities and to see that they act within the limits of their respective jurisdiction. In a proceeding under Art. 226 the High Court is not concerned merely with the determination of the private rights of the parties; the only object of such a proceeding under Art. 226 is to ensure that the law of the land is implicitly obeyed and that various authorities and tribunals act within the limits of their respective jurisdiction. Art. 226 states that the High Court shall have power to issue to any person or authority, including in appropriate cases any Government, directions, orders or writs, including writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto and certiorari. All these writs are known in English law as prerogative writs, the reason being that they are specially associated with the King's name. These writs were always granted for the protection of public interest and primarily by the Court of the King's Bench. As a matter of history the Court of the King's Bench was held to be coram rege ipso and was required to perform quasi-governmental functions. The theory of the English law is that the King himself superintends the due course of justice through his own court preventing cases of usurpation of jurisdiction and insisting on vindication of public rights and protecting the liberty of the subjects by speedy and summary interposition. That is the theory of the English law and as pointed out by this Court in Basappa v. Nagappa, (1955) 1 SCR 250 : (AIR 1954 SC 240) our Constitution makers have borrowed the conception of prerogative writs from the English law and the essential principle relating to such prerogative writs are applicable in Indian law. It is obvious that the remedy provided under Art. 226 is a remedy against the violation of the rights of a citizen by the State or statutory authority. In other words, it is a remedy in public law."

Similarly, the manner in which and the purpose for which Art. 226 was inserted in our Constitution has been explained by the Supreme Court in Election Commission v. Saka Venkat Subba Rao reported in 1953 SCR 1144 : (AIR 1953 SC 210). It was a case prior to the insertion of sub-art. (1-A) in Art. 226 and the question was whether the Madras High Court could issue a writ under Art. 226 to the Election Commission of India which had its office permanently located in New Delhi and the Supreme Court held that the Madras High Court had no jurisdiction to do so. Dealing with the historical background of writ jurisdiction and while coming to the conclusion that the Madras High Court's power to issue writs had a two-fold limitation Chief Justice Patanjali Shastri had made some observations at p. 1150 (of SCR) : (at pp 212, 213 of AIR) of the report which run thus:

"Turning now to the question as to the powers of a High Court under Art. 226, it will be noticed that Art. 225 continues to the existing High Courts the same jurisdiction and powers as they possessed immediately before the commencement of the Constitution. Though there had been some conflict of judicial opinion on the point, it was authoritatively decided by the Privy Council in the Parlakimedi case (70 Ind App 129) : (AIR 1943 PC 164) that the High Court of Madras—the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta were in the same position—had no power to issue what were known as high prerogative writs beyond the local limits of its original civil jurisdiction, and the power to issue such writs within those limits was derived by the court as successor of the Supreme Court which had been exercising jurisdiction over the Presidency Town of Madras and was replaced by the High Court established in pursuance of the Charter Act of 1861. The other High Courts in India had no power to issue such writs at all. In that situation, the makers of the Constitution, having decided to provide for certain basic safeguards for the people in the new set up, which they called fundamental rights, evidently thought it necessary to provide also a quick and inexpensive remedy for the enforcement of such rights and, finding that the prerogative writs which the Courts in England had developed and used whenever urgent necessity demanded immediate and decisive interposition, were peculiarly suited for the purpose, they conferred, in the States' sphere, new and wide powers on the High Courts of issuing directions, orders or writs primarily for the enforcement of fundamental rights, the power to issue such directions, etc., "for any other purpose" being also included with a view apparently to place all the High Courts in this country in somewhat the same position as the Court of King's Bench in England. But wide as were the powers thus conferred, a two-fold limitation was placed upon their exercise. In the first place, the power is to be exercised "throughout the territories in relation to which it exercises jurisdiction", that is to say, the writs issued by the court cannot run beyond the territories subject to its jurisdiction. Secondly, the person or authority to whom the High Court is empowered to issue such writs must be "within those territories", which clearly implies that they must be amenable to its jurisdiction either by residence or location within those territories."

11. It may also be pointed out that the sub-heading under which Art. 32 occurs in Part III of the Constitution is "Right to Constitutional remedies". An attempt was made by Mr. Paranjpe to make a distinction between Art. 32 on the one hand and Art. 226 on the other by pointing out that whereas in sub-art. (1) of Art. 32 there is express reference to 'the right to move the Supreme Court', there is no such provision to be found in Art. 226, but we are clearly of the view that the difference pointed out will have no bearing on the issue at issue, for, the language of Art. 32 (2) and the language of Art. 226 (1) (omitting non obstante clause) so far as is material is identical and all that sub-art. (1) of Art. 32 does is that the right to move the Supreme Court for enforcement of fundamental rights has been raised to the level of a fundamental right by being 'guaranteed' thereunder and by including it in Part III and nothing more and this position is clarified by the Supreme Court in Romesh Thapper's case reported in AIR 1950 SC 124. In other words, it seems to us clear that both under Art. 32 and Art. 226 a substantive right to constitutional remedies has been conferred upon a litigant and these articles, particularly Art. 32 (2) and Art. 226 (1) cannot be said to be merely dealing with the procedural matters like conferring power upon the Supreme Court or the High Court. The position with regard to Art. 227 would also be the same, for, it was not disputed before us that the nature and content of the powers conferred upon the High Court under Article 226 and Art. 227 are the same and do overlap and in fact in certain respects the powers under Art. 227 are wider, in that under Art. 227 the Court can act suo motu while under Art. 226 there is no such power and secondly while in a certiorari under Art. 226 the High Court can only annul or quash the decision of the inferior body or authority, it can under Art. 227 do that and also issue further directions in the matter. (vide H. V. Kamath's case: 1955 (1) SCR 1104 : AIR 1955 SC 233). It is true that under Art. 226 the writs mentioned therein could be issued by the High Court for enforcement of fundamental rights which is not done ordinarily under Art. 227 but on rare or exceptional occasions the power of judicial superintendence under Art. 227 could be exercised for enforcing a fundamental right as for instance when the impugned executive action violating a fundamental right is taken under a law which is challenged as being ultra vires. It is, therefore, clear that Art. 227 also cannot be regarded as merely dealing with procedural matters but must be held to be an article that confers a substantive right upon a litigant.

12. There is yet one more aspect to which our attention was invited by the learned Advocate General of Maharashtra which shows that Art. 226 is not merely procedural but confers a right on the litigant to move High Court and in this behalf reference was made to Art. 359 (1) of the Constitution. Art. 359 (1) enables the President, where a proclamation of Emergency is in operation, to declare by an order that the right to move any court for enforcement of such of the rights conferred by Part III as may be mentioned in the order and all proceedings pending in any court for enforcement of the rights so mentioned shall remain suspended for the period during which the proclamation is in force or such shorter period as may be specified in the order. He pointed out that in Makhan Singh's case reported in AIR 1964 SC 381 a contention was raised that the words 'any court' in Art. 359 (1) meant only the 'Supreme Court' and that the issuance of the Presidential Order thereunder suspending the enforcement of fundamental rights did not prevent a citizen from moving the High Court by resorting to Art. 226 of the Constitution but the Supreme Court in effect held that a detenu's right to move the High Court for enforcement of fundamental right under Art. 226 also got suspended by coming to the conclusion that the expression 'any court' meant any court of competent jurisdiction including the High Court. In para 15 the contention urged has been set out thus:

"His (Mr. Setalvad's) argument, therefore, is that the only right of which a citizen can be deprived under Art. 359 (1) is the right to move the Supreme Court and so his case is that even in regard to fundamental rights specified in the Presidential Order, a citizen is entitled to ask reliefs from the High Court because the right to move the High Court flowing from Art. 226 does not fall within the mischief of Art. 359 (1)." This argument was repelled by the Court in para 16 thus:

"This argument attempts to interpret the words 'the right to move for the enforcement of the specified rights' in isolation and without taking into account the other words which indicate that the right to move which is specified in the said article is the right to move 'any court' in plain language, the words 'any court' cannot mean only the Supreme Court; they would necessarily take in all courts of competent jurisdiction. If the intention of the Constitution makers was to confine the operation of Art. 359 (1) to the right to move only the Supreme Court, nothing could have been easier than to say so expressly instead of using the wider words 'the right to move any court'."

Ultimately in para 18 the Supreme Court has concluded thus:

"Therefore, it is idle to suggest that the proceedings taken by citizens under Art. 226 (1) are outside the purview of Art. 359 (1). We must accordingly hold that the right to move any court under Art. 359 (1) refers to the right to move any court of competent jurisdiction."

The same position was affirmed by the Supreme Court in its latest decision in Shukla's case reported in AIR 1976 SC 1207. In para 33 of the judgment Chief Justice Ray has observed thus:

"A person can enforce fundamental rights in this Court under Art. 32 as well as in the High Courts under Art. 226. It is idle to suggest that the object of Art. 359 (1) is that the right to move this Court only is barred and not the right to move any High Court. Art. 226 does not provide a guaranteed fundamental right like Art. 32. This guaranteed right under Art. 32 itself may be suspended by a Presidential Order under Art. 359 (1). In such a case it could not be said that the object of the makers of the Constitution is that a person could not move this Court for the enforcement of fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order but could do so under Art. 226. The bar created by Art. 359 (1) applies to petitions for the enforcement of fundamental rights mentioned in the Presidential Order whether by way of an application under Art. 32 or by way of any application under Art. 226."

In our view, Art. 359 (1) furnishes intrinsic evidence that Art. 226 confers a right on a citizen to move the court and is not merely procedural, inasmuch as, Art. 226 has been equiperated with Art. 32 by the Supreme Court to the extent that Art. 226 confers a substantive right, though not a fundamental right, on the litigant to move the High Court for enforcement of fundamental rights and other rights. The position in regard to Art. 227 would be the same.

13. In view of our aforesaid conclusion, it will be easy to deal with the principal question raised before us, namely whether the pending petitions filed and admitted by this Court under the unamended Art. 227 prior to 1st February 1977 are to be heard and disposed of in accordance with the original or unamended Art. 227 or their disposal is governed by the amended Art. 227 and the answer to the question primarily depends upon whether the amended Art. 227 has been given any retrospective operation so as to cover the pending petitions. On reading the amended Art. 227 and comparing the same with the original or unamended one it will appear clear that a couple of changes have been effected. In the first place, sub-art. (1) of the original Art. 227 conferred on the High Court the power of superintendence over all courts and tribunals throughout the territories in relation to which it exercised jurisdiction, whereas in the amended sub-art. (1) the words 'and tribunals' have been deleted and the words 'subject to its appellate jurisdiction' have been substituted after the words 'all courts'; in other words, this amendment purports to take away the High Court's superintendence over 'tribunals'. Secondly a new sub-art. (5), which was not there in the original article, has been inserted in the amended article with the result that a limitation has been placed on the High Court's power of judicial superintendence over judgments of inferior courts, namely that such judicial superintendence will be available to the High Court only in cases where such judgments are otherwise subject to an appeal or revision to the High Court. It was conceded by Mr. Paranjpe before us that the phrase "subject to its appellate jurisdiction" occurring in sub-art. (1) read with sub-art. (5) clearly shows that for invoking the High Court's power of judicial superintendence it would be enough if the inferior court's judgment to question which the power is to be invoked, was subject to either an appeal or revision to the High Court. Sub-arts. (2), (3) and (4) of the original Art. 227 have remained the same in the amended article. But apart from the aforesaid changes effected it is clear that the amended Article 227 has not been given any retrospective operation either by express words or by necessary intendment and the amended article is clearly prospective in operation. That being the position since we have come to the conclusion that Art. 227 is not procedural but confers a right of action on a litigant it is obvious that all petitions pending as on 1-2-1977 will have to be heard and disposed of in accordance with the original or unamended Art. 227. The general rule applicable in that behalf has been stated in Craies on Statute Law (7th Edition) at p. 401 thus:

"It is a general rule that when the legislature alters right of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action, its enactment unless in express terms they apply to pending actions do not affect them. But there is an exception to this rule viz. where the enactment merely affects the procedure and do not extend to rights of parties. (Per Jessel M. R. in Re Joseph Suche & Co. Ltd., (1875) 1 Ch D 48 at p. 50)."

Moreover, here we are concerned with the question at a stage when the right to move the Court conferred by Art. 227 has been exercised or put in action and proceedings have been commenced. In such a case the pending proceedings must be disposed of in accordance with the original Art. 227. Secondly, we find considerable force in the contention of Mr. Seervai that in the context of S. 58 of the 42nd Amendment Act, 1976 which makes the amended Art. 226 applicable to pending petitions filed under the original Art. 226 and in the absence of a similar provision in regard to pending petitions under the unamended Art. 227 a reasonable inference should be drawn that the Parliament did not intend to apply the amended article to pending petitions. In this behalf it must be remembered that the amendment of the Art. 227 by the 42nd Amendment Act, 1976 was a part and parcel of series of amendments that were effected or brought about in the Constitution and the amendment of original Art. 227 will have to be considered along with other amendments, particularly the amendments that have been effected in the connected Art. 226 and the special provision made in S. 58 as to pending petitions under Art. 226. Looking at the question from this angle it will appear clear that in S. 58 of the 42nd Amendment Act, 1976 the Parliament has made special provision with regard to pending petitions under Article 226 and has by that provision enacted that such pending petitions shall be dealt with in accordance with the amended Art. 226 and it is also clear that a similar provision in regard to pending petitions under the unamended Art. 227 has not been made and, therefore, a reasonable inference arises that Parliament did not intend that pending petitions under the original Art. 227 should be governed by the amended Art. 227. Mr. Paranjpe sought to explain the insertion of S. 58 in the Constitution on the basis that it was necessary to make some provision principally in respect of interim orders that had been passed by the High Courts in pending petitions under the original Art. 226 while Mr. Bhabha tried to explain it on the basis that because the original Art. 226 contained an admixture of procedural and substantive rights, the special provision of S. 58 was necessary and since the original Art. 227 was purely procedural and the amended Art. 227 took away the jurisdiction of the High Court over the tribunals a provision akin to S. 58 was unnecessary. It is not possible to accept either of the explanations as valid; in the first place, S. 58 does not principally deal with interim orders passed in pending petitions under the original Art. 226 but deals with both as to what should happen to interim orders as also the pending petitions themselves and secondly, as discussed earlier, the original Art. 227 did not deal with procedural matters but conferred a substantive right on the litigant and as such it is not possible to accept the argument that the amended Art. 227 has merely taken away the High Court's jurisdiction over tribunals but it has purported to abridge the litigant's right to move the High Court against the decisions or orders of tribunals. It is, therefore, clear that inference suggested by Mr. Seervai arises that Parliament did not intend that pending petitions under the original Art. 227 should be governed by the amended Art. 227.

14. In the above context it will be useful to refer to the principle which is well established and which is applicable in cases where a statute is enacted when actions are pending and the principle is that where a statute is passed pending an action as distinct from 'after the date of the cause of action' strong and distinct words are necessary to alter the vested rights of either litigant as they stood at the commencement of the action.: Midland Rly. Co. v. Pye, (1861) 10 CB (NS) 179 and Turnbull v. Forman, (1885) 15 QBD 234. This principle was invoked and applied by this Court in Sudkya Ramji v. Md. Issak reported in AIR 1950 Bom 236. Applying this principle here it will be clear that pending petitions under the original Art. 227 will not be affected by the amended article, inasmuch as, there are no words at all, much less strong and distinct words, in the amended Art. 227 which suggest either expressly or by necessary implication that any alteration was intended in the right of the petitioners to continue and complete their proceedings in accordance with the article as it stood at the commencement of their action.

15. Mr. Seervai next relied upon Section 6 (e) of the General Clauses Act, 1897 as also on the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in the leading case of Colonial Sugar Refining Co. Ltd. v. Irving reported in 1905 AC 369 for saving the pending petitions from the operation of the amended Art. 227. According to him, by deleting the words 'and tribunals' occurring in the original Art. 227 the amended Art. 227 has in effect partially repealed the original article, inasmuch as, the High Court's power of judicial superintendence in respect of the decisions and orders of the tribunals is completely taken away and therefore under S. 6 (e) of the General Clauses Act the pending petitions under the original Art. 227 will have to be proceeded with as if the amendment by way of repeal had not been made. Further he pointed out that in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. case the Judiciary Act, 1903 (under which Her Majesty in Council ceased to be a Court of Appeal from the decisions of the State Supreme Court and in its place the High Court of Australia was substituted as the forum of appeal against such decisions) was passed during the pendency of an action in the Court of first instance and the Privy Council in its decision recognised the position that from the date of initiation of original action the suitor had a right of appeal to the superior tribunal according to law as it stood at the commencement of the proceeding. He strongly relied upon the following observations made by their Lordships in that case, which appear at p. 372 of the report:

"The Judiciary Act is not retrospective by express enactment or by necessary intendment. And therefore the only question is, was the appeal to His Majesty in Council a right vested in the appellants at the date of the passing of the Act, or was it a mere matter of procedure? It seems to their Lordships that the question does not admit of doubt. To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure. In principle, their Lordships see no difference between abolishing an appeal altogether and transferring the appeal to a new tribunal. In either case there is an interference with existing rights contrary to the well-known general principle that statutes are not to be held to act retrospectively unless a clear intention to that effect is manifested."

He urged that both under S. 6 of the General Clauses Act as well as under the aforesaid principle of Colonial Sugar Refining Co.'s case the pending petitions filed under the original Art. 227 will have to be continued, heard and disposed of as if the amended article was not applicable, for, according to him, by parity of reasoning it could legitimately be said that each of the petitioners' right to move this Court under the original Art. 227 for invoking supervisory jurisdiction of this Court had accrued to each one of them and got vested in each no sooner each one of them had commenced his original action or proceeding for enforcing his right under the concerned enactment before the concerned authority thereunder. Alternatively he contended that quite independently of S. 6 of the General Clauses Act there is a well settled general principle that unless a contrary can be shown the provision which takes away the jurisdiction of a Court is itself subject to implied saving of the litigant's right and the pending petitions here would fall within that principle.

16. We shall deal with the contention based on S. 6 of the General Clauses Act and that based on the principle of Colonial Sugar Refining Co.'s case (1905 AC 369) separately. Section 6 of the General Clauses Act deals with the effect of repeal of an enactment and under S. 6 (c) it has been provided that the repeal of an enactment "shall not affect any right accrued" under the enactment so repealed and under S. 6 (e) it has been provided that "any proceeding in respect of any such right" (meaning the 'accrued right under S. 6 (c)) has to be continued as if the repeal had not taken place. In our view, having regard to the provisions of S. 6 (c) and S. 6 (e) it will be difficult to apply those provisions to pending petitions under the original Art. 227 unless we accept the further argument of Mr. Seervai that no sooner each of the petitioners commenced his original action or proceeding for enforcing his right under the concerned enactment before the concerned authority a substantive right to move the High Court under the original Art. 227 had accrued to him. However, it is unnecessary for us to go that far and hold that S. 6 (e) would apply to the pending petitions under the original Article 227, for, in our view, the general principle which has been invoked by him alternatively and which is applicable quite independently of S. 6 would govern the disposal of these pending petitions. Since we are not resting our judgment on the provisions of S. 6 (e) of the General Clauses Act, it is unnecessary to deal with or discuss two or three cases on which Mr. Bhabha relied including English decision in Director of Public Works v. Ho Po Sang, (1961) 2 All ER 721, for contending that the pending petitions would not be saved under S. 6 (c) of the said Act.

17. According to Mr. Seervai, quite independently of the provisions of S. 6 of the General Clauses Act there is a well settled principle firmly established and accepted by Courts that unless contrary can be shown a provision which takes away the jurisdiction of a court is itself subject to implied saving of litigant's right and since there is nothing in the amended Art. 227 to indicate to the contrary, the petitioners' right to continue the pending petitions under the original Art. 227 must be held to have been saved. He contended that it cannot be disputed that the amended Art. 227 clearly takes away the supervisory jurisdiction of the High Court over tribunals qua their decisions or orders and since there is nothing to indicate to the contrary in the amended article, such amended article which takes away the High Court's supervisory jurisdiction over tribunals must be regarded as being subject to implied condition that litigant's right to continue the action which he has commenced before the amended article has come into force is clearly saved. In this behalf strong reliance was placed by him upon two decisions, one a Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sadar Ali v. Doliluddin Ostagar, (AIR 1928 Cal 640) where the principle has been enunciated and the other of the Supreme Court in the case of Garikapati Veeraya v. N. Subbiah Choudhry, (AIR 1957 SC 540) in which the principle has been approved. In the Calcutta case the question that arose for determination was whether or not the appellants had a right to file Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of a single Judge sitting in second appeal in the absence of a certificate from him that the case was a fit one for appeal and the question had arisen in the context of new Letters Patent requiring such a certificate which had come into effect on 14-1-1928. The Full Bench held that the date of presentation of second appeal to the High Court was not the date which determined the applicability of the amended Cl. 15 requiring permission or certificate of the deciding Judge for further appeal but the date of institution of suit was the determining factor. It may be stated that the question was not decided by reference to S. 6 of the General Clauses Act, but upon general principles governing the question of retrospective operation of the amended Letters Patent. Chief Justice Rankin in the course of judgment observed thus: (at p. 643 of AIR)

"In this view the only question which remains is the question whether the new clause can be given retrospective effect. The provision that the new Letters Patent shall come into force on the date of publication in the Gazette does not operate to give it such effect. Nor does the fact that the jurisdiction and authority of the Court is the primary subject of the Letters Patent found a valid argument to the effect that after the date of commencement the Court can have no authority to entertain such an appeal as this. Unless the contrary can be shown the provision which takes away jurisdiction is itself subject to the implied saving of the litigants' rights."

The above general principle enunciated by Rankin, C. J. has been referred to with approval by the Supreme Court in Garikapati Veeraya's case (AIR 1957 SC 540) at two places in para. 25 and para. 43 of the judgment. We may point out that in para. 43 where the aforesaid principle has been referred to a second time the position becomes clear that in the context of question which the Supreme Court was required to consider in that case, the aforesaid principle has been accepted as a principle of general applicability quite apart from S. 6 of the General Clauses Act. The question of construing Art. 133 of the Constitution in the context of President's Adaptation Order whereby S. 109 and S. 110 of Civil P. C. were brought in conformity with Art. 133 was dealt with by the Court in that para and while dealing with that question the Court has observed thus: (at pp. 562, 563 of AIR)

"We now pass on to consider another construction of Art. 133 which appears to us to be quite cogent. We have seen that Ss. 109 and 110 of the Civil P. C. were adapted by the President's Order and the valuation had been raised from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 20,000 in order to bring it into conformity with Art. 133. Clause 20 of that Adaptation Order itself provided that such adaptation would not affect the vested rights. Therefore those litigants who had a vested right of appeal from judgments, decrees or final orders of a High Court in a civil proceeding arising out of a suit or proceeding instituted prior to the Constitution and which involved a right of property valued at over Rupees 10,000 but below Rs. 20,000 are still to be governed by the old Ss. 109 and 110. This means that the words "judgment, decree or final order" occurring in Ss. 109 and 110 of the Code as adapted must be read as a judgment, decree or final order made after the date of the adaptation other than those in respect of which a vested right of appeal existed before the adaptation and which were preserved by Cl. 20. If Ss. 109 and 110 must be read in this way why should not Art. 133 be read as covering all judgments, decrees or final orders of a High Court passed after the commencement of the Constitution other than those in respect of which a vested right of appeal existed from before the Constitution? It is said that there is no saving provision to Art. 133 like Cl. 20 of the Adaptation Order and therefore Art. 133 cannot be read in a restricted way. This argument is unsound and here the observations of Rankin, C. J. in the Special Bench case of Calcutta referred to above become apposite, namely, that the provision which takes away jurisdiction is itself subject to the implied saving of the litigant's right." It will thus appear clear that quite apart from S. 6 of the General Clauses Act the aforesaid general principle could be said to be well established and applying that principle here it can be said that since in the amended Art. 227 there is no indication to the contrary the proceedings by way of petitions, which have been validly commenced under the original Art. 227 and which are pending at the time when the amended Art. 227 has come into operation, will have to be dealt with and disposed of in accordance with the original Art. 227, inasmuch as, the petitioners' right to continue the validly instituted petitions upto the end cannot be affected by the amended Art. 227.

18. Coming to the Colonial Sugar Refining Co.'s case (1905 AC 369) it is obvious that the principle laid down there was in the context of the accepted position that the right of appeal was regarded as having been vested in a suitor no sooner he commenced his original action and the question would be whether the principle could be extended to the original action itself in the sense that once it is instituted or commenced the litigant could be said to have acquired a vested right to continue the same unaffected by any alteration in the law. In that context it will be useful to refer to a decision of the Federal Court in Venugopal's case (AIR 1943 FC 24) where the Federal Court has taken the view that a right to continue a duly instituted suit is in the nature of a vested right and it cannot be taken away except by a clear indication of intention to that effect. In that case a suit had been instituted in 1932 in British India with respect to property situate in British India and also in Burma. In 1937 Burma became separate from British India and a question arose whether the suit could be continued in the British Indian Court where it had been instituted and the Federal Court ruled that it could be so continued even after Burma had been separated. On the basis of S. 38 of the English Interpretation Act (equivalent to S. 6 of our General Clauses Act) which governed the interpretation of the Constitution Act two rival contentions were urged. On the one hand it was contended that what was saved under the said section was a substantive right under the repealed enactment and Cl. (e) of sub-s. (2) of S. 38 could not be invoked in cases where the substantive right was not taken away by the repealing Act but the forum or method of enforcing it was changed. On the other hand, it was contended that the right to obtain relief in a suit pending at the time when the repealing enactment came into operation was itself in the nature of substantive right. The Federal Court did not decide that point but preferred to rest its judgment on the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in Colonial Sugar Refining Co.'s case (1905 AC 369). Even that decision was sought to be distinguished on behalf of the appellant on the ground that the right of appeal against a decree stood on a different footing from a right to continue a suit to its normal termination but the Federal Court negatived the contention by saying that the Court was unable to see any distinction between the two cases and it extended the principle of Colonial Sugar Refining Co. case to the latter case. Justice Varadachariar observed in that behalf thus:

"It will be noticed that in that case the Judiciary Act was passed during the pendency of the action in the Court of first instance and their Lordships' decision recognised that, from the date of the initiation of the action, the suitor had a right of appeal to a superior tribunal according to the state of the law as it stood at the time of the commencement of the proceeding. This necessarily involves the recognition of an equally valuable right that the proceedings should in due course be tried and disposed of by the tribunal before which it had been commenced. This principle that a statute should not be so interpreted as to take away an action which has been well commenced has been affirmed in various cases in differing circumstances. In (1850) 9 CB 551, it was observed by Wilde C. J. that:

"it must have been well known to both branches of the Legislature that strong and distinct words would be necessary to defeat a vested right to continue an action which has been well commenced. Cf. (1875) 1 Ch D 48 and see also (1904) ILR 27 Mad 538 and (1909) ILR 32 Mad 140." On parity of reasoning we are inclined to hold that the petitioners herein would be entitled to continue their pending petitions and have them disposed of in accordance with the original Art. 227.

19. Having regard to the above discussion we hold that the pending petitions under the original Art. 227 will not be affected by the amended Art. 227 and must be dealt with and disposed of in accordance with the original or unamended Art. 227.

20. In view of the aforesaid conclusion reached by us on pending petitions, it is unnecessary to deal with or decide the question whether the pending petitions should be permitted to be amended by converting them into petitions under Art. 226. However, if it became necessary we would certainly grant the necessary permission to amend and that too without imposing any condition as to costs, inasmuch as, the amendment shall have been necessitated by reason of the 42nd Amendment Act, 1976 and not for any fault of the petitioners.

21. The next question that arises for our consideration is: What is the true effect of deletion of the words 'and tribunals' from the original Art. 227 and addition of the words 'subject to its appellate jurisdiction' after the words 'all courts' in the amended Art. 227 on the High Court's power of judicial superintendence such as has been retained with it under the amended article? In other words the question is whether the expression 'courts' is confined to regular civil and criminal courts constituted under the hierarchy of courts or would include tribunals, bodies or authorities, whatever be the label, that are basically courts and this question has a direct bearing on the future petitions that might be filed in the High Court after 1-2-1977 under the amended Art. 227. We have summarised in the earlier part of this judgment the rival contentions on this question and it is unnecessary to set out these over again. In support of the contention that the expression 'courts' occurring in the amended Art. 227 is confined to regular civil and criminal court constituted under the hierarchy of courts and that all tribunals have been excluded from the purview of the High Court's superintendence, counsel for the Union of India mainly relied upon the fact that the amended Art. 227 refers to High Court's power of superintendence over 'all courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction' and the words 'and tribunals' have been expressly deleted from the original Art. 227 (1) and therefore it was urged the expression 'all courts' must mean regular civil or criminal courts constituted under the hierarchy of courts, that is to say, courts constituted under the Bombay Civil Courts Act, Presidency and Provincial Small Cause Courts Acts, Bombay City Civil Court Act and criminal courts constituted under the Criminal P. C. and must exclude all tribunals, bodies or authorities. Secondly it was pointed out that a distinction between regular civil and criminal courts constituted under the hierarchy of courts on the one hand and tribunals on the other has been recognised by the Constitution as well as by judicial decisions and in that behalf strong reliance was placed upon the observations of the Supreme Court in para. 6 of the judgment in Engineering Mazdoor Sabha v. Hind Cycles Ltd. reported in AIR 1963 SC 874 which run thus:

"Article 136 (1) refers to a Tribunal in contradistinction to a Court. The expression 'a Court' in the technical sense is a Tribunal constituted by the State as a part of ordinary hierarchy of courts which are invested with the State's inherent judicial powers. The Tribunal as distinguished from the Court, exercises judicial powers and decides matters brought before it judicially or quasi-judicially, but it does not constitute a court in the technical sense. The Tribunal, according to the dictionary meaning, is a seat of justice; and in the discharge of its functions, it shares some of the characteristics of the court. A domestic Tribunal appointed in departmental proceedings, for instance, or instituted by an industrial employer cannot claim to be a Tribunal under Art. 136 (1). Purely administrative Tribunals are also outside the scope of the said Article. The Tribunals which are contemplated by Article 136 (1) are clothed with some of the powers of the courts."

The argument was that if for purposes of Art. 136 (1) the expression 'court' has been interpreted as meaning 'court' in the technical sense, that is, a tribunal constituted by the State as a part of ordinary hierarchy of courts, the same meaning should be given to that expression in the amended Art. 227. It was pointed out that the aforesaid decision was referred to with approval by the Supreme Court in a later decision in Associated Cement Companies Ltd. v. P. N. Sharma reported in AIR 1965 SC 1595. Thirdly Counsel contended that having regard to the introduction of a new part in the Constitution by the 42nd Amendment Act, 1976, namely Part XIV-A comprising two new Arts. 323A and 323B dealing with the proposed constitution of tribunals administrative tribunals for adjudication of disputes and complaints concerning public services under the Union and State and tribunals for other matters, a clear intention to exclude all tribunals from the High Court's superintendence could be attributed to the Parliament when it amended Art. 227 by deleting the words 'and tribunals' from the original Article 227 (1) and in that behalf strong reliance was placed upon the provisions contained in Art. 323A (2) (d) and (3) and Art. 323B (3) (d) and (4); it was urged that though the Tribunals contemplated by Art. 323A and Art. 323B has not yet been constituted there was conditional ouster of civil court's jurisdiction having regard to Cl. (2) (d) of Art. 323A and Cl. (3) (d) of Art. 323B and in view of the scheme envisaged by these two new articles an intention could be attributed to Parliament that it wanted to exclude all tribunals from the purview of the High Court's superintendence under the amended Art. 227.

22. It is not possible to accept this contention for the reasons which we will presently indicate. In the first place, neither the expression 'court' nor the expression 'tribunal' has been defined in the Constitution and therefore the dictionary meaning or the normal connotation of these expressions will have to be considered. Secondly the proposition is well-settled that all Courts are tribunals but all tribunals are not courts. If necessary, reference may be made to Justice Hidayatullah's judgment in Harinagar Sugar Mills Ltd. v. Shyam Sunder (AIR 1961 SC 1669) where the above proposition has been clearly stated; the proposition in other words means that some tribunals would be basically courts i.e. courts in their normal connotation while some others would not be courts and therefore it cannot be said that Parliament wanted to exclude all tribunals from the purview of the High Court's superintendence under the amended Article 227 but it can be said that Parliament intended to exclude only such tribunals as are not basically courts from the High Court's superintendence. It is obvious that this result will follow if the expression 'Courts' is understood and regarded in its ordinary meaning or its accepted normal connotation, namely an adjudicating body which performs judicial function of rendering definitive judgments having finality and authoritativeness to bind the parties litigating their rights before it and that too in exercise of the sovereign judicial power transferred to it by the State. Any tribunal or authority possessing these two attributes will be a court (vide Full Bench decision of this Court in Bapusaheb Balasaheb Patil v. State of Maharashtra reported in 76 Bom LR 455: (AIR 1975 Bom 143) (FB)). As regards the Supreme Court decisions on which reliance has been placed by Counsel for the Union of India, it may be pointed out that in both the cases the question that had arisen was whether the concerned adjudicating body was a 'tribunal' within the meaning of Art. 136 (1) of the Constitution or not and if so, whether an appeal against the impugned decision or order of that body would lie to the Supreme Court under that article; the distinction between a court and a tribunal was never in issue before the Supreme Court and hence the observations explaining the two concepts in contradistinction to one another would be obiter, if not casual observations. Even if obiter, these observations were made in the context of Art. 136 (1) where both the expressions 'court' and 'tribunal' have been used and therefore those observations will have no bearing when the concept of 'court' is to be understood in the amended Art. 227 where the expression 'courts' stands by itself and not in juxtaposition with the other expression 'tribunal'; the context having changed the expression 'Courts' in the amended Article 227 cannot be interpreted to mean the same thing when that expression is used in juxtaposition with the expression 'tribunal' in one and the same article like Art. 136 (1). Therefore, de hors the concept of 'tribunal' the expression 'Courts' occurring in the amended Art. 227 will have to be understood in its normal accepted connotation especially in the absence of any definition being given in the Constitution and would include such tribunals as satisfy the two tests mentioned above.

23. Further the reliance placed on the newly introduced Arts. 323A and 323B in Part XIV-A for the purpose of inferring an intention on the part of Parliament to exclude all tribunals from the purview of High Court's superintendence under the amended Art. 227 appears to us to be misplaced. In our view, these two articles are merely enabling provisions empowering the Parliament to make laws providing for constitution of such tribunals for adjudication or trial of disputes and complaints or matters more particularly specified therein and under Art. 323A (2)

(c) and under Art. 323B (3) (d) it has been provided that any law that may be made by the Parliament constituting such tribunals may provide for exclusion or jurisdiction of all courts except the Supreme Court under Art. 136 with respect to disputes and complaints or other matters falling within the purview of such tribunals, sub-art. (3) of Art. 323A and sub-art. (4) of Art. 323B merely provide that the provisions of these articles shall have effect notwithstanding anything in any other provision of the Constitution or any other law for the time being in force. It is clear that the law made by Parliament constituting such tribunals may or may not provide for the exclusion of jurisdiction of all courts except the Supreme Court with respect to matters falling within the purview of such tribunals or may do so subject to some conditions. Such a provision, in our view, cannot lead to the inference that Parliament had the intention of excluding all tribunals irrespective of their nature or their functions from the purview of High Court's judicial superintendence while amending the original Art. 227. In fact, it is not the petitioners' contention that all tribunals are still within the purview of High Court's judicial superintendence; the contention is that Parliament has clearly evinced an intention to curtail High Court's judicial superintendence over tribunals but the curtailment refers to such tribunals which are not basically courts. In our view, the introduction of the new Arts. 323A and 323B in the Constitution by the 42nd Amending Act, 1976 cannot avail the Respondents in support of the contention raised on their behalf.

24. Having regard to the above discussion, we are of the view that the High Court's power of judicial superintendence under the amended Art. 227 certainly covers judgments of all Courts meaning thereby all regular civil and criminal courts constituted under the hierarchy of courts subject to its appellate or revisional jurisdiction but also extends to tribunals, bodies or authorities, whatever be their label provided two conditions are satisfied: (a) such tribunal, body or authority is basically a Court i.e. it performs judicial function of rendering definitive judgments having finality and authoritativeness to bind the parties litigating their rights before it in exercise of sovereign judicial power transferred to it by the State, and (b) such tribunal, body or authority is subject to High Court's appellate, or revisional jurisdiction.

25. In conclusion the four petitions which have been placed before us are directed to be disposed of by Division Bench or single Judge as the case may be, in the light of our above decision.

26. There will be no order as to costs. Order accordingly.

AIR 1977 BOMBAY 405

(AT NAGPUR)

MASODKAR AND KAMBLI JJ.

Smt. Yamunabai Govindrao Mahajan and another, Petitioners v. Nagpur Improvement Trust, Nagpur and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. Nos. 434 and 477 of 1971, D/- 11-11-1976.

Constitution of India, Article 31 (2) — Bombay Court Fees Act (1959), Sch. I Article 15 — Constitutionality — Art. 15 of Court Fees Act is not unconstitutional — Scope of guarantee under Art. 31.

Article 15 of Schedule I of the Bombay Court-fees Act, 1959, seeking levy of the one-half ad valorem Court-fee in the matters of reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, is not in any manner unconstitutional nor can it be treated so under Article 31 (2) of the Constitution of India.

(Para 14)

Party seeking to invoke the process of Civil justice which is departmentally available under the structure of the law in the hierarchy of the Courts is bound by other laws and would clearly be subject to its terms like any other suitor in civil cases. Only because the laws that govern the initiation or institution of claims and its investigation by the Civil Court create a modality and require the party to incur such an expenditure for that purpose, it cannot be said that the initial right to get the compensation is in any manner being impeded.

(Para 6)

It is clear that though the Court-fee has to be paid upon the application made to the Collector in pith and substance it is the fee that is paid in Court, for, Collector would have no option if the conditions of the statute are satisfied but to forward the reference for the adjudication of the Court. The fee thus charged under Art. 15 of Schedule I, is the one which is required to be paid in Court and is not a fee collected or paid upon an application made to the Collector. Because proceedings with regard to civil claim for the enhanced compensation are initiated by an application to the Collector, this position that it is a fee in law paid in Court is not affected. (Para 9)

HU/HU/C957/77/CWM

Once the relation of the claim to the administration of Civil justice is established, its levy is competently made and the appropriate legislature seeks to recover the same by keeping in view several relevant factors. The levy of the fees under Art. 15 of Schedule I in issue is thus with competence and has clear relation to the administration of civil justice. AIR 1973 SC 724 Foll,

(Para 10)

The right and assurance of the compensation according to law for the acquired property which is bona fide adjudicated by the machinery provided by such law is the maximum guarantee of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. The matters of evaluation of property by a person interested and his desire to get the same adjudicated, need not be mixed and confused with the right guaranteed by the Constitution. (Para 10)

The levy is clearly circumscribed by the objective factors reasonably worked out and cannot in any manner be said to be arbitrary imposition. There is no ground to think that any irrational element has been introduced in the matter of the rate of fee prescribed by Art. 15. Under Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution what is material to find is the law authorising compulsory acquisition of the property for public purposes that lays down the manner and determination of compensation along with the principles of such determination and not the matters of its reasonableness. Even if that can be said to be in issue because of Art. 19 of the Constitution, it is clear that on the face of it by the very nature of it the fee collected under Art. 15 of the Bombay Court Fees Act answers the reasonableness. (Para 11)

The guarantee of Art. 31 (2) is to the extent of permitting acquisition of private property for public purposes by or under the authority of law that lays down the manner and principle of determination of compensation. That does not further guarantee that this manner of determination should always and in all circumstances be free in the sense the services required for adjudication should be made available without charge of any fee. The parties truly without any funds to pay the same may be entitled to invoke the provisions with regard to pauperism available in the Code of Civil Procedure. (Para 12)

Cases Referred: Chronological Paras
AIR 1973 SC 724 10

W. G. Deo, for Petitioners; M. P. Badar, (for No. 1) and V. P. Salve, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, (for Nos. 2 and 3), for Respondents.

MASODKAR J.:— These two petitions arise out of land acquisition proceedings initiated for the purpose of Nagpur Improvement Trust relating to Khasra Nos. 72, 73, 74 and 75 of Mouza Fardi, in which the petitioners in these cases have interest. Though initially petitions have been filed seeking several reliefs including the one for the quashing of the scheme known as "Eastern Industrial Area Street Scheme" and also seeking further entitlement of compensation as per the principles and the provisions of Land Acquisition Act, 1894, at the hearing Mr. Deo stated that the petitioners do not press their prayers with regard to the validity of the Industrial Area Street Scheme. As to the other prayers regarding the compensation, the learned counsel states that the matter is being considered in the appropriate forum under the provisions of the Nagpur Improvement Trust Act 1936 read with provisions of Land Acquisition Act and with liberty to question the eventual decision on the grounds raised in these petitions, he withdraws those prayers. However, he restricts the petitions to the prayer with regard to payment of Court-fee which the petitioners were required to pay on the applications for making references under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, read with S. 61 of the Nagpur Improvement Trust Act, 1936.

2. To appreciate the said grievance, few facts need be stated and the same are these. Before the Land Acquisition Officer petitioners in each case put in their claims with regard to compensation for the property that was being acquired. The Land Acquisition Officer made an award under S. 11 and filed the same under S. 12 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act in each case, i. e. on 28th October 1970 and 18th August 1970, the same being Annexure-VII and Annexure-VII, respectively, along with these two petitions. Being dissatisfied with the said awards, on December 21, 1970 and October 2, 1970 respectively, applications under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for reference were made. The reference application in each case was required to bear the court-fee stamp as provided for by Bombay Court-Fees Act, 1959, calculating the court-fees as per Article 15 of Schedule I of the Bombay Court-fees Act. Without prejudice to the petitioners' claim that no court-fee is payable because the provision seeking levy was unconstitutional, the petitioners have paid Rs. 3350/- and Rs. 1700/- respectively in these two cases as court-fee as per Article 15 of Schedule I being one-half of ad valorem fee worked out on the difference between the amount awarded by the Collector and the amount claimed by the applicants.

3. The contention is that the provision regarding the levy of this fee is ultra vires of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution of India and further it being a fee, it is unreasonable on the face of it. The prayer in each of the petitions that survived and that was argued relates to seeking a declaration that the provision of Article 15 of Schedule I of the Bombay Court-fees Act, 1959 be declared ultra vires and the petitioners in each case pray for refund of the fees paid upon their respective applications for reference.

4. Mr. Dēo in support of this submission contends that it is incumbent on the State in the matter of compulsory acquisition of property for the public purposes to acquire the same only by authority of a law that provides for compensation for the property so acquired and further which specifies the principles on which the manner in which the compensation is to be determined and given. According to the learned counsel, the constitutional guarantee under Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution is an obligation on the State and requiring a person to pay the court-fee for determining the compensation would be making a law which does not provide for the compensation as such. The payment of court-fees and the nature of fees taken in Court, it is argued, cannot possibly have any correlation with the services rendered by State, for here it is the State which is extracting the property and not rendering any service. Thus for the purpose of seeking determination of the compensation if the law were to require a fee as a pre-condition for determining compensation, on the face of it the complaint is, it will be unreasonable and further would mean denying the compensation itself. The submission suggests several cases where the persons who are really paupers will be disabled to get any just and equitable compensation because they are unable to bear the burden of court-fee and thus acquisition itself would be without payment of compensation as originally intended by the Constitution. Further such an acquisitory process would be one, unauthorised by law. Counsel argues that the nature of the order made under S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act is nothing but an offer and it is the right given to the party in the matter of compensation either to accept or reject that offer. The words available in sub-article (2) of Art. 31 of the Constitution of India, as to the manner for determination of the compensation, should receive such a construction that would, without any impediment whatsoever including the one requiring the payment of court-fee, permit adjudication and determination of the quantum of compensation as per law. It is further urged that the Land Acquisition Act itself does not require the party dissatisfied with the offer to pay any particular fee for further adjudication; it is by the Bombay Court-fees Act an impediment is enacted and the said impediment thus being operative upon the right secured by a law providing for the manner of determining the compensation in terms of Art. 31 (2), would be unconstitutional. It is further submitted that article of the Court-fees Act has no relation nor has any nexus with the cost of administration of justice, because, it is recovered at the time when the application is made and not in the Court. In fact according to the learned counsel it is an executive charge for making a reference and the principles of the cost of judicial administration and the possible nexus cannot be made applicable.

5. We have carefully considered all these submissions and it is difficult to uphold the same. Provision of Art. 31 (2) on which reliance is placed is in negative term conferring a right, no doubt, with regard to compensation in the matter of compulsory acquisition of property for public purposes. Sub-article (2) is satisfied once the compulsory acquisition is by the authority of law and the said law as far as the present controversy is concerned provides for the principles on which and the manner in which the compensation is to be determined and given. The provisions of sub-article (2) undoubtedly are the part of the right to property guaranteed. By itself it purports to lay down how that right is to be governed in the matters of compulsory acquisition of property for public purposes. It enacts constitutionally a permissive legislative field that can eclipse individual rights in property in favour of public need. To satisfy basically the requirements of that provision is to find whether the taking or acquiring is by or under the authority of a competent legislation. Such law would necessarily provide by laying down the principles and the manner in which the compensation for acquired property would be determined and/or paid. Constitution clearly contemplates such a trivalent measure for acquisition of property for public purpose. To put it otherwise the requirements are simply three, viz. the acquisition must proceed under the authority of law; the said law must lay down the principles of compensation; and further it must lay down the principles for determination of compensation. The provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, read with the Nagpur Improvement Trust Act, 1936, as far as present matter is concerned fully satisfy this constitutional trivalence. Now the complaint herein is against the Court-fees Act that requires a court-fee to be paid upon an application contemplated by S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act for seeking a reference for adjudication for enhanced compensation. By that prescription we fail to see how the Provisions of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution can be said to be violated for, we have a law laying down the principles of compensation and similarly the manner of its determination. Once these requirements are there the guarantee under the article is fully satisfied. Further probe in the scheme of the Land Acquisition Act would also indicate that complaint is without any force.

5-A. The provisions of the Land Acquisition Act indicate that after the issue of notice to the interested parties, the Land Acquisition Officer proceeds under S. 11 to make an enquiry with regard to compensation. The law enjoins upon the officer to take into account the objections which any person has taken pursuant to the notice, firstly, to the measurements and, secondly, about the value of the land and also into the respective interests of the persons claiming compensation. The award that has to be made under S. 11 after such enquiry has to state the true area of the land and the compensation which in the opinion of the Collector has to be paid for the land and if there is a claim for apportionment, the apportionment of the said compensation. No doubt provisions of S. 11 by themselves do not indicate the principles for working out the said compensation. But it is implicit in the very purpose of the enquiry which is for all purposes the executive determination of the compensation for the acquired property. This determination undoubtedly partakes in the nature of quasi judicial enquiry to which the principles of fairplay and justice are clearly applicable. Not only the Collector is bound to apply the principles enacted under Ss. 23 and 24 of the Land Acquisition Act by virtue of S. 15 of the said Act, but is further enjoined in the scheme of the proceedings to behave consideration upon the evidence or the material that may be tendered by the persons interested in the property. This enquiry for the purpose of determination of the compensation is thus governed by the principles for such determination and lays down the manner in which it has to be completed. As a result of the enquiry award follows. No doubt the nature of the award made under S. 11 with respect to compensation for the acquired property is treated and is tantamount to an executive offer but that is because the persons interested have a further option to seek enhancement of the compensation so offered. It is styled judicially as an offer because there is a possibility of its acceptance or non-acceptance resulting in a reference at the instance of the dissatisfied party to a Civil Court for enhanced claims. For the purpose of law however the award made by the Collector is both, the result of adjudication and application of the principle for determination of compensation. The acquisitive law's purposes as contemplated by the provisions of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution are thus fully satisfied once the Collector under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act permits participation by issue of the notice and after applying the principles makes an award. The making of this award of compensation is thus unimpeded by any onerous conditions. Upon the claim put up before the Collector who is charged with duty to make an award the interested person is not required to pay any court-fee; nor the award so made under S. 11 if accepted by the interested person requires him to pay any court-fee, either with regard to claim set up or with regard to claim so awarded.

5-B. Now comes the stage in the scheme of the Acquisition Act itself of providing further remedy to dissatisfied person with the award of compensation. Had the law stopped at the determination made by the Collector in the shape of executive award and left the party aggrieved to follow the remedy of general law, we have no doubt that the provisions of such law would have answered all the requirements contemplated and to which we have made a reference above by Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. But the Legislation purports to make a self-contained and self-serving scheme. Thereunder the provisions of S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act permit of a making of an application to the Collector for the purpose of reference to the Court by which the person interested and not satisfied with the award can seek enhancement of the compensation. It may be mentioned that provisions of Chapter VI of the Nagpur Improvement Trust Act which are relevant enable the Trust to acquire the land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act as are amended by the provisions of Nagpur Improvement Trust Act and for performing the functions of the Court in reference to the acquisition of land for the Trust a Tribunal is required to be constituted in accordance with S. 62 of the Trust Act. By virtue of S. 61 of that Act, the Tribunal so constituted is deemed to be the Court and the President of the Tribunal to be the Judge. Thus by virtue of S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act the dissatisfied interested person is enabled to approach this Tribunal which for all purposes is a Court if claim is set up for enhanced compensation. Under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act such a reference would have been to the Court as defined in S. 3 (d). Further scheme of S. 18 indicates that an application has to be filed with the Collector which if it is otherwise tenable takes the shape of a reference to Civil Court. But the disputes so raised for the purpose of enhanced compensation have to be determined or adjudicated upon by the Court or the Tribunal which is deemed to be the Court under the relevant Act. The nature of the proceedings initiated upon an application for reference by the party concerned is clearly one of civil claim with regard to the entitlement of the compensation in place of the compensation offered under an award made under S. 11. As far as applicable to the hearing of the reference before the Civil Court S. 53 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 makes the Code of Civil Procedure applicable. Under the Trust Act only S. 54 of the Land Acquisition Act has been excepted but the provisions of S. 53 would still be applicable to the proceedings in reference before the Trust Tribunal. Effect of exclusion of S. 54 by the Trust Act is merely taking away the remedy of further appeal which would be available under the Code of Civil Procedure.

6. This self-serving scheme of the statute primarily shows that once there is executive determination of the compensation the interested person if dissatisfied is being provided with a civil remedy and the mode and manner of taking that remedy in the Court is regulated. For all intents and purposes along with the nature and constitution of the remedy, it is clear that the person interested and dissatisfied and seeking a reference is placed in the place of a plaintiff claiming higher compensation for the property acquired than the one awarded under S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act. The civil claim so set up though not a suit but is clearly akin to it and is governed by the Civil Procedure Code. Party seeking to invoke the process of civil justice which is departmentally available under the structure of the law in the hierarchy of the Court is bound by other laws and would clearly be subject to its terms like any other suitor in civil cases. Only because the laws that govern the initiation or institution of claims and its investigation by the Civil Court create a modality and require the party to incur such an expenditure for that purpose, it cannot be said that the initial right to get the compensation is in any manner being impeded. If we were to stretch the logic of impeding the fundamental rights in this manner, then even a party required to call witnesses and pay for them would complain that it is onerous. The position of the party and the purpose of the proceedings clearly dominate the necessity in such matters to put the party and the proceedings to the regulation of other laws and only because those laws impose a liability because the justice is sought from the Civil Court to pay the court-fee on the claim so set up, the right to compensation cannot be said to have been affected in any manner.

7. This would be evidenced by further scrutiny of certain provisions of the Land Acquisition Act.

8. As we stated above, the manner and procedure for the purpose of initiating proceedings in Civil Court is laid down by S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. The initiation has to be by a written application to the Collector and the party is required to state the grounds on which the objections to the award or its amendment are made. Limitation is prescribed within which the application has to be tendered. Orders made by the Collector are subject to the revisional jurisdiction under S. 115 the Code of Civil Procedure by the High Court. If everything is appropriately complied with, the Collector is required by law to make a reference. Collector is required further to make a statement with regard to the matters of objections and S. 19 (1) (d) relevantly casts an obligation to disclose the grounds on the basis of which the Collector determined the compensation of the acquired property. S. 20 directs that upon reference the Court would start the hearing of the proceedings by causing notices to be served on the persons interested and the Collector. These three Ss. 18, 19 and 20 together indicate that the application for reference is in substance the Civil claim in the matter of higher compensation which has to set out the grounds of objection to sustain that claim and the Collector has to indicate the grounds on which the compensation has already been determined. That indicates that these are the basic pleadings and with these pleadings the matter is sent in the shape of the reference for adjudication by the Court which involves as usual the incidental services of the adjudicating forum established by the State in the matters of dispensation of civil justice.

9. Now turning to the provisions of the Bombay Court-Fees Act, 1959 which seek to charge fee mainly in the matters of involving the dispensation of justice in courts, at the threshold it must be observed that for the purpose of reference, by Article 15 of Schedule I of the Bombay Court-fees Act, 1959, the fee is charged upon the application by which adjudication in the Civil Court is sought. The incident or the cause for collection of court-fees thus is clearly the application of the person who sets up civil claim for higher compensation. Competency to charge such fees and make law for its levy and collection cannot be doubted under the constitutional scheme nor was so raised before us. Like any other civil claim required to be initiated by means of filing a plaint or an application or memorandum in writing made to the Court, application for the purpose of reference to the Court under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act provides an appropriate incident seeking to levy the fee, for, eventually what ensues is the adjudication by the Court in its civil jurisdiction of a civil claim. It is clear that though the court-fee has to be paid upon the application made to the Collector in pith and substance it is the fee that is paid in Court, for, as we indicated above, Collector would have no option if the conditions of the statute are satisfied but to forward the reference for the adjudication of the Court. The fee thus charged under Art. 15, of Schedule I, in our view is the one which is required to be paid in court and is not a fee collected or paid upon an application made to the Collector. Because proceedings with regard to civil claim for the enhanced compensation are initiated by an application to the Collector, this position that it is a fee in law paid in Court is not affected. Application is an incidence upon which the court-fee can be levied and the Collector being the authority entertaining such applications though would collect the same, yet it is a fee paid in Court.

10. About the character of such fees in the legislative field it is ample to refer to the authoritative pronouncement of the Supreme Court in the case of Secretary, Government of Madras, Home Department v. Zenith Lamps & Electricals Ltd. (AIR 1973 SC 724). The ratio of this judgment reinforces the legislative competence and clearly brings out that the nexus for the levy and collection of the court-fee is provided by the very administration of justice in and under the State. The Court in that case observed in paragraph 31 as follows:

"But even if the meaning is the same, what is 'fees' in a particular case depends on the subject-matter in relation to which fees are imposed. In this case we are concerned with the administration of civil justice in a State. The fees must have relation to the administration of civil justice. While levying fees the appropriate legislature is competent to take into account all relevant factors, the value of the subject-matter of the dispute, the various steps necessary in the prosecution of a suit or matter, the entire cost of the upkeep of courts and officers administering civil justice, the vexatious nature of a certain type of litigation and other relevant matters."

(Underlining added).

These observations clearly indicate that once the relation of the claim to the administration of civil justice is established, its levy is competently made and the appropriate legislature seeks to recover the same by keeping in view several relevant factors. The levy of the fees under Art. 15 of Schedule I in issue is thus with competence and has clear relation to the administration of civil justice. As we have indicated above, the reference under S. 18 entails involvement of the administration of civil justice drawing upon the services of the judicial hierarchy of courts at the instance of the party dissatisfied with an executive award or determination of compensation under S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act. The charging principle underlying the provisions of the Court-Fees Act is clearly connected to the civil administration of justice seeking recovery of the court-fee from the party which intends to initiate the proceedings and to set the wheels of justice in motion. A person interested in the property acquired after the statutory adjudication of the compensation under S. 11 is not a different class than any other civil suitor seeking to establish in Civil Court a claim against a public or State authority. There is no such guarantee in Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution that such a suitor only because his property is subjected to acquisition for public purpose should be differently treated even for the purpose of adjudication of his civil claim in the matter of compensation. Conceivably it cannot be so. The right and assurance of the compensation according to law for the acquired property which is bona fide adjudicated by the machinery provided by such law is the maximum guarantee of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution. The matters of evaluation of property by a person interested and his desire to get the same adjudicated, need not be mixed and confused with the right guaranteed by the Constitution. The interested person like any other citizen is entitled to put his valuation in the matter of compensation including his own fanciful claims. Like any other suitor after the basic determination, which law presumes will be fair and bona fide, such a person is permitted to seek adjudication of his claim from the competent Civil Court and for that purpose is required by the Court-Fees Act to bear the burden of the fees which have relation to the rendering of the services in the administration of justice.

11. We thus fail to see how such a levy which is competently enacted can be said to affect the right conferred by Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution of India. About the reasonableness, the levy of fee under Art. 15 of the Schedule I of the Bombay Court-Fees Act on the face of it shows a rationale in that it charges one-half of ad valorem fee on the difference, if any, between the amount awarded by the Collector and the amount claimed by the applicant according to the scale prescribed under Art. 1 of Schedule I subject to a minimum fee of fifteen rupees. Had the matter been of a civil suit simpliciter, the prescription would have been on the ad valorem basis; but the legislative reasonableness is explicit in making the charge half of the said fee; so also it is only the difference between the compensation determined by the Collector and the claim of the person interested that is subjected to this charge. Thus the levy is clearly circumscribed by the objective factors reasonably worked out and cannot in any manner be said to be arbitrary imposition. There is no ground to think that any irrational element has been introduced in the matter of the rate of fee prescribed by Art. 15. Once we grant the principle that the State is entitled to recover reasonable fee having correlation to the services involved and rendered by the administration of civil justice, even if compared with the other fees which are competently collected under the Court-Fees Act, the levy of this fee shows care and circumspection. Under Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution what is material to find is the law authorising compulsory acquisition of the property for public purposes that lays down the manner and determination of compensation along with the principles of such determination and not the matters of its reasonableness. Even if that can be said to be in issue because of Art. 19 of the Constitution, we are satisfied that on the face of it by the very nature of it the fee collected under Art. 15 of the Bombay Court-Fees Act answers the reasonableness.

12. As is usual in the field of reasonableness, reference was made to hypothetical cases wherein question as to a party who is truly pauper and as such unable to seek a reference and, therefore, losing the remedy provided by the law validly made under Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution was raised. But, in our view, such cases and such illustrations are not decisive. The guarantee of Art. 31 (2) is to the extent of permitting acquisition of private property for public purposes by or under the authority of law that lays down the manner and principle of determination of compensation. That does not further guarantee that this manner of determination should always and in all circumstances be free in the sense the services required for adjudication should be made available without charge of any fee. Having indicated the manner the law made under Art. 31 (2) may itself indicate the mode and manner of determination of compensation and other matters such as initiation, conditions of initiation and its adjudication being left to the modality of other Acts. Question of detriment does not arise, for, here there is first an executive determination in the shape of award of the compensation free of any charge and it is only when the party sets up a higher claim of its own over and above that compensation, such a party is asked to pay fee in Court by a modality of making an application for reference. It is not necessary in these petitions to say whether the provisions of Order XXXIII Civil Procedure Code dealing with the claims of pauper suitors would be attracted or not. But it is likely that upon the view indicated above, in that the fees collected upon the application are fees paid in Court, the parties truly without any funds to pay the same may be entitled to invoke the provisions with regard to pauperism available in the Code of Civil Procedure. For the purpose of the present petitions suffice it to observe that the petitioners before us are not paupers and in fact have paid the court-fee and have raised a challenge that they are not liable to pay that court-fee because of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution.

13. Upon the view we have taken as to the construction of the remedy made available and resultant necessity involving the judicial services, the levy of the fee is clearly related and competently made. Further there is obvious possibility involved in all civil litigations that the fees initially paid will be directed to be borne upon success by the opponent as it will form part of the costs that usually follow the success in a civil cause. The reasonableness of the levy and its possible return in the shape of costs, all indicate that petitioner's remedy is not in any manner put under onerous statutory conditions.

14. In view of all this, we reject the submissions advanced in support of the petition and adjudge that upon the debate raised before us, Art. 15 of Schedule I of the Bombay Court-Fees Act, 1959, seeking levy of the one-half ad valorem court-fee in the matters of reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, is not in any manner unconstitutional nor can be treated so under Article 31 (2) of the Constitution of India. We have disposed of the question on the basis and assumption that Art. 31 (2) is applicable to the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, as the levy of court-fee collected was under the Bombay Court-Fees Act, 1959. In this we make it clear that we are not applying the saving indicated by Art. 31 (5) of the Constitution of India.

15. Rule would stand discharged in both these petitions. However, we make no orders as to costs.

Rule discharged.

JOSHI, J.

Balkrishna Raghunath Gharat, Appellant v. Sadashiv Hiru Gharat, Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 248 of 1971, D/-21-12-1976.

Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act (1956), S. 10 (iv) read with S. 4 — Adoption of person over fifteen years of age — Valid only if recognised by custom — Resort to any text, rule or interpretation of Hindu Law is of no avail. AIR 1972 Bom 98 Not Followed.

When we read S. 4 with S. 10, the only interpretation admissible is that if any text or rule or interpretation of Hindu law permitted adoption of boys over 15 years in age, they will not have any effect unless a specific provision was made in any other section of the Act recognising them or giving them the old sanctity. (Para 13)

If the parties succeed in establishing the custom or usage sanctioning such adoptions of boys more than 15 years of age, then only they could be deemed to be persons capable of being taken in adoption within the meaning of S. 10. S. 10 restricts the cases of boys in whose community there is such a custom. If adoption of boys more than 15 years in age is recognised by any text or rule or interpretation of Hindu law and not by custom, there being no express provision in the Act, the said text, rule and interpretation would cease to have effect. Such adoptions were upheld by the Bombay High Court, not because of the proof of custom but because of the interpretation put on the texts. Hence, if such adoption was permissible under any text, rule or interpretation of Hindu Law, then the same could not be allowed to be proved in view of overriding effect of S. 4. AIR 1976 Bom 264 Followed, AIR 1972 Bom 98 Not Followed. (Paras. 14, 20)

JUDGMENT:— Plaintiff's suit for a declaration that the adoption made by him of the Defendant-Respondent is void, having been dismissed by the lower Court and confirmed in appeal by the learned District Judge, Kolaba, he has come in second appeal.

2. The appeal does raise a somewhat important point of Hindu Law on which the authorities of this Court at least do not appear to be unanimous. The question as to whether the adoption of a boy over 15 years of age is void, or valid being sanctioned by custom, arises in this way:

The Plaintiff who had taken the defendant in adoption on 12th February 1968 and got the adoption deed registered, alleged that according to the custom in his community adoption of a boy more than ten years of age at the date of adoption is not valid. As the defendant was 22 years of age at the date of the alleged adoption the said adoption is ipso facto bad in law and not binding on the plaintiff.

3. The short answer made by the defendant was that they are the members of Somavanshi Kshatriya Community in Alibag Taluka which has its own association presided over by a president elected by the members of the community. At the time of adoption, permission of the President is required to be obtained and there is a long standing custom sanctioning the adoption of persons of any age.

4. The learned trial Judge framed a number of issues which in my opinion did not catch the crux. He cast the burden of proving the invalidity of Defendant's adoption on the plaintiff. In the alternative he framed a somewhat general issue as to whether the adoption is invalid under the practice of the community of the parties, probably an issue which covered the plaintiff's principal contention that the custom sanctioned adoption of boys upto the age of 10 years. Both these issues were answered in the negative. The learned District Judge formulated a somewhat omnipotent point as to whether the adoption of the Defendant was not in compliance with the provisions of the Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act and answered it in the negative. It is this finding which is impugned before me.

5. Before I turn to the controversial questions I may at the cost of repetition refer to certain material allegations in the pleadings of the parties. The Plaintiff, for getting rid of the defendant's adoption on the ground of age, made a two-fold attack. In the first instance he pleaded that there was a custom in the community of the parties that the age of the boy should not exceed 10 years at the date of adoption. In the alternative took resort to section 10 (iv) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 and averred further that as the defendant had completed more than 15 years of age, the adoption was void being not in compliance with law. To rebut these averments, the defendant pleaded another custom which according to him put no upper age limit on the age of the boy to be taken in adoption and denied the custom set up by the plaintiff. It is common ground that the adoption is evidenced by a registered deed of 14th February 1968 and at the date of the adoption the boy was aged 22 years i. e. in any event, more than 15 years. Therefore, this is a case in which two apparently contrary customs are set up, the plaintiff contending that the custom sanctioned adoptions of boys below 10 and the defendant pleading that there is no upper age limit. But on the question whether the adoption is valid or void by virtue of the provisions contained in the Act, both the parties rely upon the same provisions, the interpretation of which is a matter of debate and to which I will refer shortly. Before dwelling on the questions of law, I may refer in brief to the evidence adduced by the parties for proving the alleged custom.

6. The plaintiff did not enter the box, nor did he examine any witnesses. The defendant examined three witnesses viz. Laxman Yesu Gharat, Prabhakar Surekar and Keshav Thakur. Laxman Gharat claims to be the President of Pathare Kshatriya Pachkalshi Somavanshiya

Samaj. He is officiating as the President for the last seven years next before his deposition recorded in November 1969. He made a negative statement that there is no usage or custom that the boys below ten years only should be adopted. He hastened to add in the same breath that there are no restrictions ever put on the age limit of the adopted boys. He produced a number of documents filed before him by certain members of the community evidencing their respective adoptions, but those members have not stepped into the witness box. He had to concede that this practice referred to by him is nowhere recorded in the books maintained by the Samaj. The various documents referred to by him were handed over to the Secretary who was then in charge of the affairs of the association, but no register was ever maintained. Prabhakar Surekar (D. W. 2) who claims to have been adopted by one Radhabai Balkrishna in 1961, speaks to his age being 31 years at the date of adoption and the sanction of the Samaj. His adoption deed was not registered and what was handed over to the Samaj was an uncertified copy of an unregistered deed. The next and the last witness Keshav Thakur (D. W. 3), another member of this community, swears to his adoption by one Kashinath somewhere in 1963 and at the time of adoption he was 29. The requisite consent of the Samaj was taken. The last two witnesses do not utter a word on the custom set up by the defendant in the written statement but endeavour to speak to certain facts within their personal knowledge viz. their ages at the dates of their alleged adoptions. It is clear that the material oral evidence on record is the solitary statement of the President Laxman Gharat that there is no upper age limit for the boy to be taken in adoption. In simpler words, he says that in his community boys of any age can be taken in adoption; but while making this statement he asserts that the community never put any restriction much less to the effect that the boy should be below ten years. This statement is made to disprove the custom set up by the Plaintiff.

7. Before going to the legal aspect as to on whom the burden should lie, and whether it has been discharged or not, I may point out that the learned District Judge has dismissed the evidence of the three witnesses on the point of custom while reversing the finding of the lower Court. He has pointed out that the numerous deeds of adoption or their copies were not at all proved and could not be read as substantive evidence. On the other hand, he has described them as good as waste papers. On the evidence of the remaining two witnesses, his observations are that they attempt to prove their own adoptions. This evidence, taken at its face value, is certainly too meagre and not worthy of credence to uphold the custom set up by the defendant. It is needless to repeat as to what type of evidence is necessary to uphold the custom because the law is well settled on this point. The evidence must be unequivocal and it must tend to prove that the custom is ancient, certain and reasonable. A couple of instances and that too of a comparatively recent date can by no stretch of imagination be held to be sufficient evidence to uphold the custom which aims at changing the course of law. Therefore, without dilating further, I am disposed to conclude on the evidence that the custom set up by either side is not at all proved.

8. This takes me on to the most crucial and debatable questions and to appreciate them, reference to certain provisions in the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 which governs the present case would be necessary. This Act came on the statute book on 21-12-1956. The expressions "custom" and "usage" have been defined in S. 3 to mean that unless the context otherwise requires, they connote any rule which, having been continuously and uniformly observed for a long time, has obtained the force of law among Hindus in any local area, tribe, community, group or family provided that the rule is certain and not unreasonable or opposed to public policy; and provided further that, in the case of a rule applicable only to a family, it has not been discontinued by the family. The expressions "custom" and "usage" having been defined by the statute, they have to be given this very meaning wherever they occur subsequently in the Act and more particularly in S. 10 (iv) of the Act.

9. The next important section is S. 4 which reads as follows:

"4. Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act,—

(a) any text, rule or interpretation of Hindu law or any custom or usage as part of that law in force immediately before the commencement of this Act shall cease to have effect with respect to any matter for which provision is made in this Act;"

In this context the relevant portion of S. 10 on which hinges the present case needs reproduction and it would read thus:

"10. No person shall be capable of being taken in adoption unless the following conditions are fulfilled, namely:—

x x x x x x x
x x x x x x x

(iv) he or she has not completed the age of fifteen years, unless there is a custom or usage applicable to the parties which permits persons who have completed the age of fifteen years being taken in adoption."

10. Two more important sections in this context need a reference. S. 5 lays down that adoptions under the Act are to be regulated by the provisions contained in Chapter II which has the caption 'Adoption.' S. 5 (1) runs thus:

"5. (1) No adoption shall be made after the commencement of this Act by or to a Hindu except in accordance with the provisions contained in this Chapter, and any adoption made in contravention of the said provisions shall be void."

Section 6 which prescribes the requisites of a valid adoption reads as follows:

"6. No adoption shall be valid unless:—

x x x x x x x
x x x x x x x

(iii) the person adopted is capable of being taken in adoption; and

(iv) the adoption is made in compliance with the other conditions mentioned in this chapter."

It is needless to refer to the other provisions contained in this Chapter, but in passing I may add that S. 7 deals with the capacity of a male Hindu to take in adoption, whereas S. 8 speaks of the capacity of a female Hindu to take in adoption. S. 9 deals with persons capable of giving in adoption and to S. 10 a reference is already made. S. 11 lays down other conditions for a valid adoption, but they are of little moment in the present litigation.

11. On a combined reading of Ss. 5, 6 and 10 it would be clear that an adoption which is not in strict compliance with the provisions of law will be void and no alternative is left. S. 10 defines the persons capable of being taken in adoption and one of the restrictions imposed is on the age limit. If the boy has completed the age of 15 years, the adoption is not recognised by the Act and it is rendered void subject to the proviso.

The proviso is the existence of a custom or usage applicable to the parties permitting adoption of boys more than 15 years of age. Going back to the facts for a while, I may point out that the defendant being admittedly more than 15 years of age at the time of adoption, the adoption would be ex facie void.
